 if we come into y plain grounds, we ſhal haue vi-ctorie, he can do nothing there. Thus were idols ſet vp in Gods place. And therefore it was ſaide to Achab, that the king of Syria ſhould bee van-quiſhed & rooted out. Now it came to paſſe that his aray was put to flight: but yet they founde a ſhift by & by to make peace. And why? For this goodly commendation liked Achabs eares well, when they called him a mercifull Prince. By meanes wherof he was dandled a ſleepe, ſo as he made ſale of the blaſphemie y was committed againſt God, as it is a common matter with vs to bee pitifull in caſes wher God is offended. For this cauſe a Prophet was ſent vnto him, bringing his badge with him, that is to wit, that he had bin wounded by the commendement of God: and the firſt man, (who had refuſed to do it,) was deuoured of a Lion out of hand. Yet notwithſtā-ding the Prophet came to Achab wounded and diſfigured and ſaid vnto him: I tooke a man to keepe, and he that deliuered him to mee bad mee I ſhould not let him goe vpon paine of my life. Neuertheleſſe while I turned mee too & fro, he ſcaped from me. And thou muſt anſwere him vpon thy life, quoth Achab. Then anſwered the Prophet vnto Achab: it is thy ſelfe that this toucheth. This meſſage is ſent to thee of God, to ſhewe thee that for as much as thou haſt ſpared the king of Syria, whom God had put into thy hand to be reuenged of him for the outrage done to his Maieſtie: thou muſt anſwere for him lyfe for life, and thy people with thee. So then we ſee that if Gods honor be impeached, it is not for vs to let things ſlip, but we muſt vnderſtand that if wee make light of ſuch a crime, God will ſurely make the vengeance to light vpon our ſelues. To be ſhort, let vs marke well, that if ſuch as haue commiſſion to puniſh offenders doe it not: there will bee no excuſe for them. For y which is written will not be repealed for mens pleaſures: that is to wit, that he which iuſtifieth or acquitteth y guilty perſon, is as abhominable before God, as he that condemneth the innocent. If a poore innocent bee oppreſſed, men can ſkill to ſay, there is no reaſon in it, and that the matter muſt come to account before God. And here God addeth the ſecond part, that is to wit, that if an offender be quit, and iuſtice and equitie ſo turned vpiſide downe: it muſt come to account as well as the other. Yee ſee then howe it is a leſſon which all thoſe ought to beare in minde, whom God hath commaunded to puniſh mens offences: that they muſt bee well ware to vſe one rule and one egall meature. For if a man puniſh one offender and pardon another, and thinke to goe halfe quit for it before GOD: it is cleane contrarie. And for prooſe thereof, let vs conſider the example that is ſet downe in Hoſeas concerning king Iehu. <sup>Oſec. 1. 145</sup> God commaunded him to deſtroy all Idolaters:

 he did it partly but not altogether: for hee deſtroyed thoſe whom he ſtoode in feare of, and he did it for his owne vaine glory and ſuertie. God did him the honour to make him king, & he con-ſidered it not. But when he came once to y kingdome, O he muſt maintaine himſelfe in it. And what did he? He executed rigor ynough vpon thoſe whom he liſted, and ſpecially vpon ſuch as he wiſt might doe him harme: but when he had ſo begun, he let the reſt go vn timerly, he cared not what came of it, ſo he might reigne peaceably. Now at the firſt ſight a man might well ſay it was a vertue wortheie of commendation, that he puniſhed thoſe whom God had commaunded him. Verily and ſo was it, if he had held on that trade ſtill. But for as much as he deſtroyed one ſort and ſpared another ſort: it is ſaid that God will puniſh the manſlaughter that Iehu had committed. And how may that be? Is it manſlaugh-ter to haue executed the comāndement of God?
 Yea, after the maner that he went to worke. He is ſaid to bee a manſleare, becauſe he had not an eye to the thing that God commaunded him. For he ſhould haue gone through as he began. But he ſtayed in the middes of his way. For as for thoſe whom he puniſhed, he puniſhed the in re-ſpect of his owne peculiar profit. He had no regard of Gods honour, for the Crowne of the kingdome continued with him. Therefore is he iuſtly accouſed for a manſleare and not a iudge. And therefore let vs beware that we take not more libertye than God giueth vs. For he can well ſkill to moderate his own doings, though we take not vpon vs to be more pitifull than he. And if wee make our hand of his honor, we muſt pay deare-ly for it when we come to our reckening before him. But if this ſeeme ſtraunge vnto vs: let vs go a litle by degree, & ſee if nature might not be a ſchoole myſtrelle good enough for vs, if we were nor blinded by our wicked afflictions. If a mā haue children, he knoweth well ynough that it is his ductie to teach them, and to chaſtiſe them whē they doe amiſſe. For if he beare with his childrē, and dare not touch them, but cokereth them, and in the meane while: they bee of euill nature:
 may it not be ſaide that he is worthe that his children ſhould picke out his eyes, and pluck his noſe from his face? And on the contrarie part, if children were teachable & meeke of themſelues:
 it were not meete that they ſhould be touched.
 But when a father perceiues his children to be curſt and vnuly: if he ſpare them then, men will ſay that he marreth them, and that he ſendeth them to the gallows, and that he is the cauſe of their vndoing. Now let vs compare a father with a iudge. Whereas a father ought to chaſtiſe his children with rodde: a iudge hath an office that paſſeth yet further. Therefore he muſt haue an eye thereunto: and if he doe not, he is worthy to haue his eyes put out with the miſchiete, as Moſes ſpeaketh here of theſe peo-ple, ſaying: They ſhall be as thornes to prick thee on all ſides, and

Pro. 17. 15.

to put out thine eyes: they shall be as waspes to sting thee in such sort as y<sup>e</sup> shalt not know which way to turne thee. Lo what reward y<sup>e</sup> Israelites had for their reichelesse in that they were not stout in putting the sentence in execution, which God had vttered with his own mouth. But howsoeuer the case stood with them: let vs learne full to be pitifull. For the rigour that is spoken of here, must not make vs to forget how God commandeth vs to loue euen our enemies, & them that persecute vs, and to endeavour to doe them good to the vttermost of our power, that we may bring them into the right way of saluation. Then must we needes haue that. Yea and euen when a Iudge vseth rigour, his heart must mourne and lament, to see a creature that is made after the image of God fo dealt withall: but yet must he go on full, and execute the office which G O D hath committed vnto him. These two things then are not vnmatchable: that is to wit, that gentleness should be vsed in the executing of Iustice, so as our wicked moode should not carie vs away, but that we should alwayes hold vs still to this point, of flouing euen those that shall haue done vs the worst they could. Thus ye see howe we ought to put this doctrine in vre. Gods intent is not to stirre vp his people to crueltye, his meaning is not to bereaue them vtterly of all compassion: and yet notwithstanding he will haue misdeedes to be punished.

And furthermore as touching the lande of Chanaan which hee had purposely appointed to his honour: hee woulde not haue it any longer so defyled with such infections. For the Nations that had dwelled therein before, had as it were defiled the land. Nowe Gods intent is to stablish his kingdome there, he will be worshipped vncorruptly there: and therefore all abominations must be rid away. For seeing that God will haue his righteousnesse put in vre through the whole world: whensoever he is known in any place, so as his truth is here preached, and he hath set his Church in some good order and state: men must looke well about them that no offences, or desylnges may raigne there. For wheresoever God is worshipped and serued: that place is as a temple dedicated to his Maiestie, and Gods temple must be kept holy as it ought to be. Then is it the greatest and intollerablest treacherie to Godward that can bee, when euill doings and crimes are fostered in his Church. Therefore it is not said without cause, Thine eye shall not pardon any of all these Nations, they must be consumed vtterly. And why? first the wickednesse that was among them was ouergreat, they were despisers of God, and therefore hee was faine to be reuenged of them in the end. Againe, he hath an eye to the benefit and welfare of his Church, so as he woulde not haue his children intangled with such as might draw them to euill, & consequently to their ruine and destruction. God then will haue his people rid of all stumbling blocks. Marke that for the second point. Morcouer for the third point, it was conuenient y<sup>e</sup> God should shewe himselfe a Iudge, to the intent that by beholding such vengeance, they might take warning to thinke thus with themselues: seeing that God hath done vs the honour to punish such as haue offended vs, to giue vs example by them: let vs beware y<sup>e</sup> wee fall not into the same offences: for then shall we be dubble to blame. Thus ye see how Gods committing of his vengeance vnto his owne people, to punish such as had bin giuen ouer to all naughtinesse, ought to serue all folkes for an example.

10 After he hath said so, he addeth now, Thou shalt not serue their Gods, for that would turne to thy decay. 15.

Although this saying had bin set downe by Moses alreadye heretofore: yet is it not without cause y<sup>e</sup> he setteth it downe here againe. For we soone forget what God commandeth vs, if wee bee not quickened vp to put it in execution. We erie our dayly to haue iustice executed: but how do men discharge themselues therof? Let their eares be neuer so much beaten, it is to no purpose, they passe not much for it: but they be the more forgetfull from day to day. Therefore doeth Moses put them in minde of the things that he had told them before, to the intent that the people should in any wise refrain from seruing the idols of the heathen. And he addeth a threate, It would turne to thy decay. In deede the Hebrew word which he vseth is commonly taken for cordes or lines, but here by a similitude it is taken for snares or nets, and for ruine, decay, downfal, or stumbling. Then 30 if thou fall into idolattrie: it will be a deadly fall to thee, saith he. Keepe thee from that. Thus we see that when God punisheth y<sup>e</sup> wicked, we must alwayes learne at their cost, to lue in his feare. For our condemning of other folkes wil not iustifie our selues, if we follow them or become like them: but rather they shall be witnesses against vs to bereaue vs of al excuse. Therefore let vs thinke vpon that which is added here, that when God had commanded his people to destroy the idolaters: he addeth, beware ye meddle not wth their superstitions, for then shall ye be ouerthrowen out of hand. Yea & we see also that God did not beare with the people of Israel any long time after they had offended. For the heathen might yet haue some excuse, because they had not had any teaching: but the Israelites sinned wilfully, & their doeing was a manifest rebellion, because they had bin sufficiently warned thereof before, specially for as much as God had done them so great honor, as to put the sword into their hand, as if he should say, Thou shalt punish the misdoings of others. Seeing then y<sup>e</sup> God had so honored that people: was it not an increasing of their euill much more, when they happened to become like those whom they punished? Yes: for y<sup>e</sup> punishment which they had executed vpon others, serued to bereaue the of al colour of ignorance, and to dubble their owne fault. For after as God honoreth men: they ought to take y<sup>e</sup> more heede to lue in all pures before him. That is the cause the why those two things are matched together.

And hereupon wee may gather, that all such as haue the executing of Iustice, must lay away their owne fleshy passions, and looke that they be quite and cleare from all desire of reuenge, hatred and rancor. And thus must be regarded of vs, not onely in punishing of euill doers, but also in the admonishments and warnings that wee giue. For if we be too sharpe, it is an ouer-shooting of our felues which proceedeth of our sinfulness, by reason whereof, although the correction which we minister be out of Gods word, yet is it already steined, and God alloweth it not. Sometimes wee think our felues to be excused, if wee tell a man the truth. Yea, but wee would not tell it him, if our oueruehement affliction draue vs not to it. For nowadaies vices are fostred among men, and euery man is content to beare with his neighbour in his euill doeing: but if there happen any variance or quarrell, then out fliech that which was concealed before. Therefore in rebuking men, it is not enough for vs that wee can alleage that we haue told them the truth: vnlesse we can also therewithall protest, that we were notled with desire of reuenge or otherwise. Let vs marke then, that if it be but in warnings by word of mouth, we must not be passionate nor desirous of reuenge, but simply do it of zeale to Godward. Now then it is much more reason that when a iudge holdeth the sword in his hand, and is to proceede further to the executing of iustice with rigour, hee should then lay aside all euill affections. That is the cause why God hath expressly shewed his people the end of the law which he had giuen them, to the intent they should be the better taught to walke in the pure religion, and not follow the superstitions which they should punish in the Heathen. That is the thing which we haue to note in effect.

Now Moses addeth immediatly, If thou say in thine heart, Alas these Nations are more in number than I, & how is it possible that I should discomfite them? Remember what thy God did in the land of Egypt, how he handled Pharao & all his people, & what proofe of his power he gaue thee there. For euen so will hee doe so all the Nations whom thou art afraid of. Heere Moses intendeth to hartenthe people, to the intent they should not be daunted with fearefulness. For the thing that doeth commonly hinder men in doing their dutie, is a certaine fearefulness which they conceiue. O (say they) this is hard to be done: and againe, if I doe it, I shall stirre vp many mens displeasure against mee, and such a harme may come to me by it. Thus in stead of walking as God commaundeth vs, we bowe with euery blast, and in the end turn quite away. Wee be but ouer bould and hardie in following our owne passions, and wee be so blinded with them, that although there be daunger in them, yet wee think not vpon it: and although it come to our mind, yet doe our affections so ouermaister vs, that we cease not to goe on still. Wee see that if a man be in a rage, although death be before his eyes, yet hee goeth through with it like a mad man, or like a beast that is caried away with furiousnesse. After that maner doe we deale. And that is the cause why I sayd that we be but too bold in executing our owne wicked and excessive moode. But if God commaund vs any thing: we make such nyfenesse at it, as is pitifull to see. And then come all these doubties in our head: How is it possible that I should holde out, if I should followe my vocation faithfully? For beholde, there is such a blocke in my way, I shall haue such a man mine enemy, such a thing may befall mee, such a man will be against me. All these forecautes (say I) will come to our mind: And therefore let vs marke, that God doth not without cause say thus to his people heere, doe these things, not respecting thine owne power, and abilitie, but respecting and knowing my strength: for that is inuincible. If thou haue mee on thy side, feare not but I will make thee ouercome all thine incombraunces, and all the euill incounters that thou canst meete with. Thus yee see in effect what wee haue to mark vpon this text.

Howbeit forasmuch as the vice that is spoken of heere, is common among vs, and all of vs are (as yee would say) attained with it: wee haue so much the more neede to be earnest in putting this lesson in vre. Wee see that if men be against vs, by and by we ouerthoote our felues, and we cannot serue God. And how so? If I should doe all that God commaundeth me, all the world would hate mee: I shall be pointed at with mens fingers, I shall haue as many enemies as I haue neighbours about me. Heere vpon wee shrink in our hornes by and by, and we beare ourselues in hand that wee be excused before God. And this happeneth in maner continually. Yea verily, and forasmuch as the world is frowarde, we haue good cause to be afraid when we intend to lue in such vprightnesse and soundnesse as God commaundeth. Sith we see it is so, let vs returne to that which is said heere: namely that to obey G O D, we must not passe what wee out felues are, nor what our owne credite and power is: but we must arme our felues with this promise. It is God that commaundeth me to doe it, and hee seeth well ynough what daungers and distresses are in it, he will stand by me and reach me his mighty hand. It beoueth me to rest vpon that, and to conceiue a stedfast trust, to ouercome all things that may turne me away from the doing of my duty. That is the thing which we haue to remember vpon this lesson of Moses. And in deede how should we doe without that? For wee see how vices haue their full scope nowadaies, and he that intendeth to serue God purely, may wel say he is as a sheepe among wolues. But what for that? Wee haue a good Shepheard, who hath promised to defende vs. Let vs put our trust in him, and in the meane season walke on in the way that he hath shewed vs. Else, I beseech ye what would become of the poore Christians that are deteined among the enemies of y faith? If they should passe for the daungers wherein they be, how durst they open their mouthes to honour G O D? Should they not needes either giue themselves ouer to all euill, or else at leastwise be faine to strike sayle? Yes surely. But when they consider thus, Our God is the keeper of our soules, and seeing wee be vnder his protection, let vs wait till hee reache vs his hande at our neede: then at the conceiuing of such thoughtes, they take newe courage & are inabled to ferue God, or at least-wife the faide fearefulnesse ouermaistreteth them

nor. Truc it is that wee cannot but bee affraide, and feele our flesh continually shrinking away, when wee bee disposed to walke according to Gods ordinance, and wee shall conceiue many crossebytings: but yett must wee not foster such vice to foade our selues in it. I say we must come to that which Moses telleth vs here: Thy God wil worke for thee.

Above all other, they that are in authoritie must arme themselves with this promise, or else there will be neither constancie nor stoutnesse in them. For wee see what threatninges, and spitings are wrought euery where. Insomuch that when euen the greatest kings and princes are minded to doe right: there needeth but some Courtier to inuigle them, and hee shall so alter their minde as ( doe what they can ) they must needes yeeld to all naughtinesse. No doubt but that euen the greatest princes, (although they themselves intend no such thing) doe become starke naught for other mens pleasures, so as they be oftentimes inforced to say, I would faine doe the thing that I knowe to be good, but I dare not for displeasing of such as are about mee, by-cause they may thurme mee vp great troubles and vquietnesse, and therefore I must bee faine to yeeld to them. Againe there are a great number of people that wil set themselves against me, if I should doe my dewy. Lo in what taking a prince shall diuers times bee. Insomuch that if hee perceiue some officers of his to haue committed outrages, pillings, pollinges, and extortions, O [saith he] I shall lose all my seruantes heartes if I bee too rigorous: therefore must I lee such things slippe, and though my people bee oppressed by it, yett must not I make any countenance y I see it. Yee see then that the greatest princes are the cause of all mischiefe by their inclining to the wooser part, when they thinke they cannot maintaine their state, but by fauor-ing wicked persons, and by laying the brydle in their necke. And how then shall they doe which haue not the like authoritie? Surely euery little blast of winde, and euery lease that falleth from a tree, must needes astonish them out of hand, so as for feare they shall alleage thus and thus: Al-las, I shall get such a mans displeasure, such an in-conuenience may befall mee for it: therefore I must doe such a thing or such a thing to saue my selfe: I see my life would be in danger, and I am but one man alone, I should bee made a pray for others. Yee see then howe these forecastes are a cause of the ouerthrow of all right & Iustice, so as men keepe not one continual train, nor hold themselves at one good stay, but that as soone as they haue done any one good deede that is worthy of prayse, by and by they vndoe it again and marre all. Therefore it standeth vs so much the more in hande to beare this doctrine well printed in our mindes, y if we intend to ferue God, wee must not haue an eye to our owne power, but trust to him that setteth vs a worke. For he wil not suffer vs to be disappointed, so we doe him the honour to call vpon him, and to flie to him for refuge, not mistrusting but that his power is able enoughe to maintaine vs: Yea and although we haue none enemies to the worldward, yett must that be our foundation, that wee may keepe the right way all our life long.

For let euery of vs looke into himselfe, and hee shall see that wee haue a common enemic of Sa-than, and wee see what wiles he hath to surprise vs: and what strength haue wee to withstande him? Againe the holy scripture telleth vs that wee must forsake our selues, mortifie all our affections and hold them in prison, and renounce all worldly things, if wee will come vnto God, & moreouer our life must shew y fruits thereof.
Now we know our frailtie, we see infinite temptations to inuigle vs, we knowe that the diuell is the prince that rameth in the aire about vs: and alas what can wee doe? This might at the first make vs abashed. But what? Wee must not heere haue an eye to our owne freewill as these blind wretches doe, which presume vpon their owne strength, and rest vpon their own abilities: but wee must say, O Lorde, performe thou the things which thou commaundest vs, and then commaund vs what thou wilt. Let vs goe and put our selues after that fashion into the hand of our God, and suffer him to rule vs by his holy spirite: and then wee neede not doubt but wee shal haue the vpperhand of al euils that incounter vs, and that although wee be troubled neuer-sonmuch, yett in the end hee will giue vs a happie issewe, so as wee shall feele that our trusting in him hath not bene in vaine. To be short, wee see how profitable this doctrine is for vs. For it were impossible for vs to ouercome the least assault that wee could be put vnto, vnlesse God reached out his hand to succour vs at our neede. Therefore let vs call vpon him, and that not for once and away, but forasmuch as it is right hard for vs to hold out to the end, and to haue a continuall stedfastnesse, let vs pray God that when he hath once set vs in the good trade, he continue the same, and suffer not vs to turne head again within two or three dayes after, but that when wee haue walked rightly for a certaine time, we may goe forward more and more, and shewe that we haue walked vnder his guidance, and not bene foolish hardie to raunge abroad at aduenture, but that wee haue put our trust in him, and imbraced his promises, whereby he telleth vs that he will neuer faile such as are his, but that like as they submit themselves to him, so he also will vt-ter his power towards them, to maintaine them and defende them against all the temptations of Satan, and against all the wronges of the world.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faulkes, praying him to make vs so to feele them as wee may learne to mistike of them, and giue our selues more and more to seue him: and that seeth wee bee so fore tempted with our owne wicked lustes, and so assailed by them euery minute of an houre, as wee be not able to ouermaister them: wee may take the armor which he giueth vs from heauen, that is to wit, the grace of his holie

holic spirite, wherewith to repulle all Sathans assaults, that by that meanes our selfe may bee glorified in vs, and his Kingdome aduanced more and more, so as his righteousnesse, goodnesse, and wisdom may shune forth euery-where, and specially be so printed in our hearts, as we also may beare the badges of them in all our members. That it may please him to graunte this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

19 That is to wit &c.

20 And also the Lord thy God will send Waspes among them, vnill he haue destroyed the remnant of them, and those that shall haue hidden themselves from thy presence.

21 Thou shalt not be afraid before them. For the Lord thy God is in the midst of thee, a great and terrible God.

22 And the Lord thy God will cast downe those nations before thee, by little and little. Thou maist not rid them away out of hand, for feare least the beastes of the feelde doe multiply against thee.

23 But the Lorde thy God will giue thee them before thee, and astonish them with a great astonishment, vnill they be vtterly destroyed.

VE sawe yesterday what courage we ought to haue to doe our duty, and wherupon we ought to grounde our felices: namely vpon the promise which God maketh vs, that we shall be maintained by his hand and power. For if we haue an eye to our own power & ability, we shall haue no cause to conceiue anie trust: but if we be acquainted with Gods power, and haue his promise that he will ayde vs: then haue we no cause to bee afrayde. Then if we see anie daungers that may make vs afrayde, or: astonish vs: let vs learne to haue recourse to this lesson, that when soeuer God commandeth vs to do any thing, he will not faile vs at our neede, but rather we shall feele his presence in such wise as we ought to do him the honour to rest vpon him. And to the ende this doctrine might be the better knowne, Moses hath therewithall set downe the experience thereof which God had giuen the people of Israel at their going out of Egypt. Thou hast seene the signes and wonders which God wrought: and he wil doe as much in this behalfe. It ought to suffice vs y God bindeth himselfe to vs by his promise. Howbeit so far as he perceiueth our infirmities: he giueth vs this help more, of making vs to haue experience of y things that we knew before. Nowe if this auail vs not: we be not onely vnfaithfull, but also vnthankfull. For when god doth vs good, it is not for an houre or twaine: but hee will haue it to stande vs in steede all our life long, and to conclude boldly, that as he hath begun well, so will hee also continue. Then let vs beware that we be not guiltie of so great vnthankfulnesse, as to haue thrust Gods benefites vnder foot, which ought to be so well knowne vnto vs. And that is to the end we may goe through with our course without stoppe: And because wee be as weake as is possible, or rather lasie and vnprofitable, when we shoulde do any good: let vs take corage as is giuen vs here euen by hauing recourse vnto God, praying him to holde out his hand continually to helpe vs: and therewithall let vs do what soeuer he commaundeth vs, and whatsoeuer we knowe to bee our duerie, not doubting but the end of it wil be good. Although the diuel praictise to turne al vplidedowne, and although men streine themselves and make neuer so greate assaults to further the same: yet will God get the vpper hande. And if hee succour vs, let vs not doubt but wee shall ouercome all the assaults which wee shall be driuen to endure.

And furthermore Moses addeth, that God wil sende Waspes to destroy the rest of those Nations, and those that hid themselves out of the way. As if he should say, that although the children of Israel were not able to destroy their enemies: yet woulde God prouide for it as one that hath all meanes in his hande. Thou shalt not neede (saith hee) to haue the sworde alwayes in thine hande: for God hath other men of warre, hee will arme the Waspes against them. Nowe surely this may seeme straunge at the first sight. For seeing that God intendeth to shewe his power against the enemies of his people: why doeth he not rather dart his thunder at the from heauen?

Why

Why maketh hee not the earth to open and to swallowe them vp? Why worketh hee not after some other fashion than by sending of Hornets? Nay, heereby hee ment to shewe, first that hee hath all creatures in his hande, and can serue his turne with them as he listeth. And it is a great aduantage for vs to knowe, that if God bee on our side, there is not any thing, no not euen so much as a flie, but it shall make with vs and against our enemies. Likewise on the contrary parte, if wee haue provoked Gods wrath and hee bee minded to make vs feeble his vengeance: although the whole worlde had linked themselves together to helpe vs: yet notwithstanding, all things (yea euen to the verie flies) shall be armed to execute his wrath against vs. This therefore is a thing that ought to make vs afraide when wee liue not as wee ought to do: and contrariwise which ought to giue vs singular hope and comfort, so wee bee vnder the protection of our God. Marke it then for a speciall point, that whereas God auoweth that hee will sende Walpes: his meaning is to shewe that hee hath incomprehensible meanes in his hande, and that hee will cause all things to imploy themselves in his seruice, to destroye his enemies and to helpe his people. But yet hee sheweth his mightie power much better thereby, than if hee used myraclis: I meane in punishing the pride of such as trust in their owne strength, and swell like Toades, and beare themselves in hande that nothing can hurt them. The despisers of God do make themselves beleewe, that they can exempt themselves from all inconueniences, either by their pollicie, or by their power and cunning. Heerupon (for wee knowe that men are ready to burst for pride, vntill Gods spirite reigne in them:) God, to humble them and to make them meeke, subdueth them and ouermastereth them as they deserue.

True it is that God coulde confounde them at the first blowe, and make them to feele such a heauenly force, as were able to dant the whole worlde: but hee will not deale so with them. Howe then? Hee vndermines them by such meanes as they neuer thought of: and that is to scorne their sonde ouerweeing the more, which made them worse than mad, and wherewith they had bene besotted before. And that is the cause why hee sent flies and other vermin vpon Egypt, rather than raised his Angels to destroye the Egyptians. It is true that God wrought all manner of wayes to make them feele his power. Hee sent darkenesse, hee turned the waters into bloude, and in the ende an Angel came and slewe all the first borne of their houses. This was well done. But yet Gods meaning was to pull downe the pride of Egypt, by sending vermine to consume them. Lo what men of warre God chooseth to wage battell for him, when hee listeth to laugh mens Iostinesse to scorne, and to spite them that they may be ashamed of it. For by meanes thereof they come to knowe themselves, whereas erst they forgate themselves, and bare themselves in hande that their owne power was wonderfull. And indeede when wee reade that Herod was so consumed of wormes: it ought to put vs in minde, that God sent him a punishment fitte for him, because hee had suffered men to call him a God. Hee was not contented with the degree of a mortall man: but hee woulde needs imagine that hee coulde transforme himselfe. Therefore it was meete that hee shoulde bee abaced beneath all men, and that the filthines of his bodie shoulde make him droppe in peeces, so as hee shoulde seeke to murder himselfe with his owne hand. Nowe then Gods handling of him after that fashion, is to humble him the better. And when wee reade this present text, let vs looke that wee liue in the feare of our God: and then wee may be sure of his helpe, so as wee may liue not onely among Walpes and Hornets and other such vermine, but also euen among Dragons and wilde beasts, according as it is saide in the fourefore and eleuenth Psalm, that when wee bee in Gods keeping, hee will maintaine our life in such sort, as the things whereof wee be most afraid, shall not bee able to annoy vs. But on the contrary part, if wee become his enemies and despise his maiestie: hee needeth not to make any great adoe in aiming of himselfe to confound vs. For flies will be able enough to execute his vengeance. Thus ye see what we haue to gather vpon this place.

Nowe againe Moses confirmeth the doctrine which wee haue heard: namely that the children of Israel shoulde not be afraid of their enemies. For God is among you (saith hee) yea euen the strong and terrible God. First hee setteth downe heere, that they shoulde not be afraid of their enemies: and afterwarde hee addeth the reason, For God (saith hee) is among you. And thirdly hee sheweth what manner a God the same is, to the intent that the people shoulde not doubt but hee is mightie ynough, and by comparing him to his creatures, resolute himselfes that it ought to suffice them, if they had him on their side. This is the summe of the things that are saide heere. Now it seemeth at the first sight that heere is some contrarie. For hee had saide afore, God will destroye all the enemies whom thou fearest: and heere hee forbiddeth them to bee afraid. Howe hang these two together? Whereas hee speaketh of feare, wee haue to note that when any danger is apparant and threateneth vs, wee feele the guize thereof, and wee must needs be afraid of it, and it cannot be otherwise.

Nowe then in saying that God will destroye all those whom his people were afraid of, Moses meaneth that although the enemies bee dreadfull of themselves, yet shall not God be hindered to destroye them. And againe, we haue to note also, that God hath alwayes borne with the fainthartednesse of those that are his. Indeede it was a fault in the people of Israel, that they were afraid of their enemies, for seeing they knewe themselves to be in the tuition of their God, they shoulde haue desired all things that might haue abashed them. Yet notwithstanding, God beareth still with that default. And although the people was vnworthy to bee succoured, because of the fearefulnesse that proceeded of the saide infirmite: yet did not God cease to holde them still by the hande. Neuertheless if God beare with vs, his meaning is not to feede: our vice, or to foalde vs in it, when wee haue not such stoutnesse and constancie as is requisite. It is true that God ceaseth not to haue mercie vpon vs for all that: but howeouer the worlde goes, yet is that fearefulnesse alwayes worthe to be condemned. For let vs see from what spring it issueth. If we had a perfite trust in our God: it would be put away all feare, and we might discerne all that euill is against vs, accordingly as Saint Paul saith, if God be on our side, who shall be against vs? And David saith, It a Million of men of warre had beseeged mee, yet would I not be affraide. Though I were in the darke of death, yet if I may see God my sheepehead, and he shew me his sheepehooke, I will rest my selfe vpon that and bee in quiet.

Therefore let vs marke well, that our Lorde sheweth himselfe pitifull, when it pleaseth him to succour vs in such infirmite. For hee needed to doe no more but say in one worde, prepare your selues to receiue my grace, and by and by thereupon we ought to embrace his promises and to rest vpon them, and to take all our contentation in them. But wee doe not so: and yet notwithstanding hee ceaseth not to beare with vs therein. Neuertheless, although hee vse such gentleness and patience towards vs: yet doth it not followe that therefore there is no fault in our fearefulnesse, neither ought we to conclude that wee may fall a sleepe in it: but rather we must quicke vp our selues to say: how nowe wretched creature? Thou distrustest thy God. Thou hast bene as greatly afflicted as might bee, and hee hath succoured thee. What meanest thou by reiecting his goodnesse after that manner? Thinkest thou that his benefites haue alwayes bene lost towards thee, that thou distrustest them through thine owne leauidnesse, in that thou doest not acknowledge them? For if wee acknowledged not Gods benefites as they deserve, surely we should be confirmed by the same I haue said already. Then is it not without cause if God addeth here, that his people should not be affraide of their enemies. True it is that he had saide, Thou shalt bee affraide of them: but there hee spake of the infirmite that he knewe to bee in his people, which was faultie: for hee condemneth it as it deserved. And there vpon hee addeth, Thou shalt not bee affraide of them. As if hee should say, true it is in deede your nature will alwayes bee fearefull: but yet yee must not bee affraide, yee must withstande such fearefulnesse. And when yee see the multitude of your enemies, it cannot bee but that yee must bee somewhat moued: but yet yee must haue the buckler of faith to repulse all such feare, and yee must thinke that seeing I haue promised to succour you: I will not faile you.

True it is that doe what wee can, wee shall neuer be so well hartened, but that there will be some misdouting as wee haue heretofore seene. For wee ought to holde our selues vnto Gods promises, and to assure our selues of his succour. Surely if we seeme neuer so stout, and there bee but one sparke of feare in vs, wee must vnderstande that the same is euill. Yet notwithstanding, so wee bee not ouerwhelmed with feare, nor quail not, but take courage, and after tossing too and fro, doe holde still our owne, and enter into the battell: our Lorde is contented with vs.

Nowe then, what is to bee done? When wee perceiue any danger, it cannot bee but wee must haue some feeling of it: for otherwise we should be as blockes, and not to bee affraide of anything, is no vertue. A drunkarde will runne vpon the swordes point, hee will leape out at a windowe, hee will be affraide of no thing: and why is that? Because he is out of his right wittes. Likewise a madde man will throwe himselfe into the fire or kill himselfe. Therefore we see that it is no vertue to bee without feeling of griefe. Neuertheless when wee feele the dangers, wee must resort to the remedie that God giueth vs.

True it is that our life hangeth as by a threed, and that there needeth not any thing to destroy vs. But yet howe weake fouer we be, our Lord hath promised to holde vs throwed vnder his wings: and therefore let vs runne vnto him. And seeing hee hath a care of our life, let vs trust thereto, and call vpon him as oft as wee see any danger like to inuse. And forasmuch as he hath promised neuer to shrinke away from vs: let vs approach boldly vnto him, and put our trust in him, and then shall wee be fenced wel ynough. For the name of God is an invincible fortress, the righteous will see thereto for refuge, and hee shall neuer perishe. To the intent therefore that wee may haue a stedfast assurance in the middes of danger, let vs learne to haue recourse immediately to our God, by receiuing the promises which hee giueth vs: and they wil be a sure and steadie leauiestock to rest vpon: and by that meanes alio God shalbe glorified in vs.

True it is that wee may feele some such conceit as shall abash vs: but yet that feare of ours which wee doe so conceiue, shalbe but as an exercise of our faith, and the ouercoming thereof shalbe the more commendable. Howbeit if wee finde any difficultie, so as we cannot resolute our selues at the first: then let vs assure our selues there is yet still some infirmite in vs, and wee yeelde not God his due honour, forasmuch as wee bee slowe to beleeue his promises, and strike not to them with a cheerefull courage. And therefore let vs blame our selues in that behalfe, yea and euen be some for it. Notwithstanding, wee must not quail though there be infirmite in vs: for God wil bring al to passe by his own power as shalbe declared yet more plainly hereafter. Thus ye see what we haue to remember vpon this text, where Moses saith yee must not in any

wife feare our enemies.

Now let vs come to the reason which hee addeth: Thy God (saith he) is in the mids of thee. This is the same promise that was giuen at the beginning: for we must always cal to mind what hath bin vtreated of heretofore, namely that God telleth vs not of our own strength, when he willeth vs to be well fenced with constancie, but calleth vs back to himself. The end then which we must alwayes begin at, is that we must not thinke our selues to haue any power, nor be besotted w any vaine opinion as we see men commonly be in e-steeming and flattering themselves, in so much y although they be lesse thā nothing, yet they always imagin this and y of themselves. And yet notwithstanding, that imagination is nothing else than an ouerweening. Also to incorage vs withal, god vseth none other mean but only to say, haue an eye to me. If it were in our owne selues to trust in him: surely god would not reproch vs any whit at all: for he is not loth y there should be any ver-tue in vs. But when as hee saith, Haue an eye to me: it is a token y we be destitute of all goodnes, and that if we serch & sift our abilitie throughly what it is, we cannot but be abashed at it. True it is that mē may welynough flatter themselves for a time; but yet in the end they shal find them selues decieued in their own opinion. And as we see here & haue seene heretofore, our lord sheweth vs y we shal neuer find firme ground to stand vpon, vtill we be come vnto him. And that is y cause why it is said, Thy God is in the mids of thee.
 Surely it is an excellent promise, that God wilbe in the mids of vs. And for y same cause aldo doth hee call vs his temple: which thing was figured in old time by the Sanctuarie. For it was Gods will to haue it seated in the middes of all the people, and hee kept his residence in such wise in it, as men might perceiue his power to bee there. Nor that hee was inclosed in that Arke or in the Tabernacle: but it was his will that the people shold haue a visibole warrant, that they might not dout at all of him. For such is our rawnette, that alwayes to our seeming God turneth his backe to vs, and thinketh not vpon vs, or else that hee is too farre of from vs to succour vs with his hand.
 Therefore it was Gods will that his Sanctuarie should be in the mids of his people, as a warrant of his presence and power. True it is that as now we haue not that, but wee haue other helpes as conuenient for vs. And first of all, the things that were figured by those outwarde shadowes, were truly, substantiāly, and throughly fulfilled in all pointes, by the coming of our Lord Iesus Christ. For seeing that the fulnesse of the God-heade dwelleth in him, we must not doubt any more but that we haue God with vs. And for the same cause is hee called Emanuel, that is to say God with vs. Nowe then if this promise were made to the people of olde time, much more ought we to assure our selues of it at this day, in the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ. And the cause also why hee tooke our fleshe and nature vpon him, was to the ende it should be a holy and indissoluble bonde of the vnion wherein it behoueth vs to put the whole trust of our saluation. And herewithall, we haue his promises, and the seales of them in his Sacraments: so y when we berinke vs of our baptime, thereby the son of God doth witness vnto vs, that we were once clothed with him as saith saint Paul. And when wee receive the supper, he sheweth vs that hee is our foode, and that the breade which wee eate, doth not nourish vs better, than we be nourished by his substance, in so much that we liue in him and by him. Againe wee heare how he saith, that wherefoeuer two or three be gathered together in his name, hee wilbe in the middes of them. Se-ing it is so: let vs not thinke that this was saide alonely to the children of Israel: but let vs vnderstande that the vse thereof belongeth vnto vs also at this day. According whereunto we see howe the Church is called Gods resting place, as is saide thereof in the Psalmes, and in the eighth Chapter of Esay, where it is saide that God will dwell in the middes of his holy Ci-tie.

Let vs applye all these texts to our vse, and let vs not doubt but God is with vs nowadayes, yea and that hee will not onely dwell among vs [generally] as in his temple: but also abide in euery one of vs feuerally. And that not onely to make vs feele his power, and to vnderstande that wee haue our life and mouing in him, as S. Paul saith in the Actes: but also to make vs perceiue that presence of his, which hee hath promised to all y faithfull. Now then hee dwelleth in vs, when wee feele that hee yeeldeth vs record of his adoption by his holy spirit, so as we can call vpon him as our father. And therein doth our lord Iesus Christ shew that we be members of his bodie, and that hee is so knit vnto vs, as hee keepeth not any thing feuerally to himselfe, ne withholdeth any thing from vs, but communicateth all his graces vnto vs. Now then let vs mark: y no man can call himselfe a beleuer, vnles hee be thoroughly perswaded y God is with him. And al of vs in general ought to imbrace this promise, that God is in the mids of vs: specially when wee haue the preaching of his worde, and the order of calling vpon him in common, itablihed among vs. If wee haue that once: let vs not thinke that euer we shalbe disappointed of the thing that is containede here: that is to wit that God will dwell among vs, so as wee shal neuer neede to make long iourneys to seeke him, but we shall finde him still ready at hand to succour vs, Mark that for one point. Neuertheless it is true that this presence is not perceiued by our mother wit: for it will seeme oftentimes that God is very far of from vs, or that hee hath forgottē vs and cast vs vp: but it is his will to try our faith & patience by that meane. Howfoeuer the case stand, if we worship him, & haue a care to cal vpon him & to resort vnto him to rest vpon his good nesse: it is a signe that hee is neere at hand to vs.
 Then if wee haue a desirousnesse to resort vnto him, and doe learne to moune in our aduersities, beseeching him to haue pitie vpon vs: it is a token that hee hath not giuen vs ouer, but that hee holdeth vs vp with his mightie hand, so as we doe rest vpon his power. Yee see then howe God euen in hiding of himselfe away, catcheth not to shewe himselfe neere at hand vnto vs, and that he dwelleth continually in vs . And nowe we see wherevpon wee ought to ground our selues to conceiue assured truit : that is to wit vpon this, that we haue God on our side . And that is a good token that we haue not any thing in our selues, but that it behoueth vs to be vtterly destitute of all truit and hope, vntill our Lord haue shewed himselfe vnto vs to helpe vs.

Nowe although this promise ought to suffice vs: yet notwithstanding, Moses addeth one point more, which is not superfluous: namely that God is mightie and terrible. Truly it should seeme at the first blush, that this is not spoken to any purpose. For the case concerneth the strengthening of the faithfull, so as they shoulde plucke vp a good heart, and not doubt but they shal discomfite all their foes: now then hereupon to call him a terrible God, should rather serue to feare them out of their wits. For although God mean not to put them in feare: yet doth his onely maiesity so amale vs, as we would faine hide vs from his presence if it were possible. Inasmuch then as he termeth himselfe terrible, it should seeme that insteead of giuing vs matter of comfort, he intended to driue vs away from him. But wee must marke that Gods terming of himselfe mightie and terrible, is to the ende to put vs out of doubt that hee is strong and mightie ynough to discomfite all our enemies. For we must alwayes come backe to this point, that his shewing of himselfe fauourable, mercifull and patient towards vs, is altogether of his owne proper nature: for we know he is our God & sauour. Forasmuch then as God is called our God: he wil haue vs to shewe our selues to be his people: that is to say, that his receiuing of vs is with condition, to gouerne vs with his goodnesse, as a shepheard that is careful for his flocke, so as his esteeming of vs as his children, is because he hath adopted vs of his own freegoodnes, and is willing to shew himselfe alwayes ratherlike towards vs, by bearing with vs in our infirmitues. So then, whereas he is termed here a terrible and nightie God, it is not in respect of his owne people: but in respect of the vnbeleuers and infidels. And that is the cause of the often repeating of this worde, The euerslasting, thy God. Moses speaketh of it here a lower or five times within a little space. Wherefore saith he so oft, Thy God? To the intent that the people should resort to their couenant. In deede it were not Lawfull to preace vnto him, vnlesse he called vs: but seeing that hee of his own good wil hath couenanted with vs to receiue vs to mercie, and hath tolde vs that he will take vs for his flocke & keep vs vnder his protection: we ought not to be afraide any more. Then let vs learne that wee cannot put any trust in God, vntill we knowe that he is willing to admit vs to him, and that he hath already chose vs to be his houtholde, and to be vnder his gouernment. When we haue once this promise that he will be our God: then may we well trust in him. For we haue taken holde of his courtesie, and that is to the intent we should knowe, that he will vse the same towards vs euen to the end. Howbeit when we once knowe the goodnes that God vttereth vnto vs: we must also on the contrarie part consider his power against al our enemies. For why? we see we neede not any thing to feare vs or to make vs afraide. In deed if we heare of the promises of Gods goodnes, we feele some sweerenes in them: but yet if the duell stirre vp any trouble against vs, by and by we be dismayed. As long as it is preached vnto vs that our life is in Gods hand, and that we be safe when wee be vnder his protection: all is wel, we receiue that doctrine, and to our owne seeming, it hath taken good rooting in our hearts: But as soone as the lease is turned, or any daunger shew it selfe where are we then? But had we bin wel seled & confirmed in the thing that we heard: we should be safe ynough, and we would keepe on stil forward: but wee neuer thinke more vpon that, neither is there any meanes at all to comfort vs. Thus is it a signe that if there happen neuer so little daunger, we doubt of Gods power, & we doe him not y honor to say, he hath promised it, therefore will he performe it, for he is able. And for y same cause S. Paul speaking of Abrahams faith, saith that hee Rom. 4. 18 beleued euen against hope, knowing that hee which had made the promise, was also able to performe it. It seemeth to haue bin a smal matter to say that Abraham beleued that God was mightie. For who denyeth that? And therefore Abrahams faith is not so greatly to be commended in that respect: for there is no man but hee confesseth it. Yea, yea: but yet for al that, as smal a thing as it seemeth to be, it is a very rare and difficult thing: and that doth experience shewe. For (as I saide) if we meete with any crabbed incumberance, we thinke there is no God in heauen to succour vs any more: and al that euer can be alledged vnto vs, wilbe so colde, as wee shall find no reliefe in it. Therefore it is not without cause that Moses here magnifieth Gods mightie power, and saith that hee is terrible, to the ende that the people might thereby assure themselves and say, very well, it is true that we be nothing in comparison of our enemies, but what for that? What maner a one is God? Seeing he saith that he wilbe our captain, & that we shalbe vnder his protection: what can all the men in the world, or all creatures doe? Is there any thing that can withstande the power of God? Again, what is his maiesitie? If he list to shew it: they that nowadays are ouersotted in their owne pride, shall out of hand be put to vtter confusion. For if God make the mountaines and Rocks to melt, and the earth to wash away at his presence: what shal become of me with their frailete? Thus ye see to what purpose and ende we ought to applie this saying, That God is mightie and terrible. It serueth not to dismay vs: for we know y whensoever we resort vnto him, we be alwayes receiued to mercie, his throne is not dreadful to the beleuers, but it is the throne of grace and goodnes. Wherefore if we see that our enemies make vs afraid, & that (to our seeming) they be as Wolves to swallow vs vp, & we as sheep in comparison of them: very wel, let vs resort to our God. And what maner a one is he? O, wee must not onely conceiue this worde God: but wee must also attribute him his qualities therewithall, namely that hee is mightie and terrible: and then let vs not be affraide. For all the rage that our enemies do cast and some out, is but a smoke, & God will make it to fade all away, as soone as it pleaseth him to shewe his maicstie: and we be sure hee will doe it, because he hath promised it. Therefore let vs so benefite our selues by this promise, that whensoever we be astonished, or in any doubt or griefe of minde, wee alwaies haue recourse thither and say, Our God is mightie. And why? Wherein will he viter his mightines? Alas, it is true that he might wel vter it in confounding & destroying vs: but he is patient, gentle, & meeke, and hee wil not haue vs to feele his force to our harme: but rather he wil haue vs to feele his passing fatherly goodnes. All his desire is to gather vs vnder his wings as a henne that broodeth her litle chickens. And it is a singular comfort vnto vs, when we know y he wil be so louing & fauourable towards vs, and yet neuertheless will bee knowne to be mightie and terrible in the ouerthrowing of our enemies, and in ouercomming all things that are against vs. Therefore let vs put our trust therein. But yet therewithall let vs beware that wee abuse not his promises. For if wee will haue him to shewe himselfe vnto vs: we must bee a quiet people to himwarde and abide vnder the couert of his wings, and not play the wilde beastes in running away from him. For the hypocrites will brag well ynough that they haue God on their side: but yet for al that, they shinke away from him, and let him alone. Now then let vs learne to goe in such wise to our God, as we may trust in him and repose our selues vpon him. And in so dooing, let vs beate in minde what he commandeth, and examine our faultes according to his worde: and then shall we finde by experience, that he meant not to beguile vs, when he told vs y he would be in the mids of vs mightie and terrible to discomfit all our enemies.

Now by the way Moses addeth an exception, saying: that God will not destroy all the enemies of his people out of hande. And why? Least the beasts of the field (saith he) should see themselves against thee: But thou shalt weede them out by litle and litle. Thou shalt dispatche euen their kinges: and so bee shori, thou shalt not leaue anything at all of those nations. Here Moses giueth the people a very necessary warning, in telling them after what manner they shoulde proceede. For otherwise they might haue taken some euill conceite at their comming into the lande of Chanaan: and if they had not rooted out their enemies immediatly all at once: they might haue imagined with themselves, what is become of Gods promises? It shoulde seeme that hee hath mocked vs. Therefore doeth Moses holde them in awe, saying: It is true that your God wil discomfit all your enemies, but yet shall not that be done so soone as you woulde wishe, howbeit assure your selues there is good reason that hee shoulde so deale with you, and therefore put no distrust in your God. For hee seeth that the lande woulde bee replenished with wilde beastes, and they would be so many enemies to make warre vpon you. God then doeth this to your benefite, in that hee will not haue the whole land to bee vtterly ridde of all enemies. For if your enemies should be all destroyed immediatly vpon your comming into the lande: you could not replenish it againe vpon the sudden, to defende your selues from the wilde beastes. Nowe we haue to note here, first that God intended to correct the peoples ouergreat hast, by shewing them that they should hold themselves in peace and quiet, vntill God had put them in full possession of the whole lande. For it is the proper nature of faith to tary Gods leisure, as the Apostle affirmeth in the Epistle to the Hebrewes, alledging this text of Abacuc, that if God delay the performance of his promises, we must tary his leisure, and not be ouerhastie: for they shall come to passe time ynough, that is to say, they shall be performed in their due season. Then let vs marke that faith cannot bee in vs without patience, that is to witte, without tarying of Gods leyisure, till it please him to execute the thing that hee hath spoken and saide, and without assigning or setting of any terme as men commonly doe, who are so bolde as to take vpon them to make God subiect to their will. Let vs beware of such oueritatchesse, and let vs rather learne to bridle our selues, till God dispose of things accordingly as hee gae sentence of them afore by his owne mouth. And that accordeth with this saying of the Prophet Esay: Our power shall be in silence and rest. Then must we be stil and quiet, if we intend to do God y honor to trust in him, and to shew y we do: it vnfeadly, nedly. And here our Lorde had a regarde to bridle his people. Forasmuch (saith he) as mcs affections are ouerhastie & headie: let it not grieue you though your enemies bee not destroyed all out of hand. Let that serue for the first poynt.

And herewithall let vs marke also, that here God ment to shew the reason why he differeth and delayeth the performace of the things that he determineth, and bringeth them not to passe out of hand. Truly he is not bound to doe it. Should God giue vs an account of his doings? If he worke not after our liking, is hee bounde to tell vs why? Ought not wee rather to roopee to him, and to say, Yea Lord, we bee ignoraunt, yea and euen starke blinde, and it belongeth to thee onely to be wise? Forasmuch as there is nothing but follie and vanitie in vs: rule thou vs according to thy providence. It were meete that we shoulde deale after that fashion: but we see howe God yeeldeth to our rawnesse. For inasmuch as wee bee tiklish, and cannot finde in our hartes to bee contented with his pleasure, and to rest wholly vpon it: here he sheweth vs a reason for it. So then let vs mark wel y ineffimable goodnes of our God, in abasing himselfe so far, as to shewe vs the reason why he doth things, according as Moses telleth y people of Israel here. For he hath an eie to your benefite, least y wilde beasts shoulde deuour you: for they would multiply, & there be not folke ynough of you to manure y whole lande, but there would be diuers places which shoulde ly vninhabited. Knowe ye therefore that whereas your God destroyeth not all your enemies out of hand, it is for your benefite, and it were not expedient for you that it should be otherwise. And so in effect Moses telleth the people heere, that Gods delaying to giue them full victorie, was to their benefit and welfare. Therefore let vs mark well, that if God make not such haist as we would haue him, he hath an eye to our welfare, so as he procureth the thing that is best for vs, though we perceiue it not at the first. True it is that we weene our selues to bee wise and well aduised: and thereupon wee take vpon vs to iudge that Gods ouer slowe, and wee would fayne thrust him forward itraite wayes by the shoulders to cause him to make more haste. But (as I said) that is bicause wee knowe not what is good for vs, but wee imagine that wee be beguiled euery turning of a hand. God therefore must bee wise for vs, and see more clearly than wee doe, and dispose things, not after our liking (for that were ynough to marre all:) but after as hee himselfe knowes to bee good. And in the meane while we must shut our eyes, and doe nothing but glorifie him in his prouidence: And if wee perceiue not at the first why he worketh after that fashion: well, let vs tarië patiently till he shew vs why he made delay and would not satisfie our desires. This doctrine cannot bee fully declared as nowe, but yet must wee make an abridgement of it to conclude withall. Likewise now adayes wee may happen to languish all our life long. Now if we should hasten God to deliuer vs: what a thing were it? We would fayne be in a paradise here aforehand: and that were the next way to rocke vs asleepe in the world. God therefore is fayne to wake vs by keeping vs occupied with store of troubles and vexations: and that makes vs to long continually for the heavenly lyfe. Wee forget this geeste at the first: but G O D maketh vs to perceiue howe frailte we be, by wayting with all patience and humilitie, to be gouerned by him as he thinketh good. Finally he sheweth how greatly it is for our benefite to be beaten with his roddes. And therefore doeth hee make vs to passe through many troubles, and to bee greatly vexed and tormented. And if there were none other enemies to withstand vs than such as are spoken of here: well, wee might hap to doe wel ynough with them, for they be men. But wee be dayly assaulted by the diuel and by sinne: and wee would fayne ouercome them at the first push, and obtaine victorie againt Satan, and againt all the temptations of the world. But what a thing were that? Our pride would be intollerable, wee would thinke our selues to bee Gods, wee would not passe to call any more vpon God, nor to sigh and mourne for our own weakenesse, wee shoulde not tell what it were to mislike of our selues, nor to vnderstand that there is none which hath all power in him but onely God. So then although God haue assured vs that we shall haue the vpper hand of all our enemies: yet shall not y be performed at y first brunt. And why? Bicause it were not good for vs. True it is that wild beastes would not come and deuour vs: but wee haue pride and vainglorie, and wee bee sotted with selfweening. And that deuillish ouerlustinnesse would carie vs away, so as wee should fall asleepe in our vanities and delights, and that would bee worse to vs than all the wilde beastes in the worlde. And therefore let vs assure our selues, that Gods leisurely working, as it were by degrees and by lynce and by leuell: is to our benefite. For coulde he be letted to accomplish all his worke in one minute of an houre? No: but he listeth not to doe it so soone. And therefore let vs learne to keepe the spirituall rest or Sabbath as it is spoken of in the fifth Chapter, that is to say, to imprison our wit, reason and will, and all that euer wee haue besides, and to hold them in such awe, as none but onely God may haue the rule of vs, and dispose of all things at his will. And moreover, let vs go on when he leadeth vs the way. For that is no breaking of the Sabbath. To occupie our selues cuerie man in the charge that God calleth him vnto, and to doe our duties faithfully euery man in his vocation, according to the measure of grace that G O D hath giuen him, are the workes of God, and we must vnderstand that it is God which worketh them in vs. But yet for all that wee must not bee too hastie, as who shoulde say that God were at our commaundment, or that wee would haue him doe what wee list and when wee list: but all our wisdom must bee to submit our selues to his will. The thing then which wee haue to remember vpon this text that we may fare the better by it: is that we must learne to bee obedient to our God all the time of this our mortall and transitorie life, not doubting but that at length he will vanquish Satan and all that is againt vs, and turne euen those things to our benefite and saluation, which we thinke as now to be hurtful and harmful to vs.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them better than wee haue doone, so as wee may be drawn to a right repentance, and learne more and more to distrust our selues and to settle our trust in him: and that when wee haue embraced his promises, wee may fare the better by them by applying our selues to his seruice, so as wee may not be vnprofitable in the world, but that as soone as his spirit dwelleth in vs, it may forthwith auail vs, and shewe by effect that he hath not adopted vs in vaine in our Lord Iesus Christ, so as wee may grow in the same knowledge more and more till he haue thoroughly accomplished it in vs, and that wee haue the full measure of it, wherof we haue but a very small portion as now. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

On Wednesday the xiiij. of August. 1555.

The Lviij. Sermon which is the seventh vpon the seventh Chapter.

22.23.24 And the Lord &c.

25 Thou shalt burne the images of their Gods with fire. And neither couet ne take thou to thee the golde or siluer that is vpon them, for feare least it turne to thy decay. For such things are abomination to the Lord thy God.

26 Therefore thou shalt not bring anie abomination into thine house, least thou thy selfe become accursed as well as it. But thou shalt abhorre it and loath it vtterly: for it is a cursed thing.

Esterday I began to shew that we must be constant vnto the end in trusting vnto God, & in holding of our selues to his promises, though the thing that he speaketh be not performed out of hande, nor his determination put in execution by aud by: for he hath alwayes good reason to make delay thereof. True it is that wee perceiue it not, and that is because our eyesight extendeth not farre. We see euen among men, that such as haue liued long time, and haue had most experience of things, haue most stay of themselves, and are not so hasty to doe and attempt things, as younger folkes are, which cast no perils but runne all on head. A yong man hauing a whor braine, wil needs dispatch al things out of hand in one day. But he that hath some stay of himselfe by reason of much experience, will looke about him how to dispose his matters, and to doe his things in good order. Now there is no comparison betweene God and men. It is not to be faide that he is an olde expert artificer (as men terme it): for all things are euer present vnto him, and euer haue bin since the creation of the worlde: and againe, his will is the rule of all wisdome and right. Sith it is so, let vs forbear to be ouerhasty, and if it please him to let vs linger for a time, let vs beare it patiently. Moreover wee haue to note the thing that was declared yesterday in a word or twaine: that is to wit, that if GOD deliuer vs not from all troubles and vexations out of hande: it is thorough our fault. For as soone as one mischiefe is past, we procure another to come in the neck of it. This is not to be wited vpon God, nor vpon the state of the life wherein wee be. But we our selues are so fruitfull in bringing forth of euill, that although God purge vs of neuer so much, yet will the seede of it spring vp newe againe, and yeelde manifold increase by and by after. That (say I) proceedeth of our sinfulness. And therefore let vs marke well, that if God set vs not in quiet at the first dashe, but suffer vs to haue enemies to grieue vs and vex vs: it is because it is not for our benefite nor for our situation, that hee should maintaine vs in too great ease. And for prooffe thereof (as I faide) wee could well finde in our heartes to amend the euil in other folkes, but we thinke not vpon it in our selues: and yet is that good which we ought to begin at. If we will be good iudges to condene other mens faultes: we must first looke to our owne: & we must not only bethinke vs of those which are known to vs: but wee must also passe yet further, to craue pardon of God for the faultes that are better known to him than to our selues. And besides that, let vs be well aduised, that we proceede soberly in that behalfe. For it may come to passe, that he which shall haue shewed some good zeale in chastising the faulte of his neighbour, shall not onely fall into the like fault himselfe: but also doe much worse. Seeing then that we be so inclined vnto euill, let vs vnderstand that it is good for vs that God should exercise vs after the maner that Moses speaks of here. For the wilde beasts neede not to come to worke vs displeasure, or to pick out our eyes: wee haue annoyances and deceits ynowe in our selues. Why then is it that our Lord suffereth vs to be so fore vexed & troubled outwardly by me: but because we haue as it were an host within vs, ranged in aray against God and his lawe: Therefore is hee faine to stoppe vs and to keepe vs occupied by other men: and that is to our benefite.

Furthermore, God is faine to leaue vs still in our infirmities, because: that if he should giue vs the full perfection, there is none of vs all but he would aduance himselfe too much and be too proud. It is certain that we haue victorie already against Satan, as it was purchased for vs in the person of our Lord Iesus Christ: but yet must we be faine to endure many encounters, and many rough assaules, yea and to be brought to so great perplexities, as we shal not wote which way to turne vs, but wee shall haue ouer much adoe to withstand our owne vices, and the great number of imperfections that are in vs. And why is that: Euen to humble vs. In deede we haue a promise that God will vanquish Satan, and thrust him downe as it were vnder our feete, as S. Paul speaketh of it in the sixteenth of the Romanes: But yet shall not that be done at the first day: to the intente wee may haue cause to praise God, in that wee see our selues so fraile, and yet hee giueth vs strength to holde on our way still continually. Yee see then that wee must keepe stil our way in walking through this worlde: for it is a journey as the Scripture

*Col. 2. 15;
Heb. 2. 14*

termeth it. Nowe then, let vs fully determine with our selues to suffer it patiently, if God delay ro giue vs full victorie of our enemies, yea euen of our ghoſtly enemies, assuring our selues that he doeth it not without iust cause. But yet must wee bee fully perswaded of another point also, namely that although we linger a long time, and things be out of order as in respect of the world, and God enlighten vs not, but let vs alone in great distresse: yet he will giue vs the vpper hand in the ende. Wee must be fully resolved of that: for without such certaintie we could not haue any courage one minute of an houre, but wee should quaike out of hand, and it would seeme to vs that the duell should ouerwhelme vs. And specially when we were to fight against our own lustes, howe might wee get the vpper hand of them? And if wee finde our selues so combered to day: what shall wee finde to morrow? The mischiefe will increase continually: and the great number of our owne experiences do thew vs that wee neede none other thing to ouerthrowe vs. Then could wee not holde out, vnlesse wee were fully and thoroughly out of doubt that the promise of God should bee wholly accomplished vnto vs, and y<sup>e</sup> in the end our enemies shal not be able to stand before our faces. Therefore let vs fight boldly against Sathan, and againste all the lustes of our owne fleſhe: and we shall overcome them, so wee haue Iesus Christ for our Captaine. For we must be hopelesse as in respect of our selues, and not imagin that our owne strength can suffice: but wee must learne to call vpon him that is able to helpe vs at our neede. That is the thing which wee haue to beare in mind yea and euen in respecte of this present life. Let vs not doubt but that although we be faine to passe through many miseries, yet notwithstanding all shall tunc to our benefite and welfare in the end. Let vs beare this saying well in mind, so as wee may fate the better by it, yea euen in such sorte as wee yeeld not to murmur against God, though hee graunt not our desires at the first. And in so doing we shall haue inuincible consencie to keepe on our way still, though it seeme neuer so hard vnto vs. And although we see neuer so many perils: yet shall we haue such constancie, as to hold on still till wee be come to our wayes end. For why? Gods promising of vs to giue vs full victorie, is not to disappoint vs: he is faithfull in his sayings. Neuertheless, if it please him to make as though he regarded not things, wee must not take vpon vs to set him any terme, but let him dispose matters according to his owne infinite wisdom.

Yea and Moses sayeth that euen Kings shall be deliuered into the people of Israels hands. As if hee should say, that there is not any power or strength so great that ought to dismay vs. And this saying is not added without cause. For euery thing of no thing will deſte our eyes, and make vs to forget the mightinesse of Gods promises. For if we perceiue any greatnesse in men and that our enemies are of abilitie to trouble vs: we beare our selues on hand that all is mard, and by and by wee haſte ſtraught at it. True it is that our presumptuousnesse blindeth vs ouermuch, so as we perceiue not the daungers when we be once minded to followe our owne foolish rashnesse. But when wee should obey God, and doe our dewty: the whisking of a ſtic ouerthwart our faces will turne vs away by and by. For this cause doth Moses say expressly, that wee must nor be dismayed for any greatnesse of the world. In so much that although our enemies shine as the Sunne, although they perke vp neuer so high, although they seeme to haue neuer so many meanes wherewith to ouerwhelme vs at the first brunt: yet must wee not be discouraged for all that. And why? Let vs consider what Gods hand is, and then will all things vanish away which we feare as in respect of the world, so as we shall see that it is but vanitie. For who is he that can withstand him that made all things and vpholdeth all things still by his power? Can our Lord as well bring all things to naught, as hee made the world of nothing? Yes: and whenſoeuer he listeth to doe it, it is enough for him to speake the woord, that is to say to vtter his will.

Now then, seeing that the creatures haue not any ſtate or being furtherforth than God voutſafeth to maintaine them, can they stop the bringing to paſſe of his good purpose? No: and therefore let vs learne to yeeld God ſo much honour, as to make none account of all worldly greatnesse, strength, and power, in comparison of him, and to knowe that hee can caſt them all downe when hee thinketh good. Loe what wee haue to marke. And thereby we may ſee what a happinesse it is to be able to reſt vpon God. For whē men ſtay vpon their own ſtrength, although they vaunt themſelues, flatter themſelues, and beſot themſelues neuer ſo much in their owne presumption: yet is it a wonder to ſee how they be toppled downe in the turning of a hand: and God allo laugheth their pride to ſeorne. But when we haue the ground of Gods promiſes to reſt vpon, which assure vs that wee can neuer quaike: then may we be bould to deſire the world and all the creatures therein. And although we be nothing of our ſelues: yet ſhall wee haue enough whercof to glory, and wee may well triumph aforehand, ſoſmuch God is on our ſide.

But what? Wee ſee that men are ſo wedded to themſelues, as they can nor by any meanes be rid of this duellish ouerweening wherewith they be as it were bewitched, but that they will euer be drawing of ſomewhat to themſelues, in ſomuch that it is vnpoſſible to plucke them backe vnto God, and to make them to ground and ſettle themſelues vpon him. But yet is not this doctrine written in vaine. And therefore let vs vnderſtand thereby, that if our Lorde doe ſend vs vexations, and wee linger in a number of torment in this world: it is to exerciſe vs withall. And why? To the ende that euery of vs ſhoulde examine himſelfe to amend his faultes, and nor ſticke ſo much at other mens faultes [as to forget our own,] but to thinke vpon our ſelues firſt, and conſider that wee haue neede to bee handled roughly, ſo as wee ſhall no ſooner haue eſcaped one trouble, but wee shall by and by meete with another, vntlesse wee turne againe to him that is able to defend vs. Therefore wee must shape our selues to it all our lyfe long, and behaue our selues after such a sorte, as wee haue our eyes continually fastened vpon our God, assuring our selues that his executing of his iudgements in our sight, is to the ende to holde vs in awe, and to make vs beware that wee intangle not our selues in our leawd lustes to abyde in them: for they bee tooo dangerous enemies. Let vs beware wee resemble not those whome wee see that GOD could not abyde, and let vs conlude therevpon, that the same matter concerneth vs, that is to wit, that wee must profite our selues by such instruction. Thus ye see in effect what wee haue to marke vpon this text of Moses.

Now he addeth immediatly, That the Israelites must burne all the Images of their Gods in the fire, and not so much as comes the golde and siluer of them: for feare (sayeth hee) leaff thou beeft snared by it, or that it snare so thy decay. For the Hebrewewoorde that Moses vseth heere, signifyeth sometymes to bee snared, and sometimes to stumble by meeting with some wicked job or stoppe. And he vsed a word deriued of the same Verbe heretofore when he said, Keepe thy selfe from their idoles, for that will be thy decay, or that will marre all: the which two sayings come both to one ende. And therefore yee see wee must not stande vpon termes, it is ynough for vs that wee knowe the true meaning of them. Heere GOD warneth his people, that if they cast any faspic or liking to the idoles of the heathen, or to the things that serued their superstitions: it will turne to their ouerthrowe like a nette or snare, so as they shall bee caught and snared in it, and to bee shorte, it will bee as a pit for them to fall headlong into. That is the effect of the matter which is tolde vs here. And nowe againe he addeth a seconde threat, Euery whis of it (saith he) is accusid or interdited: (as men commonly terme it,) or forbidden. Therefore beware: for thy GOD misliketh it, and hee cannot away with the things that haue beene so defiled with the seruise of Idols. Take heede therefore that thou leaue not any whis of it: beware that thou defyle not thy house with it. For if any of it come within thy doores, the vengeance and wrath of GOD will immediatly come in with it. That is the pith of the things which wee haue to marke heere. The matter in question, is that the people shoulde not commit idolatrie: but GOD addeth a further commaundement of greater rigour: which is, that they shoulde burne all that euer had serued about the idols, though there were no superstition in them. As howe? If the people shoulde haue taken to them selues the Golde, Siluer, Precious stones, or other Iewelles that were about the idoles: it had beene as a filthinesse that is lothsome in Gods sight. And if they shoulde haue alledged, wee doo it not for any deuotions sake, for wee knowe it was a heynous matter to haue abused Gods creatures after that fashiō:

but wee take them to our owne vse, yea and euen to serue GOD withall: [that allegation would not haue gone for payment:] For God on the contrarie part will haue them to bee all burned. And so wee see howe greatly he is displeasid with idolatrie, in that folke are so straitly forbidden heere to apply any of all the things to their owne vse, which shall haue bin defyled aforesometimes with superstition. And therevpon must wee also note, that the purenesse of Gods seruice is the thing that he is most chare of aboute all other things. Will wee then direct our lyfe after such a sorte as God may allowe of it? Let vs looke that wee honour him, yea and that wee honour him after such manner, as wee seeke not to haue some faire shew of vertue onely to the worldward: but to follow simply whatsoever God ordeineth. For we may seeme to be as Angels of Paradise, & yet in the meane while God shall esteeme vs as duels. Though we liue neuer so honestly & vnblamably among me: yet doth it not folow y therefore we be discharged before God. And why? For although I be not a thief in stealing away my neighbours gold and siluer: to what purpose shal that serue mee, if I rob God of his honour? Though I be no theefe to mee, yet am I a false traitor to God. If I speake no euill of any mortall man, & yet fal to blaspheming of the liuing God: what a dealing is y? Now then let vs mark, y the fautes which are committed against Gods Maiestie, are much grieuouser and heynouser than all the offences & wrongs that can be done against our neighbors. And it is a lesion which wee ought to marke well: for wee see that men make smal account of it now adayes. If any wrong bee doone to a man, the partie must bee condemned for it. But if Gods glorie be defaced, and himselfe spytted all the wayes that can bee: what for that? Men do but wring their mouthes aside at it, with who findes any fault with me for it? and in the meane while God hath no man to take his part, but there are ynow y will take part against him. If any blasphemie, any outrage, any lewdnes, or any wickednes be committed, wherein Gods word is openly troden vnder foote: no mā thinkes vpon that. But for the fauour of me, we wil not tucke to maintaine euen the euill: and as for the number of the zealous, it is very small. Hardly shall a man finde one among a hundred, y will put forth himselfe to maintaine Gods quarrell: & yet his doing of it shal bee but coldly neither. But y wicked shal alwaies finde champions ynow, to fight against God & his righte ouersesse. And yet for al y, we consider not y in so doing we iustle against God, & that is too hard a match for vs, so as we shalbe driuen to feele y he is so hard a stone y whose euer iustleth or rushest against him, doth but go about to bruse & breake himself in peeces: & finally if it fall, it will quash them all to fitters y set themselves against him. Then let vs mark that it is not ynough for vs to haue liued with our neighbors without doing any wrong or harme: for God maketh more account of his honor than he doth of all the things in the world. Therefore the offences that are committed against his Maiestie, are y heynouset of all other.

And why? There is not a more precious & deare thing than his seruice. And that doeth he shewe vs here, in that we see he will haue the parentesse of his seruice maintained, vndeiled of any superstition. And he can so illaway with idolaters, that he cannot abide y<sup>e</sup> things which had bin dedicated to idolatrie beforetimes, should bee suffered to remaine in the worlde, but will haue them rid away quite and cleane. And hereupon we may gather what vengeance is prepared for such as haue peruerced and corrupted the true seruice of God, and the pure Religion. Although they alledge neuer so fayre excuses, and pretend to haue doone it vpon good intent as they terme it: yet will not GOD receiue those things for payment. And why? For he will haue obedience about all things: & he knoweth which is the true rule of seruing him well and duely: he hath shewed vs it, & therefore we must holde vs to it. Otherwise wee may well protest that our intent is to serue GOD: howbeit our seruice is not doone to him but vnto idols, when we inuent what we our selues thinke good. As for example, whereas the Papises protest, that their meaning is to serue GOD with their Masse, & with all other their baggage and Ceremonies: it is true that they may well rest thereupon confidently: but in the meane while God disclaimeth and disliketh euery what of it: for it is the duell whom they serue in deed.

2. Sa. 15. 22.

Deut. 32. 17.

E. Cor. 10. 20

And why? For there is not any thing there, which is not manifestly found to be against Gods word and his trutheth. Therefore it is not ynough to pretend Gods name: (for we see that the worlde hath not ceased to abuse that fayre colour at all times): But we must holde vs to Gods commandement: for without that, there is nothing but vtter corruption.

And nowe let vs marke well the reason that Moses addeth: that is to wit that it shall bee as a snare to catche the people, or that it shall be their ouerthrowe. Here we haue to marke, first of all what our frailtie is. For although wee minde not to doe euill at the first dashe: yet will it amaze vs to see howe the deuil will haue intrapped vs out of hande, by his wiles which wee perceiued not. Most commonly, if a man bee tolde of his fault when hee hath doone a misse: hee thinketh not (to his owne seeming) that his doings are euill. And why? Bycause he perceiueh it not. Surely if we were well aduised, we should espy Sachans guiles a farre off: and it is a point of wisdom which Sainct Paule attributeth to the faithfull. You (sayth hee) doe knowe his wiles, so as yee can beware of them. Yea, but hee speakeh of such as suffer themselves to be gouerned by Gods spiritue, which giueth them good discretion and aduisednes: but as for vs, wee shut our eyes wilfully, and beare our selues on hande that it is enough for vs so wee knowe not the euill. But we be not competent Iudges in our owne case. And againe our owne affections blinde vs, and are as towles to keepe vs from seeing three fingers bredth before our noses. Yet notwithstanding we cease not to be hampered in Sachans snares, so as hee holdeth vs as his pray, bycause wee bee not watchfull enough in taking good heede to our selues, accordingly as Moses sheweth vs heere, in telling the people that if they tooke to them the riches of the heathen, and the gold and filuer of their idoles: all would turne to their decay. And this is not saide without cause. For when we meete with the furtherances of idolatrie, for as much as wee bee giuen thereto alreadie by nature: it is a woonder to see howe soone wee bee snarled in it. For the Diuell sheweth vs not his snares at the first, vntill wee bee vsne into them. But GOD who foreseeh all things, warneth vs of them aheadhand, to the ende wee shoulde wake and keepe good watch, and not giue Satan any enteraunce to winne vs to him or to intrappe vs. So then let vs marke generally, that to keepe our selues from all offence against GOD, wee must prevent the occasions of euill. For he that casteth himselfe headlong into any hazard, tempteth GOD. Wee bee not so strong as to bee able to outstande euill, when wee fall to iusting against it. For wee see howe wee bee daunted at euerie shadowe of it: and what will become of vs when wee shall bee put to the pinche? Seeing then that men doo feele such frailtie in themselves: they ought not to seeke occasions. For if a man sling himselfe wilfully into the fyre, doeth hee not make open warre against God? Yes: and euen so doe wee, when we take occasions to doe euill. If a man yeeld to a thing y<sup>e</sup> seemeth not to be any great vice: at the first he perceiueh it not, howbeit he proceedeth from the lesse to the greater, and from euill to woofte, vntill at last he fall into the ditch. Men shall not perceiue at the first, that dauncing is a bait of whoredome, and a trickie of bawdry to marre all. Men perceiue not at the first, that wanton songs serue to impeach & corrupt good manners, as the scripture speaketh of them: and therefore they thinke not of it. Men perceiue not y<sup>e</sup> playing and gaming are dangerous, or rather mischieuous, yea and that they serue to destroy mens houses & to make hauocke of all: y<sup>e</sup> they be as a seede or roote whence all y<sup>e</sup> vngodlinesse groweth to spyte GOD withall: that they breede occasions of strife, debate, quarrels, swearing, and all manner of naughtinesse: that they bee a meane to impouersish such as otherwise might beare an honest porte and countenance: and to bee shorte, that they bee meanes to make Christians to become bruite beasts. Men perceiue not all these things, neither make they account to keepe themselves from them. But yet for all that, the diuell is the founder of them, who increaseth the mischiefe continually, and God also doeth giue him the bridle: bicause wee vouchsafe not to receiue the warning that hee giueth vs, wee bee worthy to perishe and to tumble into the pit to breake our neckes. Now then let vs marke, that to eschew the offences to Godward, that may lead vs to destruction, we must also shun the occasions of them a farre off. Mark that for one point.

1. Cor. 15. 33

And about all things, for as much as we haue

such a cursed inclination of nature, that idolatry is as it were rooted in vs, so as euery of vs is able to keepe a schoole of it, and to bee Doctors of it without any further teaching: therefore doeth it stand vs on hande to shun all furtherances thereof. Nowe then whereas some nowe adayes will needes rowe betwene two streames, and beare folke in hand that men may beare with the time, granting that men may well cut off the things that are vtterly intolerable and manifestly against God, but yet [auouching] that the things may well be borne with, which are eyther indifferent, or not vtterly euill. I say that they which speake after that fashion, doe shewe full well that they haue no right meaning in them, nor any desire that there should be any such reformation as were meete to be had. And yet notwithstanding, the worlde is full of such disguisers, which would faine haue a particularised fashion of seruing God, & a religion y<sup>e</sup> were neither sith nor flesh (as mc say,) but half of one sate & half of another, as is said in y<sup>e</sup> prouerb. But for our parte let vs vnderstand, y<sup>e</sup> in as much as we be giue to idolatry, it standeth vs on hand to flee the further from it, that we meeete not with any of the things that may leade vs to it. For if there bee any thing that may draw vs that way, by and by we be seduced, yea and we be infected with it inwardly, like a man that hath a secreete disease within him which he perceiueeth not, and yet is neuer the lesse but rather the more in daunger, because the mischief is vnspied. Euen so is it with vs: If wee retayne still the furtherances and occasions of idolatry and superstition, wee shalbe ouertaken vnwares by Sathans subtlety which we marked not. Thus ye see what wee haue to remember, considering the snares and trappes that draw vs to destruction, as Moses speaketh of them heere, Nowe let vs come to the second threat which hee addeth. Hee sayeth, It is an abomination [or lothsome thing] before God: and therefore that euery man must beware of the bringing in of such abomination for feare of being accused. It should seeme heere that Gods rigour was too great, in forbidding the vse of gold and siluer. For are they not Gods good creatures, and such as may be put to good vse? And although some men haue abused the things which God did put into their hands: doth it follow that they haue the power to defile his creatures, and to corrupt and marre them? No: For we heare how Saint Paule saith, that all thinges are pure and cleane to such as haue cleane consciences before God: and there is no vnclannesse, but that which proceedeth of our selues. How is it then that hee forbiddeth folke to couet that gold or siluer? Let vs marke that this lawe is a parte of the ancient order whereto God ment to binde the Iewes: and I haue told you already that the ten verses haue one euerlasting rule, which God hath giuen to continue to the worldes end. If wee minde to haue a doctrine that shall please and like God, our life must be conformable to the law that is contined in the ten commaundementes: howbeit, this present commaundement serueth but for an order: like as when Christen magistrates make lawes nowadays, are they against Gods word? No: but they doe it in way of government and ciuill order, that their people may be held the better in the feare of God and in the right religion. Now then this law whereby God forbad the coueting of golde and siluer, serueth but for a time. For God trained vp that people like little babes. And Saint Paule alleadgeth the same similitude, which may bee as a solution to the doubt that might be moued vpon this present place. When little children are vnder Tutors and gouernours, they bee held in the straiter awe, and they inioy not their goods and liberty at their own will, inso much that their state seemeth to bee a bondage, and yet notwithstanding they be free, yea and heires too, but they be not of age to haue the guiding and gouerning of themselves. Euen so the people of olde time were in straiter subiection vnder the lawe, than we bee nowadays [vnder the Gospell.] by reason whereof it is lawfull for vs to vse the things which we may put to a good vse. For otherwise the Papistes might sturue vs. They would fall to making of their coniuirings vpon Corne and wine: now if we might not be so bolde as to eate of the Corne that were so charmed, or to drinke of the wine that were so coniuired: if we might not touch any thing which they had defiled with their pelting trash: wee should be faine to sturue for hunger. But they haue not any power ouer the creatures of God, in so much that they continue pure of themselves, spite of all their abominations. Neuertheless it was Gods will to hold the people of old time in awe, after the manner of yong children as I said afore. But he hath giuen vs greater libertie at this day. And what maner of libertie? Not a licentious libertie to do what wee list: for S. Paule addeh that exception, that although we haue greater libertie nowe adayes than the Iewes had, yet must wee not therefore lay the bridle in our neckes: but wee must haue a speciall care to beaue our selues honestly, and to be constant in seruing GOD purely. For as I said, wee shall alwayes be weak, and may easily swaue aside to idolatry: and therefore wee must cut off all occasions thereof. And yet notwithstanding, wee may vse y<sup>e</sup> things that are good of themselves: yea, so wee doe it without giuing any cause of offence, and beware that wee wipe away all that may induce vs to euill and to the corrupting of Gods seruice. That is the thing which wee haue to remember vpon this place. For it behoueth vs to mark well the resemblance that is betwene vs and the Iewes, and the diuersitie that is betwene [the libertie of] the Lawe, and the libertie that God giueth vs now a dayes. But yet must wee moderate this libertie in such sort, as it turne not into loosenes to giue ouer our selues to euil, knowing that we bee but too much inclined thereunto, and wee should be yet much more prouoked vnto it, if we would needes haue furtherances and seeke occasions thereof. And in this respect was Achan stoned to death for stealing of the baggage that was about the puppets [of the Chananites.]

nites]. Surely his intent was not to builde any altar with them: but hee was led to it by his co-uectiousnesse, [which made him beleue] that if he could sicke and conuey them away cleanly, hee should saue so much by it. But all the people were faine to be accused for it, vntill it was bewrayed. Lottes were cast: and when Iosua had made him to hold vp his hand to put him to his othe, saying, My sonne giue glory vnto God: immediately vpon his confessing of the crime whereof he was accused, hee was stoned to death, only for stealing of certeine of the things that had bin forbidden. Yet had hee not robbed any person: hee might well haue sayd, who can complayne of me? But hee had done against Gods commaundement. Therefore let vs marke well, that whereas G O D dealeth more freely with vs now adayes, so as we may vse the things y we earnestly desired by y vnbeleuers, & which haue bin applied aforesometimes to superstition: we neuertheless must cast away all that cuer may draw vs vnto euill. For if wee should keepe still images & such other lyke things: it were the next way to pull to vs still some euill incontinencie, so as we might conceiue some hope of returning againe to the superstitions of the time past. And therefore let vs beware of all such things.

Now wher eas it is sayd, Beware shouing not curfinesse into thy houses: hereby we be put in minde y in stead of going forward and of profiting our selues we not onely go backe, but also worke our owne ouerthrow, when we vse vnlawfull meanes & such as displeaseth God. And y is a very notable rule. Trueth it is that the matter which Moses speaketh of here, is idolatrie, & he sayth y who-soeuer they be which take to the selues the golde & the siluer y hath serued to that purpose: they shal defile their houses & prouoke Gods wrath, and in stead of gathering treasure to their profit, they shall but take vp a fire to consume all y they haue in the end. That is Moseses meaning. But we both may and ought to gather a generall doctrine vpon this matter: namely that wher eas it is sayd, that it is a bringing in of curfinesse into our houses: it serueth to thewe vs y when men imagine to benefite themselves by it, they doe but prouoke Gods wrath against themselves & throw themselves headlong into destruction. As how? They that heape vp goods by hooke & by crooke, they that pull & poll, they y eat vp & deuoure, they that sicke al y comes in their way, they y vse craft and subtiltie to take other mens goods vnto them: doe beare their selues in hand y they worke wonders, & that they shall bulde them houses, and make immortall monuments not onely of wood & stone, but also of euerlasting renowne, so as their children shal haue whereof to triumph after their decease. But yet for all their gathering & heaping vp of goods, what do they? they doe but pile vp a stacke of wood and coale, whereunder lyeth Gods wrath as a fire hidden within it. In deede it shall not kinde at the first day: but in the end the flame will burst out, so as all shall be consumed anon after. Now if wee did marke this well, surely wee would not bring Gods curse into our houses as we doe, and as most men doe. What is to be done then?

First and foremost let vs marke, that all such as defile themselves with Churchtheft, cannot scape the punishment which Moses denounceth in this place. I say that all they bee Churchrobbers, which haue taken to them the goods of the Church, of which sort are the priettes, the Monkes, and the rest of the stinking rable of the popish clergie, who haue deuoured and still doe deuoure all that was dedicated vnto God. Now then, if we also doe the like: shall it not be y next way to bring Gods curse into our houses? Yes surely. Therefore let not vs offend in the same things which we haue condemned in the y lued amisse; but let vs keepe our selues from them. And if we intend to prosper: let vs assure our selues there is none other meanes thercof than the blessing of God. But we know that God hath not promised his blessing to any other, than such as trauell faithfully for their huing, & earne their bread with rightfull labor; which offer no man wrong, but content themselves with their meane state, so as if they be rich, they couet not more and more, or if they be poore, they be contented with their estate. To such folke hath God promised his blessing. Now if I doe otherwise, so as I beguile my neighbor, so as I deale crookedly, so as I labor to enrich my selfe by violence and robberie: what doe I then? should I looke for the blessing that God hath promised: Wee must not thinke to binde him, when we fall to spiting of him so wilfully: nor to haue his blessing light vpon vs, when we fall to straying out of the right way, shaking off his yoke & bridle fro our necke: but we must contrarywise looke y he should curse vs, & that his wrath shold light vpon vs, & not onely vpon our selues, but also vpon our childre. And so wee see what instructiō we ought to gather vpon this place. Namely y euery of vs ought to looke to himselfe, & y if we purpose to haue God to keepe vs through his fauor & goodnesse: our houses must not be defiled with robberie & deceit, neither must our hands be imbrued with stealing & sicthing: but to be short, we must be cleane from all spots. Yea & we must beware that we keepe y order which our Lord hath commaunded vs: which is, y he which is desirous to be blessed in his owne person & in his household, must looke wel to it y god be serued & honored in his house, that there be no filthinesse lurking any where, y there be no whordoms, no swearing, nor no other disorder, y there be not any thing against God, nor any euil bolstered or borne out. If we doe so, then shall wee prosper better than wee doe: and although things fall not out as we would wishe to the worldward: yet will God graunt vs the grace to be contented with his only blessing, which wil satisfy vs more than if we had all y heapes of golde & siluer that were possible to be imagined. But on y contrary part, if a man haue not a care to keepe his house pure and cleane as a temple of God y thing y Moses speaketh here must needs be performed. y is to wit, Gods curse must come into it, accordingly as it is sayd in y prophet Zech. 5. 3. 4. Zach. 5. 3, 4. charie, that this same curfesse possessed al y houses of that time, because iniquitie reigned in the and departed departed not from them. Will wee then haue God to shew out his blessing vpon vs? Let vs be sure that we cleanse both our selues & our houses from all filthinesse: and then will the curse depart from thence out of hand. But if wee cease not to prouoke Gods wrath by abusing his patience too long: hee will kindle a fire that shall neuer be quenched: and if wee fall still asleepe, hee will wake vs to our cost: and when we think our selues to be escaped, then shall wee be new to begin. And therefore let vs be circumspect to prevent the mischiefe, specially sith wee be warned, yea & warned by our God himself. Wherein hee sheweth vs what a care he hath, both of our worldly welfare, and of our saluation.

Matt. 6. 33.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God wth acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to vouchsafe to make vs feeble the better than wee haue done, so as it may make vs to resort vnto him, & to be forie for our finnes, and to condemne them, & that we be not so froward as to spite him, & to harden our selues, but that we may haue a meeke & plyable heart, to receiue al his warninges & correçtiōs in such wise, as we may haue the skill to fare y<sup>e</sup> better by them. And so let vs say, Almighty God heavenly father, &c

Keepe al the commaundementes which I haue commaunded you this day to do them: that yee may liue and encrease, and go in and possessē the land by right of inheritance, which the Lord swore to your fathers.

2 And be nundfull of al the way wherethrough the Lord thy GOD hath made thee to walk these fortie yeares in the wilderness: to the intent to afflict and try thee, that hee might knowe what is in thine hart, and see whether thou wouldst keepe his commaundementes or no.

3 Hee afflicted thee, and made thee to endure hunger, and fedde thee with Manna which neither thou, nor thy fathers knew, to make thee to know that man lyueth not onely by bread, but that man lyueth by all that euer commeth out of the mouth of the Lord.

4 Thy rayment hath not worne vpon thee, neyther hath thy foote bene swolne all these fortie yeares.

Ere againe Moses sheweth y<sup>e</sup> people, y<sup>e</sup> God gaue not his law in vain, but that his will is to haue it kept and that is the way for vs also to fare y<sup>e</sup> better at once and away: but hee repeteth them againe for a larger confirmation. Looke (sayth he) that thou keepe the commaundementes which I inioyne thee: not to the end thou maist knowe them at thy fingers endes, or bee able to vtter them with thy mouth: that is not enough: But thou must put them in execution. And to confirme this matter the better, hee addeth a promise, saying: That thou maist liue, and increase, and go into the land which the Lord thy God did swear vnto thy Fathers. This hath bene expounded already heretofore: and there remaineth no more to doe, but onely to renewe the remembrance thereof, according also as we see that y<sup>e</sup> was the intent of Moses, or rather of y<sup>e</sup> holy Ghost. Now the, our Lord alittreth vs to him by promises, of purpose to giue vs y<sup>e</sup> better courage to serue him: & he doth it of his own freegoodnesse, without being bound thereto. For he needed no more but to say the word: he hath authoritie to commaund vs what hee listeth, and it is our part to obey him. Why then doth he ad his promises, but to win vs by louingnesse lyke a father, who though he haue al fourraignie ouer his childe: doeth neuertheless vs gentlelenes in promising, to y<sup>e</sup>ntē his child thold serue him with the cherefuller heart? True it is that the child is bound therto aforehand by nature: but yet when hee seeth his father so vp-

Rom. 10. 17. meane doth faith come. But yet must we bring our handes and feete with vs also, to offer them obediently vnto God, & to inploy all the power that hee hath giuen vs in his seruice. Therefore let vs not come hither onely to haue our eares beaten with the thinges that are preached vnto vs: but let vs also apply them to our vse. Instruction must be matched with practise: or else we shall neuer knowe what hath bin shewed vs and taught vs. And so we see what we haue to beare in minde. Moreover let vs marke, that Moses thinketh it not enough to haue sayd these things right towardes him, as to offer him more than his duetie: it moueth him the more, if he be not too too vnkind & lewdly disposed. Therefore let vs learne that in this cald God stoopeth to vs, as if he were a mortall man. Yet is not that any derogation to his maiestie. but rather a recorde of his infinite goodnesse, in that he vseth not his right with rigor, but forbeareth it and applyeth himselfe after that fashion vnto vs, to doe the things which hee knoweth to be meete for our rudenesse. And therefore whensoever wee heare that God promiseth to prosper vs, if wee honor and serue him: Let vs vnderstand his so dooing is of free goodnesse, to win vs the better, & because he is loth to vse rigor towardes vs as he might doe. But yet for all this, we must not imagin that he is bound to yeelde vs any recompence or reward for our seruice. For it is not for vs to enter into account in this behalfe, as though wee could win any thing by it: but wee must receiue whatsoever he offereth vs as of his free gift, knowing our selues to bee so much the more bound vnto him.

Moreouer let vs marke what hath bin tolde vs heretofore: namely that the land which Moses promiseth here vnto the people, had bin promised already foure hundred yeeres afore, whe-none of them all was yet borne: & therefore God had not an eye to anie of their desertings. But now he saith that they should ioy the promise which God had made them of his owne mere goodnesse. And so we haue to gather in effect, that all y euer we receiue at Gods hand, spring-geth out of none other fountaine than onely his meere mercie, because he is good, because hee hath pitie vpon vs, because he hath not any respect to our worthinesse but onely to himselfe, & because it pleaseth him to be so bountifull towardes vs. Marke y for a speciall poynt. But yet for all y, if we will inioy his benefites, if we will haue them auailable to our saluatiō, & if we will haue the continual possession of them: we on our side must looke to answer to y grace y God sheweth vs. And how shall we answer it? Verily not by shrinking away fro him, nor by refusing y things y he offereth vs to drawe vs to him: but by knowing the right & lawfull vse of the benefites which he bestoweth vpo vs, so as we loue him & glory-fy him for them, & euery of vs spend himselfe in his seruice. Therefore whesoeuer our Lord shall haue done vs any good: let vs vnderstand y the same cometh not for aught on our behalf, but rather y we be so much y more beholdē vnto him.
 And to y end we may possessē & inioy the same benefites, & y they may profite vs to our soules health: let vs be well aduised therewithall, y wee be y more prouoked thereby to serue God, for-asmuch as he sheweth himselfe so liberal towardes vs. That is the thing in effect, which we haue to gather vpon that text.

Now Moses addeth, that the people must bethink them of all the iourney whereby the Lord their God led them. This bethinking of themselves was very needefull. And if we were wise & well aduised, we would bethink vs better than we doe, of y things which our Lorde sheweth vs throughout all our lyfe. For both the aduersities & also the prosperities which he sendeth vs, are instructiōs which we ought to marke well, & this present lyfe is as a schoole wherein we ought to calt to minde that lesseon both euening & morning. But what? Although God doe the office of a good schoole-maister, & neuer leaue teaching of vs: yet there is none of vs that taketh heede of it, but y time is lost, we be lyke children that are hardened or become truecandes, so as doe y maister what he can, the childe doth but laugh him to skorne, he giues not his minde at all to learning, but his wittes are wandering abroad, & either he gueth himselfe to follie & lewdnesse, or else runnes loy-tering vp & downe the streetes when hee should haue his booke in his hād. At y same point are we:

 For we haue y booke open before vs, & as long as we bee in this world, God teacheth vs by all maner of meanes to loue him & to feare him, and to put our trust in him and to submit our selues to his good will. If he send vs blessings, it is to this end that wee should learne, to giue our selues wholly ouer vnto him. If he afflict vs, it is to waken vs, that we should liue in his feare. If he send vs any neede, or hold vs in any distresse: it is as a quickenng of vs vp to call vpon him, & to flee to him for refuge. If he giue vs any taste of his fauor: it is to the end we should be the better confirmed, not onely that he will helpe vs during this mortall lyfe, but also that hee will bring vs to the kingdome of heauen: and thereof must wee be fully resoluēd. Thus ye see how God neuer cea-seth to rehearse our lesseon to vs: and yet doth none of vs giue heede to it, but we wander away in our owne imaginations, the pleasures of this world doe cary vs away, and euery of vs is so combered with these vanities, that wee haue no leasure at all to thinke vpon our God, or vpon the things that he sheweth vs.

Yet notwithstanding, it is not for naught that Moses saith here, Bethinke thee of the way where-through the Lorde thy God hath led thee. True it is that the people of Israell had peculiar institutions, so as a number of things befell them in their traouling through the wildernesse, which belong not vnto vs in these dayes: but yet was that a figure of mans lyfe. The wildernesse (say I) wherein the people were by the space of forty yeeres, was as a mirour of this earthly wayfaring of ours, wherethrough we must passe vntill GOD take vs hence into his rest.
 Lykewise the resting place of the land of Chanaan (accordingly as it is named in the fourescore and fiftenth psalme) was as a warrant of the endlesse lyfe that is prepared for vs, and wherein wee shall no more bee tossed and turmoyled as we be in this world. Now seeing it is so: Let vs note that as the Iewes were ex-hortēd to remember the iourney wherein God had led them through the wildernesse: so now the chiefe poynt of our duetie is to consider that inasmuch as God gouerneth vs, we liue through his fatherly care, so as he guideth all our steppes which we haue to goe or come. And it behoueth vs to bethinke vs well of all the time of our lyfe, & to consider throwly what we haue had experie-

rience of in this world. True it is that we thinke oftentimes both vpon the good and vpon the euill which we haue receiued: but that is cleane contrary to the intent of our God. For our thinking vpon our aduersities is not to knowe them to be as rods whereof God beateth vs for our chastisement. No, it is but to frette and chafe against him, and to gather matter to grudge at, saying, what will become of this? Shall I alwayes be new to begin? I should feeme that God intendeth to confound me presently: for my affliction was great enough afore: and was it meeete that hee should increase it yet more? After y<sup>e</sup> maner doe we gather a summe of all the miseries which we haue felt from our childhode to our old age. Howbeit that is but to sharpe our selues against God, whereas we should rather thinke thus: Goe to, my God hath not ceased to chastise me euen from my childhode vward: and if I had returned vnto him, surely he would haue spared me: but he was faine to dubble his stripes, & to hold on still, because I haue alwayes waxed harder & harder, & rebelled against him: & ought not y<sup>e</sup> to haue sufficed me if I had not bin quite paste grace? But yet for all this, I hold on still mine accustomed trade: neuertheless he ceaseth not to waken me vp with afflictions. He is loth that I should welter in mine owne dung, and yet doe I continue still in my stubbornnesse: and what will come of it in the end? After this manner (say I) must we quicken vp our selues, & call to remembraunce the whole time of our lyfe, or else we shall neuer bethinke vs of the aduersities that we haue indured, but with murmuring & grudging against God. In lyke case is it with prosperitie. If God make vs to prosper, & afterward cast some affliction vpon vs: wee be the more greeued at it, insomuch y<sup>e</sup> in stead of saying with Iob, wee haue receiued good at the Lordes hand, & why should we not receiue euill also: (for when he doth vs good, he is not vnwilling to continue it, & his ceasing of it, is not for that he is become niggardly, or vnable to doe vs good any more: but because he knoweth it to be expedient for vs to be so exercised, that he may try our patience: & so ought we to thinke.) But what? we on the contrary part say thus: it comes to my minde that I was well at mine ease, and I had this & that. To be short, wee coule finde in our heartes to serue Satan, so wee might haue prosperitie, & we seeke to make our selues merry, bearing our selues on hand in y<sup>e</sup> meane while, that it is but lost labor to serue God. Thus wee see how men turne to the cleane contrary, both the prosperitie & the aduersitie y<sup>e</sup> God sendeth them. But when we should learne any thing, our remembraunce is very short: for if God haue afflicted vs for a time, we neuer thinke of it after. In deede as long as the crosse indureth, wee can skil to sigh & to play the hypocrites, & to pretend that if God would vnto safe to abate his rigor, we will become litte Angels: but as soone as he withdraweth his hand from vs, our nature falles by and by to his olde byasse, wee doe but shake our eares a litle, & we neuer thinke more vpon his corrections to doe our selues any good by them. If God send vs any prosperitie, we haue forgotten them out of hand. Insomuch that whe we haue once crammed our selues full, in stead of yeelding him thanks, we fal to kicking against him lyke ouerpampered iades, as shall be declared in the two & thirtieth chapter: ye see the that our wittes are very short in remembreing the way wherethrough God hath led vs. As touching goods, they serue vs not to stirre vs vp to loue our God, and to put our trust in him & to call vpon him. As touching aduersitie, it serueth not to humble vs, nor to make vs renounce y<sup>e</sup> world, nor to cause vs to bethinke vs of our finnes, that wee might be sory for them and craue forgiveness: but rather to the cleane contrarie. Now then seeing we be so faultie, wee haue the more neede to marke well this text, & the exhortation that Moses maketh to vs here, that we may remember the way whereby God leadeth vs. So then, let vs dayly haue an eye to y<sup>e</sup> things wherof we shal haue had experience during this transitory lyfe. How hath God dealt with mee euer since I was borne? I haue waded through ten hundred thousand miseries, & he hath deliuered me from them all: & ought not this to make me thinke him to be my father, and to put my selfe wholly into his protection? Again, I haue bin cumbered a number of wayes: and God hath alwayes had an eye to me, & brought me home againe to himselfe. How oftentimes haue I tempted him, casting my selfe vp to the spoyle, and running into the snares of Satan? And yet my God would not let me perish. Nowe ought not I to perceiue his goodnesse therein? Ought I not to betake my selfe to his keeping with the surer trust? Moreouer my God hath visited mee with a great force of afflictions: and should I still rebell against him? Shall I not bee tamed for all the stripes that I haue receiued at his rodde? Shall God haue lost his labor in chastising me? After this maner must we bethinke vs, both in our prosperitie and in aduersitie: and that not for once and away, but with such imprinting of it in our hearts, as we may haue it so inregistred there y<sup>e</sup> it may neuer be blotted out. That is the thing which wee haue to remember vpon this text of Moses.

Now hee speaketh expressly of the afflictions which the people had indured in the wilderness: as if hee should say that these afflictions heere are profitable for men, so they can vse them well, and referre them to their right end. It is not without cause that Moses vtereth this thing here: inasmuch as it seemeth at the first, that we canot thinke vpon our aduersities without griefe and grudging, so as they should prouoke vs to repine against God, and consequently to shrink away from him. For we know there is nothing more against our nature, than to bee poore, sicke, diseased, or afflicted with any miserie: they beethings which wee hate. And therefore when God smiteth vs, it seemeth to be the next way to withdraw vs from him. But Moses telleth vs, that if we were so wise and well disposed as wisely to apply to our vse the afflictions that God sendeth vs: thy should rather teach reach vs to returne home to him. The Lorde thy God (sayth he) hath scourged thee. And to what end? To knowe what was in thy heart, and whether thou wouldest keepe his commandements or no. Here Moses sheweth, first that Gods afflicting of vs is as an examination to trye what we bee, and how wee be minded. In deede, prosperitie also is a good triall to bewray what is in mens heartes. For if a man be any thing at ease, he ouershootes himselfe, and pleasures corrupt vs yea and vterly dull vs. If a man bee riche, whereas hee was taken to haue bin lowly and meeke, hee will bewray his pride and crueltie. If a man bee in authoritie, hee becommeth intolerable. And so yee see that GOD may try what is in vs and take experience of it, euen by making vs to prosper. But yet is pouertie set downe here of set purpose, because it is the meane whereby God tryeth whether wee bee subiect to him or no. And why? For patience (as men say) is a singular vertue: but how may it bee knowne that wee bee patient, but by aduersitie? Therefore when God sendeth vs aduersities that are hard and troublesome to vs: then doth hee as it were lay open our hartes. For if wee abide quietly vnder his hand, and suffer him to deale with vs according to his good will, so as wee prayse his name though he handle vs roughly: it is a token that wee loue him in deede, and that hypocrisie taketh no place at all in vs. And therefore it is not without cause, that Moses intending to shewe how God tryeth vs, and prouoeth vs, speaketh heere expressly of afflictions.

Now wee haue to gather vpon this text, that it is no wonder though God afflict vs diuersely wayes. And why so? For it is expedient for vs to bee sifted and to haue it knowne what is in vs: There is not a more needfull and profitable thing for vs: and that is done by afflictions. Therefore must wee submit our selues to them, and vnderstand that they neuer bee superfluous or more than needeth. Mark that for one point, Yea and vnto the same end must wee apply this saying of the Apostle, that it is the very meane whereby to try our obedience. For hee vseth the same word, and setteth downe Iesus Christ for an example. For although hee bee the mirror & patterne of all righteoulnesse, yet was hee faine to passe vnder Gods scourges. And why? Euen to the end that his obedience might be knowne, and that which is shewed vs in the person of our Lord Iesus Christ: good reason would that the same should bee accomplished in vs that are his members. Now is there any thing more requisite, than to knowe whether wee bee obedient to God or no? And that is not knowne but by aduersitie, when things fall out contrary to our desire, and God handleth vs in such sort as our flesh and nature striue against it. When we be in that case, if we can hold our selues in subiection to God, to say, in deede Lord this is hard for me to beare, it goeth against my stomacke, it is cleane contrary to my nature, but yet howsoeuer I fare I renounce mine owne will: I would faine haue health, but sith it pleaseth thee to haue me sicke, thy name be blessed for it: I could finde in my heart to be rich, and to haue mine owne ease and pleasure, but thou wilt haue me to be poore & needy. I would be in honor & credit, & thou wilt haue me to lue in reproche and shame: and good reason it is O Lorde that wee should haue the humilitie to submit our selues to whatsoever it pleaseth thee to sende vs, and not that wee should followe our owne fwindge: when we be come to such a sacrifice of renouncing all our affections and all our owne will: then is our obedience rightly knowne. For what matter is it to say amen, when God followeth our desires, and handleth vs according to the lyking of our owne flesh? How is there any vertue in vs? And therefore let vs remember wel this text, where Moses telleth vs that Gods afflicting of vs, is to try what we be. For we might set a faire face vpon things, and pretend to loue and honor God: and yet notwithstanding all should be but counterfeiting and leasing. But when we bee handled roughly, and God sheweth himselfe as our enemy, so as wee bee prouoked to rebellion, and would faine striue against him if it were Lawfull: and yet notwithstanding wee continue still as Lambes, so as wee bowe downe our neckes vnder his yoke, and forsake all our owne affections to obey him: that (say I) is a due tryall of vs. And that is the cause why the holy scripture lykeneth aduersitie to a furnace. Lyke as golde and siluer are tryed by fire: so must God bee faine to try and examine vs by afflictions.

But here it might be demanded, whether God doe not knowe what we be without tryall? Let vs marke that it is not to bee surmised that God is ignorant of any thing: or that he needeth to try vs after the maner of men: but it is the common speach of the holy scripture, to attribute the things to God which are peculiar to men. For if it should speake to vs of his maiestie according to the worthinesse thereof, we should bee vterly rauished, and yet knowe neuer the more what were sayd to vs. God therefore to vtter himselfe, is faine to descend from his owne highnesse and to transfigure himselfe, to the end wee may knowe so much of him as is for our behoofe. To be short, let vs vnderstand that God knoweth what is in mens heartes, though he should let them alone as they bee. For it is sayd in the psalme, Shal not hee that made the heart knowe it? Yes: but yet for all that, it behoueth vs to be brought to the touchstone. Not that God hath any neede of it on his behalfe: but it is done for our owne sakes. Now then, whereas it is sayd in this text, that Gods will was to trye the people of Israel: let vs mark y the meaning thereof is, that God intended to shewe in deede, and to bewray in trueth what that people was of whom it was his will to haue open record and prooffe, to the end they might not vse any odde shifts to keepe their naughtinesse from discovering. Now then, Gods afflicting of vs is not for that hee hath any neede to sift vs narrowly: but because wee on our side haue neede to be so tryed. For wee see how men belecue wondrously wel of their own strength. So long as God letteth them alone in rest, they thinke there is nothing but substantiall stoutnesse in them. But if God doe but picke them: by and by the venim commeth out, which was hidden within before. Such as made faire wether before, and were very skilfull in preaching of Gods goodnesse, and in teaching men how they ought to reit thereupon, fall to gnawing of their teeth when they themselves are afflicted, and can no more tell what patientnesse is, or how to glorify God. Therefore is God faine to draw vs forth into the light, For as long as he handleth vs gently, we dwell as it were in couert, and wee lye hidde in darknesse. But as soone as aduersitie commeth, we learne to perceiue what we be. Whereas afore, there seemed to be nothing but perfect obedientnesse in vs: then wee perceiue how our flesh is full of stubbornnesse, & we could finde in our heartes to withstand God. That then is the tryall which Moses speaketh of.

Therefore to be short, this text must be referred to our selues, and we must take heede to apply it well to our own benefite, and consider that we be vtterly ignorant, and that the loue of our selues doth so blinde vs, yea and quite stoppe our eyes, that we be befoted with sond follie, vntill God haue cleansed vs of it in deede, and shewed vs our own shame by open prooffe. Again it is a good tryall also when God voutsafereth to giue vs power to beare out afflictions patiently. For we haue cause to glorify him for his vpholding of vs by his hand: and we must alwayes beleeue y we could not indure any thing, vnlesse we were strengthened by the holy Ghost. Therefore when we haue overcome any temptation, and passed thorowe any aduersitie meekely: let vs assure our selues that God ayded vs. And so yee see it is a good tryall that commeth to vs by afflictions, & that it is the way for vs to gather instruction by this text, where it is sayd that Gods affliction of his people, was to the end to search what was in their hearts.

And here is expresse mention made of the heart. For it is not enough to haue a faire shewe to the worldward. Those whom God letteth alone in quiet and pleasure, may well haue many goodly vertues worthie of commendation: but in the meane while their heart is hidde and wrapped vp within, so as it is not known what they be vntill God discouer them. For prosperitie is as a cloke that hideth much vncleanesse. If a man delight in his riches, in his credit, in his quietnesse, or in his ease: men see not what hee is but rather doe stay vpon the outward appearance, which doth euen dim & dazle their eyes: but in the meane while they looke not vpon that which is within. And like as a faire garment may hide many fowle deformities: so doth prosperitie hide a man that he can not be known what he is. But if God afflict him, hee layeth him bare by and by, in somuch that if hee haue any vice in him, then it appeareth both to himselfe & to others, so as we be driue to humble our selues, whereas before we had nothing but vanitie in vs to deceiue our selues withall. And whereas wee stode too much in our own conceites: now we see there was no cause why we should doe so,

Thus yee see what Moses meant in saying y God intended to try what was in his peoples hearts, by afflictiong the after y fashion in the wilderness.

Now hereby we see yet better the thing that I haue touched afore: namely that afflictions are more than necessarie and profitable for vs. And therefore let vs learne to beate them more patiently than we haue bin wont to doe, seeing our Lord hath layd that condition vpon vs, & that they be furtherances of our saluation, and there is not any thing woorse and deadlier to men, than to be so blinded as not to know what is in themselves. Seeing that man is transitorie: wherein can hee glorie but onely in GOD, who is his power and strength? Now then if hee be so proude, as hee not onely despiseth him of whom hee holdeth all thinges, but also falleth to push with his hornes against his maiestie in despite of him: is there any thing more pernicious? No: and yet can not this be amended otherwise than by affliction. Ought we to take sicknesse in euill part, seeing that God doth thereby make vs to renounce our owne nature, to draw vs to himselfe? No: and therefore let vs learne to obey our God: and let vs bethinke vs of this lesson whensoever we be so sorrowfull in our afflictions: and when wee be tempted to grudge against God, let vs thinke thus: yea verily, but yet is this to our benefite. In deede it is hard and troublesome, but God playeth the phisition, and purgeth vs of our disease which else would be deadly, and is incurable by any other meanes. That (say I) is the thing which we haue to note, that we may fare well by the warning that Moses giueth vs heere.

Now hee addeth immediately, that God had suffered his people to indure hunger and thirst, and had fed them with Manna which was a foode that they were not acquainted with, nor yet their fathers: and that his so dooing was to the end that they might knowe, that Man liueth not onely by bread, but by every worde that commeth out of the mouth of God, doth man liue. Here Moses meant to giue a particular lesson: which is, that GOD teacheth his people to seeke their sustentance in him. And it is a very good lesson. Truly when we say that God giueth vs our dayly or ordinary bread, it seemeth at the first blasphemous to beebut a childlike thing. And footlyben men teach little children to pray vnto GOD, when they would haue their breakfastes. Yea and in very deede there are a sorte of ouerweening fooles, who neuertheless doe take themselves to be very wise, and are esteemed to be great doctors, which haue held opinion that it is not meete for Christians to pray to GOD for bodily sustentance, but that they must tend to a higher and more exquisite perfection. Yea, but in the meane while, is it not a tending to great perfection, when wee can pray GOD to be our fosterfather, and when we can know his goodnesse towards vs? Yes: and for prooffe thereof, wherein doth the beleefe or vnbeleefe of men shewe it selfe moste? Surely euen in the maintenance of this transitory lyfe. In deede that is not the chiefe poynt of our faith. For we must looke vp to the euerlasting inheritance that is promised vs. But yet is the thing true which I say now: that is to wit, that our beleefe and also our vnbeleefe shew themselves more in that behalfe, than in any other. For if a man can trust in God that he will maintaine him in this mortall life: surely he will also hope for all the rest. And on the contrary part, when we wante foode, or haue not helpe at our own wishings by and by we be out of heart and vexed with vnquietnesse. And so our vnbeleefe bewrayes it selfe in the ouertcarefulness which we haue for this earthly life. Now therefore, let vs marke well that wee haue greatly profited, not onely for one day but also for all our life long, whē we haue once learned througely to commit our selues to Gods providence, to be fed by his hand, and to receiue sustenance by his grace. When we be come to that point, then are wee mounted very high, and thereby wee shall learne to trust in him for the heauenly life, and for all things belonging therunto. And so is Moyses meaning in this text: namely that the people should be througely persuaded, that God will nourish them, and that they should not trust either in bread or wine or in any other foode, but consider that it is Gods peculiar office to maintaine them by his power. Let that serue for one poynt.

And Moyses alledgeth the feeding of the people with Manna in the wilderness. The Lorde (saith hee) did let thee indure hunger, and sent thee Manna from heauen as a warrant to assure thee that hee will alwayes bee thy father. And although he make the earth to yeld thee fruite in bringing forth both corne and wine: and although thou haue both fleshe, & fish, & whitemeat to nourish thee withall: yet doth not thy God cease to maintaine thee by his power. Therefore thou must looke that way, and not haue thy minde tyed to the dead creatures, as though they gaue thee life, or as though thou receiuedst thy strength of them. Assure thy selfe it is thy God that nourisheth & susteineth thee. And truly the Manna continued not alway with the people of Israell. But if God worke a thing for a time: wee must profit our selues by it euer after, although the thing continue not still. If wee should remember the things that G O D sheweth vs, no longer than wee see them with our eyes: wee should bee too brutish. Therefore when wee haue once seene any instruction: wee must beare it in minde all the dayes of our life. In lyke case is it concerning the Manna. God fed his people with it by the space of fortie yeeres. Now must wee learne thereby to the woildes end, that wee be fed by the same power whereby that people was. In deed the meanes are farre other: (for wee nowadayes doe eate of the bread which the earth yeeldeth, and we haue other kindes of foode to suite vs withall:) but is that any derogation to the heauenly power? Is it not God that breatheth life into vs, so as wee be sustained by him? Yes: and therefore whensoever wee eate bread, let vs learne not to stay vpon that, but to cal to minde that GOD nourished his people without bread, without wine, and without any other vitells. And to what end? Hee wrought not that miracle to haue it buried. Was it but onely to the end that ſome people of that time should be taught by it that God was their father? No no: but we must apply the same storie to our instruction in these dayes too: that is to wit, that although G O D send vs bread and wine, yet he ceaseth not to feede vs still for all that. So then let vs marke well, that the miracles which God hath wrought, neuertheless must serue for our instruction, although wee behold them not presently at this day. And specially whereas heere is mention made of the Manna: let it be an euerlasting present to vs, to teach vs that God hath a care of his creatures, and that we haue our sustenance and preferuation at his hand: so that although hee make the Sunne to shine, yet doth the light come from himselfe: and although hee giue strength to the earth, so as wee take sustenance and nourishment from out of the bowels of it, yet is it hee himselfe that worketh after that fashion. And let vs alwayes hold this for a rule, that our life with all the appurtenances thereof dependeth vpon the onely hand of G O D, and that wee must haue our whole recourse vnto him. That is the meaning of Moyses.

Howbeit to the end we may knowe it yet better, wee haue to marke first of all, that whereas hee saith that man is nourished by euery word that cometh out of the mouth of God: hee speaketh not but of this present life. There are which take it to bee spoken of the spiritual life of our soules. In deed it is a good doctrine of it selfe, yet we liue not onely in this life as Oxen and Asses, but yet we haue also a better and excellent life, inasmuch as God quickeneth our soules by his worde, and knitteth vs to himselfe so as hee vpholdeth vs by the power of his holy spirit, which is the fountaine of life. All this is true, and it behooueth vs to acknowledge it (so be, as I sayd afore). But yet as concerning the vnderstanding of this text, Moyses goeth no further but to shewe vs that we liue by euery word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God, that is to say, we liue by the blessing which G O D giueth vs. For the doctrine that hee treateth of heere, is not that our soules are quickened to saluation because wee bee taught by the holy scripture: Moyses meant not that thing: but rather hee sheweth vs that bread hath not any power of it selfe, forasmuch as it is but a dead thing. And can a senselesse creature haue power to giue vs mouing? No. Can a dead thing haue power to giue vs life? No surely, that can it not. How then can bread and wine which haue no life of themselves, bee able to giue life vnto men? How can they make vs to liue? It seemeth that we gather strength of bread. For whē a man is brought low with ouerlong fasting, & pinched wth hunger: whereas he was as good as half dead before, if he eate meate, by and by he is as it were renewed & set vp againe. In deed yet bread is ſome meane to refresh men, & God serueth his owne turn by it: but yet for all that, shall wee tye our lyfe to bread and wine? No: but wee must consider that although God haue fed that order in nature: yet notwithstanding it serueth not to bereaue him of his prayse, nor to rob him of his right: but rather, his vttering of his power by his creatures, serueth to stewe that he hath them all in his hand, and can dispose of them after his own good pleasure. That is the thing which wee haue to remember concerning rhefe wordes, where Moses saith, that man liueth by every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God. And in deede wee cannot haue a better expounder of this text, than our Lorde Iesus Christ: for hee applying this text to himselfe, sheweth that hee should bee sustained by trusting in God, although hee wanted bread. In deede I can not dispatch this matter at this present: but yet must wee beare somewhat of it away, to the end that the rest may be better set forth to morrowe. See then how our Lorde Iesus Christ expounded the wordes of Moses. He was tempted by Satan to turne stones into bread. And with what intent? Verily as though he could not haue liued without bread. But hee sheweth that although he wanted bread, yet hee should not faile to bee sustained by the power of GOD his father. For why? It is not by bread (saith hee) that man doth liue: that is to say, God is not bound by any necessitie to vsẽ bread, whẽ he will susteine vs. If an earthly father will susteine his children, hee must needs haue bread: and if hee haue none, he will weepe and say, alas my children, I can not but bee in great griefe of minde, to see you in this necessitie: if I coulde feede you with mine owne blood, I would doe it. So then, a father shall not alwayes haue wherewith to mainteine his children: but it is not so with God, for he is not bound to any necessitie. Now then, doth bread faile through the whole world? Is there such drought as the earth can yeelde no substance? Yet doth not God faile to bee almightie still, and to haue wherewith to mainteine those that are his. Thus yee see how Iesus Christ did beate backe the diuels temptation, by telling him that wee must not imagine Gods power to be shut vp within his creatures, but that we must learne to trust in him, not doubting but that he can finde meanes well enough to mainteine vs, yea euen though all things faile vs. If he giue vs bread: let vs eate of it: for wee must not tempt him. But if all meane helps faile, let vs betake our selues to him that is almightie, and to his onely power, which shall alwayes haue his course, though there be no meane help at all. Yee see then how Moyses meaning is, that euen in respect of this transitorie lyfe, wee must not be so beastly as to hang our groynes vpon the bread and meate, as though our life lay hidden there. But when we haue wherewith to feede our selues, let vs lift our eyes vpward to acknowledge that it is God which hath set that order in nature. And againe, if wee haue little: let vs bee contented with it, and pray God to make it effectual, as though it were Manna frõ heauen, so as one morsel may feede vs and make vs as lustie, as if we had all the abundance of the world. And if we bee driuen to pouertie, let vs proceede yet further, and pray God to supply our want, and let vs put this sentence in practise, that man liueth not onely by bread, that is to say, he is not sustained alonely by these ordinary meanes: but although he were at vtter necessitie and wanted all things, yet would not God faile to succor him. And therefore let vs resort vnto him, and to the secreete power whereby we bee sustained, that wee may bee so maintained by the same, as we may liue in him, and by him, and all through his onely meere goodnesse.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to vouchsafe to pittie vs: & that seeing wee be so wretched creatures, that although he haue a care to bring vs backe againe to him, yet notwithstanding wee would faine striue against him: it may please him so to purge vs from all stubbornesse, as our whole seeking may bee to submit our selues to his wil: and that hee suffer vs not to bee giuen still to our owne wicked affections, and to the lustes of our flesh: but rather that hee correct them, yea and that in such sorte, as we may seeke to mount vpward, and to passe in such wise through this world, as wee may alwayes remember that it is but a way-faring, to the intent wee may keepe on still to the marke whereunto our Lord calleth vs. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Fryday the xvj. of August. 1555.

The Lxx. Sermon which is the second vpon the eight Chapter.

3. 4 He afflicted thee &c, 5 Knowe thou therefore in thyne hart, that the Lord thy God nurtured thee as a man nurturẽth hys owne child, 6 Therefore keepe thou the commandementes of the Lord thy God, by walking in his wayes, and by fearing him.
 7 For the Lord thy God bringeth thee into a good land, a land wherein are riuers of water, fountaines and springes which come out of the valleys and hilles.

8 A land of wheate, and barely, of Vines, figtrees, and Pougarnets: a lande wherein are Oliuetrees, Oyle, and honnie, 9 A lande wherein thou shalt eat bread without scarcetie, so as thou shalt not want any thing in it: a Lande whose stones are iron, and out of whose hills thou shalt digge brasle.

10 Yesterday wee sawe first of all, how the myracle that GOD wrought in feeding his people with Manna by the space of fortie yeeres togither in the wilderness, ought to serue for 11 cuer. And therewithall was shewed the ende thereof: that is to wit, that the Iewes ought to haue considered, that it is not the bread y<sup>e</sup> maintaineth a man, neither is the power of our life shut vp within it: but rather it is Gods breatheth liuenesse into vs, and which giueth the breade that nature whereby it is able to sustaine vs. And so wee see y<sup>e</sup> the matter here concerneth not the life of our soules, but that God sheweth vs howe this flightfull and transitorie life is maintayned by his onely power: so that, whether wee haue meate and drinke, or whether we suffer hunger, wee must alwayes haue recourse to Gods goodnesse, assuring our selues that he is our foster father, and that our life is in his hand, and that it is his office to preserue it in good plight. That is the summe of the things which wee haue to remember here. And ye haue seene also howe our Lord Iesus vsed the same text, as was declared in fewe wordes: but yet must we lay foorth the residue of the things: a little more at length.

12 Now then wee haue to marke, that if GOD giue vs abundance, our mnds must not be wedded to it: for can the bread quicken vs, seeing it is a dead thing? Although God vsen it as an instrument, it is not to deface his owne commendation, no more than when he giueth vs light by the Sunne. For we knowe that in the creation of the world, light was made before the Sunne was created. And why? To the intent we should not conuoy the honour of God vnto creatures. Therefore let vs so vse the light of the Sunne, as wee acknowledge therewithall, that there is but onely one God, to whom the glorie of that benefite ought to bee yeilded. And when wee haue bread to eat, it is not the bread that sustaineth vs, but it is God, who powreth out his goodnesse continually vpon vs. Although he apply those meanes to our vse: yet is it he himselfe that worketh, it is he that is the author of them. And in that respect is it that hee saith hee will breake the staffe of breade. True it is that hee threatheth to shut vp the heauen as if it were iron, and to make the earth to bee of brasle, so that when the earth crieth out to the heauen, the heauen shall not heare it. God then when he intendeth to send barrenesse vpon a land, vseth such meanes as he thinketh good: by reason whereof wee haue not wherewith to sustaine our selues: in so much that when the ground hath borne a harvest good and great yough, yet wil God we ynough diminish it and make it so moulder away, yea and when the corne is caried to the mill, it shall consume in the grinding: and when it is brought from the mill to the ouen, if it bee measured or weied againe, it shall not hold full weight and measure. Howbeit, we must come to this point, that the strength which bread hath, is not of y<sup>e</sup> bread it selfe, but of Gods breathing of this woord into it whereof Moses speaketh here: that is to wit, that when God will haue vs to bee nourished and susteyned by the bread, he vttereth his goodnesse towards vs, by making vs to feele his blessing which sheadeth it selfe into it after a secret fashio. Albeit that we behold it not with our eyesight, yet must wee be throughly perswaded of it by faith. Then let vs marke well, that when wee haue whereof to feede, we must not be so doubtfull as to think that the power is inclosed in the breade or in any other vittles or drinckes: but that therein God vttereth his goodnesse towards vs, and sheadeth it into vs, as we see the raine come from heauen which moisteneth y<sup>e</sup> earth and giueth it strength: On the other side if wee haue want: let vs vnderstand that God can sustaine vs by turning bread into Manna, that is to say: if all ordinarie meanes fayle vs, God will prouide for vs after another fashio, as wee see hee remedied the necessitie of his people, when they were in the wilderness. And for y<sup>e</sup> same cause did our Lord Iesus Christ answer Satan, it is written that man liueth not by bread only, but by euery word that cometh out of the mouth of God. For Satan tempted him to distrust, vnder colour that in the wilderness God sent him not the things that were expedient to lue withall. He had not any foode there, and yet in the meane while he was pinched, with hunger as a mortall man: for he youghsafed to become subiect to our passions or sufferinges. Now heere vpon, Satan taketh occasion to enter vpon him, saying: Seeing thou art the sonne of God, shouldst thou want any thing? Is it not reason that all creatures should serue thee? yes: for thou art the heire of the world. Thou hast no bread: and therefore thou must be faine to try the power of God, that these stones may be turned into bread, or else thou seest how thy God forsaketh thee, for if he had a care of thee, thou shouldst perceiue his blessing and fauour, so as thou shouldst haue heere wherewith to susteine thee. Now the seeing thou wantest such helpe, it is a signe that God hath no regard of thee. But Iesus Christ answereth herunto: it shall be sustained well enough though bread faile mee. And why? For the life of man dependeth not vpon these meanes. And surely God were of very small and weake force, if hee could not helpe a man but by breade: he should be no better than an earthly man. A rich man can doe welinough, if hee haue wherewith: but if he fall into pouerty, he must be faine to begge himselfe.

himselfe. And so should it bee [by your saying,] with God. But although there were neuer a whit of bread in the world: yet hath he alwayes his word in his mouth, that is to wit, hee needes no more but to say the worde. Like as he created the worlde of nothing, by vttering his will that it pleased him to haue it so: and all things were made and are maintained still at this day in their state, by his onely commaundement: so can he maintaine those that are his, as he thinketh good. He needeth no more but to breath forth his secreete power: and all shall be as well satisfi'd, as if they had their fill of meate and drinke. According to this lesson, if God at any time withdrawe our foo'de and make vs to feele necessitie: let vs learne to waite vpon him, and to rest vpon his providence, praying him to supply our want: and wee shall finde that this is not written in vaine.

Nowe then wee see there is a dubble vse in this doctrine, and that wee must apply it as well to the time of abundance, as to the time of scarcitie. When wee haue great store of things, let not that stop our eyes to make vs trust too much to them: assuring our selues that our eating of the bread can not sustaine vs, except GOD giue it force. For if he once breake the staffe of it: there will bee no more leaning vnto it, it will rather bee but a griefto vs. For wee must alwayes marke this similitude, that as a weake man stayeth himselfe vpon a staffe: so GOD strengtheneth our powers agayne by bread and drinke. But if the staffe bee broken: to what purpose will it serue, but to breake his necke that shall trust vnto it? Then let vs learne to trust vnto GOD and to leane vnto him in our abundance, and to giue him thanks for vouchsafing to make his creatures to serue our turne after that fashion: and let vs beware that wee conuey not ouer his power and praye to any other thing. For what were to make an idoll of the bread. God hath ordain'd it to doe vs seruice, and hee hath put in subiection to vs: and shall wee notwithstanding goe and worshippinge it? If the bread [of it selfe] doe sustaine vs, hath it not the office of God, so as GOD must sit still like an idle and dead thing? Let vs beware that wee make not idols of the benefites which God bestoweth vpon vs: for that were an intolerable vnthankfulnessse. Thus much concerning abundance. And therefore let not riche men thinke they can forbear Gods helpe because they haue their garners well stuffed and stored: for if God doe but blowe vpon them, all vanisheth away. When they haue the morsels in their mouthes: they shall sticke faste in their throtes: and when they haue their bellies crammed neuer so full, yet shall they receiue no nourishment by it, except God giue it them by his secreet working. By this meanes shall all of vs lue in humilitie, and such as are well stored shall not cease to make this prayer without hypocricie: Giue vs this day our daily bread. For otherwise, were it not a mocking of God, if a man should thinke himselfe to be well ynough prouided, because hee hath great store of come and wine, or because he hath money in his purse and rentes coming in, or because he perceyuethe himselfe to be thoroughly furnished and stored of all things? Howe shall he craue his daily bread at Gods hand, vnlesse he knoweth that the things which he hath are nothing, and that GOD must bee faigne to worke, yea and to continue his secreete operation alwayes? If that were not: a man might desye GOD and holde scorn of him, as in verie deede he might well ynough forbear him. But if wee bee fully resolved of this lesson in our heartes, that nothing sustayneth vs but onely GOD: it will put vs in minde to praye him, to continue his sustaining of vs to morrowe as well as he hath fedde vs to day, notwithstanding that we haue a whole yeeres prouision before hand. For wee must alwayes consider, that all that euer we haue without him, is nothing.

Againe, in time of pouertie, it is a great comfort vnto vs that wee may resort to our God, and beseeche him to haue pitie vpon vs, and [bee sure] that although there were no breade in the worlde, yet he will not fayle to sustaine vs by his power. Seeing then that wee haue this promise, it ought to bee an incouragement vnto vs to pray boldly, and to reioyce, and not to torment our selues out of measure, as they that thinke there is no God at all in heauen, when they see not the helpes wherewith they bee acquainted. And why is that? Because wee tye all Gods power to our eyesight and outward senses. Therefore let vs beware of such fondnesse, and let vs put this lesson in vte. And truly God sheweth vs the experience thereof euill still at this day. If wee had our eyes open: wee should perceiue that this is not written in vaine. For yee see that euen they which are best fed receiue no benefite by their meate, whereas in the meane while the children y are neither well fed nor well clad, are neuertheless both fat & lustie, & thrive well to see to. What eate they? For want of good sustenance, they eate things that may hurt them: & yet notwithstanding God maketh them to grow and increase, by turning the things into good iuice, which might ingender euill nourishment. Wee bee sure that wee see this. So then, let vs marke well that our Lord hath left still in the worlde some remnant of the thing that Moses witnesseth heere. And let vs marke moreouer, that the worde which is spoken of here, betokeneth y power or operation, like as when the Apostle sayeth in the first to the Hebrewes, that Christ hath the fulnesse of the whole Godhead in him, & that he beareth vp the whole world y his word: according wherunto also it is said in the Psalme, y the Heauens were created by y word, and y the same word shewed it selfe thence: so as God shewed by his stablishing of y order of nature, y it is he in who all things haue their being. Yee see then how he worketh towards vs, & that he needeth not to trauel with great labour and paines taking: it is enough if he do but say y word, y is to say if he do but vtter his good pleasure, for y performance will follow by & by therewithall.

Psal. 33. 6.

But by the way we haue here a resemblance to gather : That if our bodies be nourished and sustained by Gods word, that is to wit, by the secreete power which he breatheth into bread, wine, and allover vitells : much rather are our soules nourished by his doctrine that is dayly preached vnto vs. In deece, that is not the meaning of this text, as is shewed afore : but yet for all that, when God hath once taught vs what this temporal lyfe is, and shewed vs that it dependeth wholly vpon his power and grace: he will haue the same to conuey vs yet higher . For when we know that God sheweth himselfe a father to vs in giuing vs meate and drink: we must also passe on to the heauenly heritage. [Wee must consider] that his adopting of vs to be his children, is not to feede vs in this worlde like brute beastes : but to drawe vs to the euerlasting lyfe. And therefore when wee perceyue the operation and power of this secret word of God in the nourishing of our bodyes : wee must mount vp hygher, and consider that our soules are not fed neither with bread nor with wine, but y they haue a pricier soueraine foode, namely that God giueth them life by nourishing them to the saluation that is prepared for vs . Therefore when we haue fought our foode at Gods hand, and giuen him thanks for our meate and drink, staying our selues altogether vpon the truit of his goodnesse, in hope that hee will alwayes be our fosterfather, yea euen in the time of extreme death: let vs assure our selues that he will neuer faile vs any more, specially in respecte of our soules, for as much as that is the thing about all other, whereby hee intendeth to certifie vs that he taketh vs for his children . Thus yee see how we ought to put this text in vre.

And hereyithall let vs marke that it was meete that the people of Israel should acknowledge the benefite that is spoken of in the psalm where it is sayd that man was fed with Angels foode. For the prophet, to magnifie Gods grace the more in that hee had fed his people with Manna, saith that when they were a hungred, God sent the bread from heauen, so as mortall & earthly men did eate y bread of Angels. Nor that the Angels ate fed with Manna: (for they be spirits, which haue no neede of meate & drink:) but y the Prophet ment to shew that it was an excellent thing, and y whereas y earth yeeldeth foode vnto vs, the heauens were opened vnto them, & mortall men did after a sorte communicate with the inhabitants of heauen . This so great benefite and prerogative ought to be acknowledged of y Iewes : but yet the instruction that commeth of the things that God shewed at that time, ought to indure for euer. And therefore although we neuer saw the Manna : yet must we giue such credit to the things which God did at that time, as to apply the same to our owne instruction at this day . And that was the cause also why God willed a Cup to be filled with Manna, and to be kept in the Tabernacle with the Arke of his Couenant: that although the people [which were to come] saw not the wonders that had bin wrought in the wilderness, yet notwithstanding they might haue a memoriall thereof, to put them alwayes in mind of it, that they might profit them selues by it. Then let vs vnderstand, that although God send vs not Manna from heauen nowadays : yet he wil not haue vs to doubt, but that he hath such a care to susteine vs, as we shall perceiue he doth not tell vs for ought in this text, that the word which proceedeth out of his mouth, is the thing wherby wee liue, and whence wee take all our sustenance.

Nowe Moses addeth immediately, That their garments were not worne, nor the peoples feete swolne in the wilderness by the space of fortie yeeres . And thereupon hee concludeth thus, Knowe thou with thine heart, for so is it word for word : but the meaning thereof is, Assure thy selfe in thine heart, that as a man nutureth his owne child, so hath God nutured thee. Now then like as God did feede that people with heauily foode, so did he cloth them myraculously: for otherwise their apparell would soone haue bin worne out. But God provided for it, y of al those fortie yeeres together they were shod & clad with the same tayment & shooes, which they brought with them out of Egypr. And it is a president which must assure vs, y although we be clothed with y wooll of Sheep, & haue linnen to weare: yet notwithstanding it is God y giueth vs continually wherwith to feed & cloth vs: & so long as he listeth to make y helpes auailable which he giueth vs, he will so blesse them as one Coate shall last vs our three coates, yea and a whole doozen shall nor do so much as one alone when God listeth to curse them. Likewise when he breatheth his blessing & fauor into bread, one ounce of it shall do more than a whole pounce otherwise: and when hee listeth to breake the staffe of bread, a pound shall not do so much seruice as halfe an ounce. This is the meaning of Moses in this text . And therefore let vs marke, that if God list to prosper vs, we must haue such contentatiō as we be not too eage and carefull for it as wee commonly be, bearing our selues on hande that the earth shoulde faile vs, if wee made not the better provision to haue all things aforehand . And what a thing is that ? It is true that we ought to thinke vpon our needs. But how ? First by calling vpon God, saying : Alas Lord, wee bee much poorer and wretchedder creatiues than any beaist in the world: for dogges, asses, and all other beastes are cored with their owne skinnes, and they be ynough for them: but if a man be naked, hee flaruth out of hand. So Lord, we be the poorest and miserablest of all other creatures . All beastes can find their foode in the fields: but as for vs, if we be not nourished, we decay by and by. God then doth well vouchsafe that we should haue a care to provide for our necessities. Howbeit, that is to the end we shold resort to him referring our selues to his fatherly goodnesse. Again, we must trauell according to the skill y he giueth vs, we must not spare our selues, we must followe y meanes that he appointeth vs, we must not be lasie and slothfull: for he wil not haue vs to be ydle, nor to be as blocks. But yet must this carefulnesse be bledid, y it vex vs not too much, & we must alwayes plucke vp a good heart to call vpon God, and commit our selues vnto him, assuring our selues that he will neuer faile vs. That is the care which God willeth vs to haue. Neuerthelſſe we muſt alſo put the thing in praſtice that is ſpoken here: that is to wit, that God will giue vs ſufficient to ſerue our turne, ſo as if we want cote or ſhoos, he will either prouide vs of them, or elſe make one paire of ſoles to doe vs more ſeruiſſe than a dooſen, when it pleaſeth him. And we may ſee this with our eyes. For they that are warmeſt clad, ſayle not for all that to bee as it were halfe dead thoro-we colde: and on the other ſide, whereas it ſeemeth that poore folke ſhould ſtarue and bee froſen with yce a hundred times [ere the yeere goe about:] God warmeſt them, yea and they bee ſo preferred, as though he kept them in a ſtooue, or as though ſome Phiſitiõ were alwaies at hand with them, miniſtring good remedies to them to ſaue them from the colde. After that maner doeth God worke. And that is the cauſe why that in the time of the Law, God commanded that all newe things ſhould be bleſſed to the ende that men ſhould thinke vpon him, & conſider this with themſelues: Goto, I haue a newe garment, and I muſt looke that I thanke him for it which gaue it mee. For ſeeing it pleaſeth my God to clothe mee thus, and to giue me this apparrell to vſe it as mine owne: it becommeth me to acknowledge that it is of his goodneſſe and mercie that I am ſo prouided for. Yee ſee then, that the intent why he cauſed all things to bee dedicated vnto him which men ſhould occupie: was that they ſhould acknowledge the giuer of them, and that if he bleſſed not the helps which he had giuen them, all was nothing and noughtworth. And as for now adayes, although wee haue not the like Ceremonie: yet muſt we hold ſtill the truth thereof.

Nowe for a conſclusion Moſes addeth, Knowe thou in thy Heart, that as a father nurtured his owne child, ſo hath thy God nurtured thee. In deepe the hebrew word that Moſes vſeth in this place, ſignifieth ſometimes to Chaiſiſe: and therefore it might be taken as if he ſayd thus: Know thou that the intent of thy God in all the afflictions which thou haſt indured, hath bene to correct thy faultes: that like as a man intending to reforme his child when he hath doone a miſſe, taketh the rod by and by in his hande: ſo likewiſe thy God hath chaiſted thee, not ſuffering thee to become an vnruly and forward child, but holding thee alwaies vnder awe. And this doctrine were very good: but the ſame word doth by a ſimilitude betoken likewiſe all inſtruction and good government. No doubt but the intent of Moſes in this place, was to make a generall con-cluſion of the matters that hee had treated of. For hee had ſpoken of Afflictions, and hee had ſpoken likewiſe of Gods benefites, and of his leading of the people, all the time y they were in the wildernesse. Now therefore, to all thoſe matters he applieth this ſinall ſentence, ſaying: know thou that thy God hath nurtured thee after a gentle and louing faſhion, ſo as thou needeſt not ſo wander farre, or to make long vagaries to know whether thy God hath bene with thee or no: he hath applyed himſelfe to thee as familiarly as may bee. Is not the inſtruction that hee hath giuen thee, ſo familiar as no man can ſhew himſelfe more familiar: That therefore is the meaning of Moſes.

And whereas he ſaith, Know thou in thy heart: It is to the ende that men ſhould bee the diligent in applying y things to their inſtruction, which God teacheth them. For it is pitie to ſee howe dull wee bee of our ſclues. Although God vter himſelfe familiarly vnto vs: yet doe not we ſee him a whit. And what is the cauſe thereof? A man that is diſlighted and hath fore eyes, diſcerneth not things well though they be layd afore him. Nowe, wee bee not onely diſlighted, but alſo ſtarke blinde in Gods worke. True it is that he muſt bee ſaine to inlighten vs: but yet muſt wee alſo doe our induour, and apply our mindes to iudge well of his workes, when it pleaſeth him to ſhewe them to vs. And ſo it is not a needleſſe ſpeech of Moſes, to ſay know thou in thy heart. As if he ſhould ſay, euerie man muſt enter into himſelfe, and induour earnestly to know the grace and goodneſſe of God. We muſt not ſlumber in that caſe, but euery of vs muſt do his diligence to the vttermoſt. To bee ſhort, theſe ſayings, Let men inforce themſelues, and let men ſtreine themſelues, are well worth the noting. For when God teacheth vs, by and by euery of vs muſt enter into his owne heart.

And now againe, whereas hee ſayth that God ſaugh [or trained] his people, as a man doth his Children: It is to cut off al occaſion of ſtaring holes, that men might not pretend any ignorance. For in as much as things are declared here according to our rudeneſſe: we cannot excuſe our ſelues by ſaying that our wit is too dul, and that we be vnable to mount ſo high: for this doctrine is giuen vs familiarly ynough. To the end therefore that no man might take occaſion of excuſe: Moſes ſayth at a word, what? hath not thy God taught thee after a commõ faſhion and as men doe? When a father intendeth to teach his child, will he do more than thy God hath doone to thee? Nowe ſith it is ſo: theſe things were not ſpoken for that time onely: but our Lorde woorketh after the ſame maner yet ſtill at this day, ſo as wee may perceiue the things that Moſes telleth them heere. In deepe Gods woorkes are likened to a bottomleſſe pit, and it is not lawfull for vs to bee ſo inquiſitiue of his doings, as to ſeek to know all the reaſons of them: for we be not able to conceiue them: and therefore (as we haue ſeene in Iob,) we muſt be contented to ſee the outleets of his workes. And this ſimilitude importeth much, where it is ſaide that wee ſee but the outleets, that is to ſay the outermoſt partes of Gods woorkes. As for to attaine to the middes of them, or to ſearch all that which lyeth hidden within: that is vterly vnpoſſible. And let vs beware of ruſhing ſo farre, for God would ſurely puniſh our raſhneſſe. But yet muſt wee looke vpon the outleets and liſtes or bondes of Gods woorkes, and take ſuch taſte of them as wee may learne ſo much of them as may bee for our welfare and saluation . If wee doe so : wee shall perceiue that God applyeth himselfe to our rudenesse, and that hee dealeth with vs after the manner of men, that teach little children, instructing vs in fuch wise as wee cannot say to him, yea, but I am not as an Angell of heauen to comprehend Gods doings. For (as I said) God vouchsafeth to stoop to vs: & to the intent wee should vnderstand his workes, he commeth familiar with vs. Of whom is it long then y<sup>e</sup> we profit: not by the instructions that he giueth vs? For wee cannot say but y<sup>e</sup> he manifesteth himselfe to vs so many ways, y<sup>e</sup> there is no more excuse for vs if we knowe him not. Verily euen by the order of nature, wee may knowe him generally, as by the seasons of the yeere, by the growing of frutes vpon the earth, and by the shining of the Sunne, the Moone, and y<sup>e</sup> starres. Euen by these things may we see that our Lord hath applied himselfe wholly vnto vs, and to the feeblenesse of our vnderstanding, and that he hath (as it were) transfigured himselfe, by taking vpon him the person of a man, to the end that we might knowe him. Again, when he scourgeth vs, doe wee not see that hee handleth vs as a father handleth his owne children? If he see a man wax ouerlustie and malapert: after hee hath borne a while with him, he taketh the rod in his hand. For on the one side he warneth vs by his word. And afterward if he smite vs with his hand, doth hee not vse the greater kindnesse towards vs, to the intent wee shoulde receiue his corrections to our benefite? Again, when he sendeth vs of his benefites, it is all one as if a father being desirous to winne his childe by gentlenesse, shoulde say vnto him, My Sonne, what wilt thou doe? Who shall maintaine thee when thou art gone away from mee? Here thou hast alwayes whereon to liue: thou seest howe I take paines for thee: get thee to a stranger, and see if hee will deale better with thee. Nowe then like as a father will speake after that manner to his childe: so doeth our Lorde shewe himselfe vnto vs, and hee matcheth his worde with his deed: that is to say, whereas he sendeth vs prosperitie and quietnesse, he telleth vs also that it is to allure vs to him, that his gentlenesse might winne vs to him, and make vs to returne familiarly vnto him, and to depart from our sinnes. Suth it is so: let vs learne that there will be no excuse for vs, if we take not instruction by al the order which God keepeth to teach vs withall in this worlde. For why? Hee beauehth himselfe like a mortal man towards vs, and worketh not after the manner of his owne incomprehensible maiestie, because it woulde confounde vs. Wee be too weake to mount so high: and therefore hee stoopeth vnto vs. Seeing that hee dealeth so friendly on his behalfe: Let not vs be so slouthfull, as not to enter into our owne harts, and to consider thinges accordingly, and to inforce our selues to beare Gods benefites well in minde, so as we take instruction by them as wee ought to do. Thus ye see what we haue to mark vpon that place.

Nowe Moses sheweth to what end he exhorted

the people to deeme well of Gods workes: namely to the end they might keepe al his commandementes, to walke in his wayes, and to feare him. Keepe the commandemens of the Lord thy God (saith he) that thou maist walke in his wayes and feare him. First wee haue to marke here, that Moses sendeth the people to the Lawe, as to the perfect and chief doctrine of our whole life. And it is a point well worthie to bee marked. For there vpon we haue to gather, that when God hath taught vs neuer so many ways, yet shall they neuer boote vs, vnlesse wee haue recourse vnto his worde. Beholde, the Infidels can well ynough search the secrets of nature, they can well not onely alledge reasons, but also say, this is done after this fashion. Yea and they haue deiced God to bee good, righteous, and wise, & wee see that the heathen Philosophers knewe Gods workes so farre, as they coulde talke of his maiestie. But what? It was all confusedly, and in the end they vanished away in their owne imaginations, so as they neuer attained to the point whereto they should haue come. Then let vs vnderstande that all is to no purpose, vnill wee haue Gods doctrine for all perfection. True it is that the things which we behold in the worlde, and all the instructions which God giueth vs thereby, are good and profitable helps; but yet for all that, the marke that we must shoote at is the doctrine [of his worde,] so as wee set all our wittes vpon that, to the end wee wander not out of the way. For if a man shoote, and haue no marke to shoote at: what doth hee else but lose all his shote? Euen fo is it with vs: we may well shoote, that is to say, we may take paine to know Gods workes: but what shall we gaine by it, if we haue not the saide marke to shoote at? It shalbe but lost labour. And this marke is not to be chosen at our owne descretion: but God must set vs vp our whyte: and that white is the Lawe, the Prophets, and the Gospell. And so ye see that that is the cause why Moses hauing spoken of y<sup>e</sup> wonders which the people had seene, & hauing told them that the same ought to serue to their instruction, and hauing exhorted the faithfull to profite wel in that schoole: sendeth them backe againe to the word. Keepe the commandemens of the Lord thy God, saith hee: and afterward he addeth that thou maist walke in his wayes.

Here we haue to note, that when soeuer wee swarue from Gods word, wee shal but wander, as hath beene shewed heretofore: and we may well goe vp and downe, but wee shal be neuer the further forward. Let men breake their shankes as much as they list, & yet shall they eiber goe back, or else find theselues all in one place still, vnlesse they know y<sup>e</sup> way which they ought to keepe. For let vs mark wel y<sup>e</sup> our own wayes are croked, and y<sup>e</sup> there is nothing but straying and wandering in vaine. And therefore God will haue vs to walke in his wayes, which are strait and leuell. In saying so, Moses setteth downe a cõparison of thinges cõtrarie. As if he should say, Wretched folk, ye thinke to further your selues when ye walke in your own wayes, by deuising euery man a fundry way at his owne pleasure. But what? Yee doe but martyr your felues in vaine: for God will haue men to walke in his wayes, that is to say, in the wayes that he sheweth them, and he will haue them to be followed. Therefore let vs learne to submitte our felues to Gods worde, knowing well that our life shall neuer be well ordered, except wee obey him. Yea and whereas hee saith the wayes of the Lord in the plural number, wee must apply it to that which hath bene saide heretofore: that is to wit, that God hath giuen vs fo full a doctrine, as wee cannot alledge that it is not ynough, or that more may be added to it. Let vs marke that our Lorde will not sayle vs in any thing. Therefore let vs not be wise in our own conceit, but let vs aske counsel of him. And if wee doubt that wee goe astray, or if wee be afraide of wandering vp and downe: let vs keepe his way, and wee can not goe amisse. For why? God hath not made one way onely: but he hath shewed vs all his wayes, that is to say, all that euer is requisite to make a man walke aright, so as wee can neuer goe amisse, if wee followe the direction that hee giveth afore vs. N we hee addeth herunto, To the ende that we should feare the Lord. Here in hee sheweth to what ende God gaue vs his Lawe. Why will hee haue men to keepe it? To doe him homage aboute all thinges. For wee knowe that hee receiueth neither harme nor benefite by vs. What can wee doe to him? Our seruing of him is not to aduantage him any whit: for hee hath no neede of any thing. A gaine what riches haue we to increase him withall? Why then hath hee giuen vs his lawe, but to the ende that wee should dedicate our whole life vnto him, and by keeping his commaundementes shewe our felues willing to bee subiect vnto him, and that hee hath all soueraine dominion ouer vs? That is the thing which is meant by the feare that Moses speaketh of heere. And let vs note that hee meaneth not a flauish fearefulness, that is to say, that men should submitte themselves to him as enforced: but that wee should stand in reuerend awe of him, not onely as of our master but also as of our father. The feare which G O D requireth, is matched with heartie loue: so as wee bee gladd and faine to serue him. And why? Because it is good reason that we should be his, and that hee shoulde haue the governing of vs, & that we should frame our lues according to his wil. And so yee see what is the chiefe point in the keeping of the Lawe.

Further more let vs mark, that it is not ynough for men to lue vprightly, so as they abstaine from all euill and vice, and deale in such sort as nothing but vertue can bee founde in them: For a man may well be chaste, and abstaine from all wrong, anoyance, deceit, blasphemie, and lewd talke: and yet shall all this be nothing worth, except hee referre all to the said end of offering vp of himselfe in sacrifice vnto God. Vertues therefore are not of estimation in themselves, so as it may be saide, O this is an excellent fellowe in vertue, he hath done this and that, he hath absteyned from all euill: but wee must goe on further to the vertue of all vertues, the fountaine and wellspring of all holinesse, rightcounesse, and vpright dealing: namely that wee tendre to our God, seeking to honour and glorifie him, and to bee wholly his and vnder his gouernement. When wee bee at that point: then is our life well ordered. But wee may make the fairest shewe in the worlde, and yet if wee haue not respect to our God, to submitt our felues to him that his name may bee exalted and magnified, & that hee may haue his due right at our hands: all is but leasing, be it neuer so highly esteemd. Yee see then in effect that the thing which wee haue to remember, is y when God hath shewed vs his workes, then doth hee call vs to his worde, telling vs that that is the thing whereunto wee must holde our felues without wandering here and there: and thirdly that if wee will haue our life well ordered, wee must alwayes haue our eye vpon the thing that hee commandeth. And howe is that? Euen to honour him in such sort, as wee come to him with a free and cleare hart, to serue him, & to dedicate our felues to him: & also lue among our neighbors without working any deceit or wrong to any man, & without ouerthrowing of our felues into any outrage. But yet the chiefe point is y God haue his due, y is to wit, that hee gouerne vs, and be glorified by al our life, because it is good reason that hee should haue vs at his deuotion, and that we shoulde be subiect to him, so much as we bee beholden to him for all good thinges. And we must not only do so because he is our maker and hath soueraine dominion ouer vs: but we must also loue him because he is our father. And againe, seeing he bestoweth so many benefites vpon vs: we ought at leastwise to yeelde him his due reuerence.

And that is the cause why Moses addeth in the end, God will bring thee into the Land which hee hath promised thee, a rich and wealthy Land, a Land that is full of all good thinges, wherein there is plensie of wheate, barley, myne, honny, and Oyle, and of all other thinges. And this is saide to prouoke the people the more, to the feare that was spoken of before. For truly if wee feele nothing but rigor at Gods hande: wee may wel yett to him, but it will be but perforce, it will not be with a free will, there will be nothing but hypocrisie in all our life. Indee we will not faule to pretend a faire countenance of seruing our God: but our doing of it will be by constraint, like as they which haue done euill may well go on still, howbeit that is but for feare of stripes, and in the meane while they haue no list nor good will to it. But when wee haue once marked well the good turnes that God doeth vs: then are we the more moued and prouoked to honour him, knowing that wee ought to yeelde him a willing and frechearted reuerence, so as our whole seeking bee to make an offering of our felues vnto him, and to sacrifice euen our lues to him. To that ende then doeth Moses alledge the good turnes which God was about to doe vnto his people. And hee not onely speaketh of the former benefites which they ought to haue borne well in minde: but hee saith also, when thy God shall haue brought thee into the Lande: then put forth thy selfe to serue him with the better

courage, accordingly as he goeth through with his benefites towards thee.

Now let vs kneele down in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our fautes, praying him to touch vs in such wise, as we may be drawn to true repentance. and y<sup>e</sup> forasmuch as we be wretched creatures y<sup>e</sup> haue neede to bee sustained by him euery minute of an houre, we may resort to his bountifullnesse, assuring our selues that although wee had all the abundance 10 of the world, yet could we not bee sustained and nourished by it, except his hand were stretched out ouer vs to blesse vs: and therefore that wee may depend wholly vpon his blessing, & vpon his grace, and drawe out of that fountaine of his which can neuer drie vp: and that when we are once filled therewith, we may learne to thanke him for his gracious goodnesse, so as his feeding of vs here beneath, may not tie vs to this transitorie life like brute beastes, but rather make vs to know that we must alwayes trauel towards the heavenly life, wherunto it may please him to guide vs, & to bring vs euer neerer and neerer vnto it, vntill he haue brought vs fully thither, for the sake & by the meanes of his welbeloued sonne our Lord Iesus Christ. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and Nations, &c.

On Wednesday the xxj. of August. 1555.

The threescore Sermon, which is the thid vpon the eight Chapter.

10 Thou shalt eate and be filled, and blesse the Lorde thy God for the good land which he shall haue giuen thee.

11 Take heede that thou forget not the Lord thy God, in not keeping his commandements, Lawes, and Ordinances, which I commaund thee this day:

12 To the ende that when thou shalt haue eaten and beene satisfied, and haue builded faire houses and dwelt in them:

13 And that thine Oxen and sheepe are multiplied, and thy siluer and golde are increased, and all that thou hast is multiplied:

14 Thy heart do not then swell, and thou forget the Lord thy God which hath brought thee out of the land of Egypt from the house of bondage.

F God commaund vs to be patient in aduersitie, we thinke it a hard thing: and yet is it good reason that we should passe that way, seeing we haue a patern 40 and image thereof in our Lorde

Iesus Christ, vnto whome wee must bee like fashioned, if wee will bee Gods children, not onely in suffering quietly the afflictions which hee sendeth vs in this present lyfe, but also in being readie and obedient to him euen to the death. Yee see then that it is a most rightfull condition: and yet we on our side doe finde it cumbersome. And why? Bicause we be too nyce, and our selfe loue doeth foerarie vs away, that we can not abyde to suffer any thing. Nowe if we bewraye great vnthankfulnesse and faulte in this: much more doe we bewraye the same when we cannot conceiue of Gods benefites, as to bee thankfull to him for them. Herein (say I) wee shewe our selues to bee too lewd. For if G O D deale gently with vs and thewe himselfe fatherlike towards vs: must it not needs be y<sup>e</sup> we are worse than brute beastes, if we vouchsafe not to lift vp our eyes towards heaue, to yeld him some acknowledgmet of his goodnes. Now although this be a detestable vice: yet is it comō & too comō among men. And if euery ma looke into himselfe in maner al shal finde the selues guidtie of it. If there were no further than y<sup>e</sup> outward Cetemonie of thanksgiuing: yet is it apparant that men make none account of it. Doe all men beare in minde to call vpon Gods name when they sit downe to the table? Or when they haue taken their repast, doe they remember to acknowledge that they be beholden to him for their life, and for all things else that are requisite for their sustentance? Nay rather, they chop downe to the table like Swyne, and start vp like dogges, so as there is no tydings nor remembrance of Gods name among them, but to their seeming it is a pice of moonkish hyperisie or popeholinesse to thanke God. Loe howe farre the worlde is out of squire. Howbeit when we haue praised God both at the beginning and at the ending of our repast, yet is not that ynough to discharge vs. Therefore if we faile in that: we bee double vnhappy. For what will wee doe in the greater things, if wee cannot performe the lesser? For this manner of calling vpon God is as good as nothing, I meane in comparison of the knowledge that lyeth hidden vnder it, and which hath a liuely roote, which shall be treated of more largely anon. For if men cannot finde in their hearts to discharge their dutie in the lesser things, as in the lifting vp of their hands, and in yielding some praise vnto God by some outward signes: I pray you howe

will they doe that which is commaunded them here, that is to wit, how will they blesse God in all their whole life, which is the harder thing to doe? Therefore let vs marke, that this vnthankfulness of forgetting God, and of yeelding no signe of acknowledgement of his benefite: as an ordinarie vice. But although it be so yet sayle they not to be blameworthy for it: neither let vs thinke to iustifie or excuse our selues by wicked custome as a number do, which would faine make a bucklar of it against God, bearing themselves on hand, that forasmuch as [the ouerslipping of thanksgiuing vnto God] is so common a thing among men, therefore it is lawfull for them to doe so also: But that will bee no excuse for vs, as I faide afore. For although there be not a commoner thing than this leauidnes of forgetting God which is daily seene amōg men: doth it followe that therefore their fault should not be imputed vnto them? No no: but the more y one of them haue hardened another, and al of the are become brutish, & haue cōspired against God: so much the more horrible must their vengeance be.

And therefore let vs marke first of al, that the warning which Moses giueth vs here, (that is to wit, that when we be full sed we should then thinke vpon God, th. t. is to say, yeeld him his due praise,) is no more than needeth. For if wee did it of our owne accord, so as euery man gaue his minde to it: we should not neede to be put in minde of it by others. But forasmuch as we bee negligent: the holy Ghost is faine to pricke vs forward, and to quicken vs vp as he doeth in this text. And such wee see that the thing which God requireth of vs is so reasonable, and such as wee ought to haue learned aforehād by nature: let vs be duble ashamed to continue still vnlustie, and at leastwise not to be touched with such warning. It ought to shame vs aforehād, that God should bee faine to tell vs of the thing which euen litle children ought to knowe. For seeing hee is so liberal as to feede vs and to nourish vs: let vs at the least call him our father, and the we that wee thinke our selues beholden to him for that benefite. Ye see then how it is to our great shame, that God must bee faine to stirre vs vp to y thing, which euen nature ought to haue taught vs. But if we continue welltring still in that brutishnesse: what excuse will there remaine for vs? ] None at all: ] and therefore let vs practise this lesson: that when G O D filleth vs, wee at leastwise yeelde him thanks, and shew that wee haue not forgotten the aubour of all welfare.

Here a man might demaund, why God saith no more, but that men should praise him and blesse him in the time of prosperitie? For that (as I faide) is not all that a Christian man hath to doe. Hee must proceede yet further: that is to wit, when it pleaseth God to send vs trouble, anguish, pouertie, sickenesse, iniurie, reproche, [and such other things]: wee must bee obedient to him, and bowe downe our neckes in all cases, to receiue his yoke & to beare it without gaine-saying or struing. Therein (say I) lyeth the perfect true vertue [of obedience]: namely when God shall rule vs after his good pleasure, and we like well of all his doings towards vs, and are euer ready to bowe and to stoop vnto his hande, whether it be to liue or to die. And so al the seruice that we can doe vnto God, is nothing without patience. For one of the chiefe sacrifices that he requireth, is that wee should quietly endure all the aduersitie that hee sendeth vs. And why then maketh he no mention of it here? The reason is, first because his desire is to deale gently with vs. And if we on our side could suffer it surely we should be priuileged from all the aduersities that trouble vs. For had a man no leauidnes in him, were he not wedded to the world, were hee forward to submitte himselfe to Gods will in all things, had hee no feede of vanitie or pride in him, nor were hee not fotted in his owne delights. GOD would maintaine him here as in an earthly Paradise. For his scourging of vs is of necessitie, because he seeth that wee haue neede of such medicines. To bee short, if wee were found in our soules: God would deale with vs as with strong folke, to whom men minister neither medicines, nor pilles, nor purgations, nor any such other things. But forasmuch as he seeth that wee be diseased: he is faine to cut vs our morsels, and to binde vs to such diet as hee knoweth to bee good for vs. Hee is faine to let vs cloud, and to giue vs bitter drinckes, pilles, and such like things. Yea and moreover hee is faine now and then to feare vs, when he perceiueth our diseases to be otherwise vncurable. Let vs marke therefore that in this place God hath spoken according to his owne nature, because hee is inclyned of himselfe to deale gently with men, and is desirous to giue vs our fill of his benefites, and to holde vs as it were in his lappe, as a mother doeth her owne childe. After that manner would G O D deale with vs, if wee could beare it.

And that is the cause: why hee saith, When thy God shall haue brought thee into the good lande, and there haue filled thee with his benefites: Looke in any wise that thou blesse his name. Wherefore let vs marke the order which God keepeth in exhorting vs to serue him. The first point is that forasmuch as he is desirous to shewe himselfe a father towards vs: his shewing of himselfe to be such a one, should moue vs and make vs the willing to honour him, & to loue him so much the more: and that seeing hee handleth vs so gently, wee also should acknowledge it and glorifie him for it al our life long: and that as he is a father towards vs, so we should bee as children towards him. (That say I) is the ende that wee must begin at. But on the contrarye part, forasmuch as we be wildeheaded children, of nature froward, vnruely, & leawd: God is faine to scourge vs, and to chastise vs, and tame vs with beating. Sixth it is so: let vs learne, that if God shewe vs an angry looke & frowne vpon vs, or list to deale roughly with vs because hee seeth vs abute his benefites, and that we haue not honored him as wee ought to doe: wee must not harden our hearts heattes againſt him, nor take occaſion to withdraw our ſelues from his obedience: neither muſt wee play theſe vnthriftes that forſake their fathers houſes, and run gadding abroad at random, as though they liked better of the galowes than of their inheritance. Let vs reſtraine from miſbehauing our ſelues after ſaſhion againſt our God, and let vs learne to ſubmit our ſelues mildly vnder his hand, aſſuring our ſelues that if he afflict vs he hath good reaſon to do it. <sup>10</sup> And although we perceiue not ſy cauſe why he doth it let vs do him the honour to ſubmit our ſelues to him, and to ſhut our owne eyes, that he may diſpoſe of vs according to his own wiſedom which is vnknown to vs. After this manner muſt wee come from the acknowledgment of Gods benefices, to the ſubiectiō which we ought to yeelde vnto him, to humble our ſelues vnder his mightie hand, whenſoeuer he liſteth to chaſtiſe vs or to tame vs for our ſtubborneſſe, and to clenſe vs of our vices and wicked luſtes, and of the infirmities which he knoweth to be in vs.

And now proceeding with that which I haue touched alreadie: let vs marke that it is not ynough for vs to pray vnto God with our mouths onely: but it muſt bee as a helpe to conuey vs further, namely to the dedicating of our whole lyfe vnto him, & accordingly as Moſes ſheweth here, adding: Thou ſhalt not forget the Lord thy God, to deſpiſe his Commandements, ſtatutes, & Lawes, which <sup>30</sup> iniugne ſhee this day. Hereby he ſheweth vs that to yeeld thankes vnto God is a good & holy exerciſe: but yet it is not all ſy we haue to doe: our liſt muſt be answerable to our tongue, and as we haue proſtred our ſelues to bee beholden vnto God, ſo muſt we ſhew it by our deedes. That is ſy cauſe why it is expreſſly ſaid, beware thou forget not thy God by foreſlowing to keepe al his commandements and Lawes. Now firſt of all Moſes ſheweth here, whence this vnthankfulnes of me <sup>40</sup> ſpringeth, ſy they acknowledge not ſy party which hath done them ſo much good, but forget him vtterly. And may ſy excuſe vs: Nay it rather maketh our fault the hey nouſer, when we think not vpon God, ſeing he ſetteth his goodnes before our eyes, ſo as wee may beholde him therein, & we haue as faire preſidents of him there as if we were liuely painted before vs in a table, & yet we looke not vpon him. If God withheld himſelf from vs, ſo as we found no fauour at his hand, <sup>50</sup> and he ſuffered vs to linger in all manner of miſerie, without giuing vs any ſuccour when wee called vpon him: yet were that no ſufficient excuſe, that wee ſhoulde not ſeeke him. For it is the meane whereby hee quickeneth vs vp to call vpon him the more earneſtly. Neuertheleſſe, wee might haue ſome colour to ſay, Alas I wote not what to doe, for God ſeemeth to be gone quite and cleane from me, & it is no maruell though I ſet not my minde vpon him, <sup>60</sup> for I haue no meane to allure mee thereto. But nowe contrariwiſe, ſeing hee offereth himſelfe to vs, and maketh vs to perceiue his goodneſſe, ſo as we might cuen feele him by groping though we were blind: muſt it not needs bee that we be worſe than forward, if we thinke

not vpon him? Yes, and yet we ſee this naughtineſſe to bee ordinarie among men. For why? When wee bee once full, wee heare our ſelues on hand that wee haue no more neede of Gods helpe. If neceſſitie pinch vs, then we come running to him. But if he ſend vs the worlde at will, wee become as it were drunken in our delights, all our ſeeking is to wade deeper and deeper, and to bee ſhort, wee neuer come to God but by constraint. Wherein we ſee that all the pray- <sup>ers</sup> which wee make vnto him when hee afflicteth vs, are but fained and vntrue. For then wee will confeſſe well ynough, that wee be miſerable creatures if hee pitie vs not. But what? As ſoone as he hath withdrawn his hand, wee neuer think vpon him more. Therefore it is a token that all was but hypocriſie in vs before, & that we were not rightly and ſincerely minded. Now then wee ſhall not faile to be ſy grieuouſly condemned, if <sup>20</sup> we forget our God when he draweth nere to vs. For the moe good turdes that he doeth vs, the moe ſignes and recordes haue we that he is willing to be our father, and to take vs for his children, and that hee ſheweth himſelfe in ſuch ſort vnto vs, as we cannot but know him. If this will not moue vs, our curſedneſſe is double. And therefore let vs learne that when our God hath made vs wealthy, we muſt not play the beaſtly ſolke, which deſpiſe God when they haue the world at will, as who ſhould ſay they had ynough of their owne to content themſelues withall: but wee muſt bethinke vs of two things. Firſt (as I ſaide) that if our Lord be liberrall to vs, his coming to vs and his ſhewing of himſelfe ſo familiar & friendly towards vs, is to the end we ſhoulde know him ſy better. That is for ſy firſt point. And again for the ſecond, let vs vnderſtand that if we haue abundance to day, we may bee bereft of it in a minute of an houre, ſo as ſy man that thinks himſelfe well ſtored, ſhall finde himſelfe naked, bare, and poore, in leſſe than the turning of a hande. Why ſo? Becauſe God auengeth himſelfe of the ſaide vnthankfulneſſe. And it is good reaſon alſo that hee ſhoulde not ſuffer men to forget him, when hee hath ſhewed himſelfe after that faſhion vnto them. Wherefore let vs vnderſtande, that when wee be in proſperitie wee haue the iuſter cauſe to call vpon God, not onely to ſhewe that wee bee bounde vnto him for the good that he hath done vs alreadie: but alſo to ſhewe that the goods which we poſſeſſe were nothing, if he ſhould not continue them and maintaine vs in them. Theſe are the things which wee muſt beare in minde.

And therefore let vs marke, that the more God powreth out his benefices vpon vs, the more ought we to be quickened vp by them to thinke the better vpon him. But what? Wee bee farre wyde from the hauing of any ſuch diſcretion with vs: and therefore haue wee ſo much the more neede to bethinke vs of this leſſon that is ſhewed vs here, conſidering what hath happened in all ages. As for the vnbeleeuers, they are often enough vpbraid, that when God ſends them the world molt at will, then do <sup>Psal. 73. 5. 9</sup> they moſt kicke againſt him, and ſhewe themſelves selues most stubborne and rebellious. But as touching them y call themselues beleueers: eue in them also is the same vice blamed by y holy scripture. And not without cause: for we see that euen the children of God haue bin subiect to it. What is written of Ezechias? Although he was a peerlesse perle and mirror of all holines: yet we see that as soone as God gaue him ease, he was no more mindfull to thinke vpon him. Yea and at what point was eue David himself? Seeing then that this misdealing fell euen vpo them y were as halfe Angels in this world: let vs be the watchfuller, & let euery of vs labour to redresse himselfe both earely & late. And seeing there is such slownesse in vs, let the same spurre vs forward to bethinke vs of Gods grace, y his name may be blessed and magnified by vs. Yea & Moses doeth expressly make a comparison here, betweene Gods for mer guiding of his people, and his leading of them through the wildernes with his assisting of the there, after he had brought them out of the thraldome of Egypt, to the end y the same might prouoke them the more to be thankfull vnto God. For when we haue once felt many miseries, & God hath deliuered vs from them: if it moue vs not the more to yeeld him his due praise, it is the fouler & hainouser fault. And that is the cause why Moses speaketh of it. But what? We see how the people of old time behaued themselues. After this deliuerance, God deliuered his people another time from the captiuitie of Babylon, wherein he reached out his arme after so noble a fashion, as the Prophetes could neuer thinke themselves to haue spokn ynough of his power which he shewed therein. Neuertheless, they were no sooner returned home, but euery man was busie about the building of his owne house, & Gods temple was let alone, no man made account of it. It lay open to raine & snow, so as the sacrifices & al the order of the Church lay dead. And what was y cause thereof? Euen priuate profit, which possessed al such as had receiued that benefit at Gods hand. And how fare wee nowe adayes I praye you? For if our Lord giue vs rest & ease, then in stead of knowing our shepheard like good sheepe, we play the wild beasts with him, and fall to kicking at him. And what are we the better by remembering our former miseries? Without going any further, in what plyght haue they bin, which at this present are well at their ease and rest? And yet are they so farr off from fearing the better by it, that it grieueth them at the heart that any man should tell them of it. They would haue all the things buried which they haue indured a-foretimes, & also the benefites which they haue receiued since, and in the meane while become brutish like swine. They could finde in their hearts (say I) to aduance theselues against God, without being acknowledged y they be beholden to him for any thing: They neuer passe for the procuring of Gods honor, neither regard they how much they be bound vnto him. But euery man in the meane season follows his owne likings. One burnes in courtoisnesse, and another in vaine glorie, seeking to be aduanced to autho-ritic and honour, and to bee taken to be I wore not what. Thus ye see at what point they bee, which will needs be taken to bee greatest and zealousst Christians. Now then seeing it is not onely among y Lewes y this foule vnthankfulnes hath reigned, but that wee also are steyned, yea and vnmeasurable attained with it at this day: Let vs be sure that y holy Ghost warneth vs also, & y this doctrine of Moses pointeth at vs too. Nowe therefore let vs followe his saying: that is to wit, that our life must bee answerable to our speech, so as wee may shewe that wee play not the hypocrites in praying God. Indeede the mouth must doe his office, and euery man must inure himselfe to praise God: and it wee doe it not, our leawdnesse is apparant euen to little children. For they that sit downe to the table, and when they haue filled their bellies rise vp againe without shewing any signe of feare or reuerence to Godward, deserue to haue lide children to spitte in their faces, or else to haue dung cast vpon them, as they that deie nature. For the very Asses and Oxen obserue a naturall order in their feeding. Such folke doe spite GOD through their intemperance and excess, and finally would haue his name abolished, as they shewe well ynough. Therefore are they verie monsters, whome men ought euen to abhorre. But yet must wee not stay there. For heere is a rule giuen vs to pray in such sort vnto God with our mouth, as our life may beare witness therewithall, that our praying to him is done truly and vnfeinedly. For if when wee haue protested with our mouth, that God is our father and shewed himselfe liberrall to vs, and that wee lue by his grace, and that he giueth vs all things which he knoweth to bee for our welfare: we aiter wee haue saide so, doe giue our selues to all naughtinesse, and take leaue to exempt our selues from all subiection: wherto shal our thanksgiuing serue which we haue yeilded with our tongues, but to be as a bond to hold our noses to y grindestone, so as wee may haue no flitt to helpe our selues? Then let vs learne to sing vnto God with such melodie as Moses speake th of here: y is to wit, as our whole life agree with our mouth, and as god be honored truly and effectually.

Nowe heerewithall let vs marke well howe he addeeth, Take good heede, that when thou hast eaten and drunke thy fill, and builded thee faire houses, and increased thy Castell: thy heart doe not swell, and thou forget the Lord thy God. Here Moses bringeth vs to the very welhead of y naughtinesse that I haue touched already. Men are vnthankful & forget god though he shew him selfe friendly vnto the, and their praying to him w their tongues is but feining. And wherof cometh that? Moses saith y it cometh of y loslines of the heart. But let vs mark wel, y in so saying he tanteth mens selfe weening, in chalenging y things to theselues which belong alonely vnto God, as he will expresse yet better in y end: but all cannot be spoken at once. Then if God haue done vs any good, no doubt but it will inforce vs to graunte in wordes that it is so indeede: but yet for all that, wee will not sayle to father all things eithe vpon our owne wisdom, or vpon our good fortune, or vpon one thing or other. And therefore no maruell though we be so beseited therewithal, that we thinke no more vpon God: For why? Is there any greater or horribler blindness, than for men to be so proude as to set vp their bristles and to knowe themselves no more, but contrariwise to imagine themselves to bee that which they be not? Nowe then, when men are caried away with this false opinion of selfestimation: they bee so ouerblinded as they haue neither reason nor wit, insomuch that tell them what a man can, they passe not for it, but continue still in their wilfulness. Therefore let vs beware of this Highmindednesse which Moses speaketh of here. And that we may be the wiser to keepe our selues from it: let vs assure our selues that euery one of vs haue as it were a roote of it in vs, vntill God haue rid vs of it. In dede there are some to be seene which are modest, so as if God aduance them to honour or wealth, yee shall not perceiue any pride or change at all in them. If they become great whereas they were little before: yee shall see them holde an euen hande, and continue still gentle. But wherefoeuer we see that: let vs note that God hath wrought there, or else it were vnpossible. For not without cause are Lowliness and meekenes fathered vpon his holy spirit. When the holy scripture speaketh of those vertues, exhorting men to be meelde, & not to grow proud, but rather to lue quietly with their inferiours: it saith that they be singular gifts of y<sup>e</sup> holy ghost. Againe, we see they be verie rare gifts. For howe do most men behaue themselves when they be aduanced? [Mildly:] Nay contrariwise we see they be intollerable, as who should saye they came out of the clouds. But let them beware that they tumble not downe: for there is no loftines so high, which God cannot cast downe, if men stande in their owne conceites and forget themselves. Neuertheless, the worlde sees that this is too too common, and there is a double vnthankfulness in it. For first they consider not that the wealth which they haue, cometh from aboue: but their hearts are hardened in that behalfe. And secondly they fall not to consider with themselves afterwarde, that they be not worthy of it, to the end they might humble themselves & thank God for it. But contrariwise they be so malicious, as they could find in their hearts that all the grace of God in the world were suppressed. Wee see this apparently in those which cannot abide to offer God the sacrifice of praise that Moses speaketh of here: that is to wit, to giue ouer themselves vnto him with all humilitie, & not to challenge any vertue at all to themselves.

Now, that we may so do: let vs ad that which hath bin touched: that is to wit, y<sup>e</sup> as God chastised his people in the wilderness, so was he also their guide and leader. So then, let vs marke well, that after he hath rebuked the pride that is in vs, and told vs that if God reach out his hand to aduance vs, our heart must not be puffed vp therefore, but we must walke on still in mildnesse and awfulness [towards God,] yea and be gentle louing and courteous towards our neighbours: he bringeth vs backe to consider what we were, when God vouchsafed to aduance vs to worship, riches, and such other like things. Nowe if we could take hold of this: surely whereas we set vp our bristles, we would all of vs cast downe our eyes continually. True it is that when God hath deliuered vs from our miseries, we must put the quite out of our minde, euen of purpose to be no more disquieted with the grieft that we haue indured, after that God hath once affwaged it after that fashion: but yet is it not ment that we shoulde neuer thinke vpon it more. For why? It must alwayes bee as a looking glasse for vs to holde vs in awe, that we play not the loose colts. Then if a man bee rich, and God haue increased him, let him bethinke himselfe from whence comes this to me? In dede if a man be rich by inheritance: he is the more bounde vnto God, so as hee ought to acknowledge thus, behold what a number of goods God hath prouided for me euen before I was borne, so as I haue wherewith to content me, and although I bee not one pennie increased, yet haue I already more than I need. Such acknowledgement ought they to yeld (say I), which are wealthy by succession or inheritance. And when a mans goods are of his owne gathering: let him alwayes haue this regard, I was once poore, and howe am I come to the state wherein I see myselfe as now? It is not meete I should cast a scarce before mine eyes in this case to forget God: but it becometh mee to acknowledge his liberality towards mee, and that I am beholden to his free mercie for all that cuer I haue. After this manner ought hee that is grown rich, to bethinke him of his former pouertie. For it will serue to bridle him, that he shall not be so misaduised as to wax stout against God, or to deale cruelly with his neighbours, by oppressing or reiecting the that seeme to be his inferiours: but rather practise this warning of S. Pauls, of applying our selues to the meanest sort, that is to say, that although there seeme to be some cause that we shoulde exalt our selues: yet we must yeelde vnto them and stoope to our God. Let him that is aduanced in degree thinke thus: Alas am I worthy of it? Hath God brought me to this for my faire eyes sake? No: but forasmuch as it hath pleased him to exalt me, it becometh me to acknowledge what I was before. For had not God looked mercifully vpon me, I should not onely haue continued in my former state: but also gone to decay, yea and vtterly come to nought. Nowe if a man bethinke himselfe after this fashion: surely he wil behaue himselfe mildly, and not bee so lustie as to holde scorne of others. And wee haue the more neede to marke wel this doctrine, forasmuch as wee see that the hauntnesse of heart which Moses speaketh of here, is not a single or dubble mischief, but such a one as draweth a long tayle of manie inconueniences after it. What is this aduancing of our selues whereas wee shoulde humble our selues? Is it not (as yee would say) a desying of God, and a proclayming of open watre against him? Yes: but alas hee is too strong an aduersarie. It is said y<sup>e</sup> God will cast downe the eyelids of the proud.

 Beholde, God proclaymeth warre not for a day or for a yeere, but for euer, against all such as exalt themselves: and yet in the meane while wee cease not to waxe proude continually more and more. And what thinke wee to winne by so doing? On the other side, if vnthank-fulnesse be so intollerable towards men: howe much more heynous will it be towards God? If a poore man haue his dinner sent him: hee can well ynough tell that hee had it not before.
 Some man hath had pittie of him, and sendes him Coine, breade, or wine. Nowe if hee deu-our it and cramme himselfe full, and in the meane while consider not who did him that goodturne: will not men say hee is a hoggish vilane? hee is not worthe to haue any good done vnto him. And yet this vnthankfulnesse toucheth but a mortall man. Beholde, God reacheth vs his hand from heauen, and wheras the earth bringeth forth frutes for vs: it is the hande of God that bestoweth those benefites vpon vs. Nowe if wee vouchsafe not to lift vp our eyes vnto him when hee commeth vnto vs, but mustell with our groynes in the earth, or elie thinke those things to be of our owne getting and deseruing: I pray you is not such vnthankfulnesse too too detestable? Yes:
 and yet moreouer it is matched with scornfulnesse towards our neighbours. For if wee cannot finde in our heartes to discharge our dustie rourdes God, what will wee doe towards our neighbours? So then, pride doeth euer carie crueltie with it: that is to saie, that that soade themselues so in their owne naughtinesse, are alwayes churlish towards their neighbours, and their churlishnes is alwayes matched with spite & enuie. In somuch that if wee bee not perswaded that God giueth vs all things of his owne free goodnesse, & that it belongeth to him to mainetaine vs in the possession of our goods: whensoeuer wee see any man in whom Gods gifts shine forth, wee shall fall to oppressing of him, & wee shall be loth that he should be preferred. And that is yet another ouer outrageous leawdnes. Now therefore seeing that this ouerlossines of minde carrieth so many vyces with it, and maketh vs guiltie so many wayes before God, yea & that euen the worlde it selfe perceiueth y<sup>e</sup> shameful-nes therof, and may wel abhor it: Let vs learn to submure our selues to y<sup>e</sup> which Moses saith here, y<sup>e</sup> is to wit, let not our hartes be puffed vp when our Lord hath increased and multiplied vs.

Hee doeth not simply condemne that men should growe wealthy: for Gods blessings is of such force, that such as are no great wishers, do neuertheless attaine to y<sup>e</sup> things which they neuer looked for, and God outgoeth their desires, so that wheras they were contented with their slender state, he sendeth them much more. Wel then, this of it selfe is not to be condemned. Not withstanding, let vs learne to keepe our heartes from swelling, and to be alwayes poore in spirit.
 Although we haue riches, yet let vs be readie to forgo them whensoever it shall please God: let vs not bee wedded to them: let vs not delight to feede our selues with them vnmeasurable: neither let vs make them an occasion to trouble and to oppresse our neighbors. That is the thing which we haue to remember vpon this text.

Wherefore let vs mark that it is no wonder to see so small continuance of things in this world, & so many alterations from day to day. For why?
 Those to whom God hath shewed himselfe most liberrall, do giue ouer themselues to all naughti-nes, & most forget him: and therefore is he faine to withdrawe his fauour & goodnes from them, and to send them scarceitie as they bee worthy.
 Wee see what caused Ieroboam to turne away from the true religion. God had reached him his hande, and aduanced him to the kingdome, yea euen whē he neuer thought of it. The Prophet came to him wth this message: God wil giue thee cleuen tribes of Israel, so as there shall remaine but one & a halfe in y<sup>e</sup> house of Dauid. Now as sone as he was thus made king beyond his hope: he thought thus with himselfe: Seing I am in possession of y<sup>e</sup> kingdome, it standeth me on hand to looke about me how I may maintaine my self in it. And the best way is to prouide y<sup>e</sup> people go no more to the Temple of Ierusalem to worship there. For y<sup>e</sup> would be a meane to turne them away from my obedience, and to make them to fall away from me: which thing they cannot do if they haue temples heere at home, that they may worship the God y<sup>e</sup> is within the countie of mine owne Iurisdiction. Thus yee see how Iero-boam corrupted y<sup>e</sup> whole seruice of God, in hope to maintaine his owne kingdome by it. And what was y<sup>e</sup> cause thereof? Euen y<sup>e</sup> he remembered no more of whom hee held his royal crowne, and y<sup>e</sup> it came vnto him of Gods meere free goodnes: but blinded himself in such sort, y<sup>e</sup> he thought to maintaine himselfe euen as it were in despite of God. But wee see it was the cause of horrible destruction: so as y<sup>e</sup> people was vtterly consumed, & Gods vengeance neuer departed fro<sup>m</sup> the. Sith it is so, let vs learne y<sup>e</sup> the more our Lorde sheweth himselfe to vs, y<sup>e</sup> more must we on our side liue in such modesty, as we alwayes do him homage for the good turnes y<sup>e</sup> hee hath done vs, and as y<sup>e</sup> remembrance of y<sup>e</sup> miseries which we haue felt, & of the slender & wretched state wherin we haue bin, may quicken vs vp & prouoke vs the more, to loue our God for shewing himselfe so friendly to vs, & to honor him for giuing vs such occasion thereof by his bestowing of benefites vpon vs which we neuer looked for. That is the effect of the things which we haue to matke vpon this text. And we see nowadayes what need we haue to bethinke our selues of the good y<sup>e</sup> God hath done vs. For what a one hath he shewed himself towards vs? I meane if it were but euen in respect of the goods of this worlde. Let vs not speake of euerie one seuerally, but generally of this place where wee bee. Alas, it was in oppression and bondage, and it seemed to haue bene a place appointed to vtter ruine, so as there was no hope of recouery as in respect of y<sup>e</sup> world. And yet hath God not only planted his worde here, but also added freedome moreouer, and

and also giuen vs quietnesse, as wee see. All other Countries are troubled, vexed and as good as deliuered vp to the spoile: and in the meane while God giueth vs respit here. And is not that to the end that wee should haue the more leasure to serue and honour him? Yes: and yet contrariwise the worlde seeth what lewdnesse and loosenesse raigeth nowe more than euer afore: so that the more rest wee haue, the more doe we striue against God, and wee haue no minde to bethinke vs howe bountifull hee hath shewed himselfe towardes vs. Therefore let vs see that we liue in feare, and whereas we haue bene in some miserie, and God hath had pitie vpon vs to rid vs of it: let vs vnderstand that his so doing, was because he was loth that wee should perish. Hee hath reached out his hand and overcome our malice, he hath fought with his goodnesse against our naughtinesse: and ought not that patientnesse of his, to breake our heartes the more [though they were neuer so hard:] Ought wee not to thinke vpon those things otherwise than we doe? Is not necessitie still present before vs? Yes. Then let vs marke that Moses spake not alonely to the people of olde time: but that this exhortation belongeth to vs also at this day.

And generally let vs vnderstand further, that euery of vs ought to consider well with himselfe, in what case and in what plight God found him, when he vouchsafed to choose vs and to call vs to his Gospell. Alas in what taking were wee? We were borne the heires of cuerlasting death, vnder the tyrannie of Satan: and God adopted vs to bee his children. In what wretchednesse are wee borne euen in respect of the world? And God sheweth himselfe a father to vs euen from our mothers wombe, as is saide of it in the two and twentieth Psalm. Againe, let euery of vs bethinke himselfe howe many perils and daungers he hath passed through: and howe GOD hath deliuered vs from them all. Seeing then that wee doe liue in this world, haue wee not good cause to minde Gods benefices continually without ceassing, yea and to liue meekely therewithall? Yes: for when wee haue cast vp our account, I pray you what cause haue wee to bee proude? I meane cuen of those that are of great ability, and beare a goodly port of vertue and wisdom, and of all things else that can be named. Alas, if all bee well examined, haue wee not good cause euerichone of vs to cast downe our eyes? And seeing that GOD doeth vs good euen while wee bee asleepe, and while wee thinke not vpon it: are wee not duble bound vnto him? Yes verily. Therefore let vs knowe these things, and let vs profite our selues by the things that Moses telleth vs heere, so as euery of vs in his state and calling, both great and small, may all serue God, and for the performing thereof humble our selues and not stand in our owne conceites, but alwayes haue a care to call vpon him on whom we depend. And let vs knowe also, that the way to prayse God aright, is both to magnifie his name, and also to make our life correspondent therunto, so as we shewe by our deedes, that wee be willing to giue ouer our selues wholly vnto him.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our fautes, praying him to make vs feele them better than wee haue done, that being cast downe in our selues, wee may seeke none other means than to resort vnto him, and to pray him to hold vs vp with his hand, and specially to strengthen vs with the power of his holy spirit, so as wee may fight in his seruice, and overcome all the assaults of Satan, the worlde, and sinne, cuen vntill he haue gathered vs into his kingdome. And so let vs all say, Almighty God heauenly, &c.

On Monday the xxvj. of August. 1555.

The Lxj. Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the eight Chapter.

14 Thy heart doe not then swell, and thou forget the Lord thy God which brought thee out of the land of Egypt from the house of bondage.

15 And led thee through the great and terrible wildernesse, full of Serpentes that spouted fire, and of Scorpions, and of dryth without water, but hee brought thee water from out of the hard rocke.

16 And fed thee in the wildernesse with Manna, which thy fathers knew not: of purpose to afflict thee, and to trye thee, that hee might doe thee good afterward.

17 That thou mightest not say in thy hart, mine own power, and the strength of mine owne hand haue gotten mee these goods:

18 But that thou mightest remember the Lorde thy God. For it is hee that gaue thee this power to get these goods, to the intent to make good the covenant which he had sworne to thy fathers, as appeareth this day.

19 But if thou forget the Lord thy God, and walke after strange Gods, and serue them, and bow down before them: I protest vnto you this day that you shall surely perishe.

20 As the Lord destroyeth the Nations before you: so shall you perishe, because yee haue not obeyed the voyce of the Lord your God.

Here we must goe forward still with the matter which Moses had touched afore, and which I haue partly expounded already: which is that he telleth the people what fauour had bin shewed them in Gods deliuering of them from the bondage of Egypt, and in his leading of them through the wilder nesse, which thinges were not doone but of Gods wonderfull goodnesse. For when we haue beenc in aduersitie, and God hath deliuered vs from it, and done vs good: his mercie hath the greater beautie, and becometh the better known to vs, if the aduersitie be set before vs againe, and that wee be put in minde of it. That then is the meaning of Moses. To the intent that the people shoulde not fall asleepe in their pleasures, he sayeth vnto them, consider in what plyght and taking yee were, whē God reached you his hand to succour you. Consider by what means he brought you into this land where he giueth you rest at this time. Bec mindfull of those thinges, and ye shall haue cause to say that ye haue found so great mercie, as there is no excuse for ye if ye forget it. And he speaketh purposely of the Manna, not to the same ende that he spake of it a while ago: but to doe the people to vnderstand, that they had bin fedde after such a straunge fashion, as had not bin commonly seene. Behold (saith he,) ye haue liued this fortie yeeres together without bread or vittels. God hath fed ye with Manna, which was a thing vnknown: and he gaue you a new kinde of drinke: for he made fresh water to come out of the drie and hard rocke for you. Thus chaunged he the order of nature, so that yee might the better perceiue the presence of his Maiestie. True it is (as hath bin declared heretofore) that when the earth bringeth forth corne, it is through Gods blessing of it, & through his breathing of that power into it, howbeit we perceiue it not. For wee despise the thinges that are common among vs, and whē we speake of the course of nature, wee perswade our selues God should be excluded, and that he should beare no sway at all. Now because we be so dull: it was Gods will to alter the thinges that are ordinarie among me, and to appoint his people to be fed with Manna, and to drinke of the water which he had made to come out of the hard rocke. That then serued to shewe his people his heauenly power the better, that they might be driuen to thinke, wee be not nourished after the maner of men. Beholde, God vttereth himselfe in this behalfe, and withdraweth vs from the world, as though wee were going vnto him, or as though the heauens were set open vnto vs, that we might the better behold his goodnesse and power, and perceiue that it is he that hath deliuered vs, and maintaineth vs.

Finally Moses declareth howe it was Gods

will to afflict and try his people, to the ende they should not say, It is mine owne power and mine owne strength that hath gotten me this abundance. And here wee haue to note, first the order which God keepeth in teaching his people: which is, to begin with afflictions as Moses expresseth here. And so must it be: or else we shall neuer bee well taught, except our Lord haue made vs to feele hunger and thirst, and to indure pouertie and aduersitie. We knowe what pride is in men by nature: they be wedded to themselves and stand in their own conceits, and vntil God haue subdued them by force, they be besotted with vaine selfe soothing. Moreouer when they be full fed, they fall to kicking against God and acknowledge him not for their mayster. Therefore to bring vs to lowliness and obedience, God is faine to afflict vs. Marke that for one point. And God maketh this triall that Moses speaketh of, not for that he needeth to search vs, as I haue declared heretofore: (for mortall men are faine to make some tryall, by cause they knowe not what is in folkes hartes: But God hath no neede thereof: all thinges are knowne vnto him;) but he speaketh after the maner of men when he layeth things open, and discovereth them whether there be any fayning or hypocrisie in them, or whether their heart be right, so as they walke roundly and soundly. Whē God discovereth & bewrayeth these thinges he is faine to search, examine, and try men. Howbeit his so doing is not for himselfe, but for vs. For we see how men stand in their own conceits, beating themselves on hande that there is nothing in them but perfect vertue and holynesse: but if God nip them a little, by and by the byle bursteth, and out comes the payson. Thus yee see why it is sayd that God trieth vs.

And here we haue to beare in mind, that if God afflict vs ofentimes, we must not thinke it straunge, considering the needefulnesse thereof. For if hee should let vs alone in our delighes, and handle euery of vs according to our owne liking: what a thing were that? Wee would neuer submit our selues vnder his yoke, we should not know what it is to feare him, we should not skil what it is to humble our selues vnder his hand, we should not know what it is to call vpon him, and to seeke all our welfare in him. Seeing then that afflictions are so beneficial: let vs learn to beare them patiently, and to submit our selues to them willingly, though they goe against our stomacks. Here is expresse mention made of humilitie and obedience. For first of all, if men continue in their loftinesse: they cannot bowe to obey God & to serue him, but they wil needes haue the brydle layd loose vpon their necke, & be let alone to follow their own wicked affections and lustes. Yee see then what stubbornesse is rooted in vs, vntil God correct it by mainforce. And so there is no obedience, vnlesse men be beaten beat down with maine strokes, neither is there any lowlines in them, til then. And why? Bicaufe they sooth themselves, and take maruelously vpon them, bearing themselves on hande that they want nothing, but that they bee very able men, vntill God haue prooued the contrary vpon them. And that is the thing which Moses expresth in this text when he saith, It wa: Gods will so to afflict thee. And to what end? To the end thou shouldst not say, It is mine owne strength and myne owne power that haue gotten mee this abundance. Wee see that when G O D suffereth the order of nature to procede, he that is riche thinketh not that his wealth commeth from heauē, or that God did set any hand to it; but he sayth that all came to him by inheritance, or by succession, or that he hath gotten it by his own trauell and policie. Thus doe men euer aduaunce themselves, vntill our Lord ower them that they be nothing, nor nothing can do, and make them to feele it spite of their hartes. Therefore were the people of Israell fed after a wonderfull fashion by the space of fortie yeeres together in the wilderness, to the intent that when they were come into the land that had bin promised them and did eate meate, they shoulde thinke thus: True it is that as nowe God giueth mee nicate, but it was not alwayes so: the time hath bene that hee fed mee with Manna: therefore must I needs conclude that mine own power hath not purchased me the things that I possesse: I cannot say that I my selfe am y founder of them: I must do homage to my God for them, and hold them al of him: I must accept them as of his free gifte, that he may let me inioy them still for I am worthy to bee bereft of them, if I acknowledge not that they come of him. Now alie that this instruction serued for the people of olde tyme: yet belongeth it also vnto vs, to the end that such as possesse goods may vnderstande, that they haue none other interest in them, than bycause God hath blessed them, and poured out his fauour & bountie vpon them. True it is that God respecteth not the worthines of men in this case: for oftentimes he giueth riches to the wicked, to y intent it should turn to their forer condemnation. Forasmuch as he hath shewed himselfe so liberall towards them: they must come to accouēt & be punished dubble, if they benefite not themselves by the fauour that was shewed them. Yet notwithstanding wee must take this for a general rule, y men attaine not to riches by their owne power, wisdom, or trauell, but only by Gods blessing, whereof it hath pleased him to giue a continuall president, which serueth not onely for the Iewes but also for vs, so as it behoueth vs to vnderstand, that although some seeme to be enriched by their great diligence, yet is it Gods blessing, which worketh with them after that fashion: and that whereas other some are riche before they be borne, so as their auncetors haue purchased them great possessions, yet doe none of these things happen to them by chance, but Gods prouidence ouerruleth all. Wee must (say I) referre all these things to that which is told vs in and go late to bed, drinke water & eate browne bread not half his fill: & yet shall he nothing auail by it, vnlesse God reache out his hand and goodnes. On y contrarie part, sometimes he will cause goods to light vpo his children as they lie asleepe. And y sheweth vs y men beguile themselves, if they thinke to enrich themselves by their owne power: and y they be stark mad if they become proud, as though their goods came to be by their owne meanes. For in so doing they blasphem God, & rob him of his peculiar honor: & therefore is it good reason y they also should be bereft of the things y he hath giuen them. As for example, if a Vassall shoulde step vp against his lord to whō he hath promised feault & homage, & refuse all the duties y he is bound vnto: his goods should be seafed, & he be turned out of all y euer he hath, & wel worthy. Now behold here, God dealeth his benefites vnto vs as vnto his Vassals, reseruing y royalties still to himselfe, so as he will be knowne to be chief Lord of y fee: & it is good reason y he should be so, specially seeing he doth it not for his own benefit but for ours. Now if wee be so malicious and froward as to defraud him, & to set him besides his right: should he not bereaue vs of the goods y he had giuen vs and make vs poore againe. y he may driue vs of force to sue vnto him: Yes: & so ye see whence y chaunges come which we beholde in the worlde, that whereas a house is riche and wealthy and neuer like to decay: a man shall be at his wits endes to see it consume and ebbe away. I speake not onely of houses of meane Citizens: but also of y houses of great Lorde, which haue so many thousand pounds of yeerely Rent: it is a wonder to see howe they waste away, first to the halfe, then to a third part, & finally to nothing. And how may this come to passe? It shoulde seeme that God maketh pastime, and taketh pleasure in turning of worldly things vsfide downe: howbeit, that is bicaufe of our vnthankfulness. For as much as men hold not the things with good conscience, which he hath put into their hands: it is meete y they should be dispatched of them. Therefore it standeth vs so much the more on hand, to mark well this doctrine y is contained in these words, Thy God afflicted thee, yea euen of purpose that thou shouldst not now say, It is mine owne hand that hath gotten me this abundance. That if loue & good will cannot perswade vs to come to so much reason, as to glorifie God by acknowledging our selues to holde all things of him: at leastwise his scourging of vs may make vs to thinke it, and driue vs by some meanes to bee mindfull of his grace, so as wee may fare the better by the examples that hee hath giuen vs at all times, and not onely haue an eye to the things that wee haue seene in our owne life, but also to the things which are reported to vs in the holy scripture, to haue bin done long ago: I say let vs call them to remembrance, bicaufe God will haue them to serue for our instructō. Now if we be vnthankfull to our God in these small things: what wil wee bee in the greater things? [much more vnthankfull,] as the worlde seeth. And if wee haue neede to be tamed by afflictions, least wee should bee puffed vp with pride for our meate and drinke : surely we ought much more to be taught by such meanes, in spirituall matters . For Gods honour is more greuously impeached in these cases : and yet we see that men are most inclyned y way. Truly it is too great & vtollerable leaudnesse already, when mortall men surmise themselves to be fed and susteined by their owne power and labour : their yeelding of commendation to their owne policie for their meate and drinke, is already too shameful a presumption . But if they not onely imagin themselves to be susteined by their own paines taking and trauell, but also perswade themselves, that they get the kingdome of heauen, and become the children of God, and liue in holinesse, and all through their owne free will : is not God thereby robbed of the praise that is due to him alone? Yes : for he is not onely bereft of his right in these flightfull and transitorie things of the world : but also the chiefe part of his honour is taken from him, that is to wit, that he correcteth the naughtinesse which is in vs, that he quickeneth vs through his goodnesse, that he calleth vs to saluation, and that all the goodnesse which wee haue, should be acknowledged to come of him. And yet notwithstanding, we see howe Freewill hath bene magnified, and euen at this day one of the greatest controuersies which we haue with the papistes, is that they cannot be made to believe, that men are vtterly corrupted and mard, and that they be not onely weake, but also vtely vnable to doe any good . In dedee they will well ynough graunt that there is some feeblenesse and faultie infirmicie in men : but yet to their seeming there is still some power in them, and that if God doe but helpe vs and supply our weakenesse, it is ynough . But when men ouerthoote themselves so farre, and will needs challenge a diuine power to themselves : Is it not meete that they should bee beaten backe, and that God should subdue them by force, and make them to stoope, yea and beate downe and break afunder the diuclish pride that is in them? Yes. And indeede that is the very cause why hee handleth vs in this transitory life, as he handled his people in the desert . For the life that we lead here beneath, is answerable to the iorney which the people of Israell made those fortie yeeres in the wildernesse . We be fed heere with bread and wine : but yet neuertheless we craue our ordinary roode at Gods hand as if he sent vs Manna from heauen. And verily we bee in this world, as in a wildernesse : we see what daungers hem vs in on all sides : God is faine to guide vs, and to make vs perceiue his presence so many wayes, as we may well thinke that the wildernes was a true figure of our state such as it is at this day . For as yet God letereth vs alone in our infirmities, we feele our felices in pitifull plight, we be so weake as we neede not any thing to cast vs downe, the deuil doth drawe vs into his nettes, we be destitute of al grace, we see what troubles doe stop our eyes, and we wote not what to say, neither on which side to turne vs. And why doth God handle vs so? Why be we not here as in an earthly paradise? Becaufe we haue neede to be nurtured after that fashon : for otherwise what woulde become of our pride? Wee woulde not thinke our felices beholden to God for any thing : but euery of vs would make an ydoll of himselfe, and worshippe himselfe in his owne conceite. Therefore is our Lord sayne to afflicte vs, and to shewe vs what wee bee, to the ende to make vs stoope, and thereby to teache vs to glorifie him. Thus ye see what we haue to marke vpon this text of Moses : where hee sayth, Thy God afflicted thee in the wildernesse.

And so let vs knowe Gods chastising of vs all our life long, is not only to subdue vs to his will, to the intent wee should bee obedient : but also and chiefly to humble vs, that wee might not presume any thing of our felices, but vtterly distrust our owne strength and abilitie, and resort vnto him : and moreover that when he giueth vs prosperitie, wee should consider whence it cometh, for it is not in our owne power to compass it : and finally that wee should not doe as a number of hypoerites doe, who wil welynough confesse themselves to bee in rusfall case, and that they bee wretched creatures : but as soone as God hath releued them and deliuered them from their bondage, they fall to stouing against him, and thinke no more vpon the miserie that is past. Nowe then it is not ynough for vs to condemne our felices when we be pinched by Gods hand, and to say, In dedee it is true that if God succoured mee not I should bee destitute of all that might doe mee good : but also when God shall haue giuen vs all that we can wish, and wee feele his blessing abundantly, euen then must we bee warer than euer wee were that wee forget him not, and we must not compare the time present, with the time that wee haue oucrpast, as thus : what had become of mee, if God had not reached mee his hand? I had bene vndone a hundred thousand times . And hath not his manner of succouring me bene wonderfull? Should I now challenge any thing to my selfe? Thus ye see how that euen in the time of our abundance, that is to say, euen when God giueth vs our harts desire, wee must alwayes bee mindefull of our former aduersitie, and that in such sorte, as the honour may redound alonely vnto God, as meete is it should . That is the thing which we haue to beare away in effect vpon those wordes of Moses.

Nowe hee addeth, Thou shalt remember the Lorde thy God, that is hee which hath giuen thee the abilitie to get all the goods which thou hast. Here Moses intended to preuent all that euer men can ledge on their owne behalfe. For they bee but too much giuen continually to seek some colour : and shew that their welch cometh of themselves . When men take paines for their liuing, they haue an eye to their owne policie, whether they be of sufficient abilitie & skill or no : that is y thing which they looke at . It seemeth then, that when a man hath traueled for his liuing, he had at leastwise a good and forewarde wit, hee was vigilant, hee tooke good opportunities, hee shunned the things that might doe him displeasure, sure: and therefore men should doe him wrong to say he did nothing to it, and that it was the free gift of God: for experience is against it. But Moses answereth to all this, saying that although men take neuer so much paynes, and streine themselves, and haue neuer so good forecast to shifte for themselves, and bee neuer so well aduised and discret: yet must not God be bereft of his honor. For why? who is it that giueth men discretion, aptnesse of body, strength to indure paynes, furtherances, and helpe? Is it not God that putteth all things into their hands? And yet is not this all. For God must also blesse all the benefites that he giueth vs: or else though a man be neuer so highly aduanced, God needeth no more but to giue him a tickle with his lide finger, or to blowe vpon him, and by and by all is quite swept away: all is but as an herbe that is greene in the morning, which withereth and dryeth away as soone as the sunne shineth vpon it, as is sayd in the Psalme, Then let vs marke wel, that Moses added not this saying wout cause, namely y<sup>e</sup> we must thinke our selues beholden to God for all things, and acknowledge that it is hee which giueth vs the power to get goods. And vnder the word Power his intent is to comprehend all that euer we can attribute to our selues, whether it be of naturall abilitie and handsonnesse to doe things, or of helpes and means y<sup>e</sup> we haue to further vs withall. For vnlasse God gouerne & guide vs with his hand: surely all y<sup>e</sup> we can doe is to no purpose, but all shall goe cleane contrary to our intent. And in deed we see how y<sup>e</sup> ablest men that are, do deceiue themselves: & men need not teach them any decrees (as they say) in respect of y<sup>e</sup> world. God laugheth at their fondnesse in making their discourses, & at their reckoning wout their hoste, & in the end overthroweth all. And so, by y<sup>e</sup> word Power or Strength, Moses meant not onely y<sup>e</sup> health & disposition of body to trauel, & the wit & discretion of minde which wee ought to haue: but also the hauing of things in our hands, and Gods blessing of the, that he make our labor come to good passe, so as it fall out to our benefite. If we beare this lesson well in minde, it wil doe vs good all our lyfe long, so as prosperitie shall not blinde vs, neither shall we fall asleepe to forget our God: but wee shall vnderstand y<sup>e</sup> when he giueth vs wealth, we must thinke our selues beholden to him for it, and by what meanes soeuer it came to vs, y<sup>e</sup> glory thereof must not therefore redownd vnto vs, but bee referred vnto him, as to the partie that bestoweth his benefites vpon vs, distributing them as hee himselfe thinketh good, and giuing to euery man such portion of them as hee listeth, not for any defect of ours, but to make vs feeble his goodnesse. Be wee once thoroughly perswaded of this, we will thereby take warning not to abuse our abundance, as they doe which ouer-shoote themselves into a vnrulynesse, which mount vpon pride, and which are giuen to pomp and vanitie to make a shewe of themselves. If say, we shal be restrained from all these vices. For it is not for any defect of ours that God giueth vs riches. Wherefore is it then? To draw vs to him, that we might haue him to be our Saviour, & finde him beneficiall & kinde towards vs. Therefore wee must vse his benefites soberly and measurably: & besides that, we must not be giuen to lustinesse & brauety in vantiing our selues to y<sup>e</sup> worldward. Finally we must not think to haue a state of perpetuities in our goods, as though they might not be taken from vs: but we must alwayes put them into Gods hand, so as if he giue vs abundance to day, we in yeelding him thanks for the same, should be ready to beare pouertie with patience to morrow. By that meanes ye see y<sup>e</sup> neither riches nor any other like thing shal dazle our eyes to make vs stand too much in our owne conceit, and to glorie in our selues. For wee will alwayes thinke thus: what am I, but y<sup>e</sup> pleasure of my God to giue mee more goods than hee doth to my neighbors? He may take the way againe whensoever it please him. Then must I not imagin that I haue deserued aught: but I am the more bound to my God, in that he hath voutfaied to make me thus to feeble his fauor. And I must not be proude of it: for that were a kicking against my maister that feedeth me. Therefore must I abate the fancie which would prouoke mee to pride, and in the ende make mee to forgette God.

Again, when wee be thus humbled as touching the transitorie things of this world: let vs repaire to the principall point, which is, that when our Lord shall haue strengthened vs with his holy spirite, so as wee shall haue fought manfully against all the temptations of the world, and haue serued him in such wise as it may be sayd of vs, that we haue giue good example vnto others: yet we be not caryed away with foolish vaine glory: but consider thus w<sup>o</sup> our selues, It is my God that hath giuen me this power. Why am not I as bad as the worst nauightpake in y<sup>e</sup> world? why am I not caryed away with blinde & beastly lustes to giue my selfe to all leawdnesse, but because my God preferueth mee? I haue had incounters that were hard to beare: & how happeneth it y<sup>e</sup> I haue gotten the vpper hand of them? It is my God that gaue it me. They therefore to whom God giueth the power of his holy Ghost, must acknowledge themselves so much y<sup>e</sup> more bound vnto him, and that they haue not y<sup>e</sup> power by natural inheritance, but by Gods gift, to y<sup>e</sup> end y<sup>e</sup> he onely should be glorified w<sup>o</sup> all luminitie, & y<sup>e</sup> we should not play y<sup>e</sup> lying hypocrites, as they doe which confesse w<sup>o</sup> their mouthes y<sup>e</sup> it is God which hath graunted them y<sup>e</sup> grace, & yet cease not to perfwade them selues y<sup>e</sup> it cometh of their owne freewill. But let vs vterly emptie & quite rid our selues of such ouerweening: & let vs confesse truly y<sup>e</sup> we know our selues to haue all things of God. And if this be to be acknowledged in bread & wine: what ought to be done concerning the heauely life, & in y<sup>e</sup> things y<sup>e</sup> belong peculiarly to god, & are about y<sup>e</sup> reach of man? It should seeme y<sup>e</sup> men are able euen of nature to get themselves meate & drinke: but wher cometh to y<sup>e</sup> making of them selues Gods childre, & companions of the Angels & that they should leade a holy life: in y<sup>e</sup> case they haue nothing of their owne. And therefore when wee thinke vpon the corruption wherein wee bee by the sin of Adam, and consider that God hath cleansed vs from it: let vs assure our selues it is Gods free gift, as well as is his continual maintaining of vs, and his strengthening of vs at our neede.

After that Moses hath spoken so: he addeth, That if the people turne away from GOD and serue strange Gods: God will bee angry with them, and they shall perish as the people did whom hee was about to cast downe before them. You shall perish after the same maner sayth hee, Moses adding of this threat, is to waken them vp the better, which cannot thinke vpon God when they bee too full fed with the good that he hath done them. And it happeneth well nere continually to all men, that if God warne them gently, and deale friendly with them, and let them sit at rest as it were in his lap: then it is no speaking to them: for they giue him the deafe eare, and abuse his fauour by tempting his patience, and the more that hee spareth them, the lesse doe they seeme to regard his loue and fauour. Therefore doth it belouee men to be wakened and quickened vp with threatenings. It is true, that God indeuoreth as much as is possible to win vs by gentleness and not by contrainte. But when hee seeth vs so hardhearted, that if hee speake gently vnto vs, we make but a mocke of his doctrine, and voutsafe not to thinke vpon it: then doth hee adde threatenings. After the same maner dealeth Moses both here & in many other places, and it is the common order of speech of the holy Ghost throughout al y holy scripture. Then let vs marke well, that God for his parte is loth to speake otherwise than gently vnto vs, and would faine so waken vs as we should come to him willingly. But our naughtinesse and lewdnesse bewrayeth it selfe, in that in stead of coming to him, we retire from him. Seeing he allureth vs gently, speaking to vs as a father, or rather as a mother to her little children: must it not needes be that we be too froward, when we turne our backs vpon him, and despise him for shewing himselfe so louing to vs? Yes: & yet is it an ordinary vice among vs. And therefore let vs not thinke it straunge, though we heare therearnings oftentimes in y holy scripture, and that God setteth his wrath before vs: & that we be so rebuked when we come at Sermons. For why? Let euery man looke into himselfe: and if God should alwayes fet his promises afore vs & say, come my children, come: let vs see if that would suffice. Nay contrary wise we see how euery man abuseth such goodnesse. And therefore whensoever there is any sharpenesse or vehemencie in the doctrine that is set forth vnto vs in y name of God: let vs vnderstand that our naughtinesse requireth it, and that without it we should continue still in our filchinesse & rotte in our owne doing, so as there would be no meanes to pluck vs out of it, because euery man delightes in his owne destruction. And if we were not afraid of Gods iudgement, neuer would any of vs all play the iudge towards himselfe, but we would thinke our selues to be scaped out of Gods hand, and e-uery of vs would wink at his owne fautes. For although God cite vs to his iudgement seate, & indite vs there to make vs ashamed: yet cease we not to sleepe still in our finnes. And what would we then doe if we were not threatened? So then it is not without cause, that the holy Ghost hauing vsed gentlenesse, falleth to roughnesse. For it is meete that men should be so dealt withall, and that God should not onely wring them by y eares, but also stryke them hard, to the intent to bowe them, y they may yeld themselues teachable and be disposed to come vnto him, which thing they would neuer doe with their good will.

And now Moses sayth expressly, If yee forget the Lord your God, and goe after strange Gods: Whereby he doth vs to vnderstand, y inasmuch as the Israelites had bin trayned in the sound doctrine, and in the right religion: they coule not turne away to superstition and idolatrie, but through vnthankfulnessse in forgetting God. For why? If God haue once taught vs his truth, and manifested himselfe to vs: it ought to suffice vs, because it is so greate a light as we cannot go amisse, but of wilfulnessse. If a man that walketh at noonedayes doe run against a stone or tumble into a ditch, can hee say I see it not? Hee seeth playnly, and besides that, hee hath the Sunne to guide him: and how can hee then excuse himselfe? Euen so is it with vs: When God hath inlightned vs by giuing vs his worde, we can no more walke in darkenesse, inasmuch that if wee rush against any thing, it is through our owne wilfulnessse: and if wee fall into the ditch, wee our selues are too blame for it. That is the thing which Moses meant in saying, If yee goe after strange Gods. yee forget the Lord your God. The poore Paynims that were in those dayes, had more to excuse themselues withall than the Iewes had, because God shewed not himselfe vnto them. But forasmuch as the people of Israel had receiued Gods lawe, so as hee had fet them in the way of saluation: they could not say We knowe him not, according to the solemne protestation which wee shall see that Moses maketh in the two and thirtieth Chapter. I cal heaue and earth to witness this day (sayth hee), that I haue set you in the way of saluation, so as yee cannot henceforth alledge that yee haue not heard any thing, or that if yee had bin taught, yee would haue done your indeuour to liue according to Gods will. I haue shewed it you sufficiently, therefore followe it.

Now must wee benefite our selues by this doctrine, and apply it to our vse nowadayes. For the Papises, Turkes, and Paynims liue in ignorance, and no maruell at all. True it is that yet for all that they shal not faile to be condemned before God. But yet are wee much more blameworthy than they, if wee sticke not to our God. And why? For hee hath sent vs the pure doctrine of his Gospell, hee hath voutsafed to giue vs the vnderstanding of his truth, so as wee may now discerne betweene good and euill. Now if wee turne againe to our olde superstitions, can wee say wee were deceiued through ignorance? No: but God will alwayes holde vs

at this bay, that we haue forsaken him lyke back-flyders, and broken our faith lyke periured and disloyall kayrites. Yee see then that the thing which wee haue to marke vpon this place, is that when God hath manifested himselfe to vs by his worde, so as wee knowed the way of saluation: it behoueth vs to be the more circumspect, and to hold our selues the faster to the purenelle of his doctrine. For if wee swarue from it, it is because wee haue forgotten our God, that is to say, wee haue wilfully turned our backe vpon him, and forsaken him after our knowing of him.
In deede this is layd to the charge of all men in generall, I meane euen of the ignorantest: for God manifested himselfe to all men, euen by heauen and earth though he doe no more. But heere the case concerneth Gods word, which is the familiar manner of shewing himselfe to vs.
And had we this lesſon wel printed in our hearts so as wee could be thynke vs to benefite our selues by the thinges that are shewed vs nowadayes in the Gospell: wee would neuer forget our God, to step aside after superstitions.

Notwithſtanding, let vs marke by the way, that if other finnes bee intollerable before God:
hee abhorreth idolatrie and the corruption of his seruice about all other crimes. In deede if a man that knoweth the Gospell doe giue himselfe to deceite and extortion, or be full of pride, crueltie, and malice, or cast himself into whoredome and other filthinesse and infection: God will surely punish him: for it is too great a prouoking of him, when wee deſile our selues so, after he hath sanctified vs. But if wee decline to idolatrie: that is not a priuate offence, springing onely of infirmitie that caryeth vs away: but it is an vtter renouncing of God, it is a giuing of him ouer, as though wee intended to haue no more to doe with him. And wee must marke moreouer, that although an vpriight, ho-neſt, chaste and sober conuerſation be a parte of Gods seruice: yet the chiefe ſeruing of him, is to put our truſt in him, to honor him, to call vpon him, and to profeſſe him to bee our onely God.
But when wee fall to making of idols, and ſet them vp in his place: is it not a robbing of him of his Godhead? Can wee make any more open warre againſt him? Is it not all one as if we would plucke him downe from heauen, and put him from the government of the world? Yes. Seeing then that the corrupting of Gods ſeruice bringeth ſo horrible conuſion: let vs not thinke it ſtrange that Moſes ſhould tel the Iſraelites here, that if they gaue themſelues lewdly to idolatrie, God would conſume them: Yea and that not by gentle and fauorable meanes as in way of chaſtiſement: but by rooting of them out quite and cleane, as the people ſhould be rooted out which had dwelt before them in the land that hee had promiſed them. The thing was not yet don: but yet Moſes ſpeaketh of it as of a thing that was moſt certaine to them.

And ſurely Gods promiſe ought to beare great ſway with vs, when hee beightheth vs any good:
and ſo ought his threatnings to bee taken to bee as ſure, when he cannot draw vs to him by gen-tlenesse. And that is the cauſe why Moſes ſayth, I proteſt vnto you this day. Now by this ſaying we bee warned that God taketh as it were a ſolemne recogniſance of vs, when he ſendeth vs his word: and that the faithfull preaching thereof is as an open proclamation to ſummon vs and to cite vs.
Lyke as when a man reſuſeth to doe his duetie, then to the intent he may anſwere to the Lawe, hee is cited, and his aduerſary commenceth ſute againſt him: euen ſo doth God deale with vs.
For (as I ſayd afore) hee deſireth no more but that we ſhould come to him by gentlenesse and friendly dealing. But yet if wee bee ſlowe and negligent, ſo as hee cannot allure vs to him: the doth he enter his ſute and make profeſſation againſt vs after this manner: wel then, I haue done what I could to win you, and yet notwithſtanding yee haue bin ſtubborne ſtill towards me, and therefore I proteſt againſt you. He ſendeth his miniſters as his proctors, yea and hee ſen-deth them with ſolemne commiſſion, as if ſome Notary were by to make a publike inſtrument, [as if hee ſhould ſay,] I proteſt againſt you that it was not long of mee that yee were not rid out of the deſtruction wherein yee are: if yee periſh, the fault is in your ſelues. Wherefore let vs mark this well, to the end that when wee come to a Sermon, or reade the holy ſcriptures, if we finde any ſowrenesse or vehemencie that greueth vs: wee doe not therefore forbear to receiue the thinges that are told vs in Gods name, aſſuring our ſelues it is the greateſt benefite that can befall vs, to ſuffer our ſelues to be ſo rebuked by Gods word, for as much as it bringeth vs to him by repentance. And therefore let vs ſee that we bee not bereft of ſuch a benefite by our owne lewdneſſe.

Now let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them better than we haue done, ſo as we may be brought to true repentance, to mortify all our wicked luſtes, that wee may be wholly ſubiect vnto him, deſiring nothing but to pleaſe him in all reſpects, and to lead our liues according to his holy com-mandementes: and that although we be weake, yet wee may not ceaſe to goe forward ſtill towards our wayes end through his power, aſſu-ring our ſelues that hee will haue his hand continually ſtretched out ouer vs to ſtrengthen vs, vntill hee haue giuen vs full victorie ouer all aſſaultes, and finally taken vs vp into the glorie which hee hath promiſed vs in the kingdome of heauen. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but alſo to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

On Tewſday the xxvij. of Auguſt. 1555.

The Lxxij. Sermon, which is the firſt vpon the ninth Chapter.

HEarken O Iſrael, This day ſhalt thou goe ouer Iordan, to enter poſſeſſion vpon Nations greater and mightier than thy ſelfe, and vpon Cities that are houg and walled vp to heauen,

2 A people great and tall, euen the children of the Enakims whome thou haſt knowne, and of whom thou haſt heard ſay, who is hee that can ſtand againſt the children of Enacke?

3 Knowe thou therefore this day, that the Lord thy God goeth before thee as a burning fire: he will deſtroy them and ſubdue them before thy face, he will driue them out and rid them away, as the Lord hath ſaid to thee.

4 And when the Lord thy God ſhall haue caſt them out before thy face: ſay not thou in thy heart, The Lord hath brought mee into this lande to poſſeſſe it, for my righteouſneſſe ſake: for the Lorde hath driuen out theſe Nations before thy face for their wickedneſſe.

5 It is not through thine owne righteouſneſſe or for the rightneſſe of thy heart, that thou art come to the poſſeſſion of their Land. But for the wickedneſſe of thoſe nations, hath the Lord thy God driuen them out before thy face: and to performe the word which the Lord thy God ſware to thy fathers Abraham, Iſaak, and Iacob.

6 Knowe thou therefore that it is not for thine owne righteouſneſſe that the Lorde thy God hath giuen thee this good land to poſſeſſe: for thou art a ſtifnecked people.

W e haue two extreme vices in vs. The one is that if God promise vs any thing, and we find it hard: we bee vtterly diſmayed, & to our ſeeming there is no way for God to performe the thing that he hath ſpoken: wherein we deſace his power, and ye. lde him not his due honor. For as ſoone as God hath ſayd the worde: although the thing ſeeme vtterly vnpoſſible: yet ought wee to conclude, that hee will finde meanes wcl ynough to bring it to paſſe. And why? For his power is infinite and ought not to bee meaſured after our imagination. Therefore wee muſt glorify the Lorde, ſaying: Alas my God: in deed I am at my wits end in this caſe: but I leaue y matter in thy hand, thou canſt worke after ſuch a faſhion as I cannot now comprehend. But in ſtead of honoring the Lord after that maner, wee bee full of doubting and vnbeleefe, and fal to ſkanning whether God wil be as good as his worde or no. And if any let come in our way, wee thinke wee be diſappointed of our hope, ſfal. 33. 9.

Rom. 9. 19.
Eia. 40. 18.

Also there is another extremitie on the contrarie part: which is, y when God hath brought things to paſſe, and matters are diſpatched, we father the doing of them vpon our ſelues, as though God were no body, and forgetting the perplexitie wherein wee were before, we beſotte our ſelues with fond ouerwening, to ſet out our owne prayſe. This is God robbed of his honor two wayes: and it is our maner of dealing in all caſes.

For as I ſayd, if wee thinke the thing to bee hard: wee perſwade our ſelues that it ſhall neuer come to paſſe: And when it is done, wee deſace his working, and indeuour to take the prayſe of it to our ſelues, and wee be vnthankfull to him, that wee would haue him plucked out of his ſeate. For this cauſe Moſes maketh ſuch an exhortation here, as wherein hee re- proueth both partes. For on the one ſide hee ſayth, Hearken, yee bee now at the point to enter into the lande that was promiſed you. Nowe I am ſure you will bee aſſaid: for ye muſt fight againſt great and ſtrong Nations, which doe farre ſurmount you euery way. It may bee therefore that yee will be diſmayed and out of hart, and thereupon turne head, ſo as ye ſhall be diſappointed of the heritage that God hath promiſed you. But plucke you vp a good courage in him, and aſſure your ſelues that it is through his power that you muſt conquer y land of Chanaan, your God will be your guide:

and ye must vnderstande that he is a deuouring fire, to consume all your enemies . There fore be not afaire for any thing that ye shall see, but assure your selues that the power of God passeth all capacite of man . Now then, if you finde your selues abashed: stay, and let God goe through with his worke, and he will shewe that he can (without help of man) consume all those against whome he hath armed himselfe in his wrath. Be mindfull therefore of the power of your God, & trust thereunto, and be bolde to rest vpon it. This is the first point which Moses toucheth here, and it serueth to correct the said distrust withall, namely, that men looke no further but whether a thing be easie or no, & thereupon conclude so fondly, that they make not such account of God as they ought to do. Beware (saith Moses) that yee imbrace not the power of your God, through any imagination of vnbeliefe.

And afterwarde he commeth to the seconde part, and telleth them that when God shall haue giuen them the vpper hande of their enemies, they must not boast themselues of it, as though it proceeded of their owne worthinesse . desert, abilitie, power, or skill. And why? For God (saith he) will drine out those nations because of their wickednesse . And to confirme this withall, I haue tolde you alreadie heretofore, that determinate sentence was concluded & giuen against those nations, foure hundred yeeres afore, and that God had taryed patiently for them, to see if there were any amendment and conuersion. But when they continued hardharted still, and that the mischief increased more and more: was it not reason y<sup>e</sup> God should execute his judgement? Yes verily . So then the Iewes are warned that they shoulde not be puffed vp with any vaine selfeweeping, as though they had bene worthie to bee placed in the land of Chanaan: but rather consider that God executed his vengeance vpon those nations for their euill life, & therefore that they which shoulde succede them, ought to humble themselues the more. And moreover, that if they compared themselues with their enemies, there was no cause why they shoulde thinke themselues to haue the better case, or that they ought to be preferred before them: I say, there was no cause why they shoulde haue any such conceit. For Moses telleth them, that the couenant which God had made with their fathers, was concluded long afore any of them were borne: whereupon it followeth, that God had no respect to their desertes. I haue tolde you moreover that the same couenant was freebestowed: for it was not grounded vpon any seruice of men, but Gods intent therein was to set forth his owne goodnesse and mercie. Yee see then that the Israelites are bereft of al power and glorie, and that all worldly losinesse is here beaten downe, so as onely God must bee knowne to be good and righteous, and men are bounde to him in all cases, in somuch that they must keepe their mouths shut, and not boast of their owne power or vertue, as though they were folke of good abilitie . That in effect is the thing that is treated of in the text which I haue rehearsed.

And these two vices which Moses rebuketh, reigned not onely at some one time: but they reigne still at this day, and we haue them rooted in our nature . Therefore let vs make well that this doctrine is directed to vs at this day, and that it behoueth vs to benefite our selues by it. So then, as touching the first point, let vs call to minde the lesson that is shewed vs by the example of our father Abraham, when it is saide, that he beleued beyond hope, giuing glorie to him that had made the promise, in beleeuing him to be able to bring the same to passe . Lo here a generall rule for all the faithfull: which is, that if they purpose to leane vnto Gods promises, they must not deeme of them after their owne witte and imagination: (for what a thing were that?) but they must assure them selues that God hath meanes in his hande, which are vnknowne to them, and which they conceiue not, and that it is enough for them to haue his word, which is the infallible truth. This reacheth verie farre: but it shall suffice for this present, to gather a short summe of it. For when God calleth vs to him, if wee consider but what wee our selues are: surely wee shall bee vtterly dismayed . As for example, when God promised issue vnto Abraham, he was a man alreadie decayed and sore broken, as well with age as with trauell that he had endured. His wife also was past the age of childbearing, and moreover she had bene barren all the time of her life: it might seeme then that God had mocked him in promising himselfe . But what? hee had not an eye to his owne bodie which was forworne and broken with age, (as sayeth Sainct Paul:) neither had hee an eye whether his wife were able to conceiue or no: but seeing that God had spoken the worde, hee rested thereupon, assuring himselfe that forasmuch as God is faithfull, he shoulde not be disappointed in trusting vnto him. And after the same maner must wee deale, seeing wee haue so faire a looking glasse, For (as I saide) if wee haue an eye to our owne frailtie: in respect of our bodiees wee be but carions and rottensse: and yet doth God promise vs the glorie of his euerlasting kingdome. Doth the thing seeme possible to vs? yet then we faile of our duectie euery minute of an houre: and yet doth God promise vs such strength as shall get the vpper hande of the whole worlde . Let Satan do the worst he can, and let al the powers of hell imbattell themselues against vs: and yet shall wee neuer be ouercome . Where nowe shall wee finde this strength? So then it may seeme that GOD dalyeth with vs, when hee promiseth vs the things which we cannot conceiue, ne reache vnto by our owne vnderstanding. But what? Wee must mount vp higher, and wee must submit our selues to him with such humilitie and subiection, as to acknowledge that he is able to performe his promise towardes vs in all things whatsoever he hath spoken. And how? We knowe not that that passeth our capacite: but let vs haue our eye vpon God. For the chiefe honour that he requireth at our hãds, and the verie sacrifice that hee requireth, is that wee shoulde acknowledge his worde to bee the verie vndouted trueth, notwithstanding that our wit and imagination tell vs the cleane contrarie. And that is the cause why the Prophet Abacucke sayeth that hee will goe vp into his tower to keepe watche. When the case concerneth faith, wee must not stay here beneath vpon the earth, neither must wee looke but before our noses as they saye: but we must learne to goe vp into our tower, that is to saye, to discharge our selues of all worldly incumbrances, and to consider, that if wee haue not pitched our anker in heauen as the Apostle sayeth, wee shalbee tossed with such stormes and whirle-windes, as will swallowe vs vp. Looke mee vpon them that sayle on the sea. If they spye a storme, they cast Anker, for that is their trust. Though there come neuer so great waues, and although their vessell bee weatherbeaten and druen to and fro, yet doeth their Anker preserue them. And hee vseth this similitude, to shewe vs that our ankerholde must reache vp into heauen, and that wee must conclude boldly, that Gods saying of the worde is ynough. For hee is not variable as mortall men are. Againe, hee is not lauish in promising fondly, without knowing whether hee bee able to performe or no. But if hee speake a thing and performe it not out of hande: let vs assure our selues that his meaning is to humble vs thereby, though we conceiue not his dealings. And therefore let vs remember at one worde, that wee must take God for our guyde and leader all our life long. If wee be weake, let vs lean vnto his strength. If wee haue strong and mightie enemies: let vs hope that being vnder the keeping and protection of our God, wee shalbee preserued from all daunger, and our enemies shall not be able to do any thing aganist vs.

And nowe let vs applye this doctrine to our owne vse two manner of wayes. For wee be failed on all sides in this worlde, both in body & in soule. Wee see what the Church of God is nowadayes: wee be but a small handfull of folke, and our enemies are a huge multiude: they seeme able ynough to eat vs vp at one bit: wee be like sheepe without any strength, and they be like rauening wolues full of crueltie, they haue all the might and power of the worlde on their side. Thus yee see in what plight and taking the faithfull are at this day. Neuertheless we heare that our Lorde broodeth vs vnder his winges, and wilbe the preseruer of our life, assuring vs y<sup>e</sup> hewilde both a wal a rampire and a dyche vnto vs: let vs trust thereunto, and nor dout but hee will preserue vs. Although the worlde practise what it can aganist vs, yet shall wee be alwayes safe, so wee flee for refuge to our God, and grounde our selues vpon the promise that hee hath made vs, which is, that both our life and our death are precious in his sight. And that is the cause why Moses vseth this preface: Hearken O Israel. It is not a needelike speache: but forasmuch as wee be tempted to vnbeleefe, and cannot holde our selues to God and sticke to his promises, because the combrances of this worlde haue gotten the vpper hand of vs alreadie: therefore doth God exhort vs to hearken to his worde, and hee wakeneth vs vp, to the ende wee shoulde nor lye still asleepe, but vnderstande, that hee is able to ouercome all the daungers wherwith wee be besotted and assayed in this worlde. Now then, as concerning our worldly enemies, which practise the destruction of our bodyes: let vs not dout but God is able to withstande them. Againe, there is the duell, there are infinite temptations, and wee haue warre euery man within him self, so as sinne dwelleth in vs which is the worst and deadliest enemy that we haue. But yet let vs not doubt but wee shall well ynough wade our, seeing it is sayde that God will be our leader. For although our strength be weake or rather none at all: yet will God reach vs his hande, so as wee shalbee vnauquishable. And when it seemeth that wee shoulde be vterly ouerthrowen: wee shalbee helde vpy by the power of our God. Therefore let vs put our trust in him: let vs rest vpon his promise: and let vs not be afraide that wee shalbee deceiued. On the contrarie parte wee cannot trust to our selues (bee it neuer so little): but God will laugh such curcwenning to skorne: in somuch that if wee purour trust in creatures, wee must needes bee deceiued and beguyled. But if the case concerne the yielding of glory vnto God: let vs not bee afraide, that our boldnesse shall turne vs to shame, as the Scripture saieti in a number of places.

And Moses plainly sayeth here, that God will be their leader, yea, and euen as a consuming fire to destroy all things that shalbee aganist them. This is not added without cause. For when wee be disposed to further our owne fearfulnessesse, wee exalt the power of our enemies a boue measure, and of little dwarfes wee make Gyants. And what will wee doe then, when our enemies be tall and strong in dede? Wee wilbe much more astonished at them. But yet doeth Moses tell vs here, that wee must not feede such doubts and distrusts. And for the same cause hee vseth this similitude, that Gods fighting for vs shall not bee after the common fashion: but that hee wilbee as a fire to decure all. Albeit then that wee haue neither sworde, speare, gunne, nor other artillerie: yet let it suffice vs to knowe, that God hath meanes ynough to helpe vs withall, which wee knowe not of. And because this cannot bee so wel expressed as were requisite: hee sayeth that if wee see a fire, wee knowe it is able to turne vpa a forest, a cite, or a whole countrie: and therefore wee ought nor to dout, but that God is strong ynough for our enemies, seeing hee is a consuming fire. So likewise, when Dauid intendeth to comfort himselfe in the midst of his greatest troubles, so as hee seemeth to be hemmed in on all sydes, and readie to be swallowed vp into the gulfes of hel, we heare how he oftentimes sayeth that God is a consuming fire, & assureth himselfe

Rom. 7. 5.

Psal. 62. 10.

Psal. 83. 15.

that all they which set themselves after that fashion against him, shall be consumed thereof, and they that conspire his death shall be deuoured of that fire which consumeth all things. After this manner must we put this saying of Moses in practise. And from hence hath Dauid drawn his faide doctrine, as from the fountaine that serueth all the other Prophets to gather right comfort of, wherewith to resist and ouercome all the troubles that coulde befall them: and the same also is the cause why Moses declareth that God is a consuming fire to dispatche all the enemies of his people. Also Dauid fleeth therunto for refuge, whensoever hee seeth great armies imbattled against him, so as he is as a man past hope [of victorie,] and is as good as banished out of his owne countrie, yea and moreover there are so manie that practise his destruction, that he is vexed out of all measure. Yee see then that he is as a wretched man in vtrer extremitie, and as a flie creature past hope of recouerie: and yet for all that, hee ceaseeth not to make his boast, that hee will neuer bee afraid as long as hee hath God on his side. And after the same manner doeth Saint Paul conclude: If God bee on our side, who shall be against vs? Not that we shall not haue store of enemies: but that they shall not be able to preuaile against vs. They shall make their triumphes aforehande, but the victorie shall goe with vs, if wee haue God for our defence. Nowe wee see the reason of this similitude. In the fourth Chapter of this booke Moses vsed the like saying, but it was to another purpose. For there his meaning was to stirre vp the people to feare and warinesse. And in dedee wee haue neede to knowe that God is a consuming fire two wayes. The one is the same that wee haue scene in the fourth chapter, which is also alleaged by the Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrewes, who expoundeth this text faithfully, saying: My friends, it is a dreadfull thing to fall into the handes of the liuing God: let vs beware howe wee dally with such a Lorde, and let vs receiue his worde with all reuerence, or else wee shall finde therein that God is a fire to consume vs. In deed when God commeth to vs and calleth vs vnto him, hee allureth vs graciously, and hee sheweth vs all manner of gentlenesse and fatherly louing kindnesse. But yet howsoever hee deale, his meaning is not that men should abuse his goodnesse, as we see these scorneres do, of whō there is cuer too great store. We see a nūber of scorneres in those days which skoffe at Gods worde, bearing themselves on hande, that he which reigneth in heauen, hath no authoritie ouer them. They ouer shoote themselves with desperatē malapertnesse, and bewray themselves to haue no more religion than dogs, & yet they persuade themselves that they may mocke with God after that fashion in al matters, & yet notwithstanding that they shall skape vnpunished. Now forasmuch as men are so thanklesse, & do set vp their hellish bristles against god to despise his goodnes, it is faide, that they shall feele him to be a consuming fire. Althogh hee shewe himselfe a father, & auowe vs to be as his children, so as he will hold vs & nourish vs in his lappe, of purpose that we should behaue our selues mildly towards him, & yeld him his due honor and loue: yet if we abuse his gracious fauour, so as we yeld him no reuerence nor subiection: then in steed of feeling his fatherly louing kindnesse, wee shall finde him a consuming fire to deuour vs. Thus yee see howe wee must first of all take holde of that which Moses sayeth here, to the intent wee may liue in awe, feare, and humilitie, and alwayes holde our selues vnder the yoke and obedience of him that hath adopted vs, and be true children towards him as he is a father towards vs.

Howbeit let vs marke herewithall, that he is a consuming fire to deuour our enemies. When wee see our enemies threaten vs, and that they become proude and stately against vs, so as it may seeme that they shoulde destroy vs with their onely looks: let vs take holde of Gods power to comfort vs in all our afflictions, and let vs consider that it is ynough for vs that God is a consuming fire. Thus ye see howe we must apply this doctrine to double vse: first, that it may bee as a brydle to holde vs in awe and subiection vnder our God: and secondly that it may bee as a bulwarke to outstande all temptations. When wee bee stricken in feare, because wee heare that our enemies doe practise all that euer they can against vs: and that it is in their hande to ouerthrowe vs and destroy vs: yet let vs come still backe to this point and say, Well then, and what shall our God doe? Thinke wee that he sitteth ydle in heauen? In dedee it may well bee that for a time hee will suffer vs to be vexed, and to haue our neckes vnder the sworde, and to be as silly sheepe led to the slaughter: but yet for all that, our life is precious in his sight, because hee hath chosen vs to be his heritage. And although hee suffer vs to be troubled for a time: yet in the ende hee will make vs to perceiue that hee was alwayes at hande with vs, so as wee shall haue continuall cause to glorifie him, specially when wee shall see that hee shall haue ouerthrowen all those which now haue their whole swindge against vs, in comparison of whom wee be nothing at all. Thus much concerning the saying wherein God is called a consuming fire.

Now Moses commeth to the seconde matter which wee haue touched, which ought to be wel marked: namely, that when God hath helped & succoured vs, and done more for vs than wee looked for, or than our witte could conceiue: we must yeld him his deserued glorie, so as wee be not sotted with pride and ouerweening, to challenge that to our selues which belongeth alonely vnto God: let vs beware of such vnthankfulness. Again, let vs not imagine that God serueth his turne by vs, in respect of any worthinesse of ours: but let vs vnderstand that his choosing of vs is onely in respect of his owne good will. Wee shall not finde any deseruing at all in our selues in this behalfe: but it is of his onely free mercie, which hee will haue vs to magnifie aboute all things.

Rom. 8. 39.

Deut. 4. 34.

Hebr. 12. 29.

True it is, that Moses speaketh here of the lande of Chanaan. But if men cannot deserue any thing in this worlde in respect of transitorie things: howe shall they deserue cuerlasting life? If I cannot winne a little peece of grounde: how shall I winne a whole realme? So then, let vs marke that of the things that are sayd here, wee must gather a generall doctrine, which is, that if the children of Israel were put in possession of the lande that had bene promised them, not for their owne righteousnesse sake, but through Gods free goodnesse: it is much more reason that when we speake of the heauenly life, and of the inheritance of the heauenly glorie, wee should not dreame vpon any power of our owne, but acknowledge that God hath vttered his righteousnesse and shewed his goodnesse in his vouchsafing to choose vs. And let vs marke well the argumentes and reasons which Moses alleageth here, to pull downe all pride withall, that men might not take occasion to vaunt them selues. God (sayeth hee) hath diuinen out these people before you. That is one point. So then, wil wee be erid of all vaine glorie? Let vs beholde our selues aduisedly in those whome God punisheth, and against whome he vttereth his extreme rigour. Are wee any better than they? In dede a number of vs can well flatter our selues: but yet wee reckon without our hoste, wee come all of Adams corrupt rase, wee be all forlorne and damned by nature. What is to be done then? Surely if wee consider well what wee be: it will suffice to beate downe all our presumption. It is faide in the prouerbe, that hee which knoweth himselfe best, fettes least by himselfe: but it is ill put in vre. And wee must not saye, hee fet-teth little by himselfe: but wee must passe yet farther: namely, that hee which knoweth himselfe well, may fet nothing at all by himselfe, but rather vtterly abase himselfe, and bee vtterly ashamed of himselfe. And herebye see what the true knowledge of a mans selfe is. Humilitie or lowlinesse is not a counterfaying to doe little before God, or to vse some nise ceremonies: but a through examining and sifting of a mans selfe, so as hee acknowledge that there is neither wisdome, power, righteousnesse, nor aught else in him, whereof hee may boast: but rather consider on the contrarie parte, that wee be full of vanitie, leasing, and vnfaithfulnesse, that wee be vnruely and rebellious against God, that wee be fraught full of wicked lustes, that there is a sea of all naughtinesse in vs, and that the fairest shewe of vertue which wee haue, is but filth and dung before God. Lo howe the Scripture speaketh of vs: lo howe it blazeth our armes. Nowe therefore, when men haue well considered themselves: they must make this comparision. Alas, I see Gods wrath lye vpon such a man or such a woman, yea and vpon such great and excellent nations. Wee see a great number nowadayes which are farre off from the light of life, whereas in the meane while the Gospell is preached vnto vs, and the way into Gods kingdome is set open vnto vs. And yet for all this, are wee better worthie of it than they? Wherein? Let vs looke a little vpon our owne deseruings, and let vs alledge all that is possible to bee deuised. Why then doeth God preferre vs before them? Because it pleaseth him so to doe. So then, looke howe many wretched castawayes wee see straying away from God, and looke how many filly soules wee see punished at Gods hande: let them all bee as looking glasses for vs to behold our selues in, and to make vs conclude, that if God listeth to shewe himselfe a iudge in handling vs after our desertes, wee should bee no more spared than they bee, and that our standing is through his free goodnesse, in asmuch as hee beareth with vs, and vouchsafeth to shewe himselfe tauourable. Lo what light wee ought to take at Gods mercie towards vs, when wee see his vengeance vpon the vnbeleeuers and rebelles, accordingly also as Saint Paul telleth vs in the Epistle to the Romanes, that we should be vtterly damned with the wicked, if God spared vs nor of his owne free goodnesse. And that is faide vnto vs to the intent wee should not take any sonde conceitin our selues, that might puffe vs vp and make vs drunken. For if wee gue not God the glorie, acknowledging his goodnesse to be the thing that wee rest vpon: surely hee must needs make vs feeble to our cost, that wee bee not worthe to finde such mercie and fauour at his hande. Thus yee see why Moses tolde the Iewes, that the Chananites & their neighbours should be destroyed at Gods hande for their finnes sake. Well then, the Iewes might haue replied at the first blush, if God punish them because of their finnes: his putting of vs in their place, is a token that hee findeth vs to bee better and righteouer than them. It is not so. For Moses declareth, that Gods choosing of the Iewes (as halbee shewed more fully hereafter) was not for that they were worthier: for they were much more incorrigible than those nations: and yet did God choise them. Now then, let vs learne to profite our selues by all the chaistementes which wee see, and which God sheweth vs in this worlde. And forasmuch as the blowes light not vpon our selues, let vs not forbear to come to his schoole and to humble our selues vnto him. For wee haue deserued to bee touched as roughly by God, as they haue done which are damned. But what? As I faide afore, he beareth with vs. That is the first argument.

The seconde is this: When she Lord shall haue diuinen out the people before thee. Here Moses cutteth off all the sonde bragges wherewith men deceiue themselves. As howe? If wee had not played the tall fellows in fighting manfully against our enemies, what had become of vs? We had strong enemies, they were mightie and puissant, they had huge fortresses and munitions, they were tall of stature like Gyants, and wee were but dwarfes in comparision of them: and therefore it stode vs on bande to plucke vp a stout courage. Moses wyppeth away all this, saying: Ye filly soules, it is your God that fought for you, it was not your selues. So then, let vs

4. 29.

¶ Psal. 62. 10.
& Luk. 6. 15

learne, that although God vs̄e our seruice, & and wee seeke to do somewhat: yet the work is not ours, it is alwayes his that worketh it by vs, and which breatheth his secreete power into vs. Wee haue nothing of our owne, whereof wee may boast, but God must alwayes be acknowledged to bee the author of his owne. This is the seconde reason which Moses alleageth here, to reach the people that they should not be proud, nor beleaue maruelously of their owne power, so as they shoulde say, I haue done this or that, I haue brought this or that to passe. No (sayeth he) thy God is he that driueth out nations, and rooteth them out.

Nowe if this were saide of temporall enemies: what is to be sayde of Satan, and of the enemies of our soules? Are wee able to ouercome them? Will the bringing of our owne free will, our merites, and our good workes be able to ouercome the diuell, the worlde, death it selfe, and hell? No, but the blinde wretches are well apayd that they may be deceiued in bearing themselves in hande that they can do much, & that they be verie able folke. Yet notwithstanding, they be disgraced here by the holie Ghost, and it is tolde vs that nothing wee be, ne nothing can do of our selues: but that all ȳ good which wee do cometh of God, and it is he that doeth it in vs. For if a man cannot sturre one finger towards the sauing of this transitorie life: can he saue his soule vnto the kingdome of heauen? If a man cannot doe any thing against his aduerfarie which is a mortall and fraile creature as well as himselfe: howe shal he ouercome the worlde, and all the diuels in hell? So then, Jet vs learne to deceiue our selues no more with these fonde imaginations, in thinking our selues to haue free will to doe this and that: but let vs knowe that if God reache vs his hand, then shall wee be able to stand through him & not through our selues. Saint Paul glorieth sufficiently: but howe is that? I can doe all things (sayeth hee) through Iesus Christ which strengtheneth mee. He sayeth he can doe all things: and by that meane he defytheth the diuell, (which maner of boldnesse wee see he vseth chiefly in the Epistle to the Philippians;) but yet he referueth nothing to himselfe. He sayeth that he is strengthened by Iesus Christ. Then if wee be strengthened from aboue: wee shall get the vpper hande: But yet (as I sayd) wee must alwayes acknowledge how it is God that strengtheneth vs, and that it is in him and by him that wee stande out and get the victorie.

The thirde reason that Moses alleageth is this: that God in setting his people in possession of the promised lande, had an eye to the promise which he had made and sworne to Abraham, Isaac, & Iacob. Hereby the Iewes are put in minde, that God chose them not as more worthe, more noble, & more excellent than other men, as hath bene shewed already: but because hee had made promise to their forefathers. But nowe let vs see what cause moued and led God to gree this lande to Abraham and to his seede. If he had had an eye to mans worthinesse: Abraham deserued much more than any other, to haue bene set in possession of that lande. And yet contrariwise, his dwelling there was but as a stranger, he was driuen out of it, and hee was so farre off from hauing of it at his commaundement, that he was kept euert from water, not onely when he would haue borowed it at other mennes pittes, but also when he had digged pittes by his owne labour: both hee and his successours were driuen from them. Lo how the holie Patriarches were tossed too and fro, and how men mocked them & did them many outrages & wrongs, and of all that while they had not one foote of ground more than a burying place. In so much that at length, Iacob was driuen to pay for the ground where he lodged and pitched his tents; and finally constrained to goe into the lande of Egypt, by reason of dearth which draue him out of the lande of Chanaan. Now seeing that the holie fathers were not putte in possession of it during their liues: shall wee say that their posteritie were worthier than they? No: it followeth then that Gods couenât was merely of free gift, and that he had no respect to any desertes of me. And why? Because he loued that people. Wee must not aske whether he founde any vertue in them or no: but it must suffice vs that hee liked to magnifie his mercie. As if he should say, I seeke no cause in men to doe them good. But I find it in my selfe. For of men that are worthis to bee vtterly reiected, I choose out some and take them to bee my children, to the intent they shoulde giue mee all the prayse thereof. That is the thing which Moses had an eye vnto, in alleaging the couenant which God had made with their fathers. Nowe wee knowe (as I said afore) that this couenant was made before these people were borne. They could not say that God regarded what they were, as some phantasticall persons do, which say that God foresawe what men would be. If he doe but foresee: surely he shall finde vs all diuels, that is to say vnhappie and cursed creatures, full of all wickednesse, and such as haue nothing but vtter abomination in vs. Those are the things that God shall finde in vs, if he doe but foresee. Nay, if he wil haue vs good: he him selfe must frame vs thereto: for wee be his workmanship as sayeth Saint Paul in the seconde to the Ephesians. And the same is also exprested plainly in the fourescore and fiftenth Psalm, where it is sayde that it is he that made vs. And Dauid in that place speaketh not of Gods first creating of vs, when wee were fet in the worlde as his creatures: but hee meaneth it of his reforming of vs by his grace. Nowe then, if God did but foresee things: then sawe he nothing in vs but vtter rebellion and wickednesse. To bee short wee bee damnable in all respects, and heires of endlesse death. And therefore if hee chose vs before wee had done either good or euill: it was to magnifie his owne grace, as Saint Paul declareth in the nyenth to the Romanes. And so yee may see what Moses telleth vs here.

But nowe must wee come backe againe Ii 3 to

to the sayde comparison that I touched afore: which is, that if God woulde haue the saide couenant which hee made concerning the lande of Chanaan and the temporal succcession, to be knowne to be of his free goodnesse: it is much more reason, that when he calleth vs to be heires of his kingdome, and shewth him selfe to be our God and Sauour, his goodnesse shoulde haue the highest degree, and all respectes of deseruing be layde awaye, so as men shoulde not imagine themselves to haue I wote not what power of their owne to prevent Gods goodnesse. Then let vs marke well, that Gods calling of vs, and his vouchsafing to inlighen vs in the beliefe of his Gospell: is because he had chosen vs, not onely from our mothers wombes, but also before the worlde was created, yea, and because it pleased him to haue vs and to take vs for his owne, euen before all eternitie. And so wee haue no cause to alleage any thing at all in our owne behalfe, but rather to be ashamed of our selves, that God may onely be exalted, and haue all praise giuen vnto him. Furthermore let vs consider well, that wee knowe not why God hath preferred vs before others: for it is only he that putteth a difference betwixt vs, as sayth Saint Paul to the Corinthians. Who is he (saith Paul) that maketh thee to excell? And in dedde God sheweth vs matter ynough why hee shoulde altogether cast vs downe, in so much that when the faithfull haue thoroughly examined what is in themselves: they see nothing there but ytter wretchednesse, and those are they that knowe them selves best. What is the cause that a number become so proude? It is for that they keepe aloofe from God, and are so full of hypocricie that they take vice to bee vertue, and (which woofeis) doe sooth themselves in their vices, filth, and wretchednesse. But the faithfull beeing well wakened, doe consider what Gods iustice is. After they haue well examined themselves, they haue an eye to their fautes, and without flattering of themselves, they take Gods worde to them to discouer all the naughtinesse in them, whereby they knowe howe to condemne themselves in good earnest, & they hinder not themselves through any hypocricie. Therefore when God commeth to the faithfull, they acknowledge their owne misdeedes and hate them in their hearts. And when God hath reformed them, so as they feele that hee hath wrought in them by his holye Ghost: they father all vpon his free goodnesse, knowing well that there is no thing in them woorthie to be made account of.

And let vs marke herewithall, that sith our Lorde vouchsafed to keepe the couenant which hee swore to the holy Patriarches: wee neede not to doubt but that hee will keepe and performe the promise at this day, whereby he hath willingly bounde himselfe vnto vs. The worde Swear is set downe, because God considering mennes frailtie, thinks it not ynough to make them a single promise, as I haue tolde you heretofore: but also hath vouchsafed to swear, that they might haue the better warrant to rest vpon him and vpon his sayings. In dedde God ought to be heard and obeyed, though hee giue but his bare worde: but yet hee condescendeth to our infirmirie, and so hath hee vouchsafed to doe euen from the beginning, so as hee hath not thought it ynough to giue vs his bare worde, but hee hath also warranted it with a solemne othe. Wherefore, if in these dayes there rise any doubt concerning our saluation, yea, or but euen concerning this transitorie life: if wee doubt what shall become of vs: let vs haue an eye to his promises, assuring our selves that they be warranted to the vttermost, to the intent wee shoulde haue no cause to cast any doubt of them at all. Beholde our God sweareth, and yet wee charge him with vnfaithfulnessse: yea, and wee accuse him, not onely of vntrueth, but also of trecherie, yea, and euen of periurie: and what a diuelish blasphemie is that? So then, let vs learne to stick to the promises that are so well warranted vnto vs, ynlesse wee will be blamed for blaspheming God after that fashion.

And let vs make moreover, that if he haue kept the promise which hee made to Abraham, who was but a poore mortall man, and confirmed the same to Isaac and Iacob, who were but weake creatures though they had receiued neuer so excellent giftes of grace: wee may much better trust that hee will not fayle vs in the couenant which hee hath made with vs, by the hande of our Lorde Iesus Christ the king of glorie and head of Angels, which is the fountayne of all righteousnesse and holinesse.

So then, wee see howe this doctrine belongeth vnto vs, at leastwise, if wee stop not our eares, and forsake not the things that are offered vs through the great bountiffulnessse of our God, as wee see the moste parte of the worlde doeth nowadays, seeking altogether to blinde their owne eyes, that they might not knowe any whit at all of the things that are tolde them concerning Gods promises. Let a man call them to the Gospell, let him shewe them the way of saluation, and they wote not what it meaneth, they take no taste of it. And why? Because some of them be traytours and hypocrites, some be open despisers of Gods maiestie, and othersome be so forepossessed of their owne wicked affections, as they will not giue any care vnto God, nor suffer him to haue any entrance in vnto them. But as for vs, let vs looke that wee submit our selves willingly to his sayings, and receiue his worde with awe and reuerence, and bee readie to fight vnder the Ensigne of our Captaine Iesus Christ, in resisting all the temptations of this worlde stoutly, and in ridding awaye of all our wicked lustes.

And in so doing, let vs not doubt but that as God adopted vs before wee were borne, and chose vs of his owne mercie, and hath called vs to his Gospell, and receiue th vs presently into his protection: so in the ende hee will bring vs to his euerlasting inheritance, to enioy enioye the endelesse glorie which hee hath promised vs.

Nowe lette vs kneele downe in the presence of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to vouchsafe so to cleaue vs of them, as wee may bee ledde to true repentance, and learne to mislike more of our selues than we haue done, that wee may haue the finnes whereby we prouoke him to displeasure, and hee so arme vs with his strength as wee quayle not: and againe that forasmuch as this life is a continuall battell, we may not be slothfull nor fall asleepe, but euerie man indeuor to make the strength of the holy Ghost auayleable vnto him, so as it may make vs to get the vpper hande of all our ghostly enemies, euen vntill GOD haue taken vs hence into his rest. That it may please him to grant this grace not only to vs but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

The Lxij. Sermon which is the seconde vpon the ninth Chapter.

6 Knowe ye therefore &c.

7 Remember and forget not that thou diddest anger the Lord thy God in the wilderness. Euen from the day that yee came out of the land of Egypt, vnto the time that you came vnto this place, you haue rebelled against the Lord.

WE haue seene already yesterday, howe Moses warned the people that they shoulde not boast of themselves when they were come into the Land of promise: and howe hee tolde them that they had not obtained that benefite for their owne desertes, but through Gods meere grace and goodnesse. Wee haue seene the three reasons that hee alleged for the same. Howebeit for as much as it is harde to bring men to humilitie, so as they may knowe themselves as they be in deede, and bee vtterly ashamed of themselves, not attributing any thing to their owne power, but depending altogether vpon Gods free mercie: Moses addeth a plaine demonstration and sayeth: If ye alleadge your owne worthinesse and desertes: Ye be a stiffnecked people, euen such a one as can not bowe vnder the yoke and obedience of your GOD. Whereby it appeareth that you bee not worthy to be chosen of your GOD, or to haue such an heritage allotted you, or to bee preferred before other nations, forasmuch as ye haue not benee any better than they. And hee rehearsed the things that were yet fresh in remembrance and the rebellions which they had committed in the wilderness, concluding thereupon that they were the lesse to be excused, because they had forgotten the miracles which GOD had wrought in deliuering them from the bondage of Egypt: for that made their sinne the haynouser. Remember therefore (sayeth hee) howe yee prouoked God to wrath, whyle yee were in the wilderness. And hee addeth that the people did it not for once onely: but that they went on full from euill to worke, and neuer ceased their hardening of themselves in their wilfulnesse: and therefore they deserued full well to be vtterly cutte off. And so wee must needes conclude, that GOD vsed exceeding great mercie, in that hee reserued that people to himselfe, and brought them into their promised heritage, and that hee gaue them the inioying and possession thereof of his owne meere goodnesse. That is the effect of the thing that is conteined here.

Nowe wee haue to note first of all, that men will neuer come to confesse their faultes and to humble themselves, vntill they bee conuicted, to their faces: I say till they be conuicted, as an offender that is arraigned at the barre. For as wee see that offenders doe shamelesly denie the faultes that they haue committed, as farre as they can: euen so doe all men deale when they be cired before GOD: they doe alwayes shrinke backe, and vse sonde excuses, rather than openly stande to the deniall of it. The knitting vp of the matter is, that they neuer serue him but by constrainte. That is the cause why GOD discouereth our leaudensse to make vs ashamed of it. For if hee shoulde not vie vs after that sorte, hee shoulde neuer compasse vs to make vs to stoop. For first wee be combered with pride, and secondely wee be blinded with hypocrisie. And therefore forasmuch as men are so high minded, that they can not finde in their heartes to bee ackenowen of their owne wretchednesse: and therewithall so besotted, that they flatter themselves in their owne finnes: it is requisite that GOD shoulde bring them to it after such manner as wee see heere, so as hee shoulde arraigne them and lay their faultes afoote them. For men doe not onely only endeouour to iustifie themselves, but also proceede so farre, as euen to accuse God. And that is the cause why he sayeth by his prophete Eiaie, Well then, let vs goeto lawe together, and let there be some vmpberwixt vs, to see who shall haue the better hande. True it is that God can not be subiect to any iudge or vmpber, for his maiestie can not beare it. But hee laugheth mens cursed staterinesse to scorne, in y they repnye so against him, and would bring him downe (as it were to the barre) againste them, to weete who had the better case. God therefore in respect of such presumptuousnesse, sayeth, I am contented to haue the matter debated and discuffed, I will alleage my reasons and you shall alleage yours, and men shall discern who hath the right and who hath the wrong. Nowe, hee speaketh not after the same fashion heere: but he telleth the people in one worde, that if they pretende any righteousnesse of their owne, he can well dispoone them. And for certaintie thereof, knowe yee (sayeth Moses) that yee bee a stiffnecked people.

We see that this doctrine is more than needefull nowe adayes. For if euer men were puffed vpp with pride: if euer they were setled in hypocrisie: we see it is nowe in these dayes. GOD is mocked with open mouth, and yet the wickeddest forte will needes be highliest exalted, and that no man shoulde bee so bolde as to open his lippes against them. So muche the more therefore hath this doctrine neede to be set forth, that all iostinesse may be beaten downe, and no man presume anie more to exalt him selfe: to that poynt must wee come.

Wee see that euen among the Papists, they that holde this opinion most, namely that men are iustified by their workes, are leaudest losses in all their conuersation. Look me vpon these hypocrites, and vpon all the doctors of poperie: when they vtende to maintaine their owne merites, and that men are not iustified by fayth: they cry out with full throte and open mouth, What? Ought not Christians to be a holy people sanctified vnto God? And ought not the holic Ghoste to gouerne vs? Ought we not to leade an Angelicall life? And yet for all this, yee shall see them to be whooremongers, drunkardes, peruriers, traytours, full of vnfaithfulnessse, guyle, and extortion, so as there shall not be one sparke of feare towards GOD, or of honestie towards man in them. And yet notwithstanding, they pretende to be the earnestest defenders of merites, and the deuouetest persons that can be: inso much that to heare them, yee would thinke there were nothing but holinesse in them, when as in the meane while their life is most detestable, and shamefull, as all the worlde may plainly see. But yet doe men deceiue themselves after that fashion. And for that cause hath Moses sette downe this text, not onely for his owne time, but also as a rule for vs to practise to the worldes ende.

Therefore when wee bee tempted with ouerweening, so as our fleshe proukerh vs to presume I worre not howe to magnifie ourselves: lette vs remember what is sayde heere, [and let vs thinke thus with our selues:] Howe nowe? Consider what thou arte, and howe thou hast liued. If thou shouldest come to account before GOD, couldest thou go through with it? Considerest thou not that thou arte one of the miserablest kaytifes in the worlde? And when thou goest about to aduance thyselfe: is it not a robbing of GOD of this righteousnesse, that he might not be knowne to bee as he is in deede? Yes: For Gods righteousnesse can not otherwise shine forth, vnlesse we be vtterly confounded, so as we be condemned and hee onely iustified, and that wee acknowledge the same willingly. Hee then that will haue anie righteousnesse of his owne, doeth certainly desie GOD, and make waire against him. And therefore must wee haue an eye to this warning: How nowe? What is thy life? Art thou able to make answer when thou shalt be cited to the iudgement seate of thy maker? And therewithall lette vs consider howe it is sayde, that for euerie poynte which wee bee able to alleage for our selues, GOD is able to alleage a thousande against vs, so as we must needes be confounded. Thus yee see howe men shoulde be ledde to the considering of their liues, when they bee puffed vpp with any pryde, and bee desirous to iustifie themselves, that is to say, to chalenge anie deserte or worthinesse before GOD. And to make the Jewes vtterly condemned, Moses telleth them expressly that they were a sufficient people. This similitude is taken of beastes that shoulde beare the yoke. For if they be sturdie and will not bowe their neckes to beare the yoke: they can doe a manne no seruice, they be vnprofitable: nay rather they do much harme in striking with their hornes, they breake all thinges asunder, and in steede of going forwarde, they drawe backe. In this respecte Moses declareth in one worde, that sufficient folke can by no meanes be taken for righteous.

And for the better vnderstanding hereof, lette vs marke howe it is sayde, that obedience is better than all the sacrifices in the worlde. 1. Sa. 15. 22. Then lette vs beare in minde, that if men will needes chalenge iighteousnesse to themselves, they must examine well whether they bowe downe their neckes to submit themselves wholly vnto God. For if they haue not that: all the rest is nothing. They may well vaunc themselves before men: but yet all their vertues are no better than dunge, vntill they be come so farre as to beare Gods yoke, that is to say, to behaue themselves according to his will, and offer their life vnto him that hee may haue the ouer ruling of them, as hee lysteth, so as they be contented to obey him simple and without exception. Thus yee see that our trewe righteousnesse is obedience:

dience: yea and such an obedience, as seeketh not to please mortall men, but the liuing God. And it is a point which we ought to marke well for hereby the doctrine that I declared afore, is the better confirmed. Men doe alwayes surmise some meriting or deseruing in themselves at their owne pleasure. When they will bee taken for holy and righteous, they haue their private deuotions, but in the meane while they make none account of being disobedient to GOD. Contrariwise it is tolde vs heere, that God requireth nothing more than obedience. For all that euer we can bring him of our owne, is nothing: but he tryeth whether we loue him and honour him or no, by telling vs his will, and by laying as it were a bridle or a yooke vpon our neckes, as if he should say: Bee playable vnder mee, come not perking vpon your heades against mee, sette not vpon your crestes, ne playe not the wyld coltes: but dispose your selues to order your liues according to my Lawes & commandements. That is the thing whereto GOD hath an eye. Not that he reapeh anie commoditie by vs, neither that wee can doe him anie harme: but because it is a true prooffe that wee bee willing to honour him, when we suffer him to gouerne vs, and runne not euerie man vpon his owne head, but leaue to him his dewe souerainetie and dominion, saying: Lorde we be thy poore cattell, directe thou vs according to thine owne will. For we haue neither wite nor reason in vs, our lustes are vtterly frowarde. Nowe therefore reigne thou ouer vs O Lorde, and let thy lawe bee as a yooke and a bridle to vs. And it is the same thing also which hee meaneth by the sentence that I alleaged out of the first of Samuel, namely that obedience is better than all the Sacrifices in the worlde. Also the same thing is confirmed by Ieremie, saying: When thy fathers cam out of Egypt, did I require sacrifices or such other things at their handes? In deede God commaunded sacrifices: but yet the chiefe thing that hee required, was that they should obey his voyce. The thing that God aimed at, the thing wherein all our righteousnesse consisteth, is to herken to his speeche, that his authoritie may weye with vs, so as wee fall not to replying to bee wife of our selues, nor to doe what wee thinke good: but that hee onely may haue the maistrie, and wee no more but open our eares and be heedefull to receiue his doctrine, yea and to receiue it in such wise as it may be as a yoke or bridle as I sayde afore, and ouer rule vs without any gainesaying. And heereby it appeareth, that if men bee not milde in submitting themselves wholly to Gods will: farewell all their honestie, their life is but leaude. For why? Whereas is nothing but disobedience, there is not any righteousnesse, because the foundation of all righteousnesse and of all good behaviour, is to be reformed according to the good will of GOD. We must not bring our owne meeteyard nor our owne measure in this behalfe: but onely GOD himselfe must speake and be the iudge to discern betweene good and bad: for it is hee to whome it belongeth to acquit or condemne. And hee alloweth or disalloweth what he himselfe thinke good and there remaineth nothing for vs but to say Amen, by allowing whatsoever hee thinketh good, and by condemning whatsoever hee misliketh.

And Moses thinks it not enough to haue sayde in one worde, Thou art a stiffnecked people: but he addeth therewithall, Remember and forgette not that thou diddest anger the Lorde thy God in the wildeste, and howe many times ye haue disobeyed him, from the day that hee brought ye out of the lande of Egypt, even vnto this present time of his bringing of you vnto this place. Nowe whereas he sayeth, Remember and forgette not: it serueth to quicken them vpon the better, because men doe still couer their misdeedes, and as soone as they finde neuer so little a shadowe, or peece of colour to ouerlay their offences withall: they doe but wring their mouthes awrye, and by and by they thinke themselves verie righteous. Wee see howe it happened to our father Adam: it was no long time ere hee went to seeke figge leaues to couer himselfe withall. But as soone as he hadde offended, and GOD rebuked him, and that hee felt his owne rebellion and disobedience: what did hee? Whereas he should haue come vnto GOD, and confessed his fault, that hee might haue obtained mercie and forgiuenesse: hee runnes among the leaues and beates himselfe in hande that hee was well couered, and that GOD should see him no more, so he had some litle shadowe to hide himselfe withall. We put the same still in yeerely: wee haue no sooner committed anie faulte, but by and by we fall to shifting, and wee beate our braynes and wittes to finde out some lurkinghoole that GOD might not espye vs. To bee shorte, there is none of vs but hee makes a denie of theesues of his owne heart, vntill our Lorde doe touch him to the quicke, to bring vs to the simplicitie of acknowledging our faults. Nowe if we be so much inclined to disguise ourselves [out of hande,] by seeking shifts and courttes to withstande Gods vengeance: what will we doe in length of time? Will wee not vtterly forgoe the remembrance of our sinnes altogether? Yes: and that is the cause why Moses sayde, Remember thy selfe and forgette not. It hadde beene ynough for him to haue sayde, Remember thy selfe. But forasmuch as men doe what they can to rocke themselves asleepe, and seeke meanes to sooth themselves: Moses doeth as it were twitch them by the eare heere, saying: Goe to sirs, it is not for you to fall a sleepe in this matter: although your nature be inclined thereto, yett must you not burie your sinnes, but ye must beare them still in minde, and sette them before your eyes, and then shall yee haue cause ynough to humble yourselves. Thus are we warned heere, to bethinke vs oftentimes of the faultes that wee haue committed, and to beware that wee seeke not vaine colours, ne thinke not that wee haue spedde well, when wee haue founde some trifling shifte to iustifie our selues with all: but to learne to cast our

felues vtterly downe, and to mislike of ourselues, and to bee as men condemned, so as there remaine none other shift for vs, than to flee for refuge to the infinite mercie of our GOD. That is the greatest benefite that wee can deuise to worke to our selues, all our life long. But howe shall wee be brought to it? By the knowing of our faultes. Now then, in steede of shunning it as a matter of grieefe, and whereas weebe loth to thinke vpon the offences that haue prouoked Gods wrath: let euerie of vs bekinke himselfe of them early and late, and let vs enter into the examination of our selues, ro say, Alas, howe haue I liued in this woilde? Againe, lette vs not thinke vpon other folkes faultes, to make a buckler of them as wee bee wont to doe: but let vs call all our owne life to minde, nowe one sinne, and nowe an other, and let vs cast forthour sighes and sobbes before GOD as witnesses that wee be not willing to befor our selues, nor to burie our selues in our owne dunge by weltring in it: but rather that wee woulde faine arraigne to his righteoufnesse, as whose indeuour is to hate and abhorre our finnes, and ro magnifie Gods grace towards vs. Which thing can not bee doone, vnlesse our finnes mislike vs, and wee thinke thus with our selues: Well then, needes must GOD haue vsed greate goodnesse towards mee, seeing he hath called me at such time as I was forlorne. Againe, since his calling of mee, howe oft haue I deferred to bee shaken off, and to be quite cutte off from his Church? And yet for all that, hee beareth with mee vnto this houre, and continueth his goodnesse towards mee still. Thus ye see howe wee must bekinke vs of our finnes, to the ende that Gods goodnesse may be knowne, and that wee may not onelic taste of it, but also be fully satisfied with it.

And furthermore, according to Saint Pauls exhortation, which is, that euery man shoulde quicken and spurre vppe himselfe, when he seech his fleshe willing to drawe him to forgetfulness: Let vs not thinke it straunge, though it be some grieefe to vs at the first to thinke vpon our finnes. For why? wee be inclined to the sayde hypocrisie: but yet must we fight against it, and beware that wee feede it not. And so lette vs practise the thing that Moses telleth vs here: which is, not to forget. As howe? not that we can alwayes minde it, as reason woulde we shoulde: but that the deceiuer soade vs not in our owne vaine flatteries, so that although hee stoppe our eyes for a time, yet God doe rake away the rowell, and make vs to see our owne dishonestie in open light, so as wee be ashamed of it. And therefore, when wee bekinke vs of our finnes and offences, let vs looke into our selues, and quicke our selues vp: for we must play the iudges towards our selues, if we will obtaine mercie before GOD. Yea and if we will yeelde him the dewe prayse of his grace: wee must come to the acknowledgement of our finnes. And that must not be done for once onely, but euerie of vs must giue himselfe to examination both euening and morning, and vpon the knowledge of one faulte, we must goe to the sisting out of another. Trewe it is that in this case there is no measure, neither can wee be too circumspcct. But yer must men mislike of themselves so farre, as to learne to glorifie GOD accordingly: that is to say, to reserue no prayse, at all to themselves, no not one graine waight, but to yeelde all goodnesse vnto him alone, and to acknowledge that there is nothing but euill in themselves. Thus yee see whereunto the knowledge of our finnes ought to leade vs. And we must neuer cease, vnill we be come thither: and when we be come thither, we must continue in it still. For at euerie turne we shall stumble into this blindnesse againe, so as wee shall be prouder than wee were afore, according as wee see that such as haue liued in humilitie, doe in the ende become greatest trusters to their owne witte, when they haue once forgotten themselves. So then lette vs alwayes beare this lesson in minde vnto our liues ende, for humilitie is to perfecte a vertue, as wee shall neuer finde it so substantially in vs as we woulde wishe. And therefore must we continue in the sayde endeour, vnill wee be quite ridde of all the presumptuousnesse of our fleshe. For pryde is the sinne that will bee last corrected, and it is the roote of all other offences. Thus yee see what wee haue to remember vpon this text: where Moses sayth, Remember thy selfe, and forgette not the faultes which thou hast committed.

Nowe he addeth, Howe thou diddest anger thy God in the wilderness. I haue tolde yee breely alreadie, that the people were to muche the lesse to be excused, for that they hauing knowen the wonders which GOD had wrought at their coming out of Egypt, ceased not to bee so malicious and frowarde, as to spite out their payson against GOD. If they hadde done it afore, truely yet they hadde bene worlde of blame: but yet had their sinne bene more tollerable. But nowe hadde God vttered his mightie arme in deliuering those wretches out of the cruell bondage wherein they were: and yet notwithstanding, euen after Gods working in that wise, and after they had seene the apparant signes of his maiestie, they ceafe not to striue against him still: and must it not needes be, that the deuill possesseth them, and that they bee as good as bewitched with their owne malice? So then it is not without cause that Moses noteth here the place of the wilderness, to the ende that the people might bee the more humbled, and feele the greatnesse and hougnesse of the offences which they had committed, forasmuch as they were al at one poynnt as if GOD had not vttered himselfe vnto them at all. For it may fall out that sillie soules which neuer tasted of Gods truetieth nor of his workes, shall ouerhoote themselves and be carried away. But seeing that GOD came so neere vnto the Iewes and tolde them, I am your Sauour, I take you into my protection, I will make you to feele my power as though I came downe from heauen in mine owne person, and dwell visibly among you: I say when God speaketh after that fashion, and bindeth himselfe by his deedes, and yet for all that there is nothing in them but rebellion: must it not needes bee a desperate frowardnesse? Yes verily. And it is as a warning, to make vs look to our selues. For seeing that GOD sheweth himselfe familiarly to vs for our welfare: hee bindeth vs so much the more vnto him, as hath bene declared heretofore. Therefore lette vs looke that we prouoke him not when hee hath made vs to feele his goodnesse: but let vs bee the more obedient vnto him, knowing that his intent in vouchsafing to succour vs, is that wee should be moued thereby to honour him and serue him the better. And on the other side we shall be the more blameworthy, when GOD shall haue visited vs by his grace. As for example when he giueth vs his worde, he sheweth thereby that he hath a care of our saluation: so that if we benefite not our selues thereby in seruing him, surely wee deserue the greuouser vengeance

And Moses alleageth not here the finnes of one day: but hee telleth the people that they wente on still from euill to worse, euen since their coming out of Egypt, knowe ye (sayeth he) that ye haue euer bene disobedient to your God, euen vnto this day. There had passed at that time the space of fourtie yeares, and that was a small long ynough, as is sayde in the foureforce and fiftenth Psalme. For there GOD sheweth his inestimable patientnesse, which he vsed in bearing with the wilfull and inrollerable malitiousnesse of that people, by the space of fourtie yeares together. But Moses reckoneth not tie yeares here: for that was a thing well ynough knowne to those whome he spake vnto. It was ynough for him to say, reckon you howe long it is agoe since your GOD brought you out of the bondage of Egypt: hee hath ledde you through the wildernesse, hee hath shewed himselfe alwayes present with you: & yet haue you not knowne him of al the while. Had yee missed but once onely, yet hadde ye well deserued to be chastised. But what? Seeing yee haue had so many warninges, so manie threatninges, so manie rebukes, and so manie punishmentes, yea and so manie benefites also at Gods hande: and yet notwithstanding yee holde on still, and growe worse and worke in steede of amending: must it not needes bee sayde that ye be vtterly pastreouer? Yes: for our Lorde hath not lette anie thing vndoone, that might bring yee backe into the right way: and yet for all that, yee haue continued stubbornne still, and withstood him to the vtternost. Nowe therefore lette vs marke well this text where our Lorde vprayeth men, not with some one faulte, but with a continuall stubbornnesse against him, in holding on still in their wilfulnesse, insomuch that though hee correct them both by deedes and wordes, yet are they still imbewed with their finnes, and delight and welter themselves in them. For wee see what is in vs. Truth it is that wee would at the first sight condemne the thinges that are reported here of the Iewes: but we must also apply all those thinges to our instruction, according as it is sayde that that people must serue vs as a lookingglasse to beholde our selues in. Therefore lette vs beare in minde the thinges that Moses noteth heere. For whereas hee sayeth, euer since the day: hee comprehendeth all their rebellions that are rehearsed as well in the booke of Exodus, as in the booke of Numbers. There it is shewed, that as soone as the people were passed the wildernesse, by and by they fell to murmuring. Howe nowe, sayde they? was there not roome ynough to burie vs in Egypt? So that whereas they should haue sayde, Alas Lorde, in deede thou haste bene singularly gracious vnto vs in deliuering vs from so painefull and miserable a life as wee were in: for we were taken but as wretched beastes, we were vtterly oppressed vnder the crueltie of the wicked and of thine enemies: and soothly Lorde this goodnesse of thine deserueth well to be magnified: but yet thou bestowest thy selfe vpon vs after an other fashion: for in the wildernesse, we were destitute of all foode, so as wee should haue bene sayne to dye for hunger, if thou haddest not pitied vs: and not onely so, but thou hast helde on still in succouring vs as we resorted to thee: therefore lette it please thee to beare with our weakenesse, and to feede vs as if wee were sillie birdes: for it is thou that feedest the Ravens and other foules, and wee be creatures formed after thine owne image: nay morouer we be the people whome thou hast chosen: nowe therefore seeing thou haste vouchsafed to adopt vs for thy children, shewe vs at leastwise as much fauour as thou doest to other nations that are not so neere thee as wee are: whereas the people should haue come with all lowlinesse to acknowledge the former good turnes that GOD had doone them, and thereby haue assured themselves with certaintie of sayth, that he would holde on still for the time to come: in steede of doing so, they sayde: Was there not roome enough in Egypt to burie vs in? They did quite and cleane forgette the fauour which they had receiued at Gods hande. And againe, when they were in necessitie, they came not to him with intreatance, but with murmuring, railing and accusing. Likewise when Manna had bene giuen them from heauen, and they had eaten of it: yet they demanded drinke after another fashion. They aske their almes with the sword in their fist. Like as the theefe that would cutte the throte of a traueler: so these leaude loselles sel to spyting of GOD the seconde time, saying: Yea in deede wee haue Manna to feed on, but we must haue drinke too. Yea and when GOD had giuen them drinke, and made a streame to gush out of the rocke: y would not suffice them neither. For the Manna was too vsauorie a food for them, they would needs haue varietic. They had still Manna & Manna, & they were gluttoned with it: & yet notwithstanding it was a good & saourily nourishment.

Besides this, they were not driuen to till the grounde, they were not faine to trouble themselves much with the earning of their liuing: for God gaue them both meate and drinke: and yet notwithstanding they cryed out vpon him still, Giue, giue: Their lusts were so inordinate, that they prouoked Gods vengeance against themselves, by murmuring against him for wante of flesh. Loe heere a marueilous thanklesse. Well then, they had flesh: but that was to choke them euen with their delicate morselles; inso-much that while the meate was yet in their throtes, Gods wrath was so kindled vpon them, that they payed very deere for their shotte, because they were not contented with the inestimable good that God had done them. For the Manna was a heauenly foode, yea and a foode of Angelles as it is layde in the Psalme. But although they felt Gods punishmentes, and both sawe and felt the vengeance that overwhelmed them: yet notwithstanding they ceased not to prouoke him to angerne againe, after other fashions, somtimes by committing whoredome, sometimes by banding against Moses and Aaron, sometime by murmuring, and sometime by rayling. To be short, there was neither ende nor measure of their doings. And therefore not without cause doeth Moses say vnto them heere, Beshinke yee of the great number of faultes which yee haue committed euer since the day that yee came out of the lande of Egypt, euen vnto this present time that God hath brought you into this Lande.

Whereas he sayeth, God hath brought you: it serueth to quicken them vpe the better. As if hee should say, Who hath bene your leader? Leade folke as ye be, your GOD hath well mainteyned, guided, and ledde you: hee hath vphelde you and helped you in all your necessities: and yet will you needes come and sette vp your bristles thus against him? Nowe sith wee heare this of the Jewes: lette it not make vs to blame them: but lette it make vs behoulde our selues in their persons, and consider howe neere this example toucheth vs, that euerie of vs may looke into himselfe, and all of vs acknowledge generally that wee bee no better than they. And for prooffe thereof, we be not in a wildernesse, neither is there a time of fortie yeares sette a forchande vnto vs: but lette euerie of vs take his whole life, euen from the time that GOD did put vs into this wo:ld, vnto our burying day. Howe liue wee? God for his part powreth out so many benefites vpon vs, as wee haue good cause to serue and honour him, yea though there were no more than that which he hath done already. But seeing hee continueth in doing vs good still: is it not ynough to soften our heartes, though they were of yron or steele? Yes verily: and yet wee cease not to spite him by going on still from euill to worse. Nowe then like as Moses vpbayed the Jewes with their continuance in euill doing: so lette euerie of vs consider, that our prouoking of our GOD hath not bene for once onlie: but that whereas wee should haue bene drawn vnto him, wee haue shrunke away from him and rebelled against him. And whereas wee should haue offered our selues readily to beare his yooke: wee haue bene so stubborne as hee coule not wealde vs: and one naughtinesse hath so drawn on another, that our finnes are come to a horrible confused heape. Thus then must we compare our selues with those to whome Moses speaketh here.

Here it might be demanded, howe Moses can say that they which liued at that time, had rebelled against GOD euer since the time that they came out of Ægypt. For at that time the most parte of them were babes, or at leastwise not of full yeares of discretion. For we haue seene expressly in the first Chapter, That GOD was minded to haue destroyed all that companie, euen young children and all. For they that were come to mans estate, had made themselves vnworthie to enioye the inheritance that was promised them, and they were banished and shutte out from it. Howe then doeth Moses vpbayde them that they had not ceased to prouoke Gods wrath continually? For they might haue replied: Howe? Though our fathers misbehaued themselves, so as they were vnthankfull, disobedient, rebellious, and full of murmuring and wicked lustes: should those things bee layde vpon vs? No: for wee coule not doe withall. But let vs marke that heere the whole bodie of the people is so blamed, that the children are rightly condemned in the peisons of their fathers. For it was still one bodie: and whereas the fathers behaued themselves naughtily and wickedly: the children amended not, but continued in the same euill, as is to be seene. And therefore forasmuch as the children linked in with their fathers: it is meete that they should be knit vp as it were all in one bundle, and that GOD should condemne them all in generall. And after the same manner are they spoken of in the fourescore & ninth, and also in the threescore and eighteenth Psalmes. For there our Lorde sayth, Remember your selues howe yee were disobedient to me in the wildernesse. And afterward the prophete rehearseth their faulte againe, howe oftentimes they had misbehaued themselves: and therupon concludeth, They had alwaies persisted in euill, euen frō their first entering into the lande of Chanaan. Inso-much that if the fathers liued naughtily in the wildernesse, their children followed the same trade, yea and became much worse. For when they were once in possession of the heritage which was Gods resting place: they should haue giuen themselves to the seruing and honoring of him to the vttermost of their power. But all their in-deuour was to defile the lande which God had hallowed to himselfe, by filling it full of superstition and ydolatrie. God gaue them the inheritance freely, as if he should haue sayde, I aske no more of you but that ye setue me, acknowledging that I haue bene a good louing father to you, and that I haue alwayes mainteyned and kept you. But in steede of doing homage to

Aq. 7. 51.

God for these things, the people set to setting vp of idols, borrowing all the corruptions of the heathen, and bringing in false and counterfet Religions. Ye see then that they deserued well to be estranged and quite cut of from God. Also wee see that the prophetes did continually vpbraide the children of Israell with their vnthankfulness, yea euen generally, according also as euery man was guiltie thereof. And S. Steuen hath declared my sayd reason yet better. For he sayth, ye haue 10 cuer resisted the holy Ghost, like as your fathers did afore you. If the Iewes of that time had quietly submitted themselves to the Gospell, and receaued Iesus Christ as their sauour, so as they had honored and embraced him with fayth and repentance: S. Steuen would not haue gone about to rip vp the shame of their forefathers. For that was hidden. But for as much as they turned all things vpside downe, and beleued not the Gospell, but forsooke the grace of God, and trampled it vnder their feere, aduancing themselves with diuillish pride and furie, to abolish the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and to deface the goodnesse that GOD had shewed them: it was requisite that the finnes of their fathers should be put into their account, and that God should set himselfe against them, to condemne the malicious wilfulnesse of that people, and the faultes that had beene committed by the space of two or three thousand yeres afore. And therefore let vs learne, that although God pardon the offences of our fathers that haue doone amisse: yet shall they not fayle to remayne still of record in his registers, if we hold on and continue like vnto them. Will we then haue the finnes of our forefathers buried, and y<sup>e</sup> God should forget the same and not call vs to account for them? Let vs looke that we be the carcerfuller to keepe our selues from being like to them. And so ye see how it is expedient for vs to thinke vpon the finnes that haue bin committed before we were borne. Let vs consider thus: Alas I was yet vborne at that time: but howe shall I do, if my forefathers haue done amisse, and that I for my part bee put in among them? For it is saide that God gathereth together the sins of the fathers vnto the third & fourth generation, to let them fall vpon their children. Then doe we deserue to be destroyed and to perish, if God list to vse rigour towards vs. For the saide threat of the law is righteous, and might iustly be executed vpon our heads: and if he spare vs, it is of his owne mere goodnesse. For to what purpose should we put ouer the fault to our fathers, of prouoking Gods wrath both against themselves and vs: when we our selues continue in their wickednes? Ought not the vengeance to be double, when we on our part haue cleaued to their finnes as well as they? Thus ye see what we haue to remember vpon this place, where Moses doeth not onely blame them that liued in his time for the things then presently committed: but also moreouer charge them with all the transgressions that their fathers had committed, from their comming out of Egypt, vnto that day. Nowe then the thing that we haue to marke here in effect, is that men doe not onely marre themselves, by bearing themselves on hande that they be righteous, for want of considering their finnes thoroughly: but also that they pisse vp themselves with pride, so as they will needes make God beleue that blacke is white. And therefore let it prouoke vs to condemne our selues willingly according to this doctrine of Moses. So then, let vs acknowledge our finnes truly and vnfeynedly, y<sup>e</sup> we may fo mislike of the same, as there may nor one drop of fond presumptuousnesse remain in vs, but that we may be vterly cast downe, and acknowledge that there is nothing but vtter wretchednesse in vs, and that we be beholden to God for all goodnesse, so as we haue it of his free gift, and not as in recompence of any reward for any merit or desert of ours, but onely of his own free mercy which he hath vsed towards vs. So farre then must we come of necessitie. And for performance hereof, let vs euening & morning inforce and indeuour our selues to call to minde the faultes that we haue committed. And that we may enter into this triall and examination of our selues: let vs bethinke vs both of our owne finnes and of the finnes of our forefathers, and let vs assure our selues that if God would play the Iudge with vs, wee should not onely be vterly rooted out, for our owne faultes which are yet freshe in our remembrance, but also fo all the euill that hath beene committed before we were borne, might iustly be called backe againe vpon our heades, seeing wee be wrapped in the same offences that our auncetors were. Therefore let vs thinke well vpon these things: that wee may magnifie the goodnesse of our God in bearing with vs. And to the intent wee play not the hypocrites: let vs marke well how it is sayde, that it is ynough to haue prouoked GOD alreadie. For when they haue fought against God and his worde, and haue behaued themselves lewdly all the time of their lyfe: yet at their death they make no conscience to say, I thought I did as wel in fighting against God, as if I had fought against the Pope and the Masse. [What a thing is it] to vse such speech? Is it not apparant that such folke are vterly past recouerie, as haue their consciences so dulled, and that the diuell carieth them away, so as they can no more be sorie for their finnes, (which, as sayeth S. Paule, is the full measure of all confusion:) when such gracelesse creatures will needes iustifie themselves after that sort with so vaine couertures? Let vs marke well then, that wee must not alleage, I thought so: but it is ynough that we haue prouoked our God. And if moreouer our owne conscience accuse vs thereof: what will become of vs? Will God in the meane while become as a deadidoll which seeth not our offences at all? A man thinketh his owne wayes to be good, sayeth Salomon: but our Lorde holdeth the balance in his hand and weyeth our woorkes. And Saint Iohn telleth vs, that if wee seele any heartyng in our conscience: the same iudgeth vs alreadie: and what will become of vs then, when wee come before God? Doeth not he see clearer than our owne consciences?

Yes: and therefore let vs marke wel that we shal win nothing by flattering of our selues: but God must be faine to woorke so in vs, as we may be ouermaitred and vtterly cast downe to say, A-las if GOD should not spare vs wee were vndoone. And moreouer let vs knowe, that our true righteoufnesse, (I meane not to glory of it, but to seeke it to our benefite): is to beare Gods yoke, so as wee liue not after our owne lustes and lykinges, but that if it please GOD to exercise vs with afflictions, wee shewe by all manner of patience, that wee haue a necke plyable vnder him. Finally for as much as his lawe ought to serue vs for a brydle: let vs suffer our selues to bee ruled and governed by his hand, so as we be not giuen to our owne foolishhe deuotions, ne come replying to him with this and that, but be contented to let our GOD try our obedience, seeing hee hath giuen vs his lawe. Then let vs see that our life bee framed according to his will, which is the onely rule of well dooing: and let vs submit our selues wholly thereunto, as we see we be warned heereby Moses.

Nowe let vs kneele downe before the maiestie of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to vouchsafe to touche vs with them to the quicke, and to take from vs all blynde foldings of hypocritic, that nothing may keepe vs from being ashamed and cast downe in our selues, vntill wee bee rayled agayne by fayth and hope of his goodnesse and mercie: praying him also that when hee hath once made vs to feele our diseases, it may please him to fill vs with the grace of his holy spirite, so as wee may liue according to his good will. And so let vs all say, Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

8 Also ye prouoked the Lord to anger in Horeb: for the which, the Lord was wroth with you to destroy you.

9 When I went vp into the Mount to fetch the two tables of stone, euen the tables of the Couenant which the Lord had made with you, and had taryed in the Mount fortie dayes and fortie nightes, without eating of bread or drinking of water:

10 Then the Lord gaue mee the two tables of stone, written with the finger of God, wherein were contentes according to all the wordes which the Lorde had spoken to you on the Mountaine, from the middes of the fire, in the day of your assembling together.

11 And it came to passe that in the ende of fortie dayes and fortie nightes, the Lord gaue mee the two tables of stone, euen the tables of the Couenant.

12 Then said the Lord vnto mee, vp and get thee downe quickly from hence: for thy people whome thou broughtest out of Egypt haue marred all. They bee suddainly turned aside from the way that I commaunded them, and haue made them a molten image.

WE sawe yesterday howe Moses did cast the people in the teeth with their malicious stubbornnesse, in that they had not ceased from dooing of euill, euen since GOD had deliuered them from the thraldome of Egypt. And surely it was an ill acknowledging of such a benefite, to spyte him so wilfully, which had bene their Redeemer and Father. But nowe he alleageth a greater faulte of theirs, and farre more outrageous: that the remembraunce thereof myght leade them yet further, namely to bethinke themselves of all their former offences, and to confesse that they had bene a fro.

a frowarde and in maner desperatē people in all respectes. And hee putteth them in minde, that euen while Gods lawe was a giuing to them in Mount Horeb or Sinai, they prouoked Gods vengeance by making of a molten image: This is not set downe without cause. For if euer God shewed himselfe to holde men in his obedience: it was then. For the lawe was not giuen after an ordinarie maner: but Gods maiestie appeared so visible in the doing thereof, that the people was sore abashed at it. Beholde, the Mountayne was full of fire, lightnings, and smoke: the ayre was heard to rore: the Trumpets sounded: and to be short, there were such a number of tokens of Gods presence, that the people was constrained to say, Let not the Lord speake vnto vs, for then are we but dead. After this, Moses was on the Mount as one separated from the companie of men, and as an Angel of God, exempted from mortall state, so as hee needed neither meate nor drink, which was such a miracle as ought well to haue rauished y<sup>e</sup> people to the seruing of God. And yet for all this, they reiected all that had bin taught them, and not tarying so much as the end of one yeere, but euen before fortie dayes were expired, they said they wist not what was become of Moses, terming him scornfully the fellow that had brought them out of Egypt. What can wee tell what is become of this fellowe, sayde they? And therefore let vs haue some God to goe before vs. Yet had they beene taught familiarly ynough: For God shewed himselfe to them both euening and morning, he led them a nightes by a signe of fire, and a daye he stretched out a cloud ouer them: and yet woulde they needes haue a God that shold be present with thē. And what maner of God? forsooth a puppet. Beholde, God had shewed the people his wonderfull power, he had made them to feele it, they knewe themselves to bee safe ynough vnder his protection, and yet all this was nothing with them: they will needes haue a calic, a dead thing, a corruptible thing, to make it their God. Was it not a hellishe furiousnesse when they became so brutishe? Seeing they had so lately euen with in flesse remembrance hearde the lawe vttered vnto them, and that Moses was but gone aside: it was as if God had separated them all from this earthly life in the person of that one man. Hee ment to communicate himselfe familiarly vnto them, as it were by taking them vp into heauen: and in the meane while they become so vnthankfull and rebellious, that when hee manifested himselfe to them, they stopped their eyes and would not see, but defaced his maiestie and infinite power. Whereby? Euen by a dead thing which was an ydoll. Surely such contempt, such vnthankfulness, such beastynesse should haue made the Jewes ashamed. And that is the cause why Moses speaketh expressly of that horrible crime which they had committed, in that they would needes haue an ydoll to goe before them, that is to say, some visible signe whereby it might be said that God was among them. Thus see wee now the meaning of this text.

Exod. 32.1.

But wee must marke diligently all the circumstances which are set downe here. Remember (sayeth he) howe ye prouoked Gods wrath in Mount Horeb. That mountaine ought to haue bin sanctified, because God had chosen it to giue his Lawe there, in respect whereof it is a place that is innobled to the worlds end. For first it pleased God to vter his will there, which is the rule of all righteousnesse, and there to make his covenant with the children of Abraham: ought not that place to haue beene acknowledged as holy? Not vpon any superstition: but by putting the people the better in minde to honour their God as ofte as they speake of Mount Sinai. It is a mountaine in the wildernes, which aforesometimes bare no renoune: & now it became as an earthly Paradise, so as God shewed his Maiestie there. Seeing that God had saide vnto Moses, The place where thou standest is holy, put off thy shoes: so as hee required a speciall reuerence because he was minded to shewe himselfe there: and ought not the selfe same reason to preuaile in respect of Mount Sinai? But so farre off were the people from being allured to honour God a hundred or a thousande yeeres after, by acknowledging the singular benefite which hee had bestowed vpon them there: that they started away from him and fell to spying of him, euen while the lawe was a giuing, & whyle Moses was yet vpon the Mount. So then Moses ment here to make their sinne more heauie by shewing them that it was like as if a mā should come and as it were dispitefully rushe into a Church, where folke were assembled together to pray vnto God and to heare his word and to receiue his sacraments: and there commit some villanie or leaudnesse that might breede offence. And were not such a sinne so much the heinouster? Yes: and so was it with them. Therefore when we reade it, the very haire ought to stand vp vpon our heades. Neuertheless we must vnderstand, that this is set downe as a looking glasse for vs, to see that we should be no better than they if we were not withheld by the holy Ghost. Let vs consider what men are. These were a people whome God had chosen from among all others: he had giuen them his doctrine: he had shewed them his lawe: and yet for all that, they giue ouer themselves to so cursed a thing. Although then that God come vnto vs, yet is it certayne that we may start away, if hee hold vs not backe, not onely by his teaching of vs, but also by the power of his holy spirite. Now the law had bin published to this people, so as they sinned not through ignorance, neither could they say, We wote not how to serue God, we are to bee borne withall though wee deuise wayes on our owne head: for beholde, GOD had vttered his will plainly vnto them, and therefore they should haue stayed there vpon, and obeyed it simply without adding any thing vnto it. But notwithstanding all this teaching, they cast away his whole doctrine, and ceased not to overshoot themselves, as much as if they had neuer knownen any thing. Seeing it is so: let vs learne that men may well preach vnto vs: but when we haue had our cares neuer so much-beare with Gods truth, yet shall we not faile to turn the clean contrarie way, except he print the things in our heartes, which men shall haue vttered vnto vs with their mouthes: I say, imprinted them in our hearts, & made vs to vnderstand y<sup>e</sup> that is the thing which wee must sticke vnto. That is the thing which we haue to remember vpon that text.

And whereas Moses rehearseth howe hee was vpon the Mount by the space of fortie dayes and fortie nightes together without eating or drinking: let vs note that that was doone for the better authorising of the lawe, that it might be receiued with the greater reuerence, and that men might knowe it was not a worldly thing. And hereby we see that the communicating of Gods word vnto vs is a matter of great importance, so as we neede not to doubt but it commeth of him, and that we ought to submit our selues vnto it. If we haue not that: there will be no religion among vs. Indee we may well ynough surmise our selues to haue it: but the cheefe groundworke of religion, that is to say of faith and of the seruice of God, is to be sure of our doctrine. For if wee go but by weening: as y<sup>e</sup> paynims, Turks, & al Idolaters doe: and as the Papists doe in dreaming vpon their good intentes: it is but a roye, it is but a building in the aire and vpon imagination. Therefore let vs marke well, that the first enterrance to serue God, and to be allowed of him, is to bee thoroughly sure of our rule, so as we say not I thought this had beene good, it seemed so to me, it was tolde me so: but that wee haue Gods word for our guide, and then let vs go on hardly, we cannot go amisse as long as we followe that way: for our leader will neuer deceate vs, wee shall not be beguiled in obeying him. That then is the thing which we haue to beare in minde, for as much as we see that God hath so auowed and authorised his word, as he sheweth plainly that men ought no more to call it in question or to doubt of it. But although we see that this is verie needefull for vs: yet doe wee see that the worlde makes none account of it. Whereof comes it that the Papistes are so willull at this day: but bycause they shut their eyes at the things that I haue nowe touched? For if a man examine thoroughly all that cuer they haue, surely hee shall fynde that they can alledge none other reason than their owne imagination. They can not mayntaine the things which they terme Gods seruice and the articles of their faith, otherwise thā by their owne reason, onely because other men haue saide it, and they belecue it without further inquirie. Therefore are they alwayes in a mamecing, without any stay or stedines: And yet y<sup>e</sup> see they be so willull, y<sup>e</sup> they raile against God & his word, & worke it all the spite they can, & if a mā go about to shew them their faults & ouersights, they be so stubborne as he can nothing preuaile with them. Wherefore let vs be y<sup>e</sup> circumspecter in marking the things y<sup>e</sup> are set heere before our eyes: which is, y<sup>e</sup> we knowe not what Religion or Christianitie is, or whether our faith be substantiall or newnelle we be sure y<sup>e</sup> we haue the rule of Gods seruice from God himselfe, & that our rebellion is grounded vpon the same. Marke that for one point.

But wo worth vs if we despise the law and make no account of it, seeing it hath bin published with such warrantie as Moses reporteth in this text. Behold, the law is auowed by God himselfe: and what surer warrant shoulde men require than y<sup>e</sup>? Could God deuse to warrant his law more than he hath done? no: and yet notwithstanding, after the hearing of y<sup>e</sup> doctrine & contents thereof, we do but nod our heads at it, or rather we be not moued nor touched at al: may we see there is nothing but coldnesse in vs, & a great number of vs do euen spite it and gnash our teeth at it. Now then if wee rebell against God after hee hath so warranted the truth of his law: what excuse shall wee haue? Is it not a fighting against the maiestie of GOD? Yes verily. And therefore all the despisers of GOD, may well pretende what excuse they list: but yet are they conuicted of open warre making against GOD, and against his eternall maiestie, and against his diuine and heauenly power. Why so? For God in publishing his law, came as neere men as he could, and as neere as they could away with. In deece God shewed not himselfe as hee is: for wee bee not of capacitie to receiue such knowledge of him: but it is certaine that he shewed himselfe according to the small abilitie and slenderesse of men, specially at the publishing of his law. And I meane not onely the Lawe, but also the prophets, which were added as an appurtenance therunto, because they be the expounders thereof. Againe what proofe is there of the Gospell? God did not only shake the earth at that tyme: but also (as saith the prophet Aggeus, and as is alleaged by the Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrewes) hee did shake both heauen and earth, so as there was a greater maiestie vttered at the preaching of the Gospell, than at the publishing of the lawe. Nowe then, sith it is so (sayth the Apostle) y<sup>e</sup> the Lawe which bringeth nothing but terror vnto men, was so magnified: what ought the Gospell to be? For the law was but a shadow & figure of the things which we haue nowe shewed vs perfectly in the Gospell. In the Gospell God sheweth himselfe face to face, to y<sup>e</sup> intent y<sup>e</sup> we should be transformed to his glory. Sith it is so, what a curse ful we vpon our heads, in y<sup>e</sup> we do not hearkē vnto God with all reuerence, & shew that it is he whom we worship, & to whom we be willing to dedicate all our senses, all our affections, & all our thoughts? If we be not brought so lowe as to heare and receiue the doctrine of the lawe and the Gospell with all humilitie and reuerence: we fight openly against the whole power and glory of God.

And herewithall we haue to marke also, after what maner it is that God warranteth his lawe, to the intent it may bee of authoritie among men, and that they may submit themselves to it. It is by fathering of it vpon himselfe: and that is one point more, well worth the marking. For God sheweth vs thereby, y<sup>e</sup> he will not haue vs to leane vnto men, but to looke singly vnto him, that that wee may haue a true and assured faith. So long then as our mindes runne vpon creatures: wee shall alwayes bee in a mameing. Albeit that wee may conceiue some wilfull opinion in our head: yet shall it vanish quite away at length, vntill wee bee come to this poynt, that wee be sure it is GOD that hath taught vs it, and that it is hee of whome wee holde all that wee haue. When wee bee so assured: then haue wee a right faith: but wee see howe the world forgetteth that. For is there any question of the hearing of GOD in the Popedom? Nay verily, they worke all the abominations that are against Gods worde, and their dooyng thereof is matched with soule shamelesse- nesse, as it were euen in vtter despyte of God. For they will needes haue the Gospell set aside, and that men should bee the sticklers in that behalfe, to intermingle whatsoeuer they themselves thinke good. Wee see then that this hath bene ill put in vre. And therefore let vs for our part remember, that when God meant to magnifie his Lawe, he saide not, Here is a wise man that shall tell you good things: but he tooke vp Moses to him, and he gaue tokens from heauen as if he should haue protested thus: It is I my self, I will haue ye to take all things that shal be vttered by Moses, as things that come from me. For I am not hidden in this case. Although I speake to you by the mouth of a mortal man: yet ye see he hath all of mee, and he hath not deuised any thing of himselfe or of his owne braine. And to what ende was Moses so exempted from the state of all other men? It is not possible for a man which is accustomed to eate & drinke, should fast by the space of fortie dayes and fortie nights together. Then must it needes bee concluded, that God intended to shew in effect, how he himselfe was the author of the Law, and the giuer thereof by Moses. And although Moses was so excellent a person: yet was hee but a seruant, he was not the maister of the house, neyther did he challenge any thing to himselfe, but deliuered the things faithfully from hand to hande, which he had receiued.

Nowe seeing that GOD reserued to himselfe the gouerning of his Church, and the giuing of the rule whereunto he woulde haue all men to holde themselves, so as euen Moses should not passe the boundes thereof: what shal other men doe nowe a dayes? Wee shall see at length that God neuer raised vp a greater Prophet, no nor the like among his people. There was neuer any [ that matched him or went beyond him, ] but onely Iesus Christ the head of all Prophets. And good reason it is for he should bee aboute Moses, which hath the soueraintie of all, considering that he is aboute the Angels, and euen the euertlasting GOD manifested in the flesh, and our Mediatour, exalted to the right hand of God his father, to sit as his Lieutenant, of purpose that all knees shoulde bow before him. So then, wee see how shamelesse the Pope and all his rable haue become, in vsurping such libertie to forge articles of faith, to make Lawes for mens soules, and to bring the Church in such bondage, as to burie all pure doctrine, that their owne dreames and dotages which they had deuised contrarie to Gods worde, myght bee followed. And therefore let vs beare well in minde, that when wee studie to honour men, wee robbe God of his honour: and when wee adde any thing at all to his worde, wee become backlyders. That is a poynt which wee must bee fully resolued of, or else wee shall haue no certaintie in our Religion and faith. In dede the Papistes haue some shewe of humilitie, in that they say, and why shoulde not men obserue the commaundementes of our holy mother the Church? For although it bee more than needeth, yet notwithstanding, will not GOD accept it? There is nothing more commendable than humilitie: but yet for all their humbling of themselves before men, they rush with their hornes against God. But if they ment to doe GOD his due honour: they shoulde not giue men the thing, which belongeth alone vnto him. For if they fall to mingling of the leauen and corruption of their own imaginations, with the puernesse of Gods word: it is more than if they medled heauen and earth together. For it is easie to discerne Gods creatures one from another: and although there bee neuer so much odde betwixt them, yet is there more agreement betweene them, than there is betweene mennes inuentions and Gods worde. And therefore when they fall to mingling of their owne fantasies with it, and take leaue to make Lawes at their owne pleasure: all is out of fashion, all is out of order, there is not any more purentle. Now then, whereas the Papistes alleage their humbleness in obseruing the commaundementes of their Church, or rather heliish synagoge: it is but a diueltish ouerweening, where through they aduance themselves openly against GOD, in commending their own follie and beastinesse as highly, as though their owne inuentions were farre greater and exquisiter perfection, than the wisdom of God. Thus ye see what we haue to remember concerning this point, where Moses reporteth for he neither ate bread nor dranke water, of all the while that he was vpon the mount.

Wee see heere to what end he forbore meate and drinke. It was not to set vp some fast, neither indeede was there any euer ordemed, he did it not to make a rule of it: but rather it was Gods intent to worke such a miracle as might not be drawn to a common example, of purpose to authorize his Lawe, as hath bene sayde afore. And herein it appeareth what a fondnesse it was to make the lenton fast, and to binde men to fast fortie dayes after the example of Iesus Christe, vnder colour that hee had forborne meate and drinke so long together. Surely the fasting of our Lorde Iesus Christ, was to shewe that the Gospell ought not to bee lesse esteemed than the Lawe: and wee see that the lyke befell to Helias, who was betweene them both. Wherefore did Moses and Helias appeare at the transfiguring of Iesus Christ vpon the Mount, but to shew the agreement that was betwene the Lawe and the Gospell? And wee see hereby, that Helias was as it were betwene both, that is to say, betwene Moses and Christ. For hee restored the Lawe and the pure Religion that had bene corrupted afore. And so ye see that Moses and Helias agree in such sorte with Iesus Christ, that they not onely come to humble themselves to him, but also declare that he only is the ende and perfection of the Lawe, and that hee is the partie to whome all must bee referred. Again, when our Lorde Iesus Christ fasted, that is to say, when he abstained from meate and drinke by the space of fortie dayes together: he did it not ycerely, but onely once in all his lyfe, at such tyme as hee was to enter vpon the execution of his office, which was committed vnto him by GOD his father: yea and hee did it by way of myracle. Now then is it not a turning of all things topsyteruie, when men will drawe it to an ordinarie, and make a common rule of it? Is it not an open mocking of Iesus Christ? Is it not a defacing of Gods myracle, as though they woulde spitte at his power? Yes surely. Wee see then what a blindness it was. And although this superstition be very auncient, in so much y<sup>e</sup> Satan had brought in y<sup>e</sup> diuclish error, euen before there was any Pope: yet ought wee to mislike it and abhorre it. For it is not a simple abuse, it is not a fond deuotion, such as men are wont to haue: but it is a blasphemie against Iesus Christe, it is a policie of Satan to deface the honour of the Gospell, and to make vs forget the thing y<sup>e</sup> the holy ghost aimed at, which is that we might know how the lawe & the Gospell are no earthly doctrines, nor of mans inuention, but altogether heauenly and of God, to the end that we should stoope vnto them.

Yet for all this, it is not meant that fasting is not good and holy. For though wee make no Lentfast, yet are there other fastes which are commaunded vs in the holy Scripture: that is to wit, first of all stayednesse and sobrietie all our life long, so as wee glut not our selues one day to forebare another for it, but vse the benefites measurably which God hath bestowed vpon vs: that they which haue abundance abuse it not in superfluitie. And our fasting must bee to restraine and brydle our selues willingly aswell from meate and drinke, as from all other things wherein wee may commit excesse or disorder, so as wee forebare them willingly, as I sayde afore. As for these that haue not verie well wherewith to finde themselves, let them be contented with their pouertie, and take it patiently with thankesgiuing vnto God. Again, if our Lorde assist vs, or y<sup>e</sup> wee be in any distresse: let vs resort to fasting, of purpose to dispose our selues to prayer and supplication, and to lite vpp our heartes the better vnto GOD, humbling our selues and acknowledging our fautes vnto him. Let our fastings be as spurres to drine vs to god, to present ourselves before him as wretched offenders, to craue mercie and forgiuenes at his hand. These are the fastings which y<sup>e</sup> holy scripture alloweth, notwithstanding the said superstition inuoced by y<sup>e</sup> diuell to deface Gods word, & the diuine power y<sup>e</sup> was shewed in Moses, but more fully in our Lord Iesus Christ. For he fasted not as compelled by others: but of his owne free will, to shewe that although he was like vs in all things sauing only sinne: yet could he well haue bene exempted from fasting, as in deede hee was not a hungred nor a thirst of all the while he fasted. And why? For hee had laide aside the state that hee tooke vpon him. Although hee was vnder the shape of a seruant: yet notwithstanding, that seruantship bare no sway in him by the space of those fortie dayes. Now let vs proceede further.

Phil. 2.7.

Moses addeth that at the same tyme hee received two tables, euen two tables of Stone, the two tables that were written with the frizer of GOD, the tables of the couenant: which God had made with vs sayth hee. This serued to make the Iewes the more ashamed, of their exceeding great vnfaithfulness towards GOD. For if I and another were to make a bargayne, and in the meane tyme while the partie were causing the couenante and conuayance to bee ingrosed, I on the other side should practise some deuise to betray him while hee trusted mee: what a villanie were that? Should I not bee a double false catife? Yes: for if a man conclude a bargayne, and afterward breake it or teare the writings in peeces, hee shalbe punished. But if the one partie goe through with good and faithfull meaning, and the other partie marre all with craft and treacherie, vnder pretence of quietnesse and friendly dealing: what is to bee said of that? Euen after the same maner dealt the Iewes. For God taketh Moses aside. And to what purpose, but to worke the welfare of his people, and to assure them that their religion was a true warrant of their saluation, and that they walked not at all aduenture as all other nations of the earth did: Thercuppon he maketh an autenticall instrument of the lawe that he had giuen them, that the remembrance thereof might continue for euer, and not bee such a doctrine as should be forgotten. Now while God was thus working the welfare of his people: they recompensed him so euill, that they fell to vtter defying of him, and would needes haue a newe God. Wee see then howe Moses ment to inhaunce their cull dealing, that they might bee the more ashamed, by knowing the horribleness of the crime which they had committed. And the same belongeth to vs also at this day. For we see that God ceaseth not to renewe the remembrance of his couenant. True it is that hee published his lawe once for all, and likewise his Gospell. But yet for all that, wee haue both his lawe and his Gospell in wryting also, and moreover it is daily preached vnto vs. Now then, if wee prouoke Gods wrath and anger, by falsifying our faith which we gaue and promised in baptisme: doeth it not make vs the more vncexcusable? Yes surely.

And therefore to holde our selues the better in awe & feare of God; let vs vnderstand that gods ordeyning of the ministers of his worde, and his gracious dealing with vs in causing the same to be preached and expounded vnto vs afterward, is to put vs in minde of his couenant, that wee shoulde put it in practise: [ and therefore ] let vs pray him that nothing may turne vs from it. Let vs vnderstand that: and then shall we haue the more constancie and stedfastnesse to obey him. Thus ye see what we haue to remember vpon that text.

Furthermore, let vs marke that God thought it not ynough to proclaime his Lawe, but he did also put it in writing. And why? because men are short witted in bearing away the truth. Therefore is our Lorde faine to prouide for it, & to warne vs to looke well to all things, because we be so feeble. Had the Iewes done their duetie, Gods speaking to them had bene ynough: for he had giuen his lawe in so small room, as euery man might count it vpon his fingers ends, These are the ten commandements, in these hath God comprehended his whole wil, which is the rule of good life, All this doctrine ( say I ) is comprehended in ten verses. Ye see then that the people had bene taught familiarly ynough. Now if they that heard Gods voyce vpon the mount had done their duetie: they shoulde haue taught their children, so as the doctrine might haue bene kept in mind from the father to the childe. For God had taught them familiarly ynough, as I saide afore. In so much that he had willed them to make their ornaments of sentences of the lawe, so as in steed of bracelets and other pretie toys, which foolkes do weare to make themselves gay: all the deckings of his people shoulde be to haue the sentences of the lawe written & ingraued about them, that which way soeuer they turned their eyes, they might still haue some marke to put them in minde of Gods lawe. Howbeit, to the ende they shoulde haue a more certaine remembrance thereof: like as men haue bin wont to ingraue their leages in some tables of brasse or stone: so God took stone to write and ingraue his lawe in. It was not his pleasure to vse paper or parchment: but to haue his law written in stone, [ and that was done ] nor by handicraft, ( for hee borrowed no workemanship of man in that behalfe, ) but with his owne finger. Not that God hath anie hands: but that the holy scripture speaketh of by a resemblance as if it were saide, the lawe was not written or ingrauen by mans hand: but God approoued and ratified it by way of miracle. Now then sith it is so: let vs learne that God hath prouided well for the assuring of our faith, to the intente we should not be put to any great paine or hardnesse to know what wee ought to follow. True it is that the worlde will runne into all lewdenes, as we see it doeth, and the examples thereof are too life. It is pite to see how oft the Iewes swarued aside vnto idolatrie: it semed that gods name shoulde haue bene abolished among the: all was out of order: they had so grosse superstitions, as a man coulde not discerne betweene them and the heathen: they had so imbraced the selues, as there remained not any more certaintie among them. But yet for all that such as were disposed to serue God helde alwayes this point still, that they sticke to the certaine doctrine. And why? For Gods will was set downe in writing. When superstitions were to be corrected: the meane to doe it was not harde. For why? The lawe was written. That is the thing which wee must sticke vnto if wee will obey our God: and if wee forsake that doctrine, God will also forsake vs. We see then that God hath prouided sufficiently for the suretie of his people, that their faith might not be doutfull, but firme and constant. As for vs now adayes, wee haue more than the fathers had in the time of the lawe. For wee haue both the lawe and the prophetes, and also the gospell. What is to be done then? They that alleadge in these dayes, I wote not which way to turne mee, I see disputings, debates, and contrarietie of opinions, & therefore I will let all alone in suspence: [ must consider also with themselves. ] Yea: hath God lost his labour in setting downe his lawe in writing, and in adding the exposition thereof by his prophetes, to the ende that wee might the better knowe that the gospell is the true and full accomplishment thereof? Shall wee accuse God as though hee had left vs at randome, so as wee shoulde not knowe what wee haue to doe, when he hath giuen vs his infallible truth, and tolde vs that we can neuer be deceiued in obeying the things that proceede out of his mouth? So then let vs vnderstand, that whereas the worlde goes astray, and is ill instructed: the onely cause thereof is mens own vnthankfulness. For why? there is ynough prouided to make vs walk in the broade daylight, so as wee may defile the superstitions of the fathles, and not suffer things to hang any longer in suspence, if we haue God reigning ouer vs. Whereby wee see that Gods speaking was not for one day onely: but of purpose that the same shoulde continue still euen to the worldes ende. Therefore let vs go on boldly, seeing we haue the doctrine of the holy scripture: and let vs assure our selues that that is the thing which wee must holde vs to, so as we must not any more say, whither shoulde we go? That is the way, let vs walke therein, as Moses protesteth hereafter. Truth it is that in those two tables are not conteyned all the things that are written in Exodus, Leuiticus, and the booke which we doe nowe expounde: those tables are but an abridgement of them, and they conteyne but ten verses. Neuerthelesse, our Lord meane to shewe by those two tables, that all the things which Moses left in writing, were of him.

So then, here are two things: That is to wit, that Gods will was there shoulde be scripture, like as when couenants are set downe in writing, or leages are ingrauen in tables of brasse, & euen so was it his will that there shoulde be a perpetual memoriall of his lawe, that men might take no occasion to turne away from it. And he made those two tables, not to shewe any cunning of man therein: but to ingraue his law in the withour mans hande, that it might be knowne that the same came of him. As touching Gods writing twice in the two stones: we wil treate thereof hereafter: For it is meete that things shoulde be fet downe in order, and therefore I will not meddle with them nowe.

Nowe remaineth howe Moses addeth, that after the rearme of fortie dayes, God saide vnto him, Up and get thee downe againe: for this people haue soone marred themselves, by forging mee, and the fauour that I haue shewed them. Here Moyses goeth on still with his matter, shewing the people that their reuolting and starting away so soone from G O D was too too shamefull and detestable. True it is that although they had helde out foure hundred yea or a thousande yeares, yet had they not bene to be excused. But now when as they fell to making of an idol, and did set vp a Puppet within the furthrance of their benefite and welfare, (as I saide afore) when Moses was taken vp as it were into the companie of Angels, by reason whereof they shoulde rather haue thought thus, Goe too, in the person of that one man wee bee after a sorte separated from the rest of mankinde, and God sanctifieth vs to himselfe, and therewithall bringeth vs into his kingdome, to the intent wee should nor haue any earthlyne in our religion: What a lewde dealing was that? For this cause Moyses saith, that God commanded him to get him downe in hast, because the people were marred out of hande, so as they were false to making of a newe God, euen while the lawe was a writing, and whyle God was confirming of his couenaunt with them. And it is plainly saide that they were marred: Beholde (saith God) they haue marred. For the worde which hee vseth, betokeneth no more, but they haue marred, without other addition. And indeed it was a right marring of them, that is to say of the Iewes, who became lewde backsliders and periured kaytifes, vtrly turning away from the truth and rule of God, and finally from all order both heauenly and earthly. For wherein consisteth our purenesse, but in obeying GOD?
 According to this similitude of Saint Paules, that like as a woman is a lawfull and faithfull wife as long as shee keepeth herselfe chaste to her husbande: so all the chastite which God requireth of vs, is that wee shoulde sticke alonely to his worde. Then if wee fall to making of idols: it is a vilanous marring of our selues, wee become like common harlores that giue ouer their bodies to all commers, leauing their owne husbandes, and yeelding themselves to euerte whore-maitter and ruffian. Euen so is it with vs. And after the same maner was this people marred out of hande. Yea and wee marre the maiestie of God also, as much as in vs lieth, when wee followe our owne foolish inuentions. True it is that wee cannot touch his maiestie to doe it any harme: but yet are wee gultie thereof (as sayth Saint Paul,) because we turne the truth into a lie, and make all things false: and moreover turne the order of nature vpside downe, by forsaking Gods pure doctrine, so as wee beereua him of his souteraigne right that hee can not reigne ouer vs, when wee fall to setting vp idols and dead things in his roome, and doe the things which we our selues haue inuented. So then it is not for nought that our Lord saith nor in plaine wordes, This people haue made them an Idoll: but hee saith, This people haue marred, that is to say, they haue turned all vpside downe.

Wherefore let vs marke well, that whensoever we steppe aside from the purenesse of Gods worde, wee make a shamefull marring, we practise our owne destruction, wee leaue nothing whole and sounde, and to be short, wee be gultie of mingling heauen and earth together, and of the vtr deacing of Gods maiestie. So much the more therefore doeth it stande vs on hande to submitte our selues to Gods pure worde, and to see that wee inuent nothing of our owne heads, nor bring vp anie new religion: but hold our selues to the things which our Lorde hath tolde vs, forasmuch as hee alloweth nor anie thing but that. Afterwards hee addeth the residue, which I cannot expound as nowe: but it shall suffice (as I haue saide already) that we haue this bonde of our God, that wee stray not so farre as to reiect his trueth: but that wee abide in obedience to his worde, as hee hath giuen it vs in writing, and as it is his will to haue it dayly preached vnto vs.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feeble them better than we haue doone, that we may be drawn to such repentance, as our whole desire may be to be quite rid of our fleshy affections and lusts, to giue our selues vnto him, and to holde vs vnder his awe, as wee may bring nothing of our owne deuising, but that when our owne conscience findeth fault with vs, wee may so much the more yeelde our selues gultie, and not turne away from his obedience: and that forasmuch as wee can not fulfill faultie and performe his Lawe in this worlde, it may please him of his infinite goodnesse to beare with vs, vntill hee haue throughly corrected the euill which hee knoweth to bee yet still remainyng in vs. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs, but also to all people & nations of the earth, &c.

On Friday the xxx. of August. 1555.

The Lxxv. Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the ninth Chapter.

13 Wherefore the Lord spake vnto mee, saying: I haue seene this people, and beholde, it is a stiffnecked people.

14 Let mee alone, I will destroy them, and put out the name of them from vnder heauen, and I will make thee to growe into a mightier and greater Nation than they bee.

Began to shewe you yesterday, howe soule and cursed the faulte was which Moses vpbraideth the people withal in this place: and that the cause why hee did set it before the, was to the end they should be y better humbled thereby. And here he addeth a recorde of the greatnesse of that fault, in that it prouoked Gods wrath so sore, that hee would haue destroyed and rooted out that people, and put out the remembrance of them for euer. Nowe if God doe measure his anger, and can skill to punishe mens offences according to the greatnesse of them: it must needes bee concluded that this offence was verie horrible, seeing that God hauing deluered his people, and hauing wrought so many miracles for them, would neuertheless so wipe them out as they shoulde neuer bee spoken of more. That then was the meaning of Moses: verily as if hee shoulde saye, yee wretched foolke, consider what yee bee and what yee haue beene. For whereas yee were redeemed by the hande of G O D, you by reuolting from him after yee hadde receiued such fauour, deserued to haue beene so rooted out, as no remembrance of you might haue remained in the worlde, and sentence thereof was giuen also. Hadde not I intreated for you, G O D hadde determined to haue destroyed you. Nowe goe make your braggies, imagine I wote not what of your felues, impute your obteyning of this lande to your owne righteousnesse, to your owne power, or to some other thing else. Nay contrariwise, yee see what yee haue done: yee haue (to the vttermost of your power) vndoone the delueraunce of your felues whiche G O D hadde wrought, yee haue forsaken the saluation that was promised you, and the inheritance that was prepared for you: and to be short it was meet that God should haue pow-red out his horrible vengeance vpon you. Therefore learne to magnific his mercie, considering that yee haue prouoked him so sore. Thus yee see in effect whereto this saying of Moses is to be referred.

But by the way wee must marke the words that hee vseth. I haue seene this people (saith he) and it is a Stiffnecked people. Heere G O D sheweth that he hath iust cause to make cleane riddance of this people, forasmuch as they were past amendement. True it is that G O D might well thunder downe vpon all menne, without shewing them why or wherefore, and all mouthes ought to bee shutte. For wee winne nothing by replying against him, and in-murmuring at his chastisements. For hee shall euer bee founde to bee righteous as is sayde in the one and sixtith Psalm, and whosoeuer blasphemeth him shall bee put to shame: Yer notwithstanding, heere God sheweth why hee had determined to punishe the Iewes so roughly, to the intent that Moses shoulde bee the better contented. I haue seene (sayth hee) that this people is a stiffnecked people. Heereby hee doeth vs to vnderstande, that when wee once fall to malicious wilfulnesse, it is allone as if wee were totten in our sinnes; and that there is none other remedie, but that G O D must put to his hande to destroy vs vtterly.

In deede the least faulte that wee committe doeth well deserue that G O D shoulde vse extreme rigour: but yet doeth hee moderate himselfe, according to this saying of the holy Scripture, that hee is slowe to wrath and long suffering. G O D then spareth vs, and vseth not rigour against vs at the firste dash. But when hee seeth vs so harde hearted that hee cannot winne vs by patience, and that wee bee so stubborne as hee can not amende vs, nor make vs stoop vnder his hande: then is hee sayne to worke after another fashion, and to st: iue no longer with the, according to this saying in the sixth Chapter of Genesis, Why should my spirit strue any longer with men? For I see there is nothing but corruption in them: and therefore I will no more goe to law with them: I must be faine to condemne them and to execute my iudgement vpon them: for it is to no purpose to indite them any more, they be too much cōuicted already. Sith it is so, let vs be well ware, that although wee be fraile, yet at leastwise we be not wilfull in persisting in our finnes, to delight in them, and to feede them: but let vs returne againe vnto God out of hande, beinge forie that we haue offended him. And if he threaten vs, or shewe vs any signe of his wrath: let vs by and by stoop and not suffer anie stubbornnes to take place in vs. For if we deale stubbornly & wilfully with him, we shall be driuen to abide the condemnation that is sette downe here, spyte of our teche: [namely] I haue seene this people, it is a stiffnecked people, and therefore I must needs roote them out. Marke this for one poynt, that here men are warned to examine themselves, and vpon acknowledgement of their faults, to humble them selues before God, and to lay downe all pride and sturdnesse, so as God may not finde them stiffnecked, but pliable. And that is it which Saint Peter meaneth where hee saith, Humble your selues vnder the mightie hande of your God, that yee be not handled roughly in the day of your visitation. In speaking of the mightie hande of GOD, hee sheweth vs that if wee fight against it, wee shall finde it too hard for vs. True it is that at the firste men thinke they winne much by chafing vpon the bit, and by standing stubbornly against God: but in the ende they shall finde that Saint Peter did not without cause rearme his hand a mightie hand, to confounde all such as set themselves against it. Then is there none other shift, but to stoop vnder it, and to receiue the strokes obediently, when it striketh vs, assuring vs that it striketh vs iustly. And if it touch vs not, let vs not tarie till God shewe himselfe our enemy, but rather let vs prevent his wrath: Thus ye see what we haue to remember vpon this text.

Gen. 6. 3.

Also there is one other poynt, I haue seene this people (saith God,) and it is a stiffnecked people. Hereby hee meaneth that hee knewe well enough by experience, that the leawdenesse of that people was vtterly vnrecoverable. True it is that God needeth not to make long inquisition after the manner of men: for all things are present vnto him, and length of time can tel him no more than hee knoweth already: But the scripture vseth such speech, to doe vs to vnderstand that God goeth not to worke at aduerture as men commonly doe, who fall to punishing oftentimes before they knowe the truth or haue inquired of it. God then sheweth here, that hee neuer listeth vp his hande to chastise vs, but vpon good deliberation, knowing what is vs, and hauing well considered whether there bee any meane to reclaim vs or no. Seeing hee taketh so great paine, needs must wee come to our last condemnation, if we bee wilful stubborne. Thus ye see what Moses meant by these wordes, See and Beholde. And it is all one as if God would prooue his saying by such experience thereof as were thoroughly known, and shewe as it were with his finger, that that people was not to bee delete withall, and that the verie creatures might well iudge of their naughtinesse, that it was vtterly vnexcusable. In deede wee doe not alwayes perceiue that God hath made inquisition of our finnes: but yet shall wee finde it so in the end. And for the same cause, when hee minded to destroye Sodome and Gonorre, hee said expressly, that hee came downe to weete howe things went; and that although the crie came vp to his eares into heauen, and that their sinne was so great, that euen the verie heauens roong of it: yet vouchsafed hee to examine their doings nearer: not that hee needed fo to doe, as in respect of himselfe: but to shewe vs that his iustice was rightfull and blamelesse. As oft therefore as God punisheth vs, let vs learne to knowe that wee haue lyen too long asleepe, and that hee in the meane while watched, and that wee muste nowe pay y arrears because we amended not in due time. And if GOD seeme ouerhastie in punishing vs: let vs consider that wee tooke not the time when it was offered vs, and when hee gaue vs space of repentance to turne vnto him, but rather were blinded with our owne hypocrisie, and that is the cause why God layeth his hand so roughly vpon vs.

Nowe let vs come to that which Moses addeth. Hee saith that God being in minde to destroy the people, saide vnto him: Let mee alone that I may destroy this people, & that their name may bee put out from vnder heauen, so as it may neuer be spoken of more. It should seeme that God was letted here by Moses, when hee saith: Let mee alone. Nowe it were vnbecoming his power that hee could not execute the thing that hee had determined with himselfe, but that a man should wish to stande him and restraints his libertie in doinge the thing that hee had purposed. Howe may this bee vnderstoode? True it is that Moses was not of authoritie to restraints Gods iudgement: but here wee see the infinite goodnesse of him, who though he owe not any thing to men, vouchsafeth notwithstanding to doe it for their sakes. And let vs marke especiallie, that God doeth so binde himselfe to our prayers and supplications, that they bee as it were restraints of his wrath: so that whereas diuerse times hee would destroye all: hee is as it were changed, if wee come and humble ourselues before him. Not that hee altereth his purpose: wee must not surmise any repentance in God, that hee should turne backe agayne and bee better aduised, or bethinke himselfe better what hee had to doe, as wee doe, who bee subiect to diuerse passions, and also to alteration: there is no such thing in God, there is no altering of the thing which hee hath once determined. But this is taken after the manner of men, in so much that to make vs vnderstande what is for our profite, God is faine to bowe downe from his high maiestie wherevnto wee bee not able to attaine, and to vse similitudes meete for our rawnesse and infirmitie. Therefore hee sayeth that when we pray, it is all one as if wee did cast a barre in his way, to stoppe his wrath that it shoulde not vterly consume vs. And why? Because that hee of his owne accord hath willingly and without constraint made couenaunt with vs, that whensoever we pray vnto him, hee will performe all our requestes, so as wee shall not bee disappointed in calling vpon him, but shall alwayes perceiue that hee was willing to graunt our will and desire, according as it is said in the hundred and fise and forth psalme, The Lorde performeth the willes of them that feare him. Surely it is a worde that ought to pearce our heartes, when it is saide that G O D doeth the will of men. Nowe who is hee; and what are wee? Wee be wretched creatures, such as ought to bee ashamed to shewe themselves before G O D. And as for to bring either will or desire of our owne thither: it ought to dismay vs, and to make vs say, Alas Lorde, doe what pleath thee, for it is not meete for vs to put fourth anie desire or affection of ours: for what are wee but wretched creatures? But surely Gods will is that wee shoulde craue of him so it bee obediently, for according to Saint Johns saying in his Canonickall Epistle, we must not pray to him at aladuenture, nor alludge our owne fancies to restrayne G O D to our desires, wee muste not vse such boldnesse: but when we haue submitted our heartes obediently to our God: then if wee pray to him for any thing that is to our welfare, hee liketh well of it, and hee will pleasure vs in granting it, as though there were such a couenaunt and league betweene him and vs, as might not bee broken. Seeing that God stoopeth so lowe as to graunt vs our requestes: what woulde wee more? But he doeth it, and that doeth he well shewe in this text. Let me alone sayth hee to Moses. Hee seemeth here to speke as it were to some companion or fellow of his. And why doeth hee not destroy Moses too, as hee might well doe if hee listed. Is Moses then able to stay him, or to abridge him of his libertie? No: but as I saide afore, G O D doth so binde himselfe, that the prayers which are made vnto him, doe stay the execution of his vengeance. And that is the cause why that in the rehearsing of this storie in the Psalme, it is sayde there expresselie, that if Moses had not set himselfe in the breach, all hadde bene mar'd. There the Prophete vseth a similitude: like as when a Towne is battered with the Cannon, there is such a breach made as the enemies may enter, to sack the towne and to put all to the sword. Euen so is it in this case: when Gods wrath was once kindled against his people, hee had battered them by & by with his said threate, and had made a breach vpon them so as there remaind no more but to enter. But behold, Moses setteth himselfe in the breach, that is to say he standeth vp against God and maketh intercessio to him for the people, so as he stoppeth

Gen. 18. 20.

1. Pet. 5. 6.

the breach againe, and stayeth Gods wrath fro going anie further. And this is not reported for Moses onely: But our Lorde declareth thereby what strength our prayers & supplicatioes haue, when they be well ordered, so as wee come to him with such zeale as becommeth vs, and with such faith and humilitie as hee requirith. And we must remember what Saint Iames saith of Iames 5. 17. Helas: name! he that he made it to raine, and also did shut vp the heauens and caused drought, alonely by his prayers. Loe here an incredible thing, y when the Prophet openeth his mouth to pray vnto God, he hath power to shut vp the heauens, and to bring a generall famine euerywhere, to punish the Idolatrous king & al those that tooke part with him in his wickednesse: and that afterwarde when he came to God againe, & desired raine, he opened the heauens againe and all the streames thereof, so as the earth was then plentifully watered. Neuertheless the intent of S. Iames is not, that our knowing hereof should be to magnifie the power of Helas, or to say that hee had that graunted vnto him as a speciall priuledge, but to giue vs a rule whereby to perceiue howe available the prayer of a righteous man is, and so to incourage vs to pray vnto God. For seeing that the Prophet Helas could both shut the heauens and open them againe by his prayers: let vs not doubt but that wee shall be hearde, when wee call vpon the name of God: And that when the bottomlesse gulfs are opened, we shall shutte them againe: insomuch that euen when the wicked shall seme to haue the worlde at will, then wil G O D roote them out at our request. Therefore let vs pray boldly, vpon trust of the promises that God hath giuen vs, and our prayers shall bee of such force, that they shall euen change the order of nature if neede bee. As for example we see that at the saying of Iosua, the sunne stayed, and stood still a day and a night together, without any night betwixte the one day and the other.

Si thee see these things: let vs not say: That was but for once, or such a holy man or Sainct had such power: but let vs vnderstand that it was our Lodes intent to shewe vs that although heauen and earth were mingled together, and all things as confused as might bee: yet if we resort to him, putting our whole truste in him, hee can well remedie the things that seeme to vs to be furthest out of order, and then shall we see the fruit which our prayers yeeld vs. Thus ye see what we haue to marke vpon this text where G O D willett Moses to let him alone.

Yet notwithstanding wee must make herewithall that it is a thing to bee wished, to haue such foolke among vs as maye make intercession and supplications to G O D: For wee see what coldnesse is in most of vs. Sometimes in a whole nation and in euery great multitude of people, ye shall not find twentie or ten persos that haue a right zeale to pray vnto God and are disposed thereto as is requisite. And how shoulde we do if they stood not in the breach? Sure-

Exod. 3. 2. 5 Surely wee should be left bare, accordingly also as the same similitude is alleadged in Exodus, that the people had made themselves bare of his protection, by making the golden calfe. For they had no more any God to maintaine them. And euen so would it befall vs also that we should make our selues bare every day, by putting our selues out of the protection of our God: were it not that some do set themselves in the breach. And therefore let vs learne that oftentimes God spareth vs, because there are some y<sup>e</sup> make intercession for vs, euen whome wee knowe not of. And let vs thinke vpon it the more, for asmuch as euerie of vs feeleth himselfe colde in praying, and that wee goe not to it with such corage and earnestnesse as God commaundeth. [ Let euerie of vs bethinke our selues thus: ] Alas, if I were alone, and all the worlde were like mee: what would become of it? We might perishe for wee are not worthe that G O D should regarde vs. But wee must vnderstande, that it is not our Lordes will that wee should perishe, when hee ordyneweth men to come before him after that maner. And therefore howfouer wee fare, after wee haue rebuked our selues, let vs proceede to this zeale of praying both for our selues and for other men, and let vs not doubt but God will haue pitie vpon vs, yea and euen forgie our neighbours also at our request. Truth it is that in this case wee must not bring any ouerweening with vs, to aunce our selues as though we could further the saluation of other men: but we must take it as God sheweth it. Beholde I am not worthe that God should heare me myselfe, and yet notwithstanding hee vouchsafeth to heare mee, not onely for my selue, or for three or foure moe: but also for a whole nation. Let euerie of vs doe this, and let vs consider howe mercifull our God is to vs, seeing hee not onely vouchsafeth to regarde vs our selues, vs wretched sinners, vs that haue turned our backs vpon him, vs that haue not ceased to prouoke his wrath against vs: but also vouchsafeth for our sakes, to accepte our prayers and supplications not onely for our priuie friends, but also for his whole Church. For it behoueth vs to pray generally for all the faithful, yea and for them whome we know not, yea and moreouer euen for the vnbeleeuers if there bee anie meane to conuert them. Seeing that God heareth vs after that fashion, euen for the furthest straungers in the worlde, for those that are vnknown to vs, yea and euen for such as are not yet of his house, nor of his flocke, but are as stray sheepe: is it not a meane to make vs to trust in him, and to pray vnto him with such certaintie, as wee come not to him like waering reedes, (as saith Saint Iames) but with assurednesse that hee wil heare vs, and that our prayers shall not be vnauaillable, because we resort vnto him and haue recourse vnto him vpon trust of his promise?

And hereby wee see howe greatly the wretched worlde hath bene abused by making intercession to Sanctis. When men read that Moses was heard, and likewise Helias: they concluded thereupon, O then must we resort to the Heefainctes and sheefainctis, and they must be our aduocates and Patrons to God. Yea but the meaning of the holy scripture is cleane contrarie, as I haue declared already, according to the saying of Saint Iames. For when God sayth so: it is not to make vs to runne vnto Moses: but it is to the ende that by his example we should not doubt to pray also: for the promises belong to vs as well as to him. Like as Moses trusted not in his owne goodnesse, nor praised before God as more worthe than the rest of the people: but on y<sup>e</sup> as knowing that God called & allured him thereunto: so also let vs nowe grounde our selues vpon the promises whereby God incourageth vs to come vnto him, yea and to come without doubting that hee will reach vs his hande, euen without regarding whether there be any wortheinesse in vs or no. For wee shall finde none in vs: but it is enough for vs that our Lorde biddeth vs come, and our obeying of him liketh him better than all the vertues that wee coulde bring with vs, if there were any in vs. Therefore it is too grosse an ouersight, that whereas God incourageth vs to come vnto him with prayer and supplication after the example of the holy Prophetes: wee thereupon should contrariwise make them our Patrons and Aduocates to shift our selues from repaying vnto him. Againe on the other side, although Moses prayed for the people while he was in this worlde: Doeth it followe that the same charge is committed to him nowe still in heauen? Doeth the scripture tell vs that Moses maketh intercession for vs still? So then, it is as it were a dragging of the holy scripture by the haire of the heade, (as men saye,) and a racking of it to falschoode, when the things that are spoken of him ane alue, are wrested to them dead. Therefore let vs holde vs contented with this common doctrine, that is to wit that euerie of vs must take heart to pray vnto God, because his promises are made to all men without exception. For our petitions are not grounded vpon our owne wortheinesse: but vpon Gods goodnesse, in that he sheweth him selfe so free hearted as to reach out his hande to receyue vs. Heerewithall let vs pray one for another, and let vs not doubt but wee shall bee heard. And although wee bee colde, and slouthlike: yet let vs vnderstande that G O D heareth his Church, so that although we come not to him so freely, and with so earnest and wel disposed minde as we should doe: yet doth he pitie vs, because hee not onely hath an eye to our seuerall requestes: but also accepteth the generall prayers that are made by the whole Church, in our behalfe and fauour: and therefore let vs occupie our selues therein as long as wee liue. As for those whome God hath taken out of this worlde, forasmuch as the holie scripture telleth vs not anie thing of them: let not vs fall to rhuisting in of our owne imaginations and dotages in that behalfe: for eyther wee muste pray in faith, or els we shall neuer bee heard. And what is meant by faith?

1. Tim. 2. 1.

Iam. 1. 6.

faith? That wee shoulde bee taught by Gods worde. Saint Paul setteth it downe for an vnaungeable order, that wee canne not call vpon God, vnlesse wee knowe his trueth, and that the Gospell haue beene preached vnto vs, as is saide in the tenth to the Romanes. And let vs assure our selues, that as manie as steppe aside from this rule, are as fitay beastes, and their prayers shall neuer boote them, for they doe but vnhalow the name of GOD, because they haue not the warrant of his promises in their heartes.

Now let vs passe further: It is saide, I will make of thee a mightier and greater people than this. Here GOD sheweth Moses, that there is no cause why hee shoulde bee afraide, that the good will which hee hadde shewed towards that people shoulde bee lost, or that hee was raised vpe in vaine to be a worker of their redemption, and of the welfare that was promised them. I will make of thee another people, saith he. But Moses is not contented with that: for hee maketh intercession full vnto GOD. And this is not added without cause: but rather to make vs to knowe that Moses regarded not himselfe, but that forgetting himselfe hee fought the welfare of those that were comitted to his charge. That is the thing in effecte which wee haue to beare in minde vpon this place.

Neuertheless it might bee demanded heere, whether it were enough for GOD to raise vpe a newe people or no, seeing the promise was made to Abraham and his offspring. Howe then? Coule hee destroye this people, without vsaying his owne worde, and without calling back of his owne promise? No, but hereby we be done to vnderstand, that we must not bee ouerquisiute of Gods iudgements, but deale soberly, and modestly with them. For if wee enter into too deepe ransaking of them, wee shall finde them such a bottomlesse pitte, as wee shall neuer gette out of them. Therefore let it suffice vs that if GOD had list to haue dispatched that people, hee coule haue founde meanes to haue performed his promise, so as it shoulde not haue beene in vaine. For (as it is saide) had hee not beene able to haue raysed vpe children to Abraham euen out of stones? Then must not wee binde GOD to our meanes, nor to the common order of nature, seeing hee is vs incomprehensible: but wee must consider that hee is able to worke after such a sorte, as will vtterly abashe vs, and wee shall not knowe which way hee went to worke.

Thus ye see that the thing which wee haue to marke in this text, is that when Gods iudgements passe our capacitie, we must not fall to ransaking of them by peecemeale out of measure: for (as saith Salomon in the five and twentieth Chapter of the Proverbs) it is his glorie to keepe things hidden, so that although he shewe vs not why hee doeth this or that, yet is not his glorie thereby diminished, but rather increased. For it sheweth men their own weaknesse, to the ende they shoulde learne to liue in lowlinesse, and not thinke too well of their owne wisdome. Marke that for a speciall point.

But here are yet other things which deserue to be looked vnto more neerely. And first of all, whereas it is saide that Moses ceased not to make intercession: that may seeme strange. For I haue tolde you alreadye that our prayers are faultie, if they be not directed by faith: & faith importeth that wee bee sure of Gods will, according to Saint Iohns exhortation, where hee saith that if wee intende to pray aright, we must followe Gods ordinance, and not our owne likings. Sith it is so: howe durst Moses in this text sue vnto God contrarie to his expresse forbidding, so as although GOD say, Let mee alone, I will not heare thee speake of it anie more, this people must needs perseuere: yet doth Moses make intreatance still? Wherein he may peradventure seeme vnfortunate, yea and that hee is minded euen to spite him, or at least wise to shewe some kinde of disobedience? Nay we must note, that Moses neuer shewed himselfe more obedient than in this, for as much as y trust of the promise that God had made could not be wrested from him by so forcible a temptation, needs must it bee that hee was thoroughly settled in faith, when God speaketh to him after such a sorte, and telleth him, I am determined to destroy this people: and yet Moses maketh intercession still, as though he woulde let him of his purpose. And why? Is it for that hee discredith God, or for that hee beleueth not his threatening as the vnbeleeuers doe, who commonly make but a mocke of it when God speaketh to them of his wrath? No: Moses dealeth not so: but this is his leaning stocke: behold, God hath made his couenaunt with Abraham, and that couenaunt must needs bee vnaungeable. For it dependeth not vpon the desertes of men, but is grounded vpon Gods owne free goodnesse. Moses knewe this: and therefore when hee hearde GOD speake of the destroying of that people: he fell as it were to setting of himselfe againe it, vpon assurance of the promise that had beene made. True it is that he saith nothing of it: but yet was it a thing thoroughly knowne to the people, that at the ende of foure hundred yeares, they shoulde be put in possession of the inheritance which God had promised them. Moses then helde himselfe to Gods couenaunt, which was vnaungeable and to stande in force for euer. Though men bee neuer so wicked: yet will God of his goodnesse surmount all their finnes, so as his worde must needs come to effect. But nowe had GOD ransomed his people, and the tearme was fully come wherein they shoulde inioye his promise: therefore was it of necessitie that all these things shoulde bee doone, and Moses doeth God the honour, to keepe him to that which hee had layde. Nowe that hee is assaulted with greuous temptation, euen as though it were cannon thor, hee persisteth neuertheless in the same faith, and it is not a faith that flickereth as a shadowe, but a faith conceyued of the worde and cōsuaunt of God, a faith that shoulde stande fast settled and vn-mouable. We see howe that Moses neuer obeyed G O D better, than when hee withstoode the threatening which God made. But yet doeth not this resolute the whole question. For a man might replie: Howe so? Beholde, God speaketh continually: why then doeth Moses beleue one of his sayings more than other? Againe there is an other doubt. Seeing that God is vnvariable and hath but one single will: why speaketh he otherwise than hee had determined in himselfe? For in so doing hee shoulde deale double, whiche thing wee knowe can in no wise agree with his nature. As touching the first question, let vs marke that forasmuch as Moses was gouerned by the holy Ghost, and was fullie perswaded that it behooued him to sticke to the promise which was made to Abraham, and therefore gaue credite to the same: hee considered also therewithall, that Gods threatening was iust, and that he might iustly execute it: for else his praying had bene but a mockerie. Hee sawe the danger that hung ouer the people, and was readie to fall vpon them. But forasmuch as he thought there was a remedy, though G O D had saide, Let me alone: hee falleth to intreatance againe. And that serueth to shew the heynoufnesse of the offence, and of the fault that had bene committed. For such an enormitie as that was, deserued well y vtter destruction of the people. Moses then is so gouerned by the holy Ghoste, that although his will seeme contrarie to Gods will: yet neuertheless hee knoweth what wee ought to followe. But it seemeth that Abraham did the cleane contrarie. For God had promised him to blesse Isaac, and to raise vp a people of his seed, whom he woulde take to himselfe. And yet notwithstanding he commaundeth Abraham to slea Isaac with his owne hands. Nowe it seemeth that after the example which is set vs downe here, he shoulde rather haue saide, Lorde thou hast promised mee that my sonne Isaac shall beget a seede: whereby saluation shall be sent vnto the worlde: therefore he must needs liue. But Abraham is gouerned by the holy Ghoste, and knoweth that hee ought to obey GOD simple without gayne saying: for hee coulde well haue stirred vp seede from out of the ashes of Isaac when he had bene deade. So then let vs marke that when such temptations as these doe incounter the faithfull, so as God seemeth to be contrarie to himselfe: he sayeth not to gouerne them by his holy spirite, and to giue them such wisdom and discretion, as they holde themselves alwayes to the thing that is good and belonging to their ductie, and neuer doubt at al of Gods worde. And therefore let vs beseech God to teach vs his will, and let vs doe our indouour in seeking his worde: and surely hee will neuer suffer vs to goe astray, nor to doe amisse, but forasmuch as he knoweth vs to be vnskillfull and easie to be led away to and fro, he will hold vs backe by his holic spirit, and giue vs discretion to discerne what hee commaundeth. For like as he sayed neither Moses, nor Abraham, no more also will he faile vs.

As touching the seconde question, where it was demanded howe it may be that G O D shoulde say one thing and meane an other: (for that is contrarie to his nature, in somuch as hee nameth himselfe the truth, and therefore must needs shewe himselfe to bee foindedde:) we must marke that in saying so, hee speaketh not peremptorie, but with condition, though the condition be not expressed. Therefore we must haue an eye to the ende wherunto these wordes are referred: and then shall wee finde that there is no contrarietie in them. God had saide to Abraham, thy seede shall be helde in bondage: but about a foure hundred yeres hence I will performe the promise that I haue made thee.

Needs nowe muste this free promise of God be performed: for it dependeth not vpon men: it is not saide, conditionally that thine offspring behaue themselves well: but Gods intent is to bee vnchangeable in his determination. And therefore whereas he saith here to Moses, Let me alone, I will make cleane riddance of this people: it is as if he shoulde say, This people hath deserued to be vtterly destroyed: for seeing they be past amendement, what shall I doe more? I haue tried them a number of wayes, I haue experience of them, I haue borne gentle with them, I haue chastised them, and yet will they not be reclaimed, neither by faire means nor by foule. Seeing then that they be past recouerie, they must needs be vtterly rooted out and perish. Yea, but yet is there this, Let mee alone. His vsing of that speech includeth a condition: as if he shoulde say, Here am I readie to doe the office of a iudge: what remaineth nowe to doe, but to thunder downe vpon this people, and to make cleane dispatche of them? Only make thou no intercession for them.

Nowe wee see yet better the thing which I touched afore: that is to wit, that God was so farre off from cutting off of Moses, or from shutting him out that he shoulde not pray: that hee did rather sharpen him therunto. As it hee shoulde say: But for thee this people shoulde be destroyed. For if I shoulde handle them according to their desertes: I shoulde confounde them. And forasmuch as they be so wilfull that they be past amendement. It is time nowe or neuer to execute my sentence. It is too much: I will make no moe wordes: But I will graunt thus much at thy request, that if thou make intercession to me, I will be restrained by it. Now then wee see these two questions well resolved: and the profite that redoundeth of this texte. Namely firste that the force of our prayers is shewed vs here, when we pray vnto God faithfullie.

And secondly we see that daungers ought to prouoke vs to the more. The more that Gods wrath is vttered vnto vs, the more ought we to be moued to pray vnto God: because it is as if he draue vs thereto by force. And wee must not pray onely for our felues, nor haue a care of our saluation onely, nor onely feare the daungers that hang ouer our heades: but wee must also take care for our neighbors, and when we heare Gods threatenings, they must waken vs, and make vs to come before him, saying, Alas Lord, heere is a sorte of wretched creatures which must needs perish, if thou be so disposed. Therefore let vs bee prouoked to feare, the more for Gods shewing of his wrath vnto vs, and for the hearing of his threates: For hee vttereth his iudgements vnto vs to the ende that we should prevent them. For when GOD giueth sentence vpon our sinnes, it is alwayes with this condution, that hee doeth it not with out giuing of vs some respit to remedie the mischeefe, so wee seeke the remedie by such meanes as he commaundeth in his worde. And so yee see what we haue to remember vpon the example of Moses.

To bee shorthe, wee see that it is not lawfull for men to put forth themselves to make prayer and supplication: except they haue the promise and be sure that it is Gods good will that they shoulde doe so. But GOD will giue them such a zeale, as the temptations which shall crosse them shall not stay them from going on forward, though it seeme to themselves that GOD is not minded to heare them, but rather to put them backe and to shake them quite off. Therefore let vs not cease to resort vnto him as it were importunately. For the importunate nesse whereof our Lorde Iesus Christe speaketh, in reporting the similitude concerning a widow y had to do with a wicked iudge: made y iudge ashamed though he were a naughty and frowarde man. But surely when wee come to GOD, we neede not to bee importunate: for Iesus Christ telleth vs, that if wee finde mercie in men that are lewde and ill minded towards vs: we shall much more obtayne fauour at Gods hande, who tarieth not till we come vnto him, but calleth and allureth vs to him. Seeing then that he is so friendlie, let vs not be afraide that we shall not obteyne our requestes. But yet for all that, let vs not giue ouer with once praying vnto him as it were for fashions sake: but let vs holde out to the ende, yea and euen be importunate vpon him. Although he seeme vnwilling to heare vs, and let vs alone in our distresses, yea and that to our seeming our miserie doeth still increase: yet notwithstanding let not vs sayle to holde on still, resting vpon his promise which he hath giuen vs, which is certayne and vnfallible: that is to wit, that hee will neuer faile those which come vnto him and call vpon him in trueth.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our fautes, praying him to make vs seele them better than wee haue done heretofore, and that forasmuch as wee knowe what neede wee haue to pray, (inasmuch that curie minute of an houre wee runne in danger of endlesse death and are like to perishe both bodie and soule:) it may please him to inflame vs so by his holie spirit, as we may call vpon him vnfaynedlie, and be more carefull to doe it and to exercise our felues in it at all times, as prouoked thereto by the great neede which wee haue thereof, considering the miseries where through wee shoulde perishe, if wee were not succoured by him and by his grace: and that in the meane while it may please him to beare with vs in our infirmities, and not suffer vs to be rent off from y bodie of his Church, but make vs to percieue by expetience, that the prayers which are made through the whole worlde are auailable to his chosen, and y their prayers also do auale vs, so as the same may stablish vs continuallie more & more, in the holie vnion which he hath made with vs in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth, reducing all poore ignorant people, into the right way of saluation, out of the bondage of error and darkensse: and that for this purpose it woulde please him, to raise vp true and faithfull ministers of his worde, which may not seeke their owne profite and ambition, but the glorifying of his holy name, and the saluation of his poore flocke. On the other side, &c.

On Saturday the xxxi. of August. 1555.

The Lxxvj Sermon which is the ffth vpon the ninth Chapter.

15 Then turned I mee, and went downe the Hill, and the hill burned with fire, and I had the two tables of the Couenant in my two hands.

16 Then looked I, and behold yee had sinned against the Lord your God: and had made a molten Calfe, and were turned out of hand from the way which the Lord your God had commaunded you.

17 Then tooke I the two tables and cast them out of my two handes, and brake them before your eyes:

18 And I fell downe flat before the Lorde fortie dayes and fortie nightes as afore, without eating breade or drinking water, for all your sinnes which you had committed in dooing euill in the sight of the Lord, by prouoking him to wrath.

19 For I was a frayde of the anger and wrath wherewith the Lord was displeas'd against you to destroy you. And the Lorde hearde mee that time also.

20 Likewise the Lord was fore angrie with Aaron to destroy him: but I pray'd also for Aaron the same time.

21 Then tooke I your sinne which you had made, that is to wit the Calfe, and burnt it with fire, and stumped it and grounde it throughlie euen vntill it was small as dust, and cast the dust thereof in the brooke that came downe from the hill.

Ere Moses declareth the great good zeale that hee had, at suche time as he sawe God so fore offended with the Iewes for making the golden calfe, and for their forsaking of their Redeemer to giue themselves ouer to a deade thing, rather than to him of whose power they had had experience so manie wayes. Nowe he saith that hee had the two tables in his hande, and that when hee sawe the people so falne away to Idolatrie, hee brake them in peeces. Heere it might bee asked, whether Moses were not caried with ourthastie moode. For we haue scene that those two tables were written with Gods owne hande, so as there was not anie workemanshippe of man in them, but that the ingrauing of the tenne commaundementes in them, was of Gods owne doing. Nowe then, that Moses threwe downe Gods handie worke after that fashion, notwithstanding that the people had sinned: it seemeth not to proceede of any modestie, but rather of too vnaduised zeale and oueriuolent headineffe. We must not presume to iudge of such odde things: for wee see that God gouerneth his seruantes by his holie spirit, and we knowe that sometimes hee stirreth vp his faithfull ones to doe his pleasure by extraordinary meanes. And although wee may not make a certain rule of it: yet is not the deed it selfe to bee blamed. Wee see what happened vnto Phinees. For although he was not ordained to be a iudge, but onely to bee a priest: yet did he execute iustice vpon the adulterer, & the adulteresse which had defiled the Sanctuarie. God allowed his doing, and there is recorde of it in the holie scripture, and yet notwithstanding it was a peculiar deede which wee may not follow, without a special mouing of the holy Ghost. As much is to be saide of the thing which wee reade of in this text, where Moses brake the two tables, which thing hee did not through hastie moode, but as ledde thereto by a zeale to Godwarde, and GOD shewed himselfe therein, of purpose to doe the people to vnderstande, how heynous their transgression was. It is saide that Moses was sent of God to bring downe his couenaunt, and to bee as in his steede, whom hee serued. And therefore his deede was as it were a declaring to the people, that his couenaunt was broken and torne in peeces. Beholde (saith God) It is true I haue chosen you, I haue couenaunted with you, I haue shewed my selfe to be your God, and the couenantes were ingrauen in two stones, that they might remaine in perpetual remembrance. But now haue you broken your faith to me, and therefore must I for my part forsake you, and disanull the couenaunt that was made betwixt vs. Thus wee see that Moses did not anie thing at adventure, nor was driuen by fleshly affection: but that God sheweth the people by him, that he gaue them ouer and tocke them not for his, but vterly disclaimed them. For the verie bonde of the vnion, was the obedience of the people in submitting themselves vnto his lawe, and their acknowledging of him to be their god, and their worshipping of him, notwithstanding that there were infirmities in them. But they make them a calfe of golde, and vterly forsake the religion that was appointed them. And forasmuch as they did so: it was good reason that God should shake them off, and make as it were an vter diuorce between himselfe & them for cuer. Marke that for one point.

But nowe by the way, this seemeth to disagree with that which Moses addeth: that is to wit, that he should brake the two tables with his owne handes, as it were of purpose to separate God and the people asunder: & yet notwithstanding make intercession for them, yea & y after such a sort (as it is said in Exodus) as he was not contented to intreat God only w prayer & supplications: but also was inflamed with such as hee besought God (if it were possible) to take him out of this life, yea and euen to wipe him out of the booke of life, so as hee might bee accursed, conditionallye that the people might escape. Here are two things which seeme verie disagreeable at the first sight: namely, that hee should be so angry, and that hee should on Gods behalfe breake and disanul the couenant, as who should say he meant to banish the people from the kingdome of heauen, and from all hope of saluation, yea and euen from the inheritance that was promised them: and that yet notwithstanding, he should go and offer him selfe to GOD, to be punished for the peoples sakes, and to beare their curse both in his bodie and in his soule. But herein we see, that Gods seruantes may well haue a burning zeale to execute their charge: and yet for all that, not cease to haue pitie & compassion on such as perishe, and whome they be enforced to hate, and against whome they bee driuen to be sharpe and rough. And Moses zeale shewed it selfe, not onely in breaking both the Tables, but also in his doing of the execution that we reade of in Exodus. For he did not onely rebuke the people sharply; but also commaunded the Leuites to halowe their hands. And howe? By killing all that euer they mette with. Dedicate your selues this day vnto the Lorde sayth hee. So was that tribe chosen to doe that execution. And although they were ordeyned to the seruice of the sanctuarie: yet is it tolde them that they must consecrate their hands vnto GOD. And after what manner? By sleaing their brethren, so as they spared not any man for kinredes sake. Indecde yee bee all of Abrahams house (saith he): but yet must you execute vengeance this day, for the offence that hath bene committed against GOD, in making the calfe. Loe here another token, that Moses was so out of patience with the people, as he had no kindenesse in him, ne meant to forgiue the transgression that had bene committed against GOD: and yet for all this, he is contented to yeelde his owne person to answer for them, not onely by susteyning some bodilie punishment: but also by beinge cued damned for them, if it were possible. But we must alwayes come backe to that which I haue touched alreadye: that is to wit, that Gods seruantes haue alwayes such a care of the welfare of them that are committed to their charge: that they had leauer to perish themselves, than to see those goe to destruction, of whose saluation there was some hope. And yet notwithstanding they cease not for all that, to be sharpe and rough when God commaundeth them to doe their duetie, not vpon crueltie, that they haue not compassion still vpon the wretched sinners: but because it is not in their owne libertie and choyce to shewe mercie, but they must haue respecte to their office, and vnto Gods will, that they followe the same. Both these things are shewed vs here in Moses: and we see that all the Prophetes haue vsed the like manner of dealing. It may well seeme that they haue no regarde to spare the people. For they threaten Gods wrastle, they curse, they condemne, and to be shorte, they seeme to bring nothing with them but thunder clappes: and yet notwithstanding wee see they were led with such pric and carefulnesse, that they besought God to shewe fauour to such as were vnworthie of it. Who will giue teares vnto mine eyes, saith the Prophete Ieremie: I could well finde in mine hearte to melt into water, to be waile the sinnes of my countrie folk. And yet in the meane season howe speaketh hee? Wretch hemild tearmes to rebuke the people with gentlenesse? Nay, hee cryeth out against them as though hee had forgotten all natural affection. So then we see y<sup>e</sup> these two things agree verie well: that is to wit, that those whome GOD chooseth to set forth his worde, may well regarde the welfare and benefite of the wretched sinners that are committed to their charge, and bee cued sorie and exceedingly grieved at the heart to see them goe to destruction: and yet for all that, not forbear to shewe signes of rigour, so farre forth as their office requireth, and as they needes must for the seruing of God.

Furthermore as touching the request of Moses: it is a strange case that hee should desire to be wiped out of the booke that God had written: for he knewe well it was vnpossible. He was not so ignorant but that hee knewe Gods determination to be vnchangeable, and that his choosing of those that are his cannot by any meanes be altered. And therefore this request seemeth to be vnordinate, yea and vtterly disagreeing to saith. But we must make that in this zeale Moses respected not precisely what was possible to be doone: but onely meant to pray God that he being but one man might perishe rather than the whole people should perishe, so as hee himselfe might answer for all the euill that had bene done if it were possible. And besides that, wee haue to make here, that Moses matched Gods glorie with the welfare of the people to whome the promises were giuen. For he perswaded himselfe that it was not possible that that people should be vtterly rooted out, but that Gods truth must be abolished the rewithall, because God had bound himselfe to the offspring of Abraham: and therefore that if that people had bene cut off, God should haue seemed to be variable. He could well haue found out some meane incomprehensible to man: but Moses could iudge no further than he was able to conceiue. Now then forasmuch as he was at his wittes ende in this case, and God was to be found faithfull and soothfast by performing of his couenant: therefore doth he forget himselfe, and is caried away rather to offer himselfe as it were in a sacrifice of cursing, than that Gods name should be blasphemed, or that it might be said that hee had not kept promise, or that he had changed his purpose. Hereby we see that Moses might pray faithfully: and yet notwithstanding not looke simple & alone to the right of the case. How mighty be done? He was moued thereto by a passion, howebeit not by a cholericke and fleshlie passion, but by such a zealous passion to Godward, as caried him aboute allstate of man. Neuerthelater (as I haue saide afore), these things must not bee drawen to a generall rule, (for we haue not the spirite of Moses): but yett must we goe so farre with him, as we had leauer that the whole world shoulde goe to destruction, than Gods glorie shoulde be defaced, or y<sup>e</sup> he should not be worshipped, or that the honour of his iustice, wisdome, goodnesse, and power shoulde not bee referued vnto him. To be short, we ought to prefer Gods glorie, not onely before all bodilie goods, but also euen before the saluation of our soules. And although that that bee hard for vs to doe: yett must wee inforce our felues vnto it. We see how Saint Paul did the like for the Iewes, and he was lead by the same reason which led Moses. I could finde in my heart (saith he) to bee accursed for my kinsfolkes sake. It was not humane pitie that moued him thereunto: but his eye was alwayes vpon the promise that had bene made to the olspring of Abraham, in respect whereof it beloued God to keepe still some remnant of that peoples seede, or else the infidels and vnbelecuers would haue reported him to haue bin a lyer, and they would haue skorned the law & all the promises. Wherefore to the ende that Gods name shoulde not come to such reproch: Saint Paul offereth himselfe to be accursed, if need be, and yett was hee well assured, that God would neuer suffer him to scape out of the hande of his Leader, who had taken him into his keeping. But it is not for vs to enter into such disputatiōs. For as I saide, Moses is contented to be rauished with such zeale, as hee had leauer that both himselfe and all the worlde beside shoulde perishe, than to see Gods name skorned, or that the vnbelecuers should haue their mouthes opened to blasphemie him. That is the thing which wee haue to marke vpon the prayer of Moses.

But yett therewithall let vs come backe againe to that which is rehearsed here, concerning his breaking of the two tables. Hercin we see that how pitifull fouer Gods seruantes are towards the wretched creatures which perishe, yett must they not vse anie such mercie as may nourishe the euill, but be careful to doe the thing that God commaundeth them, without swaruing one way or other. Sometimes men are so moued with foolish pitie, that they offende God: and vpon opinion to doe good to those whome they beare with, they increase the euill still in them, and are a cause of their greater decay. To be short, men stand so much in their owne conceits, that they wil needes excede and go beyond God in mercie. And this is seene in all cases. Howbeit, if a man examine their affections narrowly: he shall finde that their so doing proceedeth not of louing kindness: for one while they be sharpe & rough, and there is nothing with them but destroying: and anon ater in y<sup>e</sup> turning of a hand, ye shall see them in another moode, so as they wil needes be verie pitiful. But after what maner? In going beyond their dutie, without regard what God hath ordeined: and (which worke is) they wil needes be alwayes shewing of mercie where there is no repentance, whereby they cast wood into the fire, to make gods wrath burne y<sup>e</sup> whotter against the. And therefore when they whome God hath put in office do see offences committed: they must not in any wise leaue them vnpunished. For why? If they suffer the mischeefe to settle & to fester: it will grow worse and worse till it become incurable. For ye see howe diseases become incurable, when the parties be not purged in due time and place. We must remember how the Apostolle saith, y<sup>e</sup> we must beware we suffer not euill weedes to grow, but we must pluck them vp betimes, for if we doe not, they will soe ærgrow vs as we shall not be able to destroy them when we would, but they will stoppe our eyes, and so keepe downe y<sup>e</sup> good seede, as it can neuer thriue. After that manner will God punish our negligence, when we be not diligent in doing our duetie to rid away euill from among vs. Thus ye see what we haue to marke. But let vs also applie this lesson to our instruction.

Let such as haue the charge of teaching, loke neerely to themselves and thinke well vpon it, and beare in minde what God commandeth the that they may discharge themselves thereof: or else they may well make couerings, but God will ask them an account of y<sup>e</sup> things that he had inioyned them. Againe on the other side, when we heare our vices and finnes sharply rebuked by Gods worde, and rough threatenings against vs, so as it may seeme that our teachers intend to deliuer vs into Gods hande to bee punished by him according to our desertes: let vs not thinke it straunge, as a number do, who would haue vs but onely to greafe and annoynt their scabs, in steed of handling them as they should be, & cannot abide to be rebuked roughly. But what? They would be flattered to the end they might perishe without feeling of it. Contrariwise we see y<sup>e</sup> to be taught aright, we must be rebuked and threatened, yea and that with such sharpnesse and vehemencie, as wee may be driuen to bethinke vs of our offences, and to humble our felues before God as becommeth vs. That is the thing which wee haue to remember in that wee see that Moses was so chafer at the peoples transgression, that hee brake the two Tables immediatly, and afterwarde drewe out the swoorde, to punish the such as had so violated Gods seruice, and encouraged his tribe to doe the like. Let vs not thinke but that Moses was wounded to the quicke with greefe and compassion, when hee was faine to doe execution with his owne hands. For wee knowe he was a meeke and kinde hearted man, and inclined to good and holie pitie aboute all others. But yett doth it behooue him to discharge his duetie, or else hee had bene vnfaithfull towards God.

Moreouer whereas he saith, I looked, & behold you had offended your God, by making your seuer a cause of mettall, and yee were turned out of the way which he had appointed you: this looking of his was because God had certified him thereof: but yett behouded it him to beare witnesse of their dedde [with his owne eyes]. And whereas Iosua sayde it seemed to bee some battell : Moses answered that it was not so, for as much as some of them made not signes of mirth, and other some signes of feare and sorrowe : but all the whole multitude was merrie and ioyfull: and therefore (quoth hee) there must needs bee some other matter in it . At his comming downe hee sawe them dauncing as it were vpon fond deuotion, according to the maner of Idolaters, who thinke themselves to serue their Gods very well by such foolish and wanton toys . And so the Israelites tooke this dancing of theirs to be a peece of Gods seruice: wherefore Moses executed the punishment afore mentioned. But as touching this text, the onely thing that we haue to marke, is the thing which we speake of euen now, and which we haue spoken of afore: namely that hee vpbraideth the Iewes with their suddaine starting aside from the way which GOD had shewed them . For the wellspring of the mischeefe was, that they held not themselves to the rule that is conteyned in the Lawe. Wee see then that the cause of all ruine and destruction, is our sicklenesse in turning away from Gods woorde . For as soone as wee passe those boundes and swaue neuer so little aside: by and by wee runne astray into vtter destruction . And therefore it standeth vs so much the more on hande to holde our selues warily in obedience to our GOD, specially when hee hath bene so gracious vnto vs, as to ser vs in the righte way . For hee vouchsafeth not so to guide all men . Truth is it that all men, yea euen those which neuer heard of any woorde of teaching, haue enough to make them vnexcusable . But as for vs, wee ought to make singular account of this priuiledge, that GOD calleth vs to him, and that hee taketh vs into his gouernment, and that hee sheweth vs the way of saluation .

 Sith wee haue that, wee cannot goe astray, so wee hearken to the doctrine that is set forth to vs in Gods name . But if wee despise such a benefite: then are we worthy of too much blame . And therefore let vs learne to submit our selues simply to Gods woord, or els we shall open the gate to all wickednesse, accordingly as it is sayd that men marre all and turne all vpside downe, when they start aside from the said way .
 This is there but one way to walke well and rightly in: which is to obey our GOD, and not to giue any credite to our owne wit and imagination, nor to giue heade to our owne inuentions: but to abide as it were fast linked to the things that GOD commaundeth and appoynteth vs . Those are the things which wee must stick by:
 and if wee doe not, wee bee vnhappie and forlorne creatures . For we shall go on from euill to euill, and there will bee no ende nor measure of our disorderednes, as wee see it befall to this people, who hauing once let go Gods woorde, fell into so grosse and beastly superstition, as to worshipping a Calfe of their owne making: and they became so madde that they spared not any thing so fouly to defile themselves in offending GOD after that fashion. For when Aaron willed them not to bring him all their ornaments and Iewels: it was to the ende to haue made them both to haue had an Idoll of that price . But there was neither man nor woman which brought not their ornaments and all the costly Iewelles which they had. Those gracelesse wretches were so caryed away, and the diuell possessed them with such furie, that they passed not to spoile themselves of all their substance, nor cared what cost they were at, so they might haue an ydoll . And by this example are wee warned to raine our selues short and not to let our selues loose, least we happen to start neuer so little aside from Gods pure doctrine, & from the Religion which he sheweth vs in his woord.

There is yet another thing to bee noted in the breaking of these Tables: which is, that GOD intended to shewe by way of a figure, that his once writing of his Lawe was not ynough for vs, but that it behoued vs to haue it double ingrofed . Truth it is that Moses rehearsing of it in this text, is to another end: but yet is there no inconuenience in this also . Likewise when Moses tooke a veyle or scarfe to put before his face, by cause the people could not abide the glorie and great brightnesse that shone therein, it was to magnify the Lawe, according as Saint Paule declareth: and the verie storie it selfe sheweth sufficiently, that it behoued Moses to be knowne thereby to bee as an Angell, and not to be taken any more to be within the common state of a mortall man, in somuch that his countenance shone as bright as the sunne, which the people could not abide, & that was to put them in minde of their owne weakenesse and frailtie . That was the cheefe cause why Moses wore a veile to hide his face withall . But yet herewith all Saint Paule sticketh not to say, that God shewed euen then aforehand by way of figure, that there should befall such a dimmesse and blindness vpon the Iewes, that whensoever they red the Lawe or heard it preached, they should haue as it were a veile before their eyes, so as they should not see a whitte . And Saint Paule sayth that this thing was accomplished euen in his time among the Iewes . For they red Moses continually in their Synagogues: and yet they continued as starke beastes as the heathen, so as they became brutish through their owne foolish fancies, and could not perceiue Gods truth at all . For Saint Paule telleth them, that all the Lawe is nothing without Iesus Christ: it is but as a dead thing, by cause Iesus Christ is as the soule and perfection thereof . So then, as touching the breaking of the Tables: it was the foresayd cause that moued Moses to doe it: that is to wit, to shewe the people that God disclaimed them, as if hee had sayd, your God giueth you ouer, and hath diuorced himselfe from you . For in as much as your wickednesse hath separated you from him: it is good reason that hee also should stand discharged of his promise, and be no more bound to fo malicious & froward a people as you be, who haue vsed fuch vnfaithfulness towards him. That then is the first reason.

But there is also another cause: which is, that wee haue as it were a figure or image, that Gods once writing of his Lawe is not ynough for vs; but that wee haue neede of a second writing of it, to the intent it may auail vs, and the doctrine thereof benefite vs by shewing it selfe to be liuely and of effectfull force and power. And that is the thing which the Prophetes meane in saying, that GOD will make a new Couenaut with his faythfull ones, not as hee did with their fathers in Egypt, but by writing his Lawe in their heartes, and by ingrauing it in their bowels. And therefore let vs marke well that GOD meant to doe vs to vnderstand, that his writing of his Lawe in the two tables of stone, was by and by voyd and of none effect. And why? By cause that, if God doe but write his Lawe, or cause it to be preached to vs onely by woorde of mouth: there will neuer be any holde or tacke in it: and hee sheweth that the blame thereof is in our selues, by cause wee be not stedfast in keeping the promise that wee haue made vnto GOD, but become variable, and starte aside out of hand. God for his part, doth well performe whatsoeuer hee promiseth vs: but wee breake off all acquaintance and vnion with him, so as we be cut off and banished from him, and wee bereaue our selues of all the promises that he offered vs: and therefore after he hath once written his Law, he must be faine to turne againe and write it the second tyme. As how? For figures doe not alwaies represent the full truth, but there is oftentimes some difference. Then let vs marke that the figure varieth from the truth which God sheweth vs and maketh vs to perceiue. For hee writeth not his Law the second time in stones: but rather whereas our hartes were hard before, he chaungeth them and maketh them soft: and in stead of stony heartes (as sayeth Ezechiel,) hee giueth vs hearts of flesh: that is to say, hee softeneth our heartes and maketh them pliable, to the intent wee shoulde receaue his Lawe, and haue it ingrauen in vs, and be able to doe and to follow whatsoeuer he commaundeth vs. Therefore let vs beare this figure well in mynde, for as much as it is for our benefite. In deede as concerning the first reason, it behooueth vs to be thinke our selues well when GOD hath called vs. For if we corrupt his seruice, or alter religion at our owne pleasure: although there be no Moses to breake the tables of stone: yet hath God shewed once for all, that he is alienated from vs, and that hee will haue vs to be as strangers to his house. Truth it is that his election is without repentance: yet notwithstanding (as it is sayd in Exodus,) hee will laue whom hee listeth. Howbeit, if wee sticke not purely to his woorde: it is all one as if wee fell out with him, and playd the fugitiue and vnruely children: and hee will not suffer vs to despise his couenaut after that maner, without auenging of himselfe of such vnthankfulness. And hee hath shewed vs at that tyme in the person of Moses, that hee giueth ouer and forsaketh all those, which turne away from the truth and holde not themselves to it, so that for his part hee will haue no more to doe with them, nor any more acquaintance with them. Wherefore let vs beware that this horrible sentence be not cast vpon vs, and whensoever our Lorde shall haue called vs, let it serue to hold vs in awe and feare. But yet let vs know also, that it is not ynough for vs to haue our eares beaten with Gods commaundementes, and to haue them fet before vs, and to be encouraged to keepe them: for God must be fayne to worke within our hartes, or else all the teaching in the world wil stand vs in no stead: it wil be but a sound ringing in the ayre, whereof no profite will redowen. Nowe then, come wee to heare Gods woorde? In deede wee ought to make account of the fauour that hee sheweth vs in causing it to be preached vnto vs: but yet let vs assure our selues that that would but turne to our greater condemnation, if he ingraued it noe in our heartes. What is to be done then? We must discharge our selues of all scitruist, assuring our selues that wee shall be but euill schollers, vntill GOD haue taught vs by his holy spirite. Notwithstanding that hee shall haue vsed men as his instrumentes, to bring vs to the knowledge of his trutin: yet must he himselfe bore our eares, that we may hearken to him, and hee must touch our heartes and soften them, that we may receiue yd doctrine which is vttered vnto vs. Wherefore let vs learne to mislike our selues, by acknowledging our owne sinne and wretchednesse: and therewithall let vs pray him to worke in such sort, as vnder those which we shall haue heard and vnderstoode, be not a witness against vs of our rebelliousnesse, and that wee haue bene foolke past amendment. And so, as ofte as wee come to any sermon, or read the holy Scripture: let vs pray God to touche vs inwardly, and to make the doctrine auaylable which wee shall haue heard, so as it may not be spoken to the stones, but to such as haue bene forth taught by his holy spirite. Thus ye see what wee haue to marke vpon that place.

Now for the attainement of this second writing, wee must not goe to Moses, but to our Lord Iesus Christ. For it is he that hath brought vs the holy Ghost, and the renewment whereby our heartes are reformed to the obeying of GOD, and whereby they be circumcised that they may be dedicated to his seruice. Then if Moses be compared to our Lord Iesus Christ, hee is but a minister of the letter. And why? By cause hee could goe no further than he had commission, which was, to set forth Gods doctrine. But it belonged to Iesus Christ to giue light to that which Moses had vttered, and to giue strength thereunto. And how was that? By his holy spirite. True it is that Saint Paule termeth himselfe a minister of the spirite. Howbeit, that is not to deface his Maister: it is not to drawe to himselfe the thing that belongeth geth to the sonne of GOD: but it is to shewe that our Lorde Iesus Christ vtereth his grace now adays by the preaching of his Gospell. As howe? Let vs marke first of all, that the renewing of vs and the writing of Gods Lawe in our heartes, thereby to fashion vs according to the righteousnes contayned in y same: is referred alonely to the sonne of God, and that it is he which gueth vs the will to followe God his Father and to obey him. For he hath the spirit of the feare of God, hee hath the sprite of all rightcou'nesse, hee hath the sprite of truth, as is layde in the eleuenth Chapter of the Prophet Esay. So then let vs marke, that wee must resort to our Lorde Iesus Christ when wee be put in minde of our durtie. When it is tolde vs what GOD requireth of vs, wee must thinke thus: Alas Lorde Iesus, it is true in deede that heere wee haue knowledge of the thing that is good and ryghtfull: but what? Wee haue another Lawe cleane contrarie to it in our felues: which is, that wee doe but chafe and fret at GOD when wee be taught: and when his Lawe is alleaged vnto vs, wee doo the cleane contrarie to that which is contayned there: and therefore thou must bee fayne to change vs, and to make vs new creatures: for to that ende is the sprite giuen vs, which thou communicarest vnto vs, by bearing vs reorde that wee be members of thy body. And againe, hath Iesus Christ once giuen vs this will? Hee gueth vs also abilitie to performe the same desire, and strengthen vs to against all temptations, as wee shall neuer bee overcome by them. Yee see then that wee must lye vs to our Lorde Iesus Christ, assuring our felues that that prerogative and honour belongeth to none but onely him. Yet notwithstanding this saying of S. Pauls is true also, that all such as preach the Gospell are spirituall mimisters, [that is to say] they set not forth a dead letter and vnprofitable doctrine, but withall they bring Gods spirit. And howe is that? Is it by their owne breathing? No: For our Lorde Iesus Christ did well shewe by his breathing vpon his disciples, that the holy Ghost proceedeth from none but himselfe alone. But Saint Pauls meaning is, that Iesus Christ woorketh continually, to the ende wee shoulde beleeue in him. True it is that we shall not see him heere peronally present: how then shall wee be sure, that hee wryteth Gods Lowe in our heartes? Let vs not alleage any of those thinges. For seeing that Iesus Christ is the ende and perfection of the lawe, yea and the very life of it (as I sayde afor:) let vs not thinke but that hee printeth Gods Lawe in our heartes by the preaching of the Gospell. So then let vs not doubt but GOD will performe that grace in vs. And although the partie that preacheth vnto vs be but a mortall man, and the wordes which hee vtereth vnto vs with his mouth, doe vanish anon after away in the ayre: yet let nor vs doubt but Iesus Christ will for all that doe his dewtie, as Sainte Paule declareth in the same place. And in deede, the faithfull haue experience thereof. For wee shoulde neuer haue so much as any thought at all of comming vnto GOD, or of dooing any good: vnlesse wee were fully refused of this grounde, namely that it behooueth vs to bee thoroughly tested and constant: all the which proceedeth of our Lorde Iesus Christ. Therefore whensoever wee teele that GOD draweth vs vnto him, let vs vnderstande that hee sheweth vs howe wee be members of the body of his sonne, by cause wee haue the holy Ghost, by whome wee be altered and reformed, and by whome also his Lawe is writt: nnewe againe in our heartes. Thus yee see what wee haue to beare in minde.

Moreouer, let vs marke that whereas Moses telleth the people that God heard him for that time: it is to the ende they shoulde not abuse Gods goodnesse, but vnderstand their offence to haue bene so horrible, that if they did so any more and tempted GOD agayne afterwarde: they shoulde finde no mercy. The intent then of Moses in this place, was to holde the people in awe. Truly wee ought to bee fully perswaded of this, that if GOD finde vs repentant for our finnes, hee will euer be ready to forgieue all that wee haue committed. Let vs but onely make towards him, and hee will reache vs his hande. Yet is it not ment that we shoulde take leaue to doe euill vnder colour that GOD is so mercifull to wretched sinners, that as soone as they returne vnto him, hee preuenteth them and is ready to receaue them and embrace them aforchand. This (say I) must not make vs the more inclined to doe euill: but wee must vnderstand that when God hath forgiven vs once, we must no more fall backe againe. For then do we tempt him and abuse his patience, which is the next way to thrust vs out of the gate of saluation, and to disappoint our felues vterly of all the mercy which hee was minded to haue vsed towards vs. True it is that although we shall haue offended twentie or thirtie times, yet doth God tell vs that he will haue pittie vpon vs. But I speake as nowe of those that take libertie to offend, and say, seeing I haue found God so gentle and pittifull, I shall surely bee receiued of him at all tymes. Surely when men stande so vpon Gods mercie, and vnder pretence thereof, doe they become negligent, or else giue ouer themselues to all naughtinesse: it is all one as if they renounced all the promises of their saluation. Therefore let vs marke well the saying that is set downe heere. God (sayth Moses) heard mee. And howe? for that tymes to the ende that the people shoulde thinke thus with themselues, Alas, it is a wonder that euer we obtained pardon, and it must needs astonish vs still, that God woulde rid vs out of such danger as wee were fallen into, considering howe deadly and ouer deadly the fall was. Now then seeing that God hath shewed himselfe so friendly towards vs: let vs beware that wee prouoke not his wrath any more. For if wee fall backe agayne, wee cannot tell what may befall vs. After that maner must wretched sinners, (when they bee tempted to doe amisse,) brydle and restraine themselves by setting Gods promises before their eyes, howbeit in such sorte as they become not the boulder to doe euill, but as they may haue recourse to Gods mercy when they haue doone amisse, and liue in the greater awe euer after. Thus ye see whereof wee be put in mind in this text.

Nowe let vs fall downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgment of our fautes, praying him to make vs so to feele them, as wee may learne to sigh and grone for them all our life time, and finde mercie at his hand when we seeke it with faith: and to reforme vs in such wife, as we may not peruert his worde and the purenesse of his seruice: but that seeing hee hath shewed vs the way of saluation, it may please him to grant vs the grace to perseuer therein all the tyme of our life, so as wee forsaking all our wicked lustes and affections, may walke on in his obedience: and moreouer to beare with vs in all our infirmitie, vntill hee haue ridde vs quite and cleane of them all, and clothed vs againe with his owne righteoufnesse, that wee may bee partakers of his glory, which he hath promised vs for our Lord Iesus Christes sake. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

20 Likewise the Lorde was sore angry with Aaron, to haue destroyed him: but at the same tyme I prayed also for Aaron.

21 Then tooke I the sinne which you had made, that is to wit the Calfe and burnt it in the fire, and brake it and brayed it throughly, vntill it was as small as dust: and I cast the dust thereof in the brooke that came downe from the hill.

22 Also yee prouoked him to wrath in Thaberah, and in Mafa, and in Cibroth-hathauah.

23 When the Lorde sent you from Cades barne, saying go vp and possesse the Lande which I haue giuen you: Then rebelled you against the commaundement of the Lorde your GOD, and beleued him not, neither obeyed you his voyce.

24 Yee haue bene disobedient to the Lorde, euer since the tyme that I haue knowne you.

After that Moses had spoken of the faulte which the people had committed in making the golden Calfe to worship it: now hee sheweth that Aaron was to bee blamed for that crime, for as much as hee being then the gouernour of the people, had not indeoured to withstand them with such stoutnesse as he ought to haue doone. For such as bee magistrates shall haue a harder account to make, than such as are priuate persons. Nowe then, Aaron ought to haue taught the people, and to haue withstoode their euill dealings enen to the death. True it is that when Aaron sawe that the people would needes haue an Idoll to worship, hee told them <sup>50</sup> that it was wickednesse so to doe: and when he could by no means wey with them, he deuised another shift, and laboured to driue them from their desire, by requiring their Iewelles and ornaments and the things which they did set most store by.

For hee thought that by that meanes, that fancie would bee put out of their head. Yee see then that Aaron consented not to their euill, but would faine haue letted it, howbeit, that was not with such stoutnesse as hee ought to haue doone. For hee should rather haue hazarded his life, than to haue consented to Idolatry, whereby GODS honour and true seruice was corrupted, by conueying of it ouer so leaudly to a puppit that was but a dead and senselesse thing. Ought not Aaron to haue bene so zealous, as rather to haue hazarded his owne perfon for it? specially seeing that GOD had put him in so honorable a charge? For hee was the high priest. And although he was not yet consecrated into his office: yet knewe hee well ynough whereunto he was ordeined. And therefore there was no excuse at all for him.

Nowe vpon this text wee haue to gather, that those to whome GOD hath giuen charge to gouerne his people, are not discharged by not consenting vnto euill, or by not being the authors thereof: but they must withstand it to the vttermost, and bee of such inuincible stoutnesse, as not to swaue aside for any importunatenesse. Although they see great troubles and hurlyburles, yet must not their courages be abated therefore, but they must stil stand in the mayntenance of that which is good. And although they see themselves in danger, so as there is none other remedie but onely by praying GOD to take them into his protection: yet must they not swaue a side from their office to eschewe the daunger. And therefore had not Aaron escaped unpunished at Gods hande, if his brother Moses had not in treated for him. Let not vs thinke nowadayes that God hath altered his mind: but let vs mark, that as many as haue not withstood euill to the vttermoste, shall be wrapped all in one condemnation with the offenders, and Gods vengeance must consume them all together. For hee that letteth euill slip, or preuenteth it not if he can, doth giue libertie to doe euill. It is a saying euen of the heathen, who to rebuke the negligence and coldnesse of magistrates and officers of Iustice, haue alledged this prouerbe, That if hee which ought to hinder euill doe wink at it, it is all one as if hee proclaimed leaue and liberty to doe euill by the sounde of a trumpet, and hee shall beare the blame of it before God. And in dedde that prouerbe was commonly vsed, to do vs to vnderstand that God will not hold them excused, which haue bene so colde in executing their office. Now if the worlde condemne them: what will become of them, when they come before the heavenly Iudge? So then, Magistrates are heere warned of their duty, namely that when they see any euill, they must withstand it. Although they bee not armed with worldly force: yet must they rather forgoe their liues, than yeelde in such sorte as the mischief may get the maysterie and the vpper hande through their cowardlynesse. Let Lordes of estate looke well to themselves: for although men acquite them: yet shall they not bee quite before GOD if they playe the blinkardes, and let naughtinesse slippe when they see God offended. If they see the right peruerted, and doe not manfully withstand it: they must yeelde account for it. And moreover, God will bring them to shame before the world, that they may feele the condemnation aforehand, which is prepared for them before him: and therefore let eury man looke neerely to himselfe.

And let vs marke generally, that as many as withdrawe not themselves from the companie of the wicked, are taken as accessaries before God, though they confederate not themselves with them, if they make no countenance to withstand them when they see them go about any euill. Wee heere howe S. Paule sayeth to all the faithfull both great and small, Haue no fellowship with wicked workes, but rebuke them. Then doeth it stande vs on hande to beware that wee bee not partakers in euill, and to protest openly that wee like not of it. But yet is not that ynough: for wee must shewe our selues to bee enemyes of the wicked, and take parte against them. And they that doe not so, are too cowardly: and that dissimulation of theirs shall be esteemed as treason before God. But what? Men see howe the world goeth. For nowadayes there can no friendship bee mainteyned, except men bolster their neighbours in their euill dooings. Folke doe mocke GOD openly to his face, and yet are they readie to beeat open despayned, if men reache them nor their handes to take parte with them in all offences agaynst GOD. But yet shall not this rule bee chaunged for all that: wee may well inarden our selues in our wicked customes: but yet will not GOD sayle to iudge vs, yea euen according to this rule. And therefore let vs not thinke that he should transforme himselfe, when wee take inordinate leaue to doe euill. And when wee bee come into possession, and haue taken couert vnder pretence that others did so as well as wee: let vs not thinke that wee shall scape for all that, but let vs forbear that wee bee not wrapped in the vengeance which God pronounceth against sinners, for want of withstanding them to the vttermost of our power. All men without exception ought to doe so, as I sayde afore: but yet they that are in authoritic ought to take good heede that they shewe the way vnto others.

After that Moses hath spoken of this offence: hee addeth yet other examples, to shewe that the people coulde not boast of any righteousnesse of their owne, nor allege that GOD had chosen them for their vertues sakes, or for any worthinesse or deserte that was in them. Therefore hee sayeth, Remember what see did in Thaberah, that is to say, in the Burning. It was a place so named, because that there, GOD sent downe fyre from heauen to consume a part of the Campe. And afterwarde in Masa, which signifieth temptation, and was another place, so named because the people tempted GOD there. And againe in Meriba, that is to say Strife of Contention. Remember also what yee did at Giberoth Thaba's, that is to say, at the graues of lust. For GOD sent as it were a plague vpon all the people, so as a great multitude of them dyed for their wicked lust in that they longed for fleshe, and woulde not bee contented with the Manna. This foode is too lousome (quoth they,) wee cannot away with it, it goeth against our stomackes, for wee see nothing else but alwayes Manna Manna, wee will haue some fleshe meate. Ye see then the wicked lust of y people was y cause of their ruine & destruction. Finally Moses rehearseth here y thing that he had said afore, concerning the rebellion which the people committed when they should haue entred into y land. For they distrusteds gods promise, & woulde need send spies to learne how things went. They trusted more to their own policie & eyesight, than to Gods worde. By reason whereof Gods wrath was so kindled against the,

that he gaue flatte sentence that none of them shoulde enter into the promised heritage, saue onely Iosua, and Caleb the sonne of Iephunch, because those two had behaued theſelues faithfully. But as for the people, they should be led about by the space of fortie yeeres, vntill their earkelſes were rooted in the wilderneſſe, according to the threat which God had vttered with his owne mouth. That is the content of this part of the text.

Now let vs marke firſt of all, that to make the Iewes vnderſtand the meaning of Moſes, or rather of the holyghoſt: it behoued them to be warned to ſet their former faultes before their eyes, that they might not bee ſo fond as to preſume any thing at all vpon their owne worthynelſe, or vpon their owne power: but to abaſe themſelues vtterly, acknowledging that GOD found not any thing in them why hee ſhoulde choſe them, but that all came of his owne free goodneſſe. Now if Moſes were faime to vſe ſuch exhortation to the Iewes: let vs vnderſtand that we alſo haue as much neede of it nowadayes as they. The end therefore which we muſt begin at, is this: that wee muſt caſt downe ourſelues, and not be liſted vp with any preſumption, nor vaunt our ſelues through any fooliſh ouerweening: but acknowledge our ſelues to be voyd of all deſeruing, and that there is not any grace or righteouſneſſe in vs, for the which we might obtaine loue at Gods hand. And therefore muſt he needes preuent vs with his free goodneſſe. Marke that for a ſpeciall poynt. But howe may men abaſe themſelues after that faſhion? Wee will neuer doe it of our owne accord. In deepe it euery of vs looke well vpon himſelfe, it muſt needes bee that wee bee as it were bewitched, if wee bee not induced to miſlike of our ſelues, and to be aſhamed and vtterly at our wits end. For what is man? Let him ſearch throughly what is in him, both in bodie and in ſoule: and ſurely wee ſhall finde euen from the moſt to the leaſt of vs, that there is nothing in vs but vtter ſhame and confuſion, as I ſayd afore. Neuertheles, euery of vs abuſeth himſelfe through this folle, ſo as we beare our ſelues on hand that our vices are vertues. And although our life be as leaue as may be, and our finnes moſt outrageous and horrible: Yet to our owne ſeeming there is nothing in vs but perfect righteouſneſſe and ſoundneſſe. Yee ſee then that men beguile themſelues. And therefore it is requiſite that we ſhoulde bee held ſhorte, and haue our faultes layde afore vs, not onely ſome one or two faultes, but alſo all the faultes of our whole life: ſo as we may know that we haue offended our GOD ſorgiouſly, that it behoueth vs to bee ouerwhelmed with ſhame and reproche: and that if wee ſhoulde goe about to liſt vp our heads, it were meete that wee ſhoulde bee thruſt backe, and that GOD ſhould knock vs harde vpon the pates with a cudgell, to ſtew vs that our pride is due helike againſt him. Then let vs marke that Moſes ſpoke not onely to the Iewes: but that the ſame leſſon is toulde vnto vs at this day: in ſo much that if wee will yeeld glory vnto GOD, we muſt be bereft of all praſe, and not preſume any whit at all of our owne vertues, but aſſure our ſelues that there is not aught in vs but vtter vanitie.

Furthermore for as much as wee come not to ſuch myldenelſe of our one accorde: let vs haue an eye to our finnes, and not tary till God open his bookes of account as he will doe at the laſt day, for then it will be too late for vs to yeeld our ſelues giſt. But let vs bethinke vs of our finnes now while he ſummoneth vs by his word, and while hee warneth vs aforehande. Let euery of vs ſubmit himſelfe as a wretched offender before his Iudge, and let vs acknowledge our ſelues to bee iuſtly accuſed, yea euen of infinite faults, before God. And when we haue bethought vs of one offence, let the ſame miniſter occaſion to vs to bethinke vs of another. And to heere ſhort, let vs both generally and particularly praſiſe this leſſon of conſidering what wee bee, yea euen without flattering of ourſelues, that all the good which wee receyue at Gods hand may bee fathered vpon him, and the honour which hee referueth to himſelfe remaine whole and vnumiſhed vnto him. Let vs not couet to imiche our ſelues with the things which wee haue borrowed of him: let vs not ſeake to atyre and deeſe our ſelues with his feathers: but let vs acknowledge that it is of his owne free goodneſſe that hee vouchſafeth to ſhew himſelfe liberal, though he be not bound thereto. And for our partes, ſeeing we cannot bring any deſert vnto him, but we be guiltie in all caſes and all reſpectes: the of his ineſtimable mercy muſt be ſaine to beare with vs, or elſe wee would be deadly enemies to him ſtil, & he ſhould be druen to thunder down vpon vs. Thus yee ſee what wee haue to marke generally vpon this text.

But now let vs come to the ſtorie which Moſes toucheth heere. Hee ſpeaketh firſt of Thaberah, which betokeneth Burning, as I ſayd afore. For there the people were chaſtiſed with burning, becauſe they murmured at their travelling through the wilderneſſe. O (quoth they,) ſhall wee neuer come to an ende? Wee doo but runne vp and downe heere, wee bee ſayne to remooue our tentes from place to place, wee bee druen to carie our ſtuffe vpon our ſhoulders, and why bee wee not rather in ſome place of reſt, diſcharged of ſuch trauell? But alas, thoſe wretches conſidered not that GODS diſpleaſure waſt to bee accompliſhed, according to his othe, which waſt that none of them ſhould enter into the promiſed lande. They ſhoulde haue thought, Alas, wee deſerue to be drowned in the bottoſe of hell, and GOD is contented to ſend vs a temporall correccion. Altho' hee bee not minded to bring vs into his earthly reſting place: yet notwithstanding hee giueth vs reſpit to bethinke vs of our finnes, and to ſue to him for pardon. For albeit that he make vs to feele ſome rigour, and it be- houeth vs to beare the markes of his diſpleaſure all our life long by being deſtroyed of the inheritance which he had promised vs: yet notwithstanding we ought therewithall to acknowledge his goodnesse, in that he will nor haue vs to perishe euerlastingly as we wel deserue. But they considered none of all this, neither considered they that they were in as happy plight as they could wish. They had the Manna downe from heauen, they tooke no paine to make prouision for themselves, they needed no more but to gather it vp & to take euery man his measure of it, they were all fed, yea and that with a good & saourily foode. Yet considered they none of all this, but grudged at their ouerlong journey. And what cause had they so to doe? First they were priuiledged from the curse that was layd vpon all mankind. We be set in this world to leade a painefull lyfe: & man was ordeyned to labor euen before he had sinned: for it is vnkindly that we should be idle & vnprofitable. Moreover the trauell that God imoyneth vs now, serueth not onely to keepe vs occupied, but also to lode vs, so as we may be enforced to shrink vnder our burthen, & to grone for our sins sake. Now the this people had good cause to submit themselves quietly, when God led them so through the wilderness. And therefore it is no maruell though fyre came from heauen to burne vp part of their tents, and though Gods wrath appeared after that fashion to make the abashed. Yet notwithstanding, so litle did this amend them, that they fell to murmuring by and by again, because they had none other foode but Manna. God had warned the enough that they should no more prouoke him, & they should at leastwise haue learned it by experience, seeing they felt the blowes. But they hardened themselves againe against God: and although he had made them to feeble his hand so roughly: yet say they, what shall become of vs? our soule withereth, and wee pine away to the death. For here is nothing for vs but Manna, we would faine haue some fleshmeate. Well: They haue their desire: but that is to their coiste. For while the meate was yet in their mouths, Gods wrath fell vpon them, so as they were dtuen at length to knowe y they ought to haue bin contented with so good and happie a state as God had giue them. In remembrance whereof the same place was named the Graues of Inse. Also there was another murmuring for water, inso much that whereas they should haue craued water of God, they fell to storming against Moses, & would haue stoned him. For these causes it was Gods will that the markes of their disobedience should be printed vpon them that they might remeber their naughtinesse as long as they liued vpon the earth, & therefore hee named those two places, the one Masa, and the other Meriba. As if he should say, yee haue striued with me, and are entered into contention against me, as though yee would bid me batrell. Ye haue tempted me because ye knowe not yet my power, which hath shewed it selfe so many wayes vnto you. Thus much concerning the stories which Moses rehearseth here. In decde they deserue to bee layd forth more at length. Howbeit forasmuch as we haue here but a re-hearfall of them as it were at a glance: we must deale so as we may profite by them, and take so much of them as may serue for our instruction.

Now then, seeing that God was so fore greued with the murmuring of that people, in that they abode not the trauell patiently which hee had layde vpon them: let vs note that there will be neuer the more excuse for vs nowadayes if we bow not downe our shoulders to beare the burthen meekely, without striuing against God. First there is this earthly wayfaring, whereunto God hath made vs subiect in this worlde. Although God gaue many men rest, so as they neuer goe fro home nor (as ye would say) out of their nests: yet are we misadvised if we passe not through this world as birdes vpon a bough, & be not as strangers in it. For else God disclaimeeth vs & giueth vsouer. Sith it is so: they that sette themselves in this world as though they should neuer goe out of it, doe banish themselves from Gods kingdom: and shewe y the kingdom of heauen belongeth not vnto them. And let them not beguile themselves by protesting that their intent is not for: God hath allowed it to be so, and the Apostle sayth expressly, y forasmuch as y fathers were as poore strangers here beneath: therefore did God also voutface to call them his children. Now then as for them that are ashamed to be called strangers in this world: they must goe seeke their inheritance with the duell: for they haue neither part nor portio with God. And now must we apply y things to our benefite which it pleaseth God to send vs. We see what miseries doe comonly hem vs in, inso much that euen y tenderest fort & such as seeme to haue y world at will, are most feeble & weake, and are troubled w a nuber of griefes & vexations. Howbeit let euery man looke vpon himselfe, and according as God dealeth with vs, so let vs patiently receiue y afflictions y he sendeth vs. If our state be hard and comberfom, let vs not thinke y if we murmur at it, our murmuring shall vanish away into the aire, but y we must come to a reckoning for it before God. For if God send not downe fyre from heauen after the same maner y he did visibly punishe the Iewes for their murmuring: it is so much the worse for vs. For if he winke at it, & punish vs not out of hand: his vengeance must needes be y forer & more terrible. And therefore let vs learne to liue vnder obediece to our God. Although wee be not handled as we would be in this earthly and flightful lyfe, but are faine to be trotting vp and downe: so as when wee would liue in rest, God driueth vs from place to place, and when we would faine be discharged of care, then are we most vexed: let vs receiue all that euer God sendeth vs, and let vs make our reckoning to passe through this worlde, after the same maner that this people were conueied through the wilderness. And let vs learne to practise this saying of our Lord Iesus Christ, that we must beare our crosse after him. Lyke as when a man goeth into the cuntry, hee takes vp his trusse vpon his necke, and caryeth such things with him as he shall haue neede of: so must we bee loden with such fardell as God listeth to lay vs upon vs. And let vs not looke one at another: for God intendeth not to handle vs all alike. Let such as haue most vexation of al, vnderstand that God doth it not without cause. And let such as haue lesse, thanke God for his bearing with their frailtie. But yet for all that, howe soeuer we fare, let vs beware that wee stand not in contention with God, by quodding that hee letteth vs not alone in such quietnesse as our flesh would wishe and desire: for we wote not what is for our owne profite. Marke that for a special point.

But on the contrarie part, we see how men are giuen, not onely to their ease and commoditie: but also to superfluitie and wantonnesse, so as it should seeme that they wil needes be merie & drue away all care, whether God will or no: Whereas by the aduersities which God sendeth vs, he putteth vs in minde of our sinnes, and laboureth to withdraw vs from this world, as though he spurred vs forward to make the more hast vnto him: we not onely canot abide it, but also seeke meanes to rush forth into all inordinate pleasure, euen with open rebellion against him. If God spare vs: the are we the more vnruly, whereas we should call our felues home vnto goodnes, and hie in the greater awe. And therefore let vs be aduised to benefite our felues by the example that is contained here.

As concerning the Temptation or Strife: let vs vnderstand that if necessitie pinch vs, so as we be driuen to any streite and know not where to become: we must resort to our God with all lowlinesse, beseeching him to prouide a remedie for our neede: but yet in the meane while we must be contented with his good will. If it please him to haue vs to languishe: let vs hold downe our neckes, and let vs not haue the stiffe neckednesse which Moses cōdemned heretofore in the people of old time. Also let vs vnderstand that it is Gods owne working, when he voutsafeth to vphold vs in such sort as wee doe not vtterly quail. For although wee doe hardly drag our limbes after vs, & we seeme euē to be at the last cast: yet doe we still feele some taste of the goodnesse of our God. How soeuer the world go with vs, let vs learne that we must not tempt him, that is to say, we must not giue our felues the bridle to aske this or that, but referre our felues wholly to his good will, and be so governed by him, as we may alwayes yeelde him his due obedience, and not raunge after our owne lustes lyke wilde beastes, as though wee would push at him with our hornes, but that if wee wih the thing which seemeth expedient for vs, we doe it alwayes with this condition that God shall haue the maisterie of vs, and ouerrule all our passions and desires. If our minde moue vs to wishe or to say, I would faine haue this or that: Let vs looke that God haue the ouerruling of vs, and that we submit our felues so vnto him, as al our thoughts affections and hylings be framed vnto his will, though it seeme neuer so hard vnto vs. Thus ye see what wee haue to note concerning the temptation that Moses speakech of here, and concerning the strife at such time as the people were in a chafe and murmured against GOD.

And let vs knowe moreover that wee be no competent Iudges in owne case, least wee seeke fond excuses as wee be wont to doe. We will not be acknowen that we accuse God, though it bee so in deede: We will say wee intend not to aduance our felues against him to desy him: but yet is it so in deede. Yea and whereas the people were driuen to name the places of Meriba & Massa: they did it not of their owne good will, but it was Gods will that those names should remaine as presidentes of their rebelliousnesse. Therefore let vs learne, that if wee be not wholly obedient vnto God, so as we doe not any thing but by his good wil and leaue: our tempting of him is a prouoking of his wrath, as though we made a kinde of defiance to him. Afterwarde followed the offence which the people committed in requiring flesh to eat. They held not themselves contented with Manna, but they would needes haue such vittels as they themselves lyked: and they were not contented simply with flesh neither, but they would needes haue sauce, yea and damtie sauce to it. For they longed for the Garlicke and Onyons and other lyke things which they had had in Egypt, and they would needes haue GOD to feede them with the same geere in the wildernesse. But it was a diuillish longing, which made them to refuse the sutenace that God had giuen the. Besides, what more? They had Manna daily from heauen, to feed vpō as much as they would: so as they might wel perceiue that God maintayned them by his power, but that seemed vsuery to them. And why? Because it came of God. They would needes haue whatsoever they themselves lyked, as it were in spite of him: in somuch that they fretted and chafed at his bringing of them out of Egypt, as who should say they held skorne of the deliuerance which hee had wrought for them. Sith wee see this, let vs looke to our felues, and let vs knowe that this fault is set forth vnto vs, to make vs beware that wee be not guiltie of the lyke.

Exod. 14. 17.
Num. 14. 2. 4.

For wee must vnderstand that GOD maketh vs Iudges of the people of old time, to the ende that euery of vs should condemne our felues in our owne cases. For why? If wee be Iudges of suche as haue done amisse: thinke wee that GOD seeth not much clearlyer than wee? Now he is so gracious as to put ouer his office vnto vs, to the ende that euery of vs should haue an eye to himselfe, and hauing pleaded guiltie, bee cast downe and humbled before him. Therefore let vs marke that the rehearfall of this storie, ought to leade vs to the condemning of our owne wicked affections, and make vs to consider what our lustes are, wherethrough wee cease not to prouoke the wrath of our God. And let vs marke first of all, that looke how many lustes

are in our flesh : so many armed folkes haue we , which aduaunce themselues against God . And for the same cause doth Saint Paul say , that all the imaginations , conceits , and affections of our nature , serue to prouoke vs to fight against the righteousness of our God . And therefore whensoever we chance to lust after any thing , let not our flesh the ouermaister vs . And why ? For all our senses are lo corrupted : that although ( to our seeming ) the end of our wishes be good ; yet notwithstanding , some exccesse will cuer be mingled with them , and God shall haue somewhat in them whereat to finde fault . And how faire and beautifull fouer our d . fires are to the outward shoue , there is alwayes some vice in them : and what shall wee then say of the sinfull lustes , which wee be driuen to condemne euery by our owne naturall iudgement ? When a man desireth to haue wherewith to find his household , and traueleth to get it : truly that desire is good of it selfe . But yet the same is matched with impatience , or with vnstayednesse , or with ouer great care , or with vnbeliefe : and to be shure God shall alwayes finde somewhat amisse in our desires , which of their owne nature are not euill . Howbeit , if a man rush into pilling , and polling , and scratching , to beguile and deceiue his neighbor : is it not much worse than to haue a desire that might seeme good of it selfe ? Though a man purpose to lue neuer so quietly with his wife , yet shall it alwayes be mingled with some worldly affections , so as our conuption wil needes bewray it selfe still , euery in the best things : and what will become of vs then , if wee giue our selues the bridle to whoe cometh ? As much is to be sayd of all other things . And therefore let vs beare in minde , that although our desires appeare not to be euill : yet are they euery matched with some vice & vnrighteousnesse before God . But [ besides this , ] wee haue alioou fleshly lusts which make vs to shake off Gods yoke , so as wee cast our selues at aladuantage , some into blasphemie , some into gluttonie , some into vnrulinesse , some into wantonnesse , some into lecherie , some into extortion , some into crueltie , some into robbetrie , and other some into al manner of wickednesse . Now then , deserue not our lustes that God should rise vp to desroy vs for them , when wee be come to that poync : Yes : for if the people of Israell had graues of luste : what shall become of vs ? And therefore let vs learne that when we read these stories , God giueth vs warning to enter into examination of our faults , that vpon the knowing of them , wee shoulde craue forgiuenesse of them , and fall to such repentance , as may wholly tame vs and make vs flee vnto him , and not be giuen any more to our vices . But that is vnpossible for vs to doe , vntill wee haue soouer mastered our selues , as to mislike our owne affections with full purpose to renounce them . Vntill a man bee subdued after that fashion , it is vnpossible for him to yeeld obedience vnto God , how faire apparance of vertue soeuer he haue . But what ? So farre off are wee from minding these things , that by all lykely hooode wee doe nothing else but blindfold

our eyes , that wee might not see our finnes to seeke conuenient remedie for them . See here how the Iewes were condemned for requiring of water , and yet were they ready to dy for thirst . Yea , but the cause why they were not to bee excused , was for that they required it with murmuring . Whereas they should haue sayd , Lord thou knowest what is expedient for vs better than wee our selues doe , and therefore wee reserue our selues to thee , prouide thou for vs : in steade of vsing such humilitie , they fall to requiring and storming . Now wee must not doe so : but wee must patiently tary Gods leasure , when hee giueth vs not things so soone as wee aske them : for hee can well skill to prouide for all our needes . In deed if it pleased him , hee could well content vs and giue vs all our wishes : but his will is not to maintaine vs here in such abundance , as wee might take occasion to holde skorne of the good that hee doth vs , and to despise it by treading it vnder our feete . Hee will haue vs to be meeke and lowly , that wee may learne to resorte vnto him . When a man is in poore estate , he beareth him selfe on hand that if God would giue him wherewith to maintaine himselfe plentifully , he would be wholly giuen to be thankfull towards him for his plying of him . But let him once come to wealth , and let God deale beuntifully with him : and what will hee doe ? Hee will lit vp himselfe against God , and forget him in such sorte , as if hee were not the same man that he was before . And this vice is too too common : in somuch that the more our Lord increaseth his benefites towards vs , the more doe wee seeme willfull in despising him , and his doing thankpeth our vnthankfulnesse and malice . And therefore let vs consider , that the things which are tolde vs concerning the Iewes , belong vnto vs , forasmuch as wee haue the lyke or greater vices in vs , than were in them : & we must vnderstand that Gods intent is to teach vs by them .

And specially whereas mention is made of their willfull stubbornnesse at Cades Barne , where they refused to goe forward to enter into the inheritance that was promised them : let vs vnderstand that we be no lesse worthe of blame at this day before God , for that he cannot hold vs in , to make vs goe through with our course . To what purpose hath G O D called vs into his Church ? It is ( as I sayd afore ) to the end that in passing through this world , wee shoulde not be wedded to it , but vse it altogether as a way-faring , and as a straunge countrie , traueilling still through it towards heauen . For beholde , our Lord cryeth to vs both early and late , that wee shoulde goe on still to come vnto him . But we on the contrary part , voutsafe not to remoue one foote to goe to him : but in stead of setting forward we retire backe , or else sit slugging still in our owne slothfulnesse . We see it is so . Now then , forasmuch as our Lord findeth vs so l . zie and stubbornne , that in stead of plucking vp a chearefull courage to goe forward , and to hold on our course vntill wee bee come to the ende of it , wee resist him and are loth to passe any further :

ther: Let vs vnderstand y<sup>e</sup> this story is told vs, to cast vs vtterly down in our felues, so as we should not seeke any worthinesse in our owne persons, (as in deede there is none in vs:) But yelde God the whole praye of his benefices, knowing that he is not bound ar all on his side, but that hee doth all things of his own meere free goodnes and infinite mercie: and therefore that wee on our side ought to sigh, beseeching him to correct vs and reforme vs according to his will. And for the better perceiuing hereof, I pray you after what sort goe we forward when God calleth vs? Wee partly limp, and partly make many a false step. Let euery man examine himselfe, and see how forward hee hath bin since the time that God hath reached him his hand. True it is that euen before wee knew the Gospell, wee were already without excuse of our rebelling against our God: but now seeing hee hath inlightened vs by his word, and showed vs the way of saluation, and setteth his will before vs, saying, come, and reacheth vs his hand to guide vs: if of all this while wee haue not voutlasted to come vnto him, how shall wee excuse our felues? Let euery of vs consider how hee dischargeh himselfe: and afterward let vs haue an eye to the common state. Wee can well speake of Gospellyke reformation, and it is a maruell to heare how wee will talke: but yet for all that, our filthinesse is so stinking, as is lothsome to beholde: and GOD needeth not to goe vp into his iudgement seate to giue sentence of it, for the very infidels and ignorant sorte can bee our Iudges. And of a truethe they may bee a great shame to vs, seeing our lyfe is so leawde and wicked, that euen the sile blinde sorte of Papistes may laugh vs to skorne. And surely if vtter confusion shoulde fall vpon our heades: wee haue well deserued it. For by our meane Gods name is blasphemed: and yet notwithstanding wee regarde it not. Howbeit, the more that wee besotte our felues after that fashion in our vaine selfe flatterie: the more will GOD ntake vs feele in the end, that hee will not suffer his chastisements to bee lost.

To bee shorte, let vs remember how Moses sayth heere, Ever since the time that I haue known you, you haue alwayes bin rebellious against God. And this Rebelliousnesse whereof hee speaketh is exprest lykewise in this saying that they resisted the mouth of God distrusting him and contriving his will. Now then, if we wil know what it is to be rebellious: let vs first of all looke what God hath spoken. For the thing wherein hee intendeth to trye vs, is whether wee be willing to submit our felues simply in all respectes to his worde, after hee hath bene fogracious vnto vs as to teach vs. What else is the holy scripture, but an vttering or declaring of Gods will? And therefore all that euer is contained there, is as though GOD opened his holy mouth, to tell vs what he requireth at our hand. Then if our lyfe bee not fully correspondent to Gods worde, whereof wee make profession: beholde, God complaineth of vs, and accuseth vs of rebelling against his mouth. And there are two partes of this rebelliousnesse. The one is when we distrust Gods promises, and the other is when wee disobey his commandements: & those two be the summe of all that is to bee leained in Gods word. When wee haue tossed and turned ouer the leaues of all the holy scripture neuer so much, there are but these two pointes contained in it: that is to wit, y<sup>e</sup> for as much as God being desirous to bee our father and Saviour, openeth vs the infinite treasures of his mercie, calling vs to him, and setting his free goodnesse and free loue before vs: wee should beleue his promises and rest wholly vpon them, saying, Lorde seeing thou art so freehearted as to offer thy selfe thus vnto vs: behold, wee cast all our care vpon thee, and hope for all welfare through thy bountifullnesse. The first thng then which wee haue to doe, is to settle our felues vpon Gods promises, when he offereth them vnto vs. Secondly there is the obedience which God requirerh, as if he shoulde say vnto vs: Go to, I will haue ye to lue in such wise, as ye obey me and yeeld me such seruice, as your coming to me be of your own accord. And here Moses saith y<sup>e</sup> the people were alwayes rebellious against Gods mouth, forasmuch as they obeyed not his commandements, nor trusted to his promises. Nowe let vs looke into our felues: where is the faith y<sup>e</sup> we boast of? In deede we can wel ynough say y<sup>e</sup> we beleue the Gospell: but if gods promises touched vs effectually, there would be another maner of steadfastnesse in vs, and wee would not bow with euery winde like waucering reedes, as we do. Our vnbelieve bewrayes it selfe, & we be too much enuicied of it: inso much y<sup>e</sup> we cannot trust God euen in worldly things. And if we cannot trust to him for small things, howe is it possible that we should trust to him, for the euerlasting life? We haue dayly experience of his succour and helpe: & yet do we doubt thereof still. And how shall we then trust in him wher the case concerneth inuisible things, as the lyfe which is hidden from vs till God discouer it vnto vs? Again, doeth not this rebelliousnesse of ours in resisting him, shew it selfe in alour whole life? In deede wee will make signes of willingness to serue God: but yet is all but counterfeiting. For let vs see if any of vs doo lue so faithfully and vprightly as wee ought to doo? Where is the louing kindnesse and chaitee that ought to bee among the faithfull, and among Gods children? Nay, we bee rather like Cartes and dogges. And when the case requireth that wee should agree together in well dooing, the worlde sees howe wee goe to worke. It may seeme that wee haue conspyred to goe the cleane contrarie way to that which God willethe and ordaineth. And this is not to be greatly wondered at. For if in things that are small and light, we shewe our felues to haue no great Christianitie in vs: we wil shew no lesse lewdnesse, when wee come to the things that are greater and more excellent. I call them smal things in comparison of the feare of God and the loue of his worde, which men may say they see not in vs. For as concerning those small things, if we intend to make any countenance of deuotion to Godward: we can well abide that men should condemne both extortion, deceit, cruelty, peritriue, and such other vices. When we come to Sermons, we can welinough pretend y<sup>e</sup> there is some agreement among vs, and specially when we receive the Lords supper: & yet notwithstanding cuē in that behalfe there appeareth such contempt of God, as we ought to be ashamed of it. For I know that vpon the last Lordes day while we were ministring of the cōmunion, and while we should haue assembled altogether, to make a general protestatiō of our faith, and to offer vp our praiers vnto God: about two hūdred people were occupied in gaming. In their going by before the Sermon began, a man would haue thought they had bin prepared to the Communion: our their mindes are so vppon their playing, that they spend euery Sabbath day in such vnchristiuness. And it is meeete that this should be tolde them openly, seeing it is apparant, & that euen little children perceiue the shamefulnesse of it. Now then, let vs marke in seauē wordes, that Moses spake not for his owne time only, but for vs also in these dayes, who bee warned in the person of the Iewes to be ashamed of our selues, and therewithall to seeke y<sup>e</sup> means that our God may receaue vs to pitie and mercie: which is, that after we haue acknowledged how gultie wee bee before God: euerie of vs may learne, not onely to condemne our selues, but also to bow downe our neckes to craue forgiveness of our former faultes at Gods hand, to the ende that being acquit by him, we may also be guided and gouerned by his holy spirit: & that whereas wee haue bin stubborne against him heretofore, so as he could by no means weeld vs, wee may learne to yeeld our selues so obediently to him, that in stead of being as woode beastes, we may become meeke and mylde vnto him as sheepe and lambes, and giue care vnto his voyce, giuing it such superiority ouer vs, as we may vtterly forsake all things that may hinder our honoring and seruing of him.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them better than wee haue done, so as wee may yeelde our selues to him with true repentance, & continue therein not for one day onely, but all our life long: and y<sup>e</sup> therewithall it may please him to beare with vs in all our infirmities, euen vntill he haue rid vs quite and cleane of them. And so let vs all say, Almighty GOD heauenly Father, &c.

On Monday the ix. of September. 1555.

The Lxxvij. Sermon which is the senenth vpon the ninth Chapter.

25 Then humbled I my selfe before the Lord fortie dayes and fortie nightes, for I humbled my selfe because the Lord had said that he would destroy you.

26 And I prayed to the Lord & said: Lord God, destroy not thy people and thine heritage, which thou hast gotten by thy mightie power, and whom thou hast brought out of Egypt by strong hand.

27 Bethinke thee of thy seruants Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob. Haue not an eye to the stubbornesse of this people, nor to their misbeleefe, nor to their sinne:

28 Least the inhabitants of the land from whence thou hast brought vs, do say: because the Lorde could not bring them into the land wherof he had spoken to them, or because he hated them: therefore hath he brought them forth to kill them in the wilderness.

29 Moreouer, they be thy people, and thine heritage, whom thou hast brought out with thy great power, and with thine arme stretched out.

Moses goeth forward here with the matter that he had begunne afore: which was, to make the people vnderstand howe great the faulte was which they had committed. For whereas he boasteth of Gods hearing of him, he doeth not to the intent the people should thinke themselves so much the more beholden to him therefore: that is not the thing which he looketh at: but that the people should thenceforth lue in awe and humilitie, and beare in minde the faulte that they had committed, and consider howe they had well deserued to haue bene vtterly rooted out if God had not shewed them mercie. And he sayth that after he had lye[n] upon the ground forsie dayes and forsie nightes, he was heard: and this is to the end that by such circumstance, the people may the better learne, that if G O D had not hearkened to that vehement and earnest prayer of his, they had bene vterly vndone. It is an extraordinary thing, that a man should continue sighing and weeping before God, forsie dayes and forsie nightes together: and no doubt but this power was giuen to Moses by miracle, lyke as was his fasting of forsie dayes and forsie nightes before. And to what purpose? To the end that the Lawe might bee the better authorized thereby. For it might well seeme that the couenant which God had made with the people, was quite broken and vterly disannulled: and therefore it was expedient that Moses should once againe be separated from the company of men forsie dayes and forsie nightes, that by that meanes, new authoritie might be purchased. But yet for all that, we must marke well, that wher eas Moses forbare meate and drinke forsie dayes and forsie nightes together, it was not done by humane power, neither was it (to speake properly) a fast of sobriety: (for hee was exempted from hunger and thirst:) but it was done to the end that the Lawe should be receiued with the greater reuerence, forasmuch as it came not of men, but Moses came downe from the mountain: as if an Angel had come downe from heauen. And his praying was for the sinner of the people, that God would not looke vpon the idolatric that had bin committed, but hold on still in his owne purpose. For although Moses had broken the tables, and that he had done it through the impulsion of Gods spirit: yet notwithstanding, (as hath bin said already,) he ceased not to haue compassion vpon the people which was worthe to haue bin rooted out. That is the effect of the matter which we must looke vnto here.

And thereby we be put in minde, that if God forgiue vs any fall or offence, we must not so forget it, but we must bethinke our selues to lue in the greater awe, and consider all our lyfe long how greatly we be bound vnto God for vntering so great goodnesse vnto vs. There are a number to hee scene, which doe but wring their mowthes when they woulde haue their faultes forgiuen them, and they neuer passe to thinke any more vpon them, to yeelde God his deserued prayse. Contrariwise it is shewed vs here by the example of the Iewes, that although God bee mercifull to vs, and list not to call our faultes to account: yet must not wee therefore thrust them vnder foote, but rather cal them to minde euery day, that it may first of all prouoke vs to repentance, assuring our selues that wee may fall eftsoune, if God preserue vs not: and secondly [make vs to consider] that we stand not but through his free mercie: and finally encourage vs to magnify his name for drawing vs out of y dungeon wherein we were fallen. Seeing then that we be so much bound vnto him, let vs bee the willinger to serue and honor him. Thus yee

Besides this, let vs marke well by the example of Moses, that it is not enough to pray vnto God in two or three wordes and as it were in poste: but that we must continue in praying without being weary. And that is a poynt right necessaric to bee marked. For wher eas there are many faults in vs, this is one of the greatest, that we cannot settle our selues vnto prayer, but wee bee fleeing, so as our mowthes are no sooner opened, but our wittes are by and by wandering elsewhere. And besides that, if we haue prayed vnto God once, wee thinke it enough and too much. Contrariwise we see that Moses was forsie dayes together, in continuall mourning for the offence of the people. Therefore in our praying vnto God, let vs learne to haue the perseuerance wherunto our Lorde Iesus exhorteth vs, saying that we must be importunate, and that it is not enough for vs to haue vttered our grieue vnto G O D lightly and once for all: but that we must resorte to him still, vntill he haue heard our requestes. Now then, here is a second lesson which we haue to gather vpon this place: which is, that in praying vnto God, we must haue a settlednesse of holding out to the end.

All this praying of Moses, sheweth vs what their due tie is, which haue the charge of other folke: namely, to pray to God to pitie such as shall haue offended. For it is not enough for such as haue publike charge to discharge their due tie to the worldewarde: but they must also turne vnto God. Wee see how the Apostles say that they must not onely preach the Gospell, but also giue themselves to prayer and supplication. Now, this belongeth to all the faithfull. For to pray vnto God is the chiefe ductie of our faith. And forasmuch as the Apostles had the chiefe charge of the Church: it behoued this calling vpon God, to belong chiefly vnto them. And that is the cause why Saint Paul sayth, that hee humbleth himselfe for the Corinthians: as who should say hee ought to beare the chastisement of their sin in his owne person. For inasmuch as God had set him ouer that Church, it behoued him to beare the chiefe burden vpon his shoulders. Therefore such as haue the charge of preaching Gods word and of teaching in the Church, must not onely employ themselves that way, but also to prayer. And chiefly when they see things go amisse, and disorders among the people: then ought they most specially to resorte vnto GOD, that he may prouide a remedie for it. This is the thing that is shewed vs by the example of Moses, in that it is sayd that hee taried not till the people resorted to God for mercie, but shewed them the way, as he whom God had appointed to beare the burthen of the people, and to procure their welfare.

Now let vs come to the forme of the prayer that Moses maketh. Lord God (saith he) desroy not the people of thine heritage who thou hast redeemed by thy mightie power & strong hand, out of the

1. Cor. 3. 4.

Land of Egypt. Besinke thy selfe of thy seruantes Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob: and haue not an eye to the stubbornesse of this people, nor to their wickednesse, nor to their offence. Here we see what it is that Moses allegeth vnto God: namely, his gracious fauour wherethrough he had chosen the offspring of Abraham. And so we see here a good rule for vs to keepe in praying vnto God: which is, that if we intende to obtain our requests at his hand, we must not presume vpon any thing that is in our felues, but rather alledge his own goodnesse which hee hath made vs to feele. As if we should say, Lord, go forward with thy work, thou hast begonne to call vs to thee, we bee as much beholden to thy goodnesse as is possible: therefore holde thou on thil, finish the thing that thou hast begun, and let not thy worke itay vnperfected, as it is saide in the hundredth and eight and thirtieth Psalm. And it is such a doctrine as we may gather, vpon all the prayers that are contained in the holy scripture.

Psal. 138.

Nowe whereas Moses saith thy people, and thine inheritance: he meant not that the people had purchased that dignitie themselves. It was a great honour that any one people of all mankinde should be called Gods inheritance. Deserued they to be in that estimation? Moses addeth immediatly, that there was nothing but stubbornesse, wickednesse, and sinne in them. It followeth then that all is to be referred to the free adoption, wherethrough God had chosen that people, as if hee should say, I will haue the house of Abraham to reigne ouer it, there will I dwell, that shall be my Church, there will I rest. God in so saying, had not respect whether the people were worthy of it or no: and it appeared by the effect, that they were a spitefull people: but whatsoever they were, God had made the said promise, which was not grounded vpon any deserts of man. The thing then that Moses letteth vs downe here, is this: Lord, haue mercy vpon thy people, and vpon thine heritage. And so, when we retort to God to craue forgiveness of our sinnes, let vs learne to make none other entrance to finde fauour and to be hearde, than by alledging the benifites that we haue erst receiued at his hande. That (say I) is the gate that we must enter at in praying vnto God. Albeit we haue offended him and be neuer so wretched sinners: yet notwithstanding inasmuch as hee hath chosen vs for his flocke, and vouchsafed to vtter himselfe to vs, and to giue vs assurance that hee is our father and fauour: we may presse familiarly vnto him, hauing so sure a pledge of his goodnesse. But yet let vs beware of presumption, that wee seeke not any thing in our felues wherewith to binde God vnto vs, for we bee vtterly void of any such thing: but let vs be contented to offer vnto him such things which we hold of him: and in doing him homage for his benefices, let vs take courage to call vpon him, assuring our felues that he will continue the still, & that as he hath shewed himselfe liberall towards vs heretofore, so he will giue vs assurance y he wil not faile vs hereafter. This in effect is the thing which we haue to remember in thus saying of Moses, where he calleth the Iewes Gods people and heritage.

Now he addeth, that God had brought them out of the Land of Egypt by his mightie power and with a strong hand, etc. to make it knowne that they were his inheritance, by a vifible token, and by the apparant effect of it. True it is that the people should haue grounded themselves vpon the promise: and Moses hath followed the same order here. For he saith not first, Lord, y haue brought vs out of Egypt, and afterward shew vs thy power when thou madest vs to passe through y wilderness: but he saith expresse, we be thy people and thine inheritance. And wherupon rested he: Vpon the promise, because God had spoken the word, saying, I will be the Sauour of thy lineage. But yet therewithall hee letteth not to alledge the saide deliuerance also, to proue that God counted that people for his heritage. For when God deliuered the Iewes out of Egypt, & reached them his hand to bring them out: wherof came it? It was as a sealing of the couenant that had beene made by worde of mouth. God (say I) did shewe as then, that the former promising vnto Abraham, that he would be the God of his lineage, was not in vaine. And for the same cause doth Moses set down both twaine of them here. He beginneth with the promise, and afterward addeth what ensued thereof: that is to wit the deliuerance, which was a sure warrant that he ment not to beguile his seruant Abraham, when he tolde him as I haue tolde you before. Wherefore let vs briefly beare in mind that if we intend to haue access vnto god to rest vpon his goodnes, we must beginne at his worde: and afterward we must also acknowledge the benefices that wee haue felt at his hande. And if we haue founde that hee hath not beguiled vs by his promises, it is as a former warrant whereby hee intendeth to confirme and assure vs the better. Loe heere a goodly matching, namely that wee yeelde such honour vnto Gods worde, as to trust assuredly thereunto: and therewithall that we be not thanklesse for the goodnesse which he hath shewed vs in deede, but make the same to serue vs as a president to ratifie our faith, to the ende that his worde haue the greater shewe and power in vs, and wee bee the more prouoked to call vpon him, not doubting at all but that wee shall finde him the same that hee hath shewed himselfe to be, euen to the ende. Thus yee see howe it behoueth vs to put the order in vre which Moses keepeth here, first in setting down Gods promise whereby he had adopted y people of Israel, & afterward in adding y he had deliuered them out of the lande of Egypt, thereby ratifying the thing that he had spoken to his seruant Abraham.

Gen. 17. 7.

Now he addeth that God should not haue an eye to the peoples stubbornesse, wickednesse, or offence. This is not added without cause. For when we come to pray God to performe his promise, and to bring the grace of his adoption to his ende: in the meane whyle our owne consciences vpbraid vs, so as wee see well that we be guilty before him: it is ynough to foreclose y way to our prayers. For when wee offend God, we breake his covenant as much as in vs lyes, and we stop him from performing of his promise. To be short, we deserue to be giuen ouer of the Lord, when wee keepe not faith and troth towards him. For this cause doth Moses say here, Lord haue not an eye to the stubbornnesse of this people. So then, it is not ynough for vs to pray God to goe through with the thing that he shall haue begun in vs, and to bring his grace to perfection: but wee must expresse pray him, that although he finde faultes and offences in vs, (as in dedde the number of them is infinite): yet that he forbear not to take vs still for his people: and that although we deserue to be forsaken of him for our finnes inasmuch as wee haue broken his covenant, yet notwithstanding hee cease not to keepe promise with vs still, and to make vs feele y fruit thereof, and to forgieue our finnes in such wise, as we may neuer cease to continue in his adoption: & that although our straying away was ynough to bereaue vs of the inheriting of our saluation, yet notwithstanding hee cease not to take vs for his children still. To be short, whensoever we resort vnto God, wee must acknowledge our sins with all humilitie. For it will be to no purpose for vs to say, Lord thou hast promised vs, thou hast tolde vs that thou of thy goodnesse wilt bee merciful to vs, thou hast declared that thou wilt bee our father, wee haue thy promise: it will not boote vs to say all these things: for all shall bee ouerthrowen with one worde, because wee haue done amisse, and haue not kept the course wherunto God called vs, but haue drawn cleane backe. Therefore we be warned, that whensoever we pray vnto God, wee must acknowledge our faultes, and confesse them freely, that God may not cease to haue pitie vpon vs, specially when wee shall haue committed any grosse fault, as this people had done in committing abominable ydolatrie. The greater then that our finnes bee, the more let vs cast downe and humble our selues, to craue pardon of our God by confessing wherein we haue offended him. After that manner must we deale. And it is certaine, that if euerie of vs consider well his owne life without flatterie, he shall finde himself exceedingly indaungered vnto God, and we shall alway haue good cause to be ashamed of our selues. And therefore when we pray, let vs beare these two things in remembrance: namely, that although we be neuer so wretched, yet notwithstanding so much as God hath chosen vs for his people, wee must come to him familiarly and without doubting, for he guideth vs thither and openeth vs y gate by his promise, & that must be our grounde to stande vpon. Again, we must bethinke vs of our finnes, so as we may feele them & be deadly wounded by them, to the ende we may be forie for them before God, & beseech him (notwithstanding our vnworthines) to apply his promises to our saluation, when it shall haue pleased him to bury our finnes & to receiue vs to mercy. Yea & let vs mark well y wordes y are set downe here, the stubbornnes of the people, their wickednes, and their sin. For Moses here maketh not a ceremoniuous confession as the shamelesse doe: that is to say, in manner the greater part, when they haue done amisse, do beare themselves in hand, that it is ynough to haue saide in one worde, I grant it is a fault: but ye must consider I am a mā, I am not as a timberlog. It is ynough for them (say I) that they excuse not the selues altogether. But wee must come after another fashion, as we see by example here. For first of all Moses setteth downe Stubbornnes: shewing thereby that there was a horrible rebeliounes in that people. Next he addeth wickednes: wherein he betokeneth y the people were starke naught: for y word that he vttereth, importeth such a leawdnes, that they which are so termed are disordered in their whole life. And lastly he addeth Sinne, that is to say y particular fault which they had committed, namely their offence in making themselves an ydol. And so we see that hee acknowledgeth the peoples offences in good earnest, to condemne them.

Nowe like as Moses speaketh here of the people: so do we see that Daniel speaketh of himself, in his report howe hee confessed his own sins and the finnes of the people, he saith, Lord we haue sinned, we haue offended thee, we haue done wickedly, we be transgressors, our finnes are outragious, and our iniquities are exceeding great. Daniel goeth not to worke by halues, in confessing that himselfe and the rest of the people had done amisse and deserued to be chastised at Gods hande: but he saith flatly, we be wicked and we haue behaueu our selues leawdly, we haue bene disobedient and vntreue to our God, we haue prouoked his wrath too much, and wee be cursed and damned, vnlesse God poure out y infinite treasures of his mercy vpon vs. Yee see then how the true confession which God requireth at our handes, is not to come to him and to say in one worde, I haue done amisse: but to be so abashed as to acknowledge our selues blameworthy in all respects, and to be dismayed at the remembrance of our offences, like wretched offenders not looking to haue our inditements red vnto vs, not to haue articles alledged against vs, but accusing our selues aforhand in such sort, as God may accept our submission when wee shall haue examined our faults thoroughly, not onely in generall but also in particular. And in verie dedde, after that Moses had spoken of Stubbornnesse and wickednes: he addeth the Offence that y people had committed. Whereby hee meaneth that it is not ynough to say, we were conceiued in sinne, it is horrible to see howe all things are out of order in our whole life: but when we haue offended God any manner of way, we must vtter it, as we see howe Dauid cōfesseth generally y there was nothing in him but vtter corruptiō, and y he brought nothing w him from his mothers womb buty inheriting of death, & therwall faileth not to confesse y sin particular which he had committed, not wrapping it vp amōg y other to make as though hee wist not of it: but setting down both twaine of the, as we see y Moses doth in this text. Wherefore when wee shall haue committed any offence, let vs leaue to feele it, & to confesse it freely before God. And let the same lead vs yet

Dan. 9. 50

further: that is to wit, to haue an eye to the offences of our whole life, and to acknowledge our felues altogether indangered vnto God, except hee receiue vs to mercie. And about all things, let vs acknowledge the hardnesse of our heartes, in that wee cannot submit our felues to God because wee be stubborn against him, and all the affections of our flesh are at enmitie with him. After that manner (say I) must wee confesse our faults, if we munde to obtaine forgiveness of them. For as for them y come to God ceremoniously, confessing the felues to haue done anittle; and not being touched to the quicke with their leawdnesse, nor minding to acknowledge it in their heartes: they doe but play mockeholyday, and they shall feele with whom they haue to do, and that God is not an earthly iudge that can be deceued when men craue pardon feynedly. And therefore when we pray vnto God, let euerie of vs quicken vp himselte in acknowledging our faults better than we haue bin wont to do: & let the same fo pull vs downe, as wee may not wote what to say, but thus, Alas Lord what should become of vs if it were not for thine inestimable mercie: For behold, wee be euen as it were vterly ouerwhelmed: and though we knewe but the hundredth part of the offences that wee haue committed, surely it were ynough to sinke vs downe to the bottomlesse pit, vnlesse thou remedy it. And as for thee that iudget after a farre other fashion: howe should we be able to stand in thy presence, if thou wouldst vse thy rigour towards vs? Loe here the right lowlinesse which God commaundeth: which is, that when wee be so ahamed of our sinnes as we wote not what to say, wee flee for refuge to Gods mercy hoping y howe focuer the case stand, he of his great goodnesse will not refuse to take vs to mercie.

Nowe to the ende that Moses may obtaine his request, hee beseecheth God expressly to bee mindfull of his seruants Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: and that was by reason of the couenant that he had made with them, for in the same couenant there was this article, I will be thy God and the God of thy seede after thee. Yee see here howe God took the children of Abraham before they were borne, adopting them to beehis Church, and to be inherietors not onely of the Lande of Chanaan, but also of the kingdome of heauen. But how doe the children of Abraham behaue themselues? Leawdly. They falsifie their faith vnto God and become backefliders, so as they deserue to be cut off from his house. Lorde (saith Moses) haue not an eye to their faultes and offences, but bee mindfull of thy couenant which thou madest with thy seruants Abraham Isaac, and Jacob. Nowe wee see to what purpose Moses alledgeth here the holy Patriarks. It is not to make them Aduocates and Patrons before God as the Papistes doe, who alledge these textes to proue their owne forgeries of hauing the saints to beehis intercessors. What, say they? Is it not written that God should bee mindfull of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and yet they were deade long afore? Seeing that the fathers vsed such speech, why should not the sancts alreadie deceafed be made patrons and aduocates, to make intercession for them that are alieue? Surely this cometh of too grosse beastliness. For they consider not in what manner Moses alledgeth these persons. I haue tolde you it afore: for God had promised them that hee would beehis fauour of their Image, and had giuen them his promise as a pledge, not only on their own behalfe, but also for all their successours. And that is y cause why Jacob at his death or a little before, said, let my name be called vpon ouer Ephraim and Manasses, for his meaning was to make two tribes of them, notwithstanding that they had both but one heade, that is to wit Ioseph first of al, & he intended that he should haue a double portion. Why for Iacob was in Egypt, not onely as a poore straunger like to haue starued for hunger if he had not come thither: but also as a man shken off in forme & disdain. It is manifest that the Egyptians shunned the Iewes, and accounted them as vnclene people. Neuertheless although Iacob had not any house of his owne, but was there as a slave & banished thither as into an odde nooke of y realm: yet notwithstanding hee assigneth a double portion to Epliraim and Manasses. But [in so doing] hee had an eye to the promise that God had made to him. That is the cause why hee saeth, Let my name be called vpon ouer them, and let them be taken and esteemed as two of mine owne children. According hereunto it is saide, that God should remember Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, as wee see in Exodus, where God intending to acquaint himselfe with his people, alledgeth the same for a preface: as if he should say, I haue bounde my selte in the hande of Abraham. And therby he fendeth them back to the promise as it was made and set downe in Genesis, where God saide, that in the ende of four hundred yeares, after they had bene oppressed with grieuous tyranny, he would deliuer them. Nowe then, it is not to be doubted, but that Moses alledgeth of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, is to y end that God should performe his couenant in deede, and not cease to be constant in his purpose and in discharging of his promise, notwithstanding the wickednes of me. And so wee see howe the Papistes haue falsly abused the holy scripture, yea & shewed themselues to sh melesse and fond, that euen thiled children may perceiue their beastliness. Wherefore we ought so litle to be moued with these texts: that they do rather make wholly against them. And so yette why Moses alledgeth Abraham, Isaac, & Iacob. He groundeth himselte vpon Gods word.

Likewise when we pray, before we open our mouth wee must be taught of God, hee must direct vs by his worde, for we cannot call vpon him rightly, except hee haue first preuented vs and called vs to him, so as wee bee sure that hee will heare vs. For as for the man that doubteth and stoteth like the waues of the sea (saith Sainct James), let him not looke to obtaine any thing. So then our prayers boote vs not at all, without certaintie of faith. Now let vs see whence wee may gette such certaintie of faith Surely euen by Gods worde, and that is it that Moses hath followed. Hee knewe the promise that had proceeded out of Gods mouth, wherupon he resteth, & thet upon maketh mention of Abraham Isaac & Jacob. And why? For it was they that had receiued the promise, as well in their owne behalfe, as in the behalfe of their successors. But now doe we see that we haue a Mediator to ratifie the new couenant that God hath made with vs. Before Iesus Christ came into the world, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were as mediators after a sort, because they receiued the promise in the name of the whole Church. But now God sendeth vs backe to his only sonne, in whose person it is his will to ratifie all that euer he had promised. How then shall we haue any certaintie, except we repaire to our Lord Iesus Christ, and pray to God his father to remember him, & not to looke at vs, as in verie deede the auncient fathers haue shewed vs the good way already in the time of the shadows, although they had not the truth so fully as we haue it in the Gospell: For since the time that the kingdome was settled in the house of David, and this promise made, He shall be my son: we see that the fathers prayed after this manner: Lord looke vpon the countenance of thy Christ or thine anointed. But thy spake of Davids successors. It is true: Howbeit so far as that temporall kingdome was a figure of the kingdome that is prepared for vs in the person of our Lord Iesus Christ: the auncient fathers looked thereat as it were to behold Iesus Christ in a glasse. Now then seeing the sonne of God is come, & hath tolde vs that hee to whom we must repaire: what excuse wil there be for vs, if we rouse heere and there, and seeke other mediators to resort vnto? Is it not a bereauing of Gods sonne, or his office? yes: for hee is not as was Abraham, or as was David, and all his lineage: but hee is the true high priest which hath appeased Gods wrath towards vs. And hee hath not onely receiued the couenant, so as he may say that God hath tolde him that hee will accept all such as submit themselves vnto him: but he hath also ratified the same couenant with his owne blood: that is the seale which he hath set vnto it. Then if men will not be contented with such confirmation of Gods promises as is made in the person of his sonne: is it not a treading of his bloud vnder foote to the vttermost of their power, and a striking to make it of none effect? Yes: and so we see that this text is so little able to arme the Papists, that it doth rather condemne them of vthankfulness before God, in that they haue (to the vttermost of their power) disabled the grace that was brought them by the sonne of God, and not considered that Gods adopting of vs was in his hand and by his means, who hath accomplished Gods promises in such wise by his bloud: as we may assure our selues of them without any doubting. Therefore let vs mark well that whensoever we seeke any patrons and aduocates, it is an abolishing of the death & passion of our Lord Iesus Christ, and therewithall an vtter disauiling of all Gods promises, which ought to be sprinkled with his blood, ac-

ording as we see howe it was commaunded in the Lawe, that the booke should be besprinkled with the bloud of the solempne sacrifice that was to be offered. When a sacrifice was to be offered, the blood of it was to be refused, & sprinkled vpon the tabernacle, vpon the altar, and vpon the booke of the Law: to doe vs to wit, that there is none other meane to assure vs of Gods promises, than by the besprinkling of them with the bloud of our Lord Iesus Christ. For as for such as tunne gadding after their owne imaginations, saying we must haue such a patron and such an aduocate: they (as much as in them lyeth) so drayne and drie vp the bloud of Gods sonne, as it may gye no more force to the promises to assure vs of our saluation.

Furthermore let vs make that the Papistes haue in all respects defaced the office of our Lord Iesus Christ. For by their making of the saintes to be their patrons & aduocates, they haue also made the same as good as mediators, so as we should obtaine faueur at Gods hand by their meanes. They say not onely Lorde heare the prayer of such a one or such a one: but also, for his prayers sake or for his deserts sake. But both these things belong peculiarly to our Lord Iesus Christ. For to seeke to the merits or deserts of men, is to stay vpon a crased or broken reede, and that is the next way to make vs tumble downe, yea and that is as the flouers of a reede that will also wound vs besides our falling. Wherefore let vs vnderstand, that in so doing wee forsake the sonne of God and bereaue him of his office.

Againe, as touching prayer and supplication, it is true that we ought to pray one for another as long as wee liue vpon the earth: and we haue seene the example thereof in Moses: yea and we haue seene it in such wise, as sufficeth to shewe vs that our prayers are not vaine nor vnprofitable, but that God maketh them available and heareth them, when wee pray one for another: Howbeit, that is but while we be alie. Moreouer, if wee fall to seeking of patrones and aduocates vpon our owne heades, without any warrant of holy scripture: it is too great a despising of God. For wee followe not the manner of praying which God hath ordeyned, and therefore it is a diuinish malapertnesse for men to presume to enter into the kingdome of heauen, there to appoint officers, as though God had made them Lord great masters there. Nowe then let vs learne that wee must let our Lord Iesus Christ alone with the office of aduocate, that hee may be our spokesman for vs, & giue vs access & means to be accepted at Gods hand. Moreouer, we must not imagine any meriting or deserving in any mortall creature, no euen in the Angels of heaue, but we receiue the meriting of Iesus Christ, which thing was not in the holy Patriarks, nor in David, nor in any of his successors, for God adopted them freely. But it was his will that in Iesus Christ our finnes should be wiped out, and our debts discharged, and by his obedience might our sinnes should be purchased vnto vs. That therefore is the thing that wee must resort vnto.

Wherefore let vs learne , that if the fathers of olde tme, when they minded to obtaine fauour at Gods hand,alleged Abraham,Isaac,and Iacob,and consequently Dauid in his order , becaufe he was ordained to be a figure of our Lord Iesus Christ:if this were vfed in the time that things were yet darke: wee ought to take good heede that wee fwawe not to the right hand nor to the left,nor that God hath revealed himfelfe fully vnto vs:but that we direct our faith to Iesus Christ, affuring our felues that for his sake God his father hath adopted vs, and liketh well of vs by his meanes , and graunteth vs our requestes. Besides this, forasmuch as ſcripture faith that he is giue vs to be our aduocate, that he maketh intercession for vs, and that for his sake we may rest vpon Gods mercie : Let vs not doubt but he will shewe himfelfe fauourable vnto vs. Seeing that the scripture fatereth these things vppon Iesus Christ, let vs beware that wee rob him not of them, and that we play not the Papistes, who by their praying to their Hefaincts & Shefants, doe well shewe that Iesus Christ sufficeth them not, and that becaufe they pretende the name of God, they prouoke his vengeance more and more against them. We see also howe God hath blinded them & giuen them vp to a hellish rage, so as they thinke it not ynough to say, These are our patrons and aduocates: but also they make no difference betwene God, and a faint that they haue forged of their owne braine. For they say, Our father which art in heauen, as wel kneeling before a puppet, as if they spake to GOD himselfe. But yet howe make they their prayers? I shall not neede to speake heere, neither of the Apostles nor of the Prophetes: for they haue faints which neuer were in the world. And although they take the prophets and Apostles, yet they pray to them as to God , and with the same speech and stile. We see then that they are vterly brutish, and that God hath giuen them vp to a reprobate sense. And it is good reason, becaufe they haue robbed Christ of his dignitie wherein God his father had set him, and are not contented with him as with their only aduocate and intercessor, but are run astray here & there. Therefore it is meete that God should withdraw himfelfe from them and forsake them, that they might fall into such extremitie as wee see they be talne into. Wherefore let vs for our part beware that wee hold fast the simplicitie which the scripture sheweth vs: that is to wit, that in calling vpon God, we haue our eye vpon our Lorde Iesus Christ: and againe that in as much as God hath stablished his couenit for euer in his name, we doubt not but that we be heard as oft as wee come vnto God by him, and that he is mercifull vnto vs.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our sins, praying him to make vs feele them ſ better, that we may acknowledge them rightly both with heart & mouth, and bee brought to true amendment, & be so humbled, ſy by glorifying him as he is worthy , and by acknowledging what goodnes he vseth towards vs, we may be prouoked to serue him with the better corage: and he beare with vs in our infirmities as long as we be in this worlde, & he haue made vs partakers of his endlesse glorie . That it may please him to grant this grace, not only to vs, &c.

THe same time the Lorde saide, cut thee two tables of stone like the first, and come vp to mee into the mountaine, and make thee an Arke of wood.

2 And I will write in those Tables, the wordes that were written in the former tables, which thou hast broken: and thou shalt put them in the Arke.

3 So I made an Arke of Setimwood, and hewed two tables like the first, and went vp into the mountaine, hauing the two tables in my hande:

4 Then wrote he in the Tables as he had written afore, euen the tenne sayings which the Lorde had spoken vpon the mountaine, from the middes of the fire in the day of your comming together . And afterwarde the Lorde gaue them to me,

5 And I turned me, and went downe from the hill, and put them into the Ark which I had made: and they were there as the Lord had commaunded me.

6 And the children of Israel departed from Beroth of the children of Iaacan towards Mosera, where Aaron died, and was buried there. And Eleazar his sonne executed the office of high priest in his stead.

8 The same time the Lord sorted out the tribe of Leuic, to beare the Arke of the Lords couenant, and to stande in the Lords presence, to minister vnto him, and to blesse in his name, euen to this day.

of stone: & that was done to the end y the people should the better consider, that the couenant which God had made with them, was of his own onely mercy. For we see how God had giuen ouer y people and it was all one as if he had thrust them into the commo aray of other men, which are vtterly accursed and estranged from God. Truly Gods former choosing of y people, was of his owne free goodnes. For (as we haue seen) none of them was yet borne, when he made his promise with his seruant Abraham: & therefore needes must they acknowledge y his choosing of them, was not in respect of any desert of their owne. Howbeit forasmuch as men labour al that they can, to darken Gods free fauor, & seeke pretie fond deuises to chalenge to themselves some peece of their own saluation: it was expedient to haue it fully shewed, y God receiued y people to mercy againe the second time, without any respect whether they were worthe of it or no, but onely of his owne mere goodnesse. Men are of opinion, y when God chose them, he foresawe what maner of ones they should be, accordingly as we see how this diuelish errour hath alwayes raigned, and y there are yet still some fantastical perions, which wil needes haue Gods election to be grounded vpon his foreknowldege, y is to say, when God chose whom he list before the making of y world, they fall to glosing thereupon, y he foreknew who should be worthy of it, & therefore marked them out for the same purpose, and in the same respect preferred them before those whom he knew would become wicked. But y is cleane contrarie to y teaching of the holy scripture. For y teacheth vs, y the cause of Gods choosing of vs is taken from out of himself, y is to say, of his owne onely free goodnes: for he shal neuer finde any thing in vs, why he shold be inclined to loue vs. Howbeit to the end y this may be the better perceiued in the things which God hath shewed vs in the people of Israel: he chose y ofspring of Abraham. And wherefore? Abraham was a stille soule, he had neither nobilitie nor worship in him, he was not of any great reputation to the worldward: & yet notwithstanding God marked him out, & chose him alone & his household fro all others. And what maner of household was it? Was there yet any likelyhood in it? Nay. Abraham was yet childlesse, hee was barrain, hee was vtterly past hope of cuer hauing any issue. Now then Gods choosing of Abraham, was when he was as a blocke alreadie dead aforsaid: and therefore S. Paule saith, y in the person of Abraham, God shewed y he chose the things which are not, of purpose to giue them being. And for y same cause it is said in the first Chapter of y first Epistle to the Corinthians, y we be of God, that is to say, y he giueth vs being vnto saluation, because he hath vouchsafed to choose vs: for we be nothing at all in our selues. Yet notwithstanding, this people made great account of themselves, & bare themselves in hand that they were better than al y world. For the which cause, the couenant & adoption y God had made with that lineage was broken off: & so ye see that the people of Israel were reiecte at Gods hands. Yea & we worthy were they to be abhorred, in somuch y this sentence of condemnation was alreadie giuen vpon them, that they should bee rooted out of y world, & the remembrance of them be vtterly destroyed. So little cause then had the children of Israel to make any boast of themselves, or to take vpon them about the heathē: y they were thrust beneath them, and vtterly disclaimed and condemned at Gods hand, as whom hee shewed to haue nothing else but curse dñesse in them. Now therefore it behoueth them to knowe: y whereas God giueth them his Law, & teacheth them, & performeth his promise: towards them: all this is done of so high & infinite fauor, as ought in manner to make them astonished. For what a thing was it, y God after y breaking of y tables of his couenant, did yet still vouchsafe to haue pity vpon y wretched people? Beholde, the two tables were not writte by mans hand, but by gods had, y is to say by his power: & y was a miracle. And what shal a man say to it, y Gods own workmanship should be defaced? Was it not meete that y people which were the cause thereof, should haue perished vtterly? If we make cōparison betwene Gods word, & mens saluation: surely Gods word is far y preciouiser. But behold, y word of God y is written, I meanc y writing y was set down in y two tables of stone, came as it were from heaue, & was not y workmanship of man: God himselfe wrought it of his own power. What punishment then ought they to receiue, which committed so great and heinous a fault, as y the thing which God had ingrauen with his own hand, was faine to be broken & brought to nought for it? We see then y God magnified his inestimable goodnes towards this people, in y he vouchsafed y the two tables should be made new againe, and that his law should be registred in them new againe, as a perpetuall monument that he was the protector of Abrahams linage, & intended to keepe them to himself for his own flock. Therefore it is not without cause, that Moses maketh mention here of his making of the two tables new againe, & of his offering of them vnto God, & of the writing of the ten comandements in them. Surely, it was a thing worthie of remembrance, & wherein mé ought to exercise theselues day & night, to know y<sup>e</sup> God hauing entred freely in league with y<sup>e</sup> one house, was not contented with that alone, but although their succedours became a frowarde and crabbed nation, vterly rebellious & as full of shameful churlthines as might be: yet he ceased not to continue his couenant, yea, & moreover to renew it againe with them, & to set it in the former state.

And herein we see y<sup>e</sup> he had not an eye to mé, nor to their worthines, but wil haue thé to think themselues beholden to him for all things: inasmuch that he ouercommeth al y<sup>e</sup> lewdnes & frowardnes of men by his goodnes, adopting euen those to be of his house & to be his heirs, which shew themselues vnworthie of the good that he had done for them. That is the thing which we haue to beare in mind. And we must marke that Moses spake not for his own time onely; but that the same doctrine toucheth vs as much or more at this day, than euer it did them: specially if wee can consider the likenes y<sup>e</sup> is betwene vs & the people of old time. In deede we haue not nowadays the law written in tables of stone; but we haue Gods grace much largelier towards vs, & which deserueth to be much more highly esteemed, because we be sure that he taketh vs for his church, & wil haue vs to be ruled by him. Now let vs see whence this proceedeth, & what is y<sup>e</sup> cause thereof. True it is y<sup>e</sup> if we haue an eye to y<sup>e</sup> things y<sup>e</sup> were giuen vs in our father Adam, we be creatures shaped after the image of God. But we (to y<sup>e</sup> vtermost of our power) haue defaced Gods image in vs, & wee be so marred & corrupted by original sin, that God disclaimeth vs, & we be not worthe to be counted his creatures: & yet for all that, he vouchsafeth to gather vs to himself. For in baptime we haue gods couenant ingrauen as it were in our bodies; whereby he doth vs to vnderstand, y<sup>e</sup> he vouchsafeth to take vs for his people & inheritance. Now haue we any worthines wherby to attaine to so great a benefite? Alas, nor for we be gilty aforehand of y<sup>e</sup> defacing of gods image. True it is y<sup>e</sup> that cometh of y<sup>e</sup> roote of y<sup>e</sup> first man: but yet are not we our selues faultles. Againe, how haue we withdrawn our selues fró God, euen after baptime? for we haue not onely comitted small fautes, as befalleth to y<sup>e</sup> faithfull to do: but also in the time of our idolatrie & superstition, we haue brought to nothing al y<sup>e</sup> grace that was promised vs in baptime, we haue renounced the saluation that was purchased vs by our Lord Iesus Christ, we haue forsaken our god, & we haue broken the spirituall wedlocke which hee had contracted with vs, so as there hath bin nothing in vs but corruption, by gadding away so after our own superstitions: & yet for all this, he hath not failed to returne vnto vs, & to bring vs back againe into the way of saluation. Sith we see this, ought it not to be a sufficient prooffe of Gods infinit goodnes towards vs, to make vs lay away al fond imagination of deseruing, & to acknowledge our selues beholden to God for all things? Yes: & it is the same thing y<sup>e</sup> I alledged eue now out of S. Pauls sayings, where God sheweth vs, y<sup>e</sup> we be of him, not in respect that we be men, but in respect y<sup>e</sup> we be his workmanship, according as it is shewed in the second to the Ephesians, y<sup>e</sup> he hath shaped vs: for otherwise there is nothing but wickednes in vs, because our nature wil alwayes be found to be vterly frowarde & accursed. Thus ye see y<sup>e</sup> comparison which we ought to make betwene our selues & the people of olde time, to bring our selues low & to make our selues perceiue y<sup>e</sup> wee be the more bound vnto God for y<sup>e</sup> free mercie which he hath bestowed vpon vs, in vouchsafing to take vs to be of his Church, in which respect we be (say I) more bound vnto him than were the Iewes.

Now it is true y<sup>e</sup> gods writing of his law in two tables of stone (as I haue declared already heretofore specially in the first place) was to y<sup>e</sup> intent y<sup>e</sup> his doctrine should abide fure. For he had an eye to y<sup>e</sup> comon trade among men, who vpon the making of leags & alliances, are wont to haue thé ingrauen in stone or brasle. After y<sup>e</sup> same maner it was Gods wil y<sup>e</sup> his law should, for y<sup>e</sup> better continuance therof, be grauen in two stones. Ye see then how God doth as it were passe a solemne couenant. Neuertheless we must therewithall also come to the figure: namely, y<sup>e</sup> the writing of the law after y<sup>e</sup> fashion in a cuple of stones, serued to shew y<sup>e</sup> it was not ynough for folke to haue y<sup>e</sup> law giuen thé, & to vnderstand it: vnlesse it were ingrauen in their hearts. For we must come to y<sup>e</sup> similitude y<sup>e</sup> is made by y<sup>e</sup> prophets. For although God shewed his law to be sufficiently authorized by vouchsafing to ingraue it so in these stones: yet did he giue an incling y<sup>e</sup> that would nothing boote, verily because y<sup>e</sup> true tables wherein it behoueth vs to write the doctrine of God, are our harts; shewbeit not as they be by nature. For what maner of ones are they? Eue of stone as it is said of them in Ezechiel. So then, let vs marke that y<sup>e</sup> letter of y<sup>e</sup> law is nothing worth, vntil god worke in vs by his holy spirit. And that is the cause why he hath promised to make a newe couenant, not after the maner y<sup>e</sup> hee made it with the fathers: for, that continued not, saith he. And why? Hee sheweth y<sup>e</sup> the blame & fault therof is in men, because they turne away & runne at rouers as soon as God hath called them, & neuer follow him at all. Although they pretend to make great account of his grace: yet is there no stedinesse in them, but rather vter lightnesse; for by and by they sling away after their own wicked affectiōs. The couenant of God then, yea though it were written in stones, could not hold them in. And why so? Not for that God abode not faithfull on his part, or that hee persisted not to shewe that his choosing of Abrahams linage was not in vaine: but for that they were bereft & dilappointed of that great benefite, & dispossessed of Gods freebestowed blessing, through their owne vnfaithfulness. And therefore it is requisite that God should speake to vs after another fashion: that is to wit, that he should not only write his law with his owne hand in stones, but also write it in our hearts, by correcting the hardnesse that is in the of nature, and also by making them fleshie harts, so as they may be loft & supple to receiue y<sup>e</sup> ingrauing which he shal put into them. Ye see then that the thing which we haue to beare in mind, if we intend to fare the better by this present storie, is that like as Moses acknowledged himselfe exceedingly bound vnto his God for the fauour which he had shewed to his people: so ought we also to bethinke vs, how abundantly God hath vttered the treasures of his goodnes towards vs. For not only we are accused by nature: but also we haue forsaken him after his adopting of vs, & wee haue not made account of him as of our father. And yet for all this, he hath reached vs his hand, & set vs in our former state againe; & he hath not only taken vs into his fauour againe, & giuen vs his worde to teache vs thereby, nor only deliuered vs his law written in y<sup>e</sup> two stones; but he hath also reformed & softened our harts, so that whereas erst there was nothing but hardnesse in them, he hath now drawn them to obedience, to receiue quietly things that are told vs in his name, at leastwise if wee be his. For all they to whom the Gospell is preached, are not of y<sup>e</sup> number. But let euery of vs examin himself, & we shal perceiue y<sup>e</sup> God in sending his Gospell to be preached vnto vs, is ready & forward to giue vs his grace, if we our selues be not the let. True it is y<sup>e</sup> his Election doth alwayes beare sway: but yet do not men faile to be in the fault, if the Gospell profit the not, accordingly as S. Paul declareth y<sup>e</sup> duell must needs haue blinded our eyes, if we see not y<sup>e</sup> light that shineth there, seing y<sup>e</sup> image of God sheweth it selfe there so evidently. Wherefore let vs marke, y<sup>e</sup> if Moses vpbraided the Iewes, (& that iustly) with the vnthankfulness whereof they were guilty: much more ought we now to cast down our eyes, & to stand in awe, & to be vtterly abashed before God. And in y<sup>e</sup> same respect, we haue more cause to magnifie the grace of our God, than had the auncient fathers, which were in the time that the law was written but only in two tables of stone.

Furthermore we haue to marke the figure y<sup>e</sup> is comprehended vnder these words, Make thee two tables smooth & bring them to mee. For thereby god sheweth the order & right maner of proceeding to be wel taught at his hand: namely y<sup>e</sup> wee must bring y<sup>e</sup> tables polished or made smooth for him to write his law in, & y<sup>e</sup> afterward he must write in them. True it is, that we cannot do this of our own selmouing, but he must direct vs there to by his holy spirit. Notwithstanding, it is to be noted, that God bestoweth two distinct graces vpon vs. The one is in preuenting vs, to the intent wee should be readie and forward to yeelde him obedience: and the other is in enlightening vs, and in giuing vs a present affection to serue him as soone as wee knowe his will. This would be dark, if it were not opened more at large: but I hope that anon it shalbe verie easie to vs.

Before men are brought to the faith, and before they be acquainted with the doctrine of the Gospell to be ridde of all ignorance: they may haue some good preparatiue aforehande to say, Alas I woulde faine giue care to my God, let him but onely shewe mee his good pleasure, and lo I am readie to embrace it, so as hee shal leade mee whither he will. Let him but laye the bridle on my necke, or raine mee one way or other, & I will followe him and submit my selfe to him with all obedience. Such disposition is to be seene in sile ignorant soules, before God haue thoroughly instructed them. They haue not faith, but an entrance vnto faith, in asmuch as they are prepared to submit themselves to whatsoever God shal command them. Nowe cometh this inuouing, of men, or of their own nature: No, it is of Gods working in their hearts, who maketh y<sup>e</sup> preparation thereby by the grace of his holy spirit. For by nature we can no skill but to goe clean contrarie to Gods wil And although men haue some deuotion, & make pretence there of: yet is all but hypocritic, there is no truth nor foundnes in them. Therefore whosoever we feele any good forwardnes to serue God: it is of his own working in vs, & it is he that giueth vs that grace. In decde it is said here, Bring mee the two tables & let them be hewen smooth with thy hande. This charge was giuen to Moses. And what then? Can he do it of himselfe: No, but because God hath taught him aforehande, and prepared him to the doing thereof. Ye see then that that is one grace which God bestoweth: and yet neuertheless, God sheweth vs that it is our dutie to do it, though wee cannot do it of our owne ability, that is to saye, though wee be not giuen to do it of our owne selfmouing, or power. For looke what is our dutie to doe, it is good right that God should require it. Therefore let vs learne, that to profite well in Gods doctrine, wee must bring smoothe or plaine tables. For why? Wee see that most men haue rough and rugged myndes, so as nothing can be written vpon them.

True it is, that they will resort to Sermons. But what for that? They be forepossest with their owne lowde lustes: they be so bemýred in them, as is horrible to see: and againe, they be full of thornes, there is nothing but vice and vncleannesse in them: all is so out of order, that a man cannot tell howe to write one letter in them. Yee shall see othersome which haue had their cares sufficiently beaten, and the Gospell hath bene preached to them all their life long: and yet are they nothing the better for it, because they bring not smoothe tables with them, that is to say, they be not disposed to receiue Gods worde. Thus yee see what wee haue to gather, vpon Gods commaunding of Moses to make the two tables smoothe.

Now if we intend to profite well in Gods doctrine, wee must not haue our hartes like rough-hewen stones, where no writing can be discerned, but all shalbe blurred doe y<sup>e</sup> writer what hee can:

2. Cor. 3:3

2. Cor. 4:3-4

can: but we must haue our harts smoothed, that is to say, quite & cleane rid from all impediments that may hinder our obedience towards God. And for as much as we haue not that of nature: we must pray God to be so gracious vnto vs, as to make vs able to smooth our hearts so well, as we may rid them of all vices & corruptions, and meeken the sturdines that is in vs, when wee see our felues drag cleane backe from the wil of our God; so as we may haue a desire to ouercome & subdue the same. The hammers & chisels which we must vse to polish our harts withal, are these: namely, to mislike of our sinnes & to be grieued at them, & thereupon to condemne our felues, & to exercise our felues in so doing: for euery of vs must enforce & compel himselfe by violence to stoop vnto God, & we must hold on in so doing, what hardnes & gainestriuing soeuer wee meete withal, so as al y<sup>e</sup> losstinesse of our heartes must be pulled down, y<sup>e</sup> nothing may hinder gods ingrauing of his doct<sup>r</sup>in in them afterward. And when our Lord hath once begun after y<sup>e</sup> maner, he will go through with it, so as he will teach vs his wil, & we shal profit in it daily more & more. And so we see y<sup>e</sup> the beginning of our faith, is the said obedientnes wherethrough men offer and yeld vp themselves in sacrifice, as if they should say, Alas Lord, it is true that I am a silly ignorant soule, yea & a verie beast, for I knowe no reason nor wisdom, but I flee vnto thee, that thou maist direct & gouerne mee by thy holy spirit. Lo here (say I) the signe y<sup>e</sup> we be wel disposed aforehand, & this disposednes is as a white vnwritten paper. For if a man bring a black & foule fullyed paper, or which is bedawbed & besoulered with myre, & say, I would faine be taught, I pray you write me a sample vpon this paper: it is a flat mockery: for the paper is berayed, & a man cannot write any thing vpon it y<sup>e</sup> can be discerned. But if a mā bring cleane paper, & say, I submit my selfe to you, I beseech you shew me what I haue to do: y<sup>e</sup> is a good forwardnesse. Or rather to come nether the similitude which we haue nowe presently in hande, (that is to wit, the couenant which God hath made with vs) if a man intending to bargain with another man, should say, Go to, to the intent ye may vnderstand y<sup>e</sup> I am willing to yeld to all reason; lo, here is a blanke, write what you will & I agree to it. If a man say so & speake truly, he sheweth y<sup>e</sup> his intent is to deale dutifully wth the partie with whome he hath to do. But if another bring a peece of paper imbewed with mire & say, write what you list, I admit it for good: doth he not giue to vnderstande that he intendeth to breake the whole bargain, & y<sup>e</sup> he is vnworthie to once open his lippes, as one that purposeth not to stand to any reason at all? So then let vs bring white paper to God, that is to say, obedientnes to submit our felues vnto him. Although we vnderstand not his will: yet is that y<sup>e</sup> entrance of our faith. For then doth God traينه vs forward to write his worde in our heartes, so as we be thoroughly instructed afterward. Ye see the that God vouchsafeth a double grace vpon vs: first, in that he prepareth our heartes to come vnto him to receiue his doct<sup>r</sup>in; & secondly in that he teacheth & enlighteneth our heartes by his holy spirit, framing our heartes & affections aright, to the end we should be fashioned like vnto his glorie, & y<sup>e</sup> his speaking shoulde not bee to our eares only, but much rather to our hearts. So haue we thereupon to conclud, (as I haue saide alreadie) y<sup>e</sup> we shal neuer attaine to faith, except we haue the said obedientnes aforehand. And y<sup>e</sup> is the cause why so fewe beleue nowadayes, for they be full of pride, they thrust God away from them, so as he can by no meanes come at them: they take pritch against his worde, & resist his truth, holding seorne of their owne profite & welfare. Therefore we must vnderstande, that to be true scholers vnto God, the end that wee must begin at, must be teachablenes. And when we be once in that mind, we must suffer him to teache vs, so as he may ingraue his learning in our heartes.

By the way wee haue to marke also, that it is not for vs to make or frame lawes to seque God withal, but that we must simply bring our tables & let him write in them what he thinkes good. Moses was a great & excellent Prophet: and yet did not God giue him leaue or libertie to write any thing in his tables, or to put any thing vnto them, but restrained him altogether to y<sup>e</sup> things that were written there. And y<sup>e</sup> appeared well in this, in y<sup>e</sup> both the tables were written, not on the one side only, but on both, euen to the full, to the intent that no man liuing should ad any thing to them. Seeing then y<sup>e</sup> God wrote his commandments in those two tables himselfe, & committed not that charge vnto Moses: is it lawful for any mortall creature to ad any inuention of his owne to Gods law? Ye see then y<sup>e</sup> the way for vs to put this doctrine in v<sup>r</sup>e, is to beare in minde that if Moses being so excellent a man, and as an Angel of God, might not write or ad any thing to Gods law: much lesse may we. Wherefore to seue God aright, let vs learne y<sup>e</sup> we must not take vpon vs to muent any thing at all, nor to presume vpon our own deuotions, as we term them: for all such geere wilbe mislied, but that we must bring our tables, that is to say, our owne felues in sacrifice, so as there bee not any thing written in vs, vntil God speak, & that we receiue simply without any gainesaying, whatsoeuer proceedeth out of his mouth.

But now that we haue so much, let vs marke that which is added: namely howe God commanded Moses & told him, How his will was that the coffer or chest which he had made, (that is to say, the Arke, commonly called the Arke of the couenant) should be borne or caried by the children of Is<sup>r</sup>ael. And that is the cause why he told the people, that the childre of Is<sup>r</sup>ael should flect from place to place, vntill they came to Berosh where Aaron died, and that then God would shote out the Lewites by themselves.

Exod. 3. 1. 2.

new againe: But there were fourtie yeares betweene the one and the other. For Aaron dyed at such time as the people had outworne their terme of fourtie yeares, during which time god had forfended them the lande of promise. Now in the ende of that terme, Aaron was de-leazer his son was made highpriest in his stead. But here Moses comprehendeth all that had bin done by the space of fourtie yeares, from the publishing of the lawe, vnto the verie same day that he exhorted the people to put themselves in better readinesse to enter into their inheritance, than they had beene in at the beginning. He telleth them that although there had happened many changes in the meane time, yet had God in effect provided, that his lawe was to bee had alwayes in estimation, & to be honored, and that the world might perceiue that his maiestie was therein, & that all men ought to submit themselves thereunto. And for that cause doth Moses say, that hee had chosen the children of Leuye, notwithstanding that Aaron had sinned. For to what ende doeth Moses speake here of his brothers death? Euen to make it knowne, that God had shewed fauour towards the trybe of Leuye, as well as towards all the rest of the people. The trybe of Leuye was chosen to offer sacrifice: it was a prerogatiue which God had giuen them. And were they worthe of it? Could they boast themselves to haue bene more worthe than their brethren? It is true that they executed vengeance vpon the ydolsters, but yet was Moses faine to call them to him, and to command them to sanctifie their hands. Yee must hallow your hands to the Lord, sayth he: & howe? In slaying those that haue so grievously offended, and been an occasion of turning all things vside downe. This day therefore it behoueth you to vtter what zeale ye haue towards the maintenance of gods honour; and to sanctifie his name without sparing of your own brethre, or your neerest neighbours, forasmuch as they haue so defaced Gods glorie to the vttermost of their power, & therefore they must be vtterly rooted out. The Leuites did well execute the thing that Moses commaunded them: but yet did the high priest Aaron make the golden calfe. True it is that hee withstoode it, or at leastwise consented not to it: but yet did he sware at length by graunting the peoples importunate request, and therefore was he faine to beare the punishment which GOD tolde him of, saying, thou shalt not come within the land which I will giue vnto my people. Albeit that he represented the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and was a figure of him: although he was a mediator betweene God and men, for as he made intercession for the sinnes of the people, & offered sacrifices for the redoncing of them to the maiesty of God: yet was he banished out of that lande to his shame, hee dyed, hee was stripped out of his robes before his death, hee was as a man disgraded, and God left him as a dishonoured person, and as a man defaced with perpetuall reproche. Now if God extended such punishment vpon the person of Aaron: what had they deserued which were inferiors to him? So then, Moses telleth them, that Gods choosing of the trybe of Leuye to carrie the Arke, and to be occupied about his seruice, was not for that they were worthe of it, but because hee was minded to shewe the same thing to the successours of Leuye, which he had spoken of the rest of the whole bodie of Abrahams offspring; namely that they had all things of his only free goodnesse. That is the cause why the death of Aaron is rehearsed here.

But by the way, we see that Moses spared not his own brother. For here he repeateth the sentence y God had giuen & also executed against him, & y was not for y honor of his own house. But what? His meaning was y God should be glorified, & men condemned. Yea & we see that his intent was not to conceale his owne fault, but to shew that God had punished him for it, though there were great cause of excuse in him, & al the blame was to haue bin layd vpon the people, because his ouershotting of himselfe, was but in y one case, & that not through malice, but onely through griefe of mind. Yet notwithstanding he accuseth himselfe thercof, he acknowledgeth it openly, & maketh a chronicle of it to continue of record to the worldes end. Sith wee see this, let vs learne, not to be ashamed to confesse our sinnes, & to shew that God is righteous in punishing of vs. Let vs not go about to burie y chastisements that God shall haue sent vpon vs, as wee see a number doe, who when God sendeth neuer so notable punishmentes, coule finde in their heartes that they should neuer be spoken of. And why? Forsooth because it is not for their honour, worship, or honestie. Verily, as who should say, yee will needes be honorable in spite of God and his righteousnesse. Is it meete that you should be regarded than the glorye of his name? Nowe then, let vs vnderstand that if wee haue committed any fault, and God haue reached out his hande to punish vs: the same must be rehearsed among vs, and we must think vpon it, and wee must alwayes confesse that God is righteous, and that wee haue well deserued that hee should vse correction towards vs, sith wee see that Moses beareth not w.th his owne brother. That is the thing which wee haue to beare in mynd.

Howbeit on the other side, let vs vnderstand, that if Aaron was faine to passe through Gods hande, because hee did but consent vnto euill, & was punished although hee claue not to it: (for to speake properly, his consenting was no consent at all: for hee said vnto them, what meane you ye wretched people? and in forme of their idolatrie: Lo here thy Gods O Israel (quod hee) which brought thee out of the lande of Egypt: as if hee should say, is a calfe become thy redeemer? Aaron then did after a sort withstande them, and yet notwithstanding I call it a consenting, inasmuch as hee swaued and suffered himselfe to be carryed away with their importunate esse: Nowe if God (say I) did punish his high priest Aaron after hee had aduanced him to so great & so high dignitie: what wil hee do to vs?

There-

Deut. 7. 7. &amp;

Exod. 32. 29

Exo. 32. 2. 4.

Hebr. 5. 1. :

Exod. 32. 4.

Therefore let vs learne to withold our felues from euil, & by no means to consent thereto: vnlesse we intend to wrap our felues in condemnation with the wicked, as we see did partly befall vnto Aaron. I say but partly, for God vsed mercie towards him, because the punishment was but temporally, because it was vpon his body onely; and concerned onely this present life. And surely God is exceeding gracious & fauourable to vs when he punisheth vs in our bodies, at such time as we deserue to be vterly rooted out, and when he vouchsafeth to be contented with some chastisement of this transitorie life; he sheweth therein that he is minded to vse greater gentlenesse towards vs. And yet for all that though we deserue to perish with the wicked, when we resist them not, ne forsake their companies and confederacies; yet it pleaseth God to spare vs, and to shewe himselfe mercifull towards vs, though at the last, wee doe in our owne bodies suffer somewhat in respect of this present life.

Nowe remaineth the reason that I haue touched afore; that here is expresse mention made of the Tribe of Leuy, which was sorted out to carie the Arke of the Couenant. And Moses plainly rehearseth that point, to do vs to vnderstande, that God authorised his law by that meanes, in y<sup>e</sup> it was his wil to haue it caried after that fashio<sup>n</sup>, that it might bee as a standard for the people to resort vnto. We haue seene in the fourth Chapter how God sayde, thou shalt not make to thy self any likeness or resemblance: for thou hearest the voice of thy God in Horeb, but thou fastest not any shap of man, or of beast, or of any other creature. The only image of thy God, are y<sup>e</sup> things that he hath writtē wth his own hand, y<sup>e</sup> is to say y<sup>e</sup> ten commandements. Those (say I) are the liuely image wherein he wilde seene. And therefore I said it was a standard carried aloft for the people to resort vnto, as soldiers resort to a standard in a field, to fight the better. So then, it behoued the people to haue their eyes vpon the Arke of the Couenant. And specially forasmuch as men are not verie forward of themselves to obey God: it was meete that y<sup>e</sup> Arke of the couenant should be handled with reuerence, & for y<sup>e</sup> same purpose had God ordeined the priestes & Leuites. For al of them were priestes: Howbeit, they y<sup>e</sup> caried the Arke were of inferior degree in the dignitie of priesthood. Neuerthelesse god had appointed the Leuites to beare y<sup>e</sup> Arke, to y<sup>e</sup> intent it might thereby the better be knownen, y<sup>e</sup> it was a matter of excellent prerogative, & that it was no dalying in the case: For we see y<sup>e</sup> God woulde not suffer the Arke to be so much as touched, by any other than by the Leuytes; in somuch y<sup>e</sup> when David remoued the arke, the partie that did but touch it of good zeale, dyed out of hande for so doing. When he sawe the Arke at the point to rumble down, he did but put forth his hande of good wil to stay it vp from falling, & yet notwithstanding he was punished grieuouly for his labor. This may seeme to haue bin ouerrigorous. But it serueth to shew, y<sup>e</sup> it is not in any wise lawful to breake the order that God hath set. The endis y<sup>e</sup> thing which he hath an eye at. For if we

looke no further than to the thing it selfe; why might not the Arke haue been handled & caried of al y<sup>e</sup> people? They were all sanctified to God, they were all circumcised, they did all carie about them the marke of the couenant. And why then should y<sup>e</sup> one man dye out of hande for only touching the Arke vpon good wil? Verily God had an eye to the ende of the lawe: which was y<sup>e</sup> men shoulde wholly obey his worde. For if his worde be despised: there wilbe nothing but rebelliousnes against him. In deepe men will pretend a willingnesse to honor & serue him, but yet is it but counterfereting for all that. Will we then doe true seruice vnto God, & such as he accepteth? Al of vs both gret & smal must submit our felues to his worde, & followe the singlenesse thereof, & therewithall beare in mynd that it is so precious a thing, as men must not mingle aught of their owne with it: for that were nothing else but a corrupting of it. Now forasmuch as men are not easie to be taught this: it was Gods wil to thewe by a visible signe, howe highly he esteemeth his own word. That is the cause why he sorted out that tribe from the rest, to beare the Arke of the couenant. It was Gods wil y<sup>e</sup> the Priestes which were specially appointed to offer sacrifice, & to make attonement betwene God & men, & to represent the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ, Hebr. 5. 1. should beare abroad his word, & that they shold prease vnto him to bee as mediators betwene him & men. Ye see then how it was Gods wil, to teache his people humilitie by visible signes and outward ceremonies, to the ende that his worde should be embraced with all reuerence, & continue euermore in good ste. But as for vs, we haue not nowadayes the ceremonie any more, but we haue the truth, which ought to continue to the worlds end. Therefore whensoever Gods word is preached vnto vs, let vs learne to stoope to it, & to know y<sup>e</sup> it is a heauenly doctrine, wherein unto it becometh vs to encline, & that it is not for vs to bring our own fond imaginations in y<sup>e</sup> case, for then wo be vnto vs. Neuerthelesse God granteth vs a special fauor, in that he inableth vs to beare abroad his word, & maketh it to dwell in vs, whereby he sheweth that he hath performed the thing which he promised by his Prophets, y<sup>e</sup> is to wit, that he hath chosen vs for his Leuytes, as shalbe declared more at length to morrowe. Col. 2. 17.

Now let vs fall downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feeble them better, yea, euen in such wise as it may lead vs to such repentance, that we may be lorie for them all our life long, & be ashamed that we haue bin so wretched sinners: And that the twithall we may be quickened vp to glorifie him the more for the great goodnes which he hath shewed vpon vs, & proceede continually more & more in obeying him, to the intent that his law may be the better ingraued in vs by his writing of it in our hearts, & we become the readier to follow the thing y<sup>e</sup> he shal haue shewed vs, so as we may be forward to obey him all our life long, & our life be wholly dedicated vnto him. That it may please him to graunt this grace, &c.

8 The same time the Lord &c.

9 Therefore Leuie had no portion nor inheritance with his brethren: but the Lord is his inheritance, as the Lord thy God sayd vnto him.

10 And I taried on the mountaine as I had doone afore, fortie dayes and fortie nightes. And the Lord heard mee that time also, so as the Lord would not destroy thee.

11 But the Lord sayde vnto mee, vp, get thee hence, and goe before the people, that they may goe and possesse the Land which I sware to their fathers to giue them.

E sawe yesterday, how Moses in this text did magnifie Gods mercie, as well towards the Leuites, as towards the whole people. For in shewing that Aaron was punished for his fault, it appeareth plainly that all his whole lineage deserued to haue ben disgraded. Yet notwithstanding, God of his goodnes vouel safed y<sup>r</sup> there should be a certaine number of men appointed to his seruice: and them he chose, not for any worthines that was in them, but only for his owne mercies sake. For if wee be not worthe of so much, as that God should crowde vs into a little corner of his house: how should he aduance vs to farre higher degree? That then is the meaning of Moses. Neuertheless we must marke herewithall the three charges which he setteth downe here, & which he reporteth to haue been assigned to the Leuites. The first is, To beare the Ark of Gods covenant, & the vessels of the sanctuary: The seconde is, To be at hand to serue God: & the third is, To blesse in the name of God. These are the three things that were incident to the priestthod of old time. For as concerning the Sanctuarie with all the appurtenances therof, it was but a figure, which we must referre to the spiritual temple, that is to wit to Gods church, & to the sacrifices which are offered vnto him by the faithful, when they dedicate themselves to him both in bodie & soule, by yielding vp their ownselues, y<sup>e</sup> he may be glorified in them. Marke that for one point. The second is the seruice wherof he speaketh: which consisteth likewise in figure: but the truth therof is performed toward vs, when such as nowadayes are called to the gouerning of Gods church, do their dutie in offering vp mens foules in sacrifice vnto God, by preaching y<sup>e</sup> gospel, & in maintaining the order & state of the church, in such wise as God be glorified, and the church be cleansed from all stumbling blockes. The third is to blesse in Gods name: & that is to yeeld a testimonie of Gods goodnes and grace to his people.

Now must we applie these things to y<sup>e</sup> truth of them, y<sup>e</sup> may be edified by them. Let vs (say

I) haue a regarde to apply these three things to their truth & substance, which our Lorde Iesus Christ hath brought vs by his coming. It is said here, that the Leuites must beare the vessels of God. And this belongeth, not only to the ministers of the worde, or to such as beare publike office in the church: but also to all the faithful in general. And that is the cause why it is said by y<sup>e</sup> prophet Malachie, y<sup>e</sup> the Leuites were made priests, which thing I say was accomplished at the coming of our Lord Iesus Christ, at which time the church was aduanced to greater perfection than it was vnder y<sup>e</sup> law. Likewise E say telleth vs that all men shal be Leuites vnto y<sup>e</sup> Lord. All the children of Israel (saith he) shal execute the office of priestthod vnto God. And in the same respect doth S. Peter say, y<sup>e</sup> we be a royal priestthod. S. Peter speaks not there of any peculiar sort of people after y<sup>e</sup> manner of y<sup>e</sup> Pope, who hath villainously corrupted y<sup>e</sup> said sentence of his, in attributing it to his owne clergie as he termeth them, y<sup>e</sup> is to wit to y<sup>e</sup> stinking table of his powlshorn greasings: but he attributeth y<sup>e</sup> honorable title to all the faithful, & to as many as are of the church of God. Moses could wel say euen in his time, Yee be a priestly kingdome, y<sup>e</sup> is to say a nation holy aboue all others. But S. Peter turning the same words, saith, y<sup>e</sup> now we be become a royal priestthod, inasmuch as our Lord Iesus Christ hauing shewed himself to the world, is ordained priest after the order of Melchizedech, to communicate the same grace to y<sup>e</sup> whole church. Therefore let vs marke we, y<sup>e</sup> this gift of becoming Priestes & Leuites, is not a priuilege or prerogative grated to three or four: but inasmuch as al y<sup>e</sup> things which our Lorde Iesus Christ hath receiued of God his father, ar comon to vs all, & we be made partakers of the by his meane: we be of y<sup>e</sup> order & number of y<sup>e</sup> Leuites, that is to say, of them that are dedicated vnto god. Nor as y<sup>e</sup> people [of Israel] were, which held themselves aloofe in y<sup>e</sup> body of the temple, & worshipped God afarre off: but we haue a mean to prease neere him, we haue familiar access, we haue his own sonne entred afore vs into the Sanctuarie which is not made with mans hand, to bring vs in thither, in whose name al the faithful full haue libertie to come thicher. Thus yee see that the thing which wee haue to marke in the first place, is that God shooled out one tribe of the children of Israell to serue him in the Sanctuarie: but nowe adayes he hath shedde out the same grace vpon all beleeuers, and there is no exception, but wee be all made holie to offer sacrifice to God, and not onely to beare the vesselles of the temple, but also to be the verie vesselles themselves. For although our bodies be but wretched carcasses: yet sayle they not to be the temples of the holy Ghost, and Gods will is to be worshipped in them. Hadde there beene sayde no more, but that our soules are the temples of God: it had beene a verie excellent honour. But seeing it is sayde of our earthly and corruptible bodies, we see what goodnes God vttereth towards vs. And therefore let vs learne that this doctrine belongs to the law, and that this figure which was vnder the law concerneth vs at this day, to the end that we should aduantage our selues thereby. And after what manner?

The first is that we should magnifie the goodnesse of our God, in that hee hath shewed himselfe so gracious vnto vs, as to chose vs to be his seruautes, not onely to beare the vesselles of his temple, but also to be the verie temples themselves and the altars whereto hee will be worshipped, both in our bodies and our soules, to the intent we should yeelde him, not onely the bodily seruice which consisteth in shadowes and figures, but also the true spirituall seruice by dedicating our selues all wholly vnto him. Yee see then howe the ende whereto we must beginne, is to knowe how greatly we by bounde vnto God for vsing such gracious goodnes towards vs. Moreouer according (as Saint Paul sheweth vs in the second to the Corinthians,) we must take warning to separate our selues from all vncleanness, as the prophet cryeth out vnto vs, saying: Separate your selues from all vncleanness, you that carrie the Lordes vessels. And Saint Paul alleading the same text of Esay, sayth that according to the same promise, it is good reason that wee shoulde giue our selues to cleannesse both of bodie and soule. For in very deede, the prophet Esaie, in saying: Be ye cleane you that beare the Lordes vesselles, hath not an eye to the time of the figures: but extendeth his doctrine to the kingdome of our Lord Iesus Christ. Nowe then this text must needes be performed in vs. But there are not nowe adayes any more materiall vesselles as there were in the time of the Lawe: and therefore it followeth that the doctrine thereof must be performed in higher matters: that is to say, that inasmuch as God hath called vs to be members of his sonne, and by that meane to come so neere him as he may dwell in vs & we be his temples: the same should prouoke vs to giue our selues to all cleannesse, which thing wee can not doe but by separating of our selues from the corruptions of the world. For wee dwell here among such filthinesse, as it is not possible for vs to scape vninfected, vnlesse we labour to withdrawe our selues from it. Yea and there needes no euill to come vpon vs from elsewhere, for euerie of vs shall finde ynough in himselfe. Wherefore lette vs beware that wee turne away from all wicked lustes, and that we cut off whatsoever is desiled in vs, and generally all that cuer is of the world, so as we may preale vnto our God, and hauing giuen ouer the world we may be so vnited vnto him, as he may auowe vs to be his priestes. For if we doe otherwise, we shall be dubble accursed, and we shall not be able to excuse our selues but that God hath aduanced vs high ynough. But what excuse will there be for vs nowe when our Lorde hath brought vs so neere vnto him, and vouchsafed to make vs priestes to offer vpp our owne selues vnto him, and to make vs his temples, so as we should haue a spirituall altar erected vnto him in our selues? Seeing that God hath brought vs to that point, is it not a horrible treacherie (say I) if wee fall to vnhalowe his temple? Nowe then, lette vs vnderstande, that whensoever this worlde turneth vs away vnto euill, wee offer God greate wrong, in making his temple a swynes stie, and in vnhalowing the thing that he had hallowed, by causing all the corruptions of Sathan and of this worlde to come into his temple. Surely it ought to holde vs in awe and to make vs walke in all soundenesse, so as we giue not ouer our bodies and soules to anie dishonestie, seeing that God hath sanctified them to himselfe. This is the thing which we haue to beare away vpon the first part of this text.

Neuerthelesse lette vs marke that although God haue extended the sayde grace of making vs all Leuites or Priestes, to all the members of his Church: yet hath hee not vtterly abolished the order of his Church, but his will is to haue some certaine men appointed to the preaching of his worde. And that is the thing which is ment here in the seconde place, where he saith, that they shall stande before the Lorde so serue him, and finally that they shall blesse in the Lordes name. The same must be put in vre at this day by the ministers of the worde. For although God haue called vs all in common, to be serued and honoured at our handes: yet doeth he require a speciall seruice at their handes whom he setteth ouer his Church to be the shepheardes thereof, that is to wite, that they should shewe the way, and alwayes be in a readinesse to serue God. And this seruice importeth that the Leuites should maintaine the religion pure and vncorrupted among the people, and shewe the Iewes that they ought not to deale with the superstitions of the heathen, and what God it was which had deliuered them, and to be short, that they should alwayes holde the people in obedience to the true faith. And for the same cause GOD allotted them not any one certaine countrie or shire to dwell in, but dispersed the throughout the whole lande. We knowe there was not anie one tribe which had not Leuites among them. And why was that? For God could well ynough haue gathered the together, so as they might haue bin all together in Ierusalem where the temple was, and in the places neere aboutes, and haue had some portion assigned them as well as the rest of the tribes had. But hee did not so: but his will was that in euery countrie, citie, shire, and region, there should alwaies be some Leuites, that the people might euerywhere bee taught, and the seede of faith be euerywhere spread abroad. For had there bene anie certain countrie assigned to the Leuites: it had bene ynough to haue abolished the remembrance of God, and to haue layde all teaching vnder foote. But forasmuch as God had appointed y<sup>e</sup> tribe of Leuie to preach his worde, and to beare abroade the message of saluation: he gaue them no certaine portion to dwell in, but his will was to haue them dispersed abroade euerywhere. And for prooffe thereof, we knowe howe the prophete sayth that GOD made his couenant with the tribe of Leuie. And what manner of one was it? Euen the couenant of peace, inasmuch as he sayde that the priestes are Gods Angels & messengers: men shall seeke the vnderstanding of the lawe at their mouth, & they shal teach them knowledge. We see then y<sup>e</sup> seruice that is spoken of here, comprehendeth instruction: inasmuch that they whome God had so chosen, had charge to preache the Lawe, and to expound it to the people, that religion might continue vnappaired. And the same is to be obserued nowe adayes among vs. For although all of vs from the most to the least bee priestes: yet notwithstanding it is the duetie of the ministers of the worde, to teach and to shew men the way to GOD, and to bring backe the wretched soules that were in the way to destruction. And that is the cause why Saint Paul sayeth that he is a priest, not after the auncient manner that had bene vnder the Lawe, but to slea men with the sworde of the Gospell, as sacrifices ought to be slayne: after the which manner Saint Paul sayeth also, that he had the spirituall sword wherewith to offer vp mens soules vnto GOD. Thus ye see what we haue to remember. And therefore let such as are called to the charge of the preaching of Gods worde, vnderstande that they must streine themselves to the vttermoste, that God may be serued and honoured. And the manner is shewed vs in the text which I alledged out of the fifteenth to the Romanes: namely that wee must in deuour to sanctifie all that euer is corrupted in this worlde, and that men must become teachable and meeke, that God may renewe them & accept them for his children. And if we doe so, then is Gods seruice accomplished in vs, after the same manner as it was commaunded to the Leuites in olde time.

Nowe let vs come to the thirde point that is set downe here. It is sayde, That the Leuites must blesse the people in the name of God. True it is that in the Hebrew tongue, the worde Blesse betokeneth to praye and magnifie God. Howebeit forasmuch as the matter here, concerneth those whom God did specially ordaine to blesse in his name: we must fetch the meaning of this text, out of the sixth Chapter of the booke of Numbers, notwithstanding that this manner of speeche be vtterly vsed in Moses. But in that place there is more expressed: and for that cause haue I corrected the text. It is sayde there, that the priestes of the house of Leuie shall blesse in the name of God and say: The Lorde blesse you and keepe you: the Lorde make his countenance to shine vpon you, and graunt you his mercie. The Lord turne his fauourable face towards you, & blesse you. Nowe hereby wee perceiue, that it behoued the Leuites not onely to praye GOD, as their duetie was to doe: but also to blesse the people in his name: For they were two diuerse things. So that To blesse the name of God, is as it were a doing of homage vnto him for all the benefites which hee bestoweth vpon vs, by protesting our selues to holde all things of his onely meeere goodnesse, and that hee is the author of them, so as without him wee be miserable, and haue not one drop of goodnesse in vs, further forth than he alone maketh vs partakers of it. And so ye see that to blesse God and to magnifie his name, is to acknowledge him to be the fountaine of all goodnesse, and that all that euer wee haue cometh of him, and of his onely meeere free goodnesse. Nowe this belonged to the Leuites, as wee see it was their office to sing, and although that all the people were present there & the praye of God ought to sounde in all their mouthes: yet notwithstanding the Leuites were to beginne the quire, and to leade the melodie. Neuerthelesse, they did also blesse in the name of God. And how was that? They witnessed Gods grace vnto the people: and the same thing taketh place still at this day, in such as are ordained ministers of the worde. For to what ende serueth our daily preaching of the Gospell, but to blesse the things in Gods name, which were accursed before? For by nature we are all of vs accursed and reprobate. And therefore it standeth vs in hande to be deliuered out of the wretchednesse wherein we be: which to doe, there is none other meane but onely that God shewe himselte louing and fauorable towards vs, and that is the blessing which is spoken of here. For when the scripture sayth that God blesseth men, it is asmuch to say, as that hee sheweth them by effect that he loueth them, and maketh them to feele the fruite & operation of his grace and fatherly adoption. Nowe therefore when we come to heare the Gospell, let vs consider to what ende it is: that is to wit, to certifie vs that God looketh vpon vs with pittie, euen vpon vs wretched creatures, and that hee setteth vs free from the cursednesse that is in vs, inasmuch that although we deserue to be cast off at his hand, yet neuerthelesse hee sheweth himselte gracious vnto vs, and that whereas he might with good right bee our enemy, he sheweth himselte as a father towards vs. Let vs (say I) be well aduised that we make our profit of this doctrine, when it is preached vnto vs. For whereas we be assured by the scriptures, that God sheweth himselte fauorable to vs, in laying aside all enmitie that was betwixt him and vs by reason of our finnes: if the same were well printed in our hartes, we would haue an other manner of desire than wee haue, to let forth his praye. What a treasure is it, that our Lord sheweth himselfe so to vs, as though we sawe him in his owne person: & that he openeth the heauens to assure vs that he loueth vs, euen vs which makewarre against him, in so much that whereas he should vtterly mislike of vs, he vouchsafeth neuertheless to take vs into his fauor, & maketh vs to feele it in very dede. But what? We welter in our own dung euen till we do as it were stinke in it, without any care or regard at all. And that is the cause of such contempt of the gospel, & of such vnthankfulness as is seene almost euery where. Yet notwithstanding, it behoueth y<sup>e</sup> faithful to consider of how great value it is, y<sup>e</sup> God receiveth them to mercy, & sheweth himselfe to be a father to them, & that such as are appointed to preach his word, are as witnessers to certifie vs y<sup>e</sup> God beareth vs such fatherly loue. Truth it is y<sup>e</sup> this was accomplished by our Lord Iesus Christ, for he was the only pricist: and y<sup>e</sup> that which we do, is not to take his office vpon vs, but onely to approue & ratifie the thing y<sup>e</sup> he did. And therefore let vs marke well, that it belongeth onely to our Lord Iesus Christ to assure vs of the loue of God his father: but yet doth he also witness it vnto vs, by y<sup>e</sup> mouthes of such as preach the Gospel in his name. It hath bin told vs herewithall, that the things which were figured vnder y<sup>e</sup> Law, haue bin performed in his person. For the high pricists (when they blessed the people) had a solemn ceremony of lifting vp of their hands, as though they made an offering vp of all the people vnto God. Likewise whē Iesus Christ wēt vp into heauen, he vfed y<sup>e</sup> same fashion, by lifting vp his hands to blesse his disciples, in whose persons hee pronounced a general blessing vpon y<sup>e</sup> whole body of his Church. We see then y<sup>e</sup> figures of y<sup>e</sup> Lawe belong to vs at this day, howbeit, not as touching the outward vse of them, but as in respect of the substance & truth of the. Whereby we be warned to get vs to our Lord Iesus Christ, who bringeth vs y<sup>e</sup> full accomplishment of all things. And we must vnderstand, y<sup>e</sup> although he be not now conuersant in y<sup>e</sup> world to blesse vs: yet will he haue vs to bee made partakers of the same blessing by means of y<sup>e</sup> gospel, when it is preached among vs. This is the effect of the things which we haue to gather vpon that place.

Now Moses addeth, That God hath giuen the Leuites no portion among their brethren, but that he himselfe would be their portion and heritage. Yea, but yet for all that, he appointed them y<sup>e</sup> tenthes & firstfruits, as is shewed in the fourth booke of Moses. Now then, Gods assigning of a portion vnto the was in such sort as they possessed not any Lande or inheritance, more than their townes & suburbs for their cattell. But yet tooke they the tenthes, firstfruits, & all other such things of all y<sup>e</sup> people. Herein God had a consideration, y<sup>e</sup> such as he met to dedicate to y<sup>e</sup> seruing of himselfe, should be withdrawn fro all worldly affaires, y<sup>e</sup> they might intend to y<sup>e</sup> seruing of God. Gods intent then was, y<sup>e</sup> the Leuites & their children should not giue themselves to husbandry & such other things. And why For they had ynough to do to discharge themselves of their dutie otherwise: y<sup>e</sup> is to wit, in calling vpo the people to folow Gods comandementes, & to keepe his couenant, so as religion might continue vnspaired, & faith might haue his full force, & so consequently y<sup>e</sup> God might be honored. Also they had the Sacrifices, which serued them in steed of Sacramentes, & at y<sup>e</sup> time they were many in number, because the people could not otherwise be held in order: they would easily haue bin marred, if they had not bin restrained wth many bridles. That therefore was ynough to keep y<sup>e</sup> Leuites occupied. And for the same cause God gaue the a portion beside the tithes that they might haue wherewith to finde & mainteine themselves, while they were a doing of their duties.

But th is hath bin corrupted & falsified by the papistes. For they haue boine men in hand, that tithes belong to the y<sup>e</sup> Gods Law. And why? because (as they say) they beloned to y<sup>e</sup> Leuites. But they consider not, y<sup>e</sup> the Leuites were inheritors of the land of Chanaan, as well as those y<sup>e</sup> were of the tribes of Iuda, Benjamin, Ephraim, Manasse and all y<sup>e</sup> residue. In respect wherof it was meete they should haue had their portion with their brethren, & they ought not to haue bin excluded or banished fro it: for y<sup>e</sup> inheritance of the land was comon to them all: therefore was it meete y<sup>e</sup> they should haue had their part of it. Yea, but God recompensed them after an other fashion. It were meete then y<sup>e</sup> the Pope & al his rable, should they how y<sup>e</sup> inheritances of all landes belong to the, & then might they therepon demand their tithes. Thus ye see how this text hath bin miswrested. But yet for all this, let vs beare in minde howe S. Paul saith, y<sup>e</sup> euen at this day it is Gods wil y<sup>e</sup> which preach y<sup>e</sup> gospel should be nourished and maintained, as well as the Priestes had their liuings appointed the in old time. S. Paul dema- 2, Cor. 9.13; 2, Cor. 3.6

death in way of comparison, whether y<sup>e</sup> spiritual seruice y<sup>e</sup> is yielded to God nowadaies, ought not at the least to be as much esteemed, as the seruice y<sup>e</sup> was vnder the figures of y<sup>e</sup> Law? Now it was Gods will, y<sup>e</sup> such as serued at the altar, should be maintained by the altar, therefore it is good reason, y<sup>e</sup> such as at this day doe serue Gods Church in bringing the his word, should also be nourished and maintained. Thus ye see y<sup>e</sup> way to vnder stand this text a right, is to take S. Paul for our expounder thereof. But to conclude peremptorily y<sup>e</sup> tithes belong to the preachers of y<sup>e</sup> gospel, is to grosse an abuse & fondnes. Neuertheless we must mark also, y<sup>e</sup> it is not our Lords meaning, y<sup>e</sup> ydols or idle bellies, & much lesse y<sup>e</sup> such as pervert al order & turne vs away from y<sup>e</sup> seruing & obeying of God, should be nourished in his Church. Now then if the Shepherdes will needes claime to be found at y<sup>e</sup> common charges of the Church: they must looke that they occupie themselves in the seruice of God. As how? It is no title of idleness, it is no fantasticall dignitie, to be called the Shepherd of a Church: but it is a kinde of bondage, howbeit y<sup>e</sup> it be honorable. And therefore y<sup>e</sup> party y<sup>e</sup> is appointed to be a shepherd or minister must looke y<sup>e</sup> he obey God and serue his people. For we can not serue him y<sup>e</sup> hath put vs in office, but by seruing of his Church. Ye see then how the Pope & al his hangers on, are disappointed of the things which they pretend to pertain to them of right. And if they deuour y<sup>e</sup> goods y<sup>e</sup> were apointed to such as serue Gods Church: they must be fair to yeelde an account of them in the ende. For the world sees they be but idle bellies and idols, and not onely that, but also deadly enemies to Gods honor, laboring to ouerthrow it to the vttermost of their power. Now then, all this geere must be cut off: for y<sup>e</sup> nourishing & mainteining of the<sup>e</sup>, is all one as if men were minded to marre all the good seede that is in Gods Church. True it is that where they vsurpe such tyrannie, men may well hope that they shall yeeld a reckning for it before God, and such as are held down in y<sup>e</sup> bondage may well sigh & grone: And although they knowe it to be an intolerable trecheie and extortion, y<sup>e</sup> such exactions should be layde vpon them: yet neuertheless they must bee faine to beare with the<sup>e</sup>. But whensoever y<sup>e</sup> Church shall happen to bee well reformed and well ordered, doubtlesse those Cormorantes shall no longer deuour the substance of Gods people after that fashion, but the things y<sup>e</sup> haue bin misused, shall be brought home to their good & holy vse again, so as they shall serue to the nourishing & mainteining of such as haue y<sup>e</sup> charge of the preaching of Gods word, & also to the releiuing and mainteining of the poore, after y<sup>e</sup> manner of the prestes in the old law, who (as we know) were bound ther vnto, in somuch that their hauing of such portio as I haue told you of before, was for y<sup>e</sup> releueing of the poore, & of such as were in penury. And so ye see how we may profit ourselues by this text.

But by the way, let vs come backe againe to y<sup>e</sup> things y<sup>e</sup> I haue alledged as wel out of y<sup>e</sup> prophet Elay, as out of Zachary, y<sup>e</sup> is to wit, y<sup>e</sup> we in these daies are succeded in the roome of the Leuites. And sith it is so, let vs marke y<sup>e</sup> although wee possess the inheritances of lands, medowes, and vineyardes in this world, yet we must make light account of the<sup>e</sup>, without being tied to them, & must put the thing in vre which Saint Paul speaketh of in the seventh Chapter of the first epistle to the Corinthians, y<sup>e</sup> is to wit, that he which is rich be as if he possessed nothing. And why? For if wee haue not God for our heritage & portion, we be to vs. And how may y<sup>e</sup> be, but onely by being discharged of all earthly affectiōs and cares? Although God giue a man riches, yet must he be as a sheepe, mecke & lowely to offer himselfe vnto God, so as nothing may let or hinder him from following his vocation, or from going on still towards the heavenly life wher euento he is called. Ye see then y<sup>e</sup> the thing which we haue to consider generally in our knowing y<sup>e</sup> God will haue y<sup>e</sup> ministers of his word and the sheperdes of his Church to be nourished and maintained: is y<sup>e</sup> we must likewise know, y<sup>e</sup> all of vs are a royall priesthood, in respect wherof he wil not haue vs to be so intangled with y<sup>e</sup> goods of this world, that wee should not look vp to him, but y<sup>e</sup> we should run apace through the world, assuring our selues y<sup>e</sup> we cannot be children of the kingdome of heauen, vnlesse we be frangers here beneath.

Now after y<sup>e</sup> Moses hath told the sayd things, he addeth yet one word more, which is Enē vnto this day. Wherby he meaneth y<sup>e</sup> Gods will was to haue those things obserued. True it is that these things had not at y<sup>e</sup> tunc indured about foure yeares: but yet doth Moses put y<sup>e</sup> people in mind of the<sup>e</sup>, telling them y<sup>e</sup> that order must not be broken, but continued still euen till the coming of y<sup>e</sup> redeemer. In deede the prestes theselues were greatly out of order & had marred all, so as they had well deserued y<sup>e</sup> God should vndoe his covenant with the<sup>e</sup>, & becaue them of y<sup>e</sup> prerogatiue that he had giuen vnto their father Leuie, according to this text of the prophet Malachie, which saith y<sup>e</sup> God made his covenant with Leuie, but yet forasmuch as the Leuites had shrunk away, & not regarded the promise y<sup>e</sup> they had made vnto God, they deserued to be cut off, and God would curse all their blessings, as if he should say, whē ye thinke ye haue made a great hand, the<sup>e</sup> will God but blow vpon you, & by it will appeare y<sup>e</sup> all was but shame. Yet notwithstanding y<sup>e</sup> priesthood was to continue still, euen to the coming of our Lord Iesus Christ, & so it did. Likewise let vs mark well nowadaies, y<sup>e</sup> when things be out of frame in the Church, so as all goe to haucke, y<sup>e</sup> mischief is in deede to be corrected, but yet must not gods ordināce be therfore disannulled, so as we should let it alone, & not put it in execution, vpo mistaking of the vices & offences that haue fet all in a broile: but we must alwaies resort backe to Gods pure rule. We see there haue bin no such deuils incarnate, as those y<sup>e</sup> haue boasted theselues to be Prelats, Bishops, & sheperdes. Now if vpon mistaking of such corruptions, a mā would abolish all order in y<sup>e</sup> Church, so as there should be no ministers, nor any moe folke appointed to teach y<sup>e</sup> people: what else were it thā a horrible confusion, and a setting open of hell, y<sup>e</sup> all things in the world might goe to haucke? But let vs keepe still this principle, y<sup>e</sup> mens vices must bee corrected, and gods cōmandement therewith obserued. Thus ye see what Moses ment, in saying y<sup>e</sup> Gods choosing of y<sup>e</sup> Leuites was not for a day or twain, but to continue still, that by that meane the Church might be maintained.

On the other side, we know y<sup>e</sup> the death of our Lord Iesus Christ should not come vnto vs in these daies, without y<sup>e</sup> preaching of the Gospell. Therefore if we intend to feele y<sup>e</sup> redemption and soul health y<sup>e</sup> hath bin purchased for vs, the same order must be maintained still. And howe great store of vices fouer ther be, let Gods Church be clenfed of the<sup>e</sup>, let all stibling blocks be removed out of it, & let not men for all that, cease to haue preachers of Gods worde, & ministers of his sacraments still: for otherwise it were the next way to cut y<sup>e</sup> Churches throte, & to bring all to vtter desolation. For we know how S. Paul sayth y<sup>e</sup> Iesus Christ was giuen to be our peace, and y<sup>e</sup> at his coming he preached it to them y<sup>e</sup> were neere hande, and to them that were farre off. Saint Paul sheweth there, how our Lord Iesus maketh the vertue of his death & passio available: namely by cōmanding the Gospell to be preached vnto vs, wherby we be don to vnderstand, y<sup>e</sup> God hauing once offered himselfe vnto us in the person of his son, will continually still hold on to take and accept vs for his children, and confirme the adoption which he hath made of vs, euen vntill we come to the present inioying of the heritage tage which he hath promised vs.

Moses hauing spoken so, addeth for a finall conclusion, that God had heard him, and sayde vnto him, Goe thy way and leade this people into the Lande that I promised to their fathers, yea euen with an othe: les them goe into it and take possession of it. Here againe Moses sheweth the people that when they be come into the Lande of promise, they must vnderstande  $\bar{y}$  that befallend not to  $\bar{c}$  for their owne deseruings, but through Gods great mercy, yea and such mercy as ought to raise thei wittes to wonder at it: for they had refused all  $\bar{y}$  promises that had bene made vnto them. So then it stode this people in hand, to be new reared & let vp againe in their former state, though a singular grace. That is the intent of Moles, whercof I haue treated more fully already, and therefore it is yough as now to touch it. But yet let vs not forget to apply it to our vse, which is,  $\bar{y}$  it behoueth vs to vnderstande,  $\bar{y}$  although God haue called vs to the blecfe of his Gospell, yet fo  $\bar{y}$  in respect of this present life, we cease not to shrink away fro him, wherby we were worthy to haue  $\bar{y}$  dore shut against vs, & to be taken as tolk vterly reiected, ynelle he receiue vs to mercie, and  $\bar{y}$  not for onely, but also in that he must double & treble his mercy vpon vs, in so many sins as we comit against him. Now the, before we can come to the inheritance of the kingdom of heauen, God must be faine to shewe vs many a time and often, that we haue it not for any worthinesse of our owne, nor for any purchase that we can make of it by our seruice, to say that we haue earned it: but  $\bar{y}$  his making of vs to be his heires, is of his own mere and free bestowed liberahite, for none other cause, but that he hath vouchsafed to choose vs, and to beare with vs, and to pardon the infinite offences, whereby we cease not to prouoke him in such wise, as he shold needs roote vs out, if hee ment to vse rigor towards vs. Thus ye see how we should apply this lesseon of Moles to our behoofe.

Moreouer it ought also to serue vs for a comfort, that we be not discouraged when we haue offended our God, euen after we haue knowen him and are fallen in trame of walking according to his worde. For though we step a side for a time: yet must not our dooing make vs to despaire, but we must come backe againe, assuring ourselves that if God herd Moles in the time of the figures of the Lawe, he will certainly heare him that maketh intercession for vs nowe, that is to wit, his owne onely sonne. For our Lorde Iesus Christ was a priest, not only to die once to purchase saluation for vs, but also to ioiny the same office euerlastingly, as in respect of appearing in the sight of God his father, to obtaine forgiveness for the finnes which we commit daily. Let vs marke (I say) that if this grace was granted to the fathers vnder the Lawe, surely wee shall not be disappointed of it as now. Yet notwithstanding it is not ment hereby,  $\bar{y}$  that should make vs the reader or bolder to offend: but we must vnderstande, that when we come before God, we must acknowledge the faultes  $\bar{y}$  we haue comitted, we must be sorie for our misdeeds, & we must beseeche God to bring vs home againe to him. For as for those that hate not their sins, they be so far of from obtaining of fauour at Gods hand,  $\bar{y}$  they do the more prouoke his wrath. Contrariwise, when we hate our sins, God looketh no more vpon them, but barreth them out of sight. And this warneth vs,  $\bar{y}$  when God contineth his mercie towardes vs, & reneweth the same daily, and taketh vs into fauour againe after wee haue 10 offended him: his so doing is not to make vs the bolder to do euil, as who wold say we haue made a good market at his hand: let vs beware of such blasphemy: but it must be applied wholly to the faultes  $\bar{y}$  are past. Therefore when there is speaking of Gods mercy & of  $\bar{y}$  forgiveness of our sins in the holy scripture, we must vnderstande  $\bar{y}$  God sendeth vs backe to the finnes  $\bar{y}$  are past: & therewithall putteth vs in minde to beware afterward of the danger that we were in afore: warning vs 20 to pray him to gouerne vs with his holy spirit, so as he suffer vs not to be led out of the way, nor to fal to wilfull breaking of  $\bar{y}$  couenent, which ought to be kept vniuolated, as well on our part by our faithful obedience, as it is on his part, yea & that with such constancie,  $\bar{y}$  although we offend him daily, yet he ceaseth not to continue steadfast still in his purpose. And to be  $\bar{y}$  better assured of this doctrine, let vs alwaies haue recourse to this saying,  $\bar{y}$  the Lande of Chanaan was as an earnest penny of the euerlasting inheritance to the fathers  $\bar{y}$  lued vnder the Law. And so the things that are set downe in the holy scripture, must be 30 to vs as a looking glasse or picture, wherein to beholde the maner of Gods guiding of vs, til we be come to the euerlasting life. The people of Israel was choise before they were born, God shewed his fauour to them by the law, & moreouer he chastised them, in so much  $\bar{y}$  he listend not to put the in possession of their promised heritage out of hande, as in deede they were not worthy of it, 40 but yet for all  $\bar{y}$  they came into it at the last. And so we perceiue, that our Lord hath not delayed his receiuing of vs till we come vnto him: but  $\bar{y}$  he hath prouented vs, with his infinite goodnes, in so much  $\bar{y}$  he hath chosen vs before  $\bar{y}$  making of the world, & hath offered vs his grace & confirmed it by the preaching of the Gospell, as well 50 as the Law was published by the hand of Moles. For our Lord Iesus Christ hath vouchsafed to be a faithful witnes of God his father, & of the loue  $\bar{y}$  he bringeth vs. And because he is not abiding any more here below with vs in his own person, he hath appointed his ministers to who he hath giuen authority to preach in his name, & therewithall hath giuen commandement to all people to receiue them, saying, he that heareth you, heareth me. And he hath giuen them this expresse charge to preach the forgiveness of sins, as if they should drawe the wretched captiue soules out of the bondage of hell. Ye see then how our Lorde Iesus Chr. hath vttered the grace that was vnknown vnto vs before: but wee take small profit by it. For although we were baptised from our infancie, yet when wee come to yeares of discretion, whereby begin we to shew our selues to haue some witte, but by choosing the

the euill, as though wee ment to spite God wittingly? And againe beside this, when our Lord teacheth vs, and reformeth vs by his worde, so as he ceaseth not to shewe vs our faultes, to the intent to tame vs and to daunt vs, and to drawe vs to repentance: howe dull are we vpon the spurre? After what fashion deale we? Are wee nor so spytefull and stubborne, as a man can not by any meanes win vs? yes, and therefore he is faine to sende vs many chastisements & to make this present life to be as a wildernes to vs to wander vp and downe in, with y<sup>e</sup> feeling of his wrath. For all the miseries wherewith wee be hemmed in, are remembrancers to make vs hang downe our heades, and to make vs perceiue that we be wretched sinners, & that we be worthy, not onely of temporall correction, but also to be sunke downe into hell. Yet notwithstanding, this serueth not to driue vs to dispaire, for we may well assure our selues y<sup>e</sup> God will receiue vs to mercy so we flee to our Lord Iesus Christ. For if Moses were heard who was a wretched sinner: what shall he be, who hath all righteousnesse perfectly in him? and to wh<sup>o</sup> authoritie is giuen to make full atonement betwene God and man? Nowe the seeing that our Lord Iesus Christ is appointed to be our mediator: let vs not doubt but that although God holde vs in this worlde as poore banished wretches, and withdrawe himselfe from vs, and shrinke aside to outwarde appearance: yet we be not bereft of the inheritance which he hath promised vs, and purchased for vs by our Lorde Iesus Christ. But howfoeuer wee fare, let vs not tempt him, nor abuse his patience: but let vs wey wel this speech, where Moses saith that he was hearde for that time also. For it serueth to holde vs in awe, that wee flatter not our selues when God beareth with vs, but that we shoulde looke about vs to amende our faultes, and to bridle our wicked lustes, that we giue not our selues ouer vnto euill, but hate it and abhorre it, so as God may goe on with the thing that hee hath begunne in vs, vntill he haue ridde vs quite and cleane of all worldly lettes, and put vs in possession of the euerlasting life. If wee doe so, wee may boldly protest that we haue prayed God and that we haue giuen him such glorie as hee deserueth, and wee haue cause to reioyce in that we were able to ouercome all the temptations and distrustes that coulde happen vnto vs: and therefore wee shall not neede to doubt, but that our good God is and will be mercifull to vs, though we be not worthy of it.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to vouchsafe to make vs so to feele them, as it may serue to mortifie vs daily more & more, that when we perceiue his displeasure, we may flee to his goodnesse and mercy, to obtaine fauour at his hande, that being rid quite and cleane of our vices and spores, we may bee so gouerned by the power of his holy spirit, as we may become true sacrifices vnto him, by dedicating our selues wholly to his glory through newnesse of life. And so let vs all say, Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

The Lxxj. Sermon, which is the third vpon the tenth Chapter.

12 And nowe O Israell, what doth the Lord thy GOD require of thee, but that thou shouldest feare the Lord thy GOD, and walke in all his wayes, and that thou shouldest loue him, and serue the Lord thy God with all thy heart and all thy soule:

13 And that thou shouldest keepe the commaundements of the Lorde, and his ordinaunces, which I commaunde thee this day, to the end it may goe well with thee?

14 Beholde, the heauens, and the heauens of heauens are the Lord thy Gods, and likewise the earth and all that is therein.

Ere Moses proceedeth with the matter that we haue hard these dayes past, that is to witte, that God had vied marueilous fauor towards his people, in forgiuing them so many and so greuous offences. It was verie much that they were receiued to mercy, so as they were not dispossessed of y<sup>e</sup> heritage that God had promised them. Nowe Moses addeth here another respect, which serueth to make Gods great and infinite goodnes yet better knowne, & to giue it the greater beauty: which is, that he not onely forgauē the people the faultes that they had done, but also receiued them againe with so gentle and friendly conditions, as might set al mē in a wonder to thinke vpon it. If a Citie or a countrie haue rebelled against their prince, so as they haue broken their allegiance, although he list not to vse extreme rigor by putting all to fire and sword, but be contented to graunt them their liues: yet will he beare them of all their priuileges, he will lay fines and exactions vpon them, & he will perchance depriue them of their ancient liberties, so as the wretched soules shall grone vnder the burden, & haue cause to remember their offence hundred yeres after. But Moses sheweth here, that God dealt not so with the Iewes. For when he had once pardoned their offence, he delt with them as if they had neuer done amisse, & their state was as pleasant & amiable, as if they had obeyed him in all points as became them. And so ye see the intent of Moses in this place.

He had reported heretofore, how he had bin heard: & now he addeth here, What is it that the Lord requireth of thee? He chargeth thee not with any annoyments, he layeth no punishment vpon thee, he layeth no burden vpon thee to beare thee down wth: his only desire is, if thou shouldst loue him, that thou shouldst honor him, if thou shouldst keepe his commandments. And is this any profit to himselfe? No. Euery whit of it redoundeth to thine own benefite. Was it not ynough to make this peoples heart to melt, though they had bin the wickedest in the world, when they might say, whereas we had forsaken the Lord, & broken the covenant that he had made with vs, & chose an ydol in stead of him; he hath not only forgiven the so hainous crime, & bin contented to take vs for his children, & to leaue vs the inheritance which he had promised vs; but also he gouerneth vs after such a fashion, as it might seeme we had deserued al the benefites in the world. Could he deale more kindly wth vs, if we had honored him & giuen our selues wholly to him? Such consideration then ought wel to haue meeked the hearts of that people; & although they were hard & stubborn, yet ought they to haue bowed, seeing they knewe that God sought nothing but their benefite & welfare. Thus we see now the intent of Moses, & to what circumstances his sayings are to be referred. Which is, that the people should knowe that God had not only pardoned their fault aforepast, but also was minded to forget it vterly for euer after: & that in the mean while they should think thus dutifully with themselves, our God behaueth himselfe towards vs, as if we had neuer offended him, our state is not a whit appeared, he vseth nothing but gentlenes towards vs. Marke that for one point.

But now haue we a general sentence to gather vpon the thing which Moses tolde vnto the people. For the doctrine which is contained in the Lawe, belongeth as well to vs, as to the. Now then o Irael, what requireth thy God of thee? After the same manner doth God speake vnto vs at this day: he sheweth vs his will as a rule to direct our liues by. And what meaneth he in so doing? Let vs marke what he commandeth, & see what profit can redound vnto himselfe by it. Certaine it is the God requireth no more at our handes, but that we should loue him; & is not that a condition which we shoulde rather chose, than all the kingdoms of the world? Yes; for if our God should make vs princes, surely the greatest honour which hee should do vs therein, were but that he should make vs his seruants. We see that such as liue at ease, yea euen men of worshippe & of good reueneue, had leuer to trot to the Court, & to be in seruice with the prince, and to take much toyle, yea and to spende their goods to get estimation, than to play the snudges at home in their own houses, & to liue at rest vpon their owne reuenues. Behold our God entertaineth vs & keepeth vs in his house, & is not in degree of flauetic, but as his children; inso-much which he calleth vs his inheritance. In deede, were there no further than this, that hee accepteth the seruice of vs, of vs I say which are altogether vnprofitable, & haue nothing but al manner of corruption in vs; whereas notwithstanding hee vouchsafeth to imploy vs to good purpose, & to make vs vessels of honor, so as we shine like perles in his church, whereas of our selues we be but dūg & myre: seeing our God dealeth so gently wth vs, what an vnthankfulness is it, if ye come not to yeeld our selues to him with al obedience? And I pray you what profit shall hee reape by vs, when we shall haue serued him neuer so well? Shall he be the better at ease? Hath he need of our help in any thing? No, but al redoundeth to our welfare, & he intendeth nothing but to our profit. Wo worth vs therefore, yea & double wo worth vs, if such goodnes ouercome vs not, & if our hearts be not inflamed wth a right affection of giuing our selues wholly to our God, to be gouerned by him, lo as we suffer him to ouerrule vs, & if we be prest and readie to yeeld to his hand, & to turn euery way as he will haue vs. That is the thing which we haue to mark vpon this text. So then, whensoever the law seemeth ouer rough & sharpe vnto vs, & our wicked lusts tickle vs to spurne against God, so as it is hard for vs to do as he commandeth vs: let vs bethink our selues thus: Thou wretched wight, is the law of thy god burdenfom & grieuous to thee? what demandeth he of thee; whether a thoteth he? His demand is if thou shouldst loue him, honor him, & serue him; & wilt thou in this case become an vnnatural monster? Shall the life which thy god hath giuen thee, serue to make thee kick against him; wilt thou grieue thy maker who hath created thee & shaped thee, & doeth also maintaine thee? Were it not better the heauen & earth were mingled together, & the al things were confounded; than if it might be said that thou makest no reckening of thy god? nay rather, if thou spittest him of set purpose, inso-much which there is neither lawe nor scripture which can bring thee to such obedience, as to make thee yeeld glory to thy God? Is it not reason if we should serue God, when he vtereth such goodnes towards vs, as to reles vs the will of our father, specially by planting the beleece of his Gospell in vs? Now then, as the earth when it is lustie & in good plight doeth alwayes bring forth some thing or other, to shewe that it hath heart in it, so, seeing the God hath giuen vs vnderstanding & reason about the brute beasts, it becometh vs to consider the his doing thereof is to the ende that we should knowe him that made vs, of purpose that we should serue & honour him, and stoop to him with al humility, assuring our selues that he ought to haue soveraigne dominioe ouer all creatures. Therefore let vs marke wel, if whensoever we be tempted to striue against God, and his law seemeth ouer heaue to vs, and our affections fight against it, or go the cleane contrary way from it; then to ouermeister such forwardnesse of our nature, we must bethinke vs as it is told vs here, What is it that thy God requireth of thee? And then is it certain that we shall be too too much ashamed of our selues. For what shall we answer before the Angels of heauen, when this saying shall be laid afore vs? For it shall be well layd to the charge of all such as haue made none account of obeying God, & of all such as haue despised him and his worde. Yea and although the Angels were not to iudge of it, verily euen the Oxen, the Asses, the dogges & the very stones & trees might be our iudges: for all those creatures retaine a naturall inclination of obey-ing God. Therefore how shall we do, when we shall be vpbraid with this saying vttered by Gods own holy mouth, What haue I required at your hands? no more but that you should loue mee & honor me. That is the very summe, & effect of al my law containeth. I haue loued you, & my desire hath bene to be loued of you. Were you worthy to be receiued & loued of me, when yee drew cleane contrary to my will? Lo here wherwith to hold vs in awe, as oft as we cannot finde in our harts to yeld to the obeying of our God, & his commandements seeme hard & sharp vnto vs. What? Surely our God could not vse greater curtesie towards vs, than to allure vs to him by louing of vs, to the intent yee should loue him againe. His meaning is yee should followe him the same way that he hath led vs afore. But now it is certaine, y although God require nothing of vs but to haue the reuerence yee deferueth: yet can we not serue him & honour him, vntill he haue reformed our harts. And therby it appeareth what frowardnesse there is in all men by originall sinne. Behold, God commandeth vs but to loue him & to yeld him honor: that is al contained in his lawe. And yet we come all of vs so farre short of the perfect performace of the thing yee is commanded, that we cannot so much as thinke a good thought, but we indeuer by all meanes possible to withstand whatfoeuer God commandeth. Therefore let vs learne to be abashed & ashamed of the crabbednes of our nature, seeing we be so wayward as to striue against our God & his righteousnes, yea euen though y things that he requireth be more than rightfull.

 And so ye see what we haue to marke, when we feele such a law in our selues, contrary to y lawe y God hath giuen vs.

Rom. 7. 23.

And hereby wee be warned that it is in vaine for men to make protestation, as a number doe, which go about to excuse themselves y they can not giue themselves to God, because of y weaknes & sinfulness of their nature. Verily, as who would say, that the euil which is in vs should serue vs for our defence. Were not that a mocking of God? Shall a man be acquit at his iudges hand, by confessing himself to be guiltie? But here it is shewed vs, that al y hardnes that we haue in vs to obey God, yea euen though it be impossible for vs to moue forward to the performance of the least commandement of the lawe: will not serue to iustifie vs. Why so? Let a man looke well to it, & he shall find that the fault is not in the lawe: for it requireth no more but that wee should serue our God, & therewithal loue him by yielding him his dew reuerence: and what is it to do that? let vs knowe therfore, that the whole fault is in our selues y we obey not our God; & that although we haue no power at all to performe our dutie, yet doth not that discharge vs, seeing that God demaendeth nothing but y which is right & reaso.

By the way, we must call to minde what hath bene declared heretofore: namely that as concerning this text, where Moses sheweth y meane how to fulfill the law aright: it is not meant that we must but onely haue our eyes, hands & feete well ruled; but that we must begin at the reformation of our harts. Thou shalt loue thy God (sayeth he) & serue him. And how? With all thy soule, & with all thy heart. Then let vs learne, y if we do the things by compulsion which are comanded vs; it is nothing worth: wee may not thinke that it shall passe in account. And in deed there are diuers that beare countenance faire ynough afore men, so as they cannot be accused of theft, murder, or whoredome: but in y meane while they be full of wicked lustes, so as they be readie to burst with them, & it is a corse to them to obey God, neither finde they any taste in his commandements. And therefore al is but hypo-crisie, all is but a faire pretence & shewe to the worldward, & (to be short) all is but vanitie and leazing till the heart be wonne vnto God, & vntill we be fully minded & bent to do as God co-mandeth vs. That (say I) is the end that wee must beginne at, if we will accomplish the lawe throughly. Wherefore let vs not beguile our selues any more as the hypocrites do, with desire that men only should be contented. Let vs vnderstand y we haue to do w the heauely Iudge who admitteth no eyesenue, but looketh to the truth of y heart. Therefore let vs giue our selues to God with hartie affection, & not content our selues so with y outward workes, y the intent of doing wel should not also be grounded in our harts.

Besides this, Moses telleth vs y God will not only be serued & honored, but also loued. And here are three words; the one is Loue, the other is Re-uerence, & the third is Serue. Now as touching Reuerence or Fear, (for he vscth the same term of feare,) it is not a slauish fearefulness, but it is y seruiceablenes & honor which we yeld vnto god in submitting our selues vnto him, because we be thoroughly persuaded that so far as he hath all foueraintie ouer vs, it is good reason that we should be subiect vnto him. First & formost therfore let vs consider, that although God had not spoken to vs to persuade vs to this reuerence; surely euen nature sheweth it vs sufficiently, and it is wel ynough proued vnto vs in our selues. For although it were neuer told vs that the lewdnes of men is such, as they seeke nothing else but to turne away from God, & to become beastlike by al meanes they can deuise, yea euen wittingly & wilfully: yet our heads & harts are stuffed so full of that lesion, as we cannot be ignorant of it. And therefore it standeth vs greatly in hand to beare in mind what this word reuerence or feare importeth, that is to wit, that God ought to be honored of all his creatures, & that seeing we be his, wee ought to offer our selues to be subiect to him.

Also it importeth, that when we thinke vpon God,

Deut. 6. 5.

1 Cor. 5. 38

God, wee should hallowe his name, that is to say, not imagine any thing of him to the derogation of his glorie, but yeeld honor to his righteousness, wisdom & power . This is the first point which Moses setteth downe here, concerning obedience and the right obseruing of the Lawe.

Now this reuerence requireth also loue . For God wilbee honored with hartie affection . If we reuerence his maiestie, & yett stand in feare of it, so as it is a terror to vs: then would wee wish that there were no God at all, and wee coulde fynd in our hartes to plucke him out of his seate, if it were possible . As many as worship God vpon no further grounde, but for that they are sure they cannot scape his hād, & because they know him to be their maker; those (say I) being not touched with any free loue, wil thunne God; and when they heare any speaking of him, it grieveth them; in somuch that if it were in their choyce & power, they would plucke him out of his seat if they could, as I said afore . So then it is not possible for vs to feare God, ( I meane to yeelde him right reuerence, so as we beare a hartie god will to him, & haue a feeling of his goodnes towards vs, & y<sup>e</sup> he is the place where we must seeke al our welfare ) vnlesse we loue him . Therefore if wee haue not this loue, there wilbe no reuerence at all . Wherefore let vs learne, y<sup>e</sup> God requireth free will offerings, that is to say, that our offering of our selues vnto him should not be of force or constraint, but with such deuotion as wee should be desirous to serue him, & as we might protest with Dauid, not onely that wee set more store by his law than by gold & siluer; but also that it is more sweete & pleasant to vs, than honie . Thus ye see what the second worde Loue importeth .

The third worde is Seruite . For if wee make pretence to worship God with ceremonies and gewgawes as they say, & in y<sup>e</sup> mean while do him no true seruice in deede : is it not a mocking of him? If men beare folkes in hande y<sup>e</sup> their intent is to honor God, & that they loue him, & submit themselves to him; & in the meane season make but a flimsiam of it when God setteth forth his commandements vnto them: what a presumptuousnes were that? And likewise what a matter were it, if they should shewe no prooffe wherby a man might perceiue, y<sup>e</sup> his loue which he speaketh of here is rooted in their heart? Then let vs learne, y<sup>e</sup> we must shewe by our deedes that wee loue & feare God . And what are the doings that must beare witness therof? Euen our seruing of him, y<sup>e</sup> is to wit, when we play not the loose colts by taking leaue to do euery man after his owne lust & liking; but suffer God to ouerrule vs, so as our whole desire be that he should hold y<sup>e</sup> raines of the bridle, & we yeeld euery way vnder his hād to turne to & fro according to his good wil . And so we see y<sup>e</sup> way whereby wee must shewe our selues to loue God, is by our seruing of him .

Howbeit, forasmuch as men are giuen to deuise seruices of their own brain, & do make boast that they glorifie God when they haue followed their owne foolish inuentions: Moses rebuketh this ouerboldnesse of men, and this curiositie of theirs, telling them that the seruice of God co-sisteth in keeping the commandements & ordinances which he deliuereth to them in the name of God . Now then we see here, that our Lorde hath cut off all our fond inuentions, y<sup>e</sup> we should not imagine to serue him any more after our owne fancie . For why? He will haue obedience, & hee esteemeth more of that than of al the sacrifices in y<sup>e</sup> world, Had this point beene wel obserued, there would not be such disputing as is scene nowadays, among such as beare the name of Christians . For the Papiests may good cheape say, that a mā may fulfill the law of God . And why? Because they neuer wist what end or what mark God aymed at . They think it ynough for a man to be able to discharge himself to y<sup>e</sup> worldward; & so they make God like a little babe, by reason wherof they say it is a blasphemie to saye that wee cannot performe the law . For they neuer came to the trial of it . The despisers of God step forth here & say, that the lawe is easie, when as notwithstanding they neuer put so much as their little finger towards the doing of it . But when we haue well weyed the things that are conteyned here; wee shal finde that it is not so easie a matter . Againe if we compare the law with our own frowardnes, we shal find that the lawe were easie ynough of it self, if we were as wel disposed as we ought to be . But we come farre thort of being Angels; & wee had neede of an angelical nature to the obeying of Gods law . For it draweth vs from the world, and leadeth vs vp to heauen; and we go y<sup>e</sup> cleane contrarie way . Againe, when the seruing of god commeth in question, it wil not suffice vs to play the hypocrites & to say, wel, this or that is to be done, & in the meane while to ouerchip y<sup>e</sup> chiefe point: but when it is said that wee must loue our G O D with all our hearte; & we come to the wel head, and to the verie roote, which is that G O D requireth such a foundenesse, as not onely wee should doe whatsoever hee comanndeth vs, but also haue a pleasure in it, so as our chiefe delight should be therein, and when we see an agreeableness betwene God & our affections, we should be gladder therof than if wee had obtained all our fleshy desires & likings . Againe, men should not be doubtful of the meanes howe to serue God as wee see the worlde hath alwayes beene, by swariung from the rule that is containd in Gods worde . What is it that is termed Gods seruice in the Popedome nowadays, but fantasies that men haue deuised without any reason? And no maruel . For (to their seeming) Gods law was of no great importance, neither did they busie their heads greatly about it . And therefore needs must they inuent a great number of other small trifles . But they that giue them selues to Gods lawe, doe see, there is cause for them to saye thus; Alas, although I take neuer so much paine, yet can I not compass it, but alwayes I come thort of my wayes ende . Nay (which more is ) all ny enforcing of my selfe is in vaine : in so much that if my God were not mercifull to mee, to giue me power & strength, I shoulde goe cleane backwarde, and contrarie to his will .

As for the Papiests, they had no regard of this, but inuented a sorte of gewgawes to serue God withall, as setting vp of candies before puppets, gadding on pilgrimage, hearing of masses, taking of holy water, and all the rest of their pelting trash. But such as knowe what it is to keepe the lawe, do neuer let their myndes vpon such childish bawbles. But when men knowe not howe to serue God aright, then they romc wandring here and there. Therefore let vs beare in mynde, that here our Lord hath declared which is the true seruice that hee liketh and alloweth of; namely the following of his commandements, so as men deale not after their owne fante and liking, but holde themselues to his worde; and as it were bridling and keeping them selues captiue, do accept nothing but that which they knowe to bee the pleasure of their God. Thus you see in effect what wee haue to gather vpon this text.

Nowe for a conclusion, heere Moses setteth forth commandements for the welfare of the people. Whereas hee sayeth that he setteth them forth, it is to take away all excuses of ignorance, and to quayle mennes foolish curiositie, that would stye about the cloudes to knowe Gods will. Yee see then howe GOD maketh vs vnexcusable, when hee sendeth vs his worde, and commaundeth it to be preached vnto vs. Could he make him selfe more familiar vnto vs, than by sending mortall men as his messengers vnto vs, to speake vnto vs in his name, and to giue vs vnderstanding of his will by their meanes? Then if wee saye that wee knowe not Gods will, you see here is wherewith to disproue vs; for God hath giuen vs his worde in writing, so as wee neede not to seeke for it: and therefore it ought to be sufficiently knowne vnto vs. Nowe then let vs also learne to receiue it with reuerence & humilitie: and when we heare mortall men speaking vnto vs, let vs assure our selues, that we must not measure the maiestic of Gods worde by their persons. But wee must haue an eye to him from whom it cometh, and which is the author of it, that wee may submit our selues wholly vnto it. Therefore let vs not haue these diuelish fantasies with vs, as some dreamers haue, which say, O that God would speake to mee from heauen, I woulde faine haue some reuelation. Let it content vs that God cometh down vnto vs, to make vs priuie to his will: for that is it which Moses ment, in saying that hee did set forth Gods commandements: as if hee had saide, that men neede not to goe farre to seeke him. And in the ende hee sheweth, that all this tendeth to the welfare of the people, so as God seeketh not any benefite to himselfe, for he needeth not to borowe aught of vs, neither can wee do him any pleasure: wee can doe him neither good nor harme, all things are his: according to the eyght Psalme, and also the fiftieth Psalme, where it is saide, that all the beastes in the feelde are in his possession, and that if hee be hungrie or want any thing he needeth not to seeke it at our handes. Why then requireth he to be serued of vs? It is for our benefite, for that there can not be a greater good turne vnto men, than to be the seruants of their maker. Then let vs vnderstand, that whereas our Lord layeth not the bridle loose vpon our necke, but gouerneth vs himselfe, and holdeth vs vnder his obedience, thereby to moue vs to serue him the more willingly: hee doeth it to our benefite and respecteth nothing but our welfare. Yet notwithstanding it is true that the lawe will finde vs all giltye, & that when God hath shewed vs all that is good and right: that doctrine doeth so litle benefite vs, that it rather bringeth vs death, and wee bee cursed by it. For it is a looking glasse wherein to see that wee bee Gods enemies: and it is a keye to open the gates of hell. And how then cometh it to passe that God shoulde procure our welfare, and yet notwithstanding wee shoulde receiue nothing but harme by it? That is not of it selfe; but it falleth out by another meane, that is to saye by our owne fault. Then let vs vnderstand, that Gods lawe (if wee consider it in it selfe) is vnto vs a doctrine of welfare, whereby God cometh neere vnto vs to be our father and to make vs finde life in him, that by his ruling of our life, wee might sticke vnto him, and thereby be made partakers of his benefites, & in the ende atayne to the heritage of the heauenly life. But herewithal we be so froward and full of corruption, that the law can serue vs to no other purpose, but to curse vs, & to make vs perceiue how lothsome we be vnto God, in as much as we be his deadly enemies, & so we haue double cause to be abashed & afraid, & ashamed of our selues, when we see y<sup>e</sup> good is so turned to our harm: & it is more than if y<sup>e</sup> nature of y<sup>e</sup> sunne were changed by our infection. Woulde it not make vs to loth our selues, if we shoulde find such foule & vyle smokes in vs, as shoulde darken and quench the light of the sunne? yes verily. Nowe we see that Gods law is the light of our life: and yet we not only dim it, but also turn it into y<sup>e</sup> darknes of death, & it is vnpossible y<sup>e</sup> it should stande vs in any other steed, vntill our Lord Iesus Christ haue wrought in vs, & reformed vs by his holy spirit, & by writing his lawe newe againe in our hearts. For as much then as we see y<sup>e</sup> men turne life into death, light into darknes, & benefite into bane: alas, ought we not to be exceedingly abashed? yes, but yet must not y<sup>e</sup> put vs out of conceit of y<sup>e</sup> doctrine of y<sup>e</sup> law, so as we shuld not loue it, howbeit y<sup>e</sup> we cannot performe it, vntill god haue chaged our hearts to cause vs to submit our selues vnto him, and haue made vs newe creatures in our lord Iesus christ. True it is y<sup>e</sup> the setting forth of y<sup>e</sup> law vnto vs, is not for ought: but yet must we needes perceiue by experience, y<sup>e</sup> vntill God hath brought vs home againe vnto him, y<sup>e</sup> doctrine of his law will serue for nothing but to condemne vs. But when he hath once wrought in vs by his holy spirit: then shal wee perceiue that in setting forth his law vnto vs, he procureth our benefite & welfare, according as is saide of it here by Moses. And so you heare what we haue to gather vpon this text. But Moses doth yet better confirme the matter that wee haue seene; which is, that God helde not his people downe like slaues, nor handled them roughly to be reuenged of the, &

to make them feele the offence they had committed; but that he handled them after a gentle and louing fashion. Now then (saith he) hath the euerlasting thy God any neede of thee? Behold (saith he) the heauens, yea, and the heauens of heauens are Gods. As if he should say, you think that God would faine haue a people, as though he could not forbear to be without them. Hath not hee the skyes at commandement? hath not he his heauenly host? hath he not whole millions of Angels? hath hee not peaceable dominion in heauen? Yes, and therefore ye must not imagine any more, that his choosing of you was to better his owne estate by you. If hee should destroy you, and make quite riddance of you, should his raigne cease? No, no, and for prooffe thereof, he hath no neede of men. Againe, besides that, is not the earth and all things in it, in his possession? Yes: What is the cause then that hee hath not taken and chosen other nations to him as well as you? Is it for that you are nobler, or mightier, or worthier in any respect, than the rest, as it is mentioned in the seventh Chapter? No. It is certaine that the Iewes were not better than the Gentiles: insomuch that if they should haue beene compared with them, they should haue found themselves to haue bin neither nobler of linage, nor richer in substance, nor vertuouiser in life, nor to haue excelled them in any thing. What is the cause then (saith Moses) that God hath vouchsafed to take you for his people, and that he hath let all others alone, & reached you his hand to gouern you? Sought he his own profite or aduantage? No. Seing then that you be so greedy bouid vnto him; serue him wth the better wil.

Here we see in effect two things. The one is Moses his confirming of the Israelites still in the doctrine y<sup>e</sup> we haue heard; which is, y<sup>e</sup> all of them should learne to glorifie God for their welfare, acknowledging themselves beholden to him for all good things, so as they haue not any worthines or deseruings to vaunt themselves of, but must exalt their God & vterly abase themselves. Marke y<sup>e</sup> for the one point. And out of this proceedeth the other point; which is, that such as haue had such experience of Gods goodnes towards themselves, & are taught aforehand to glorifie god, must take courage to serue him y<sup>e</sup> more frankly, & offer themselves to God with a more zelous will, to be quietly gouerned & ouerruled by him. Thus ye see y<sup>e</sup> two pointes that are to be gathered vpon that text. Yea & let vs mark well, how it is not without cause y<sup>e</sup> Moses standeth so much vpon y<sup>e</sup> doctrine. For wee see how the vnthankfulness of men is so great, y<sup>e</sup> they labor continually to deface Gods goodnes, by reason of y<sup>e</sup> cursed roote of pride & loitines which cannot be quite & cleane taken from vs. Men then do alwayes beare themselves in hand, y<sup>e</sup> they be somewhat worth, & thereupon they stand in their own conceits, yea euen as it were in despite of God. Although God lay on sure loade vpon our heads with beetles, yet cease wee not to let vp our bristles th<sup>is</sup>, & to grunt at him, & to think there is yet some vertue or power in vs. For this cause Moses thinks it not ynough to haue said once or twice, you must faller all your welfare vpon the onely fauour of God: but he returneth eftsoune to the confirming of the same doctrine, to the intent that mens cackling might be y<sup>e</sup> better stilled, and that such as deceiue themselves through their vaine imaginations, might learne to conclude in the end, y<sup>e</sup> it is not for vs to looke for any valour or worthines in our selues, but that we must yeld God that which belongeth peculiarly vnto him, namely, that his calling of vs, his choosing of vs, & his maintaing of vs; & likewise our hauing of his word, & our retaining of some order in the Church, come altogether of him, so as we cannot say we haue gotten them by our owne skil, cunning or strength. Thus much concerning y<sup>e</sup> first point.

Nowe for our better confirmation herein, let vs compare our selues with the Angels & with all the world besides, & let vs think thus: what are we? Truly, if we go no further than to our owne selues, we may haue our eyes dazeled, & we know y<sup>e</sup> naturally men do so before themselves, y<sup>e</sup> they be as good as bewitched with the fond imaginatio<sup>n</sup> of their own worthines. Therefore if we should looke no further than to our selues, it would seem to vs y<sup>e</sup> we be something worth: but if wee looke further of, & fall to considering with our selues, What are other men? Do they not set as much or more by themselves than we do? yes; & if there were a third partie to play y<sup>e</sup> iudge, would he not make more account of them than of vs? Yes. For to outward shewe there is much more greatnes, riches, worthines, & honor; there is much more discretion & wisdom in the than in vs. What is the cause then y<sup>e</sup> God hath chosen vs, & let the others go? Haue we any thing wherof we may be proud? Alas, no, if we be not ouerfarr befored in our own fond imaginations. But if we cannot yet be brought to this reason by cōparing our selues with all the worlde beside: let vs mount vp a litle higher & come to y<sup>e</sup> Angels of heauen. Could not God haue contented himselfe with his Angels, wout cōming vnto vs? We be but poore wormes, there is nothing but rottenesse in vs, & yet god vouchsafeth to seeke vs. His wil is to haue vs to be his children, not only to enioy his gifts & benefites here beneath, but also to aduance vs vp to his heauenly kingdom. And for what deserves of ours? [None at al.] Wherefore seeing we cannot be so beaten down at one blow, as to come humble our selues vnto God; let vs wey well these words of Moses, & bethink vs of the thing that is told vs here; namely that the heauens of heauens are the lords. For Moses thinks it not ynough to say simply the heauens; but he inlargeth his speech yet further, & saith, the heuens of heauens. It had been ynough to haue saide the heauens; for seeing that y<sup>e</sup> earth (how wide and houghe loe cuer it be) is nothing in comparison of the vnmeasurable greatnes of the syles: y<sup>e</sup> only word heauens ought wel to haue sufficed. But Moses intended to expresse it yet more in saying the heuens, yea euen the heuens of heauens. In respect wherof he repeateth those words three times; as if he should say, God can find a kingdō large & gret ynough, & of such widnes as he shal not need to com borrow some litle corner in the world to lodge in: he needeth not to seeke in darke caues for any thing wherewith to set forth his glorye. Men are but wormes; they be but like frogges in a puddle of myre; and shal God come downe here belowe, to make his glorie shine there: Hath he not his heauenly power; to shewe there aboue that he hath soueraine dominion ouer all creatures? Must he be faine to stande to our courtserie for the dooing of any thing? So then, we see that men must not onely become drunken & beastlike, but also starke diuels through pride, if this declaration of Moses make them not to stoope, & to acknowledge it to be good reaso that God should be glorified euery where, and that they ought not to reuerue to themselves any whit of the praise of their owne saluation or welfare.

Now furthermore Moses addeeth, that Gods affection towards that people, & his louing of them to chooſe their seede, proceeded onely of his own good wil. Your God (saith he) hath dominion ouer heauen & earth; And yet notwithstanding he hath vouchsafed to be your Lord. What is the cause therof? Moses hath shewed it alreadye. But yet he addeeth (for greater confirmation) that God did cast an earnest free good wil towards this people. The first word which he vseth, signifieth sometime to cleaue vnto, & sometime to take pleasure. But here the proper & natural meaning of it is, that God tooke pleasure in that people, so that he acquainted himself with them through a free loue: for he addeeth the worde Loue thereunto. Ye see then, that willing pleasure went afore, & afterward loue ensued of it, and it serueth to shewe, that it is a fondnesse for men to imagine y there is any cause why God should loue one more than another, saue onely that it is his pleasure so to do. Moses could not haue exprest this more plainly, than by saying that it was Gods good pleasure. That is the verie fountaine; and out of that fountaine springeth afterward the loue. Let vs learne then, that God must first loue vs, and that we must feele the same by effect in vs; and yet notwithstanding we must not stay stil at that loue. But to the ende wee may the better feele y it is a free loue, we must proceede to Gods pleasure or will; that is to say, wee must knowe, that he respected neither one thing nor other, whereby to be persuaded and moued to that loue, but that he sought the cause of it in him self, and because it liked him, therefore he listeth it. That is the thing that Moses hath declared in this text. Howbeit for as much as we cannot as nowe proceede any farther, let vs beate away but this lesson, that as oft as there is any speaking of our saluation, wee must not seeke y cause of it any where else, than in God; & that being viterly naked of all goodnes, we must confesse our selues to be viterly accursed, but that God pitying vs, and mynding to shewe vs mercie, draweth vs out of the cursednes wherein we were, in which respect, for as much as he calleth & allureth vs to the saluation which he hath purchased so dearly for vs, we must not doubt but y he wil bring vs thither, at leastwise if we abide stedfast in his covenant, & yet neuertheless, that because wee cannot haue such stedfastnes of our selues, here will hold vs vp & strengthen vs by his holy spirit, to the end that feeling his power in vs, wee may be the more encouraged to serue him, and not be vnthankfull for so great goodnesse as hee hath shewed vs.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our fautes, praying him to make vs so to feele them, as we may continually mislike them more and more, and in so doing returne vnto him, as to y onely partie that can remedie our diseales, and set vs vp againe by pardoning our offences: so as we may feele the sweetenes that is in him, and the bitternesse of our afflictions may not make vs to mislike of his seruice, but rather y wee may be the more affectioned vnto it, so as by y means we may be franckd vnto his righteousnes, & vnto y obeying of him, vntil we be gathered into the company of his Angels. That it may please him to grant this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people & nations of the earth, &c.

On Fryday the xiiij. of September. 1555.

15 Yet notwithstanding the Lorde hath through loue acquainted himselfe with thy fathers, and loued them, and chosen their seede after them, that is to wit, euen you aboue all people, as appeareth this day.

16 Therefore cutte away the foreskin of your heartes, and harden not your neckes from henceforth.

17 For the Lord your God is God of Gods, and Lord of Lords, a great, mighty and terrible God, which regardeth not anie mans person, nor taketh anie giftes.

Ye haue to lay foorth more at large, the ſentence that was begun yester day, which is, that here Moſes declareth vnto the Iewes, that all the goodneſſe which they had, proceeded of Gods loue, yea euen of free loue. For his louing of them aboute all other people was not for that they were worthier, but becauſe it ſo pleaſed him. Moreouer, he addeth that God tooke nor Abraham onely, but alſo all his oſpring into his fauour, ſo as his chooſing of the people, proceeded thereof. Whereof commeth it then, that the Iewes were ſo preferred before all the reſt of the worlde? If we ſay it was becauſe they were better than the reſt, y is a maniſt gainſaying of God, who will haue vs to acknowledge his only fauour & goodnes in that behalfe. Then let vs conclude, y God ſought not the cauſe thereof els where than in himſelfe: But y his will was to lay forth the infinite treaſures of his mercy, to ſhew that he was not inducted to any creature, but that his bearing of good will towards them, is for y he himſelfe is good, and therefore all things are to be referred to his praiſe according as the ſcripture ſheweth that his choſing of his church in all ages hath bene to that end. Nowe we ſee in effect what this doctrine meaneth.

Yesterday it was declared what was the uſe of it, namely that men ſhould be humbled in them ſelues, to exalt Gods goodnes, & thereupon take the better courage to ſerue him. For how greatly are we bound vnto him, ſeing he hath vouchſafed to take vs for his heritage, & to adopt vs to be his children, whereas in the meane ſeaſon he hath reiected others that were like vnto vs: For if it be demanded wherein we differ from other men: there wil no difference be found in reſpect of our ſelues. And therefore, ſeing that God hath eſteemed vs ſo highly, we are bound to ſerue him and to giue our ſelues wholly vnto him. But by the way let vs marke, that there is a generall election belonging to all this people, which election deſerueth well to be had in eſtimation. But yet ſhould not al auail, except euery man were made partaker of it particularly in himſelfe. This would be darkeſum, if it were not declared more at large. But it wil become eaſie ynough, if we cal to minde, firſt what Moſes teacheth here, and which wee haue ſeene already heretofore: namely that God choſe Abrahams oſpring out of the whole worlde. And why? becauſe it pleaſed him. All the world was his (as hath bene declared already) and al nations were alike neere vnto him, and in equall degree as that oſpring was that was to come of Abrahā. Nay: (which more is) he choſe a people y had no being, and of who there was no hope. For Abraham was like a drie timberlogge, and therefore was there no hope that euer he could haue any oſpring. Sara his wife was barrē & both of them drooped for age, and their bodies were withered, ſo as God choſe the thing which was not, and his promiſe ſeemed as it were to hang in the ayre, without foundation to reſt vpon. And yet notwithstanding, by vertue of the promiſe wherein God ſayde that hee would bleſſe Abraham's lynage, there muſt needs come a people, as ſhall be ſhewed in the next lecture. See here I pray you the election of God, whereby he putteth ſuch difference betweene the lynage of Abraham and all the reſt of the world, that he made the ſame linage his Church of purpoſe that the ſignes of his fauour and of his covenant ſhould remaine there, and that his name ſhould be called vpon there, ſo as he offered the promiſes of ſaluation to them that deſcended of the ſame race and linage, & the redemption y was to be ſent into the worlde, was let forth vnto the that they might be gathered together vnder him. Loe here (I ſay) a generall election that belonged to all the children of Abraham, and yet was that grace to be confirmed by faith: but in a parte of them, & in ſome of them. For we ſee that many of them were cut off, not for that they were not Abrahams children, in reſpect of the fleſh and the worlde: But for that they were not his children in ſpirit and before God, which was the chiefe point, as S. Paul declareth. As for thoſe which were vnbeleueurs and vnthriftes, and embraced not the promiſe that was made vnto Abraham with true faith, thoſe were ſet beſide the inheritance. In deede they were accounted for his children: howbeit, that was but as Iſmael was who was not lawfully begotten. Now then Gods generall election which extended to the whole people, was not ſufficient: But it behoued euery man to be partaker of itin his own peculiar behalfe. And how was y to be done? by faith. But let vs ſee from whence faith proceedeth, but onely of Gods wil, in that he vouchſafeth to confirm his fauour towards who he thought good. Therefore choſe he whom he liſted out of this people, and ſealed his promiſe in their hearts by his holy ſpirit, ſo as they were made partakers of his trueth, & it tooke full and perfect effect in them. Lo here the double election of God. The one extendeth to the whole people, becauſe circumciſion was giuen indifferently to all, both ſmal and great, and the promiſes like wiſe were common. But yet for all that, God was ſaine to adde a ſeconde grace, by touching the hearts of his choſen, namely of ſuch as he liſted to reſerue to him ſelfe, and thoſe came vnto him, & he made them to receiue the benefit that was offered them. And in deede, we ſee that the greateſt number of that people haue bin caſt off, and as it were baniſhed from Gods fauour, ſo as there remained but a ſmall remnant of them, not onely at ſome one time, but alſo euen after the captiuiuy of Babilon, according to this foreſaying of the prophet Elay: Although thou wart neuer ſo many in number, ſo as thy folke were as the ſande of the ſea, yet ſhall the remnant of you be very ſmall y God wil ſaue. For the hypocrites abuſed Gods promiſe falſly. And becauſe it was ſayd y the people ſhould be in multitude as the ſande of the ſea, they bragged at the ſight of a great number, and in the meane while diſpiſed God. serued some seede, the countrie of Iuda had bin as Sodom & Gomorre, & God had vtterly rooed them out as they had well deserued.

Now is this very profitable for vs. For nowadayes, when it is tolde vs y we haue the pure doctrine of y Gospell preached vnto vs, & we haue the sacrament of baptism for the warrant of our saluation, y is one choise that God maketh of vs. We be no better than other men, y are drowned in ydolatrie & abhominations, on whō God hath not vouchsafed to looke w̄ such pity, as to make y truth of his gospell to shine vpon thē: but hath let thē alone as detritice of all things, so as there is nothing but horrible confusion amongst them; & yet in the meane season, he taketh vs between his armes, and into his bosome, vouchsafing to cause his word to be preached vnto vs, whereby we see Iesus Christ who inlightneth vs as y day-sun of righteousnes, & we haue the sacraments wherof we knowe the vse. Lo here one choise y God maketh of vs, which is well worthy to be esteemed, wherin it behoueth vs to cōsider Gods only infinite goodnes, for y he espieth nothing in vs, for y which he should reprob vs, before such as are nobler thā we, & haue much more thā we to outward appearance. But yet is it not ynough for vs to be so choise of God as y he taketh vs into his house, admitteth vs to bee of his flocke, & dwelleth among vs; euey of vs must haue an cie to himselfe, so as y gospell be not preached in vain nor we beare the bare name of Christians, without shewing y effect of it in our deedes. For vntil our adoptiō be sealed by y holy Ghost, let vs not thinke y it auaileth vs any whit to haue herd the word of God: but it shal turne to our double condemnation, because y when God had chosen vs, we offended him; whē he had entered into a cōuenant with vs, we brake our faithfull promise which we had made & plighted vnto him; and therefore we must be punished y more greuouly. But whē we haue once a warrant in our hearts, y his promises belong vnto vs, & are behighted vnto vs, by reason y we receiue them w̄ true obedience, & sticke to our Lord Iesus Christ, suffering him to gouerne vs: y is a sure seale of Gods choosing of vs, so as we not onely haue the outward appearance of it before men, but also the truth of it before our God. And like as Abraham was made the father of all y faithful before God: so are we made his children in spirit & truth, and not only as in respect of adoption to y world. Thus we see what we haue to gather vpō this text, & vpō this declaration y Moses maketh here to the Iewes.

And for the same cause he addeeth the exhortation which we haue read, in that he willeth the Iewes to circumsise their heartes, and to beware that they hauden not their neckes any more. Good reason it is that men should submit themselves to God after y manner by forsaking thēselues, seeing that his seeking to win vs to him is not for any comoditie to himselfe, (as was shewed yesterday,) but because hee is desirous of our welfare, so as hee putteth vs not to the doing of any thing which redoundeth not to our own benefit & profit. Seeing then y God respecteth nothing but vs in his alluring of vs to come vnto him: should we drag backe in that case? Or should we haue proude and Iostie heartes to aduance ourselues against him? Nowe for the better vnderstanding of this doctrine, let vs note that Moses had an ey to the outward signe that was giuen at that time to the Iewes, after the same maner that we haue baptisme at this day. For circumcision seiued to two ends. First, God thereby condemned all mankinde and all that is of mans owne nature: shewing them thereby, that all of it is euill. And secondely he gaue hope of saluation in y seede of Abraham, accordingly as he had promised. To this purpose (say I) I serued y figure of circumcision, namely to put the Iewes in minde, y nō their mothers wombe, they brought nothing with thē but condemnation, & that all y euer was of man was cursed before God, because it had nothing in it but sinne & corruption. Secondly againe they were comforted, forasmuch as they sawe that God promised them saluation, by the seede of man, and y he receiued them into fauour, and iustified thē of purpose to haue them separated frō all y rest of the worlde. Seeing the Iewes had this prerogatiue, surely if they had not ment to deface Gods power as much as in the lay, they should haue made their circumcision available, by cutting off al y euer was of their owne nature, assuring themselves y men can not please God, vntill they haue giuen ouer the things y were their owne. Hereunto had Moses an eye when he sayd, Circumsise your heartes this day. For their obseruing of y figure was nothing, except they cōsidered to what end God ment to lead them by it. They beguiled themselves with y visible signes, and y was ynough to thē: for Satā hath alwaies this policie with him, to make men busie their wits about the things y they see with their eyes as whereunto hee seeth them inclined. For all our seeking is to content God with faire couers; and though we neuer come nie him in verie deede; yet would we fain pay him with a sort of pelting trifles. The Iewes then esteemed their circumcision ynough & too much, but yet in so doing they abused it, because they regarded not y thing y God ment to shew thē thereby, but were tied altogether to y visible signe. Therefore doth Moses rebuke them, saying: thinke not y the hauing of circumcision in your bodies, is all y you haue to doe: for Gods giuing of y signe vnto you, was to he lp your infirmity, of purpose to leade you further thereby, namely to bring you to true repentance. For when ye once perceiue y al y euer is of your own nature bringeth nothing but cursing: you shall see that all of it is to be done quite and cleane away. Therefore bethinke ye to mortifie your selues: as if he should say, Circumcision consisteth not in the outward paring away of the fleshe, but the truth thereof is within: it is your heartes that must be circumsised. Moses his meaning hereby, is not to condemne the outward signe: but to shewe the true vse of it, which folke had corrupted through superstition and hypocrisy. Accordingly whereunto Iocll sayth, Render your heartes, & not your garments. Wherin his meaning is, not that men should no more shew any token of repentance by humbling them-themselves before God, but to shew that all that euer men do by outward signes, (as by rending of the hayre from their heades and bearded, by much weeping, by knocking vpon their breasts, and by al other maner of gestures that may shew them to be abashed, & in maner out of comfort before God) is nothing, except  $\bar{y}$  hart be broken afore. Euen so, circumcision is vtterly vnprofitable, vnles  $\bar{y}$  hart be circumcised as wel as  $\bar{y}$  body.

Now we see the meaning of Moses, but it will be come the plainer & easier vnto vs, if we come to our baptisme. I haue already touched the likeness that is betweene these two sacraments: and it is all one, as if a man should say vnto vs nowe adays, if you would  $\bar{y}$  God should take you for his people and heritage, yee must be baptised in your soules. What? baptised in our soules? Yea for sooth. For the water that is cast vpon our bodies is nothing, if wee haue not the truth of it, namely that we be plunged vnder the water, as if we were in a graue, that is to say,  $\bar{y}$  it maketh vs to die in our selues, so as our owne affections, our owne thoughts, our owne witte, our owne reason, and our owne wisdom eare not any more sway in vs; but  $\bar{y}$  we suffer our selues, to be gouerned by God, so as all our fleshly lusts bee subdued and held in captiuitie vnder him, and vnder his yoke. Therefore if a man would shew vs the true meaning of our baptisme, he should say, looke that yee be baptised within. And for the same cause also doeth Saint Paule in the seconde to the Romans, sette downe a difference betweene the circumcision of the letter, and the circumcision of the spirite: And he sayeth that the one is inward, and the other outward. Whereas he termeth it the Circumcision of the letter, it is by a similitude, for he hath an eye to the worde. To what purpose serueth the reading of Gods Law, and of the Gospell, if it touch vs not inwardly? Verily if euery of vs haue his Bible in print, and yet let it alone, what doe we else but make it vnholly by our not applying of so great a treasure to our vse, & by our not employing of the same to our profite according to the intent of our God? Euen so standeth the case with the sacramentes sayeth Saint Paule. For they be but as a dead letter, so long as wee haue no more but the visible signes, it is but a gay appearance and shew before men: But the whole matter consisteth in hauing the truth before God. Wil we haue the true Circumcision: then must it be inwardly, that is to say, in the Spirite. That is to say, God must worke there. So we see nowe that the meaning of Moses was, that folke should not boast vainly of the bare name of God, nor of the wearing of his badge, without the truth of it, so as they could shewe the power thereof: but that they should fare the better by the signe that is giuen them to warrant their adoption, to the extent it might appeare that God hath not without cause separated them from the heathen, which were as good as banished out of his church, & had no acquaintance at al with him.

Againe we see that this doctrin toucheth and concerneth vs nowadayes, because we haue baptisme which serueth to the same vse  $\bar{y}$  circumcision did, namely to lead vs to repentance. Therefore must we apply it to our vse. And forasmuch as God hath vouchsafed to giue vs a seale of the fatherly loue which he beareth vs, and that it pleased him to gather vs into his Church, and to shew  $\bar{y}$  he hath taken vs vnto himselfe to be heirs of his kingdome: Let not vs disappoint our selues of such a benefite through our owne lewdenelle and vnthankfulness; but lette vs endeavour to fare the better by it, by beinge walkt in our soules, that is to say, by mortifying our owne imaginations, reasons, and lustes, and by offering vp of our selues in sacrifice vnto god, to the ende that he may renewe vs, and that nothing elie but his spirite may reigne in vs, so as hee may beare the whole swaye. This exhortation is made vnto the Jewes, because it was their dutie to apply their sacramentes vnto such ende. Neuertheless let vs marke, that it is not in our power to performe the thing  $\bar{y}$  is required here.

For although the Jewes ought to haue bin circumcised in their heartes; yet was it verie necessary that God should worke in  $\bar{y}$  behalfe. Likewise it standeth vs in hande nowadayes, to mortifie our selues, & we be commanded so to do; but yet must wee be faine to resort vnto God, who referueth to himselfe  $\bar{y}$  office of renewing our soules. And that is the cause why it is sayd  $\bar{y}$  our Lorde Iesus Christ is only he which baptiseth with fire & the holy Ghost. For if a man  $\bar{y}$  ministrereth baptisme, had power to regenerate, then had he in himselfe the power, maetic, & glory, which is giuen to  $\bar{y}$  sonne of God. But our baptising is only with water,  $\bar{y}$  is to say, we haue but the signe of baptisme committed vnto vs, yet notwithstanding, our doing is not in vaine: for we must needes be faithful witnesses of God. And forasmuch as we doe it in his name; we must not thinke  $\bar{y}$  the thing is void & vnprofitable. But yet for all that, it becometh vs to resort to our Lord Iesus Christ, and to consider  $\bar{y}$  our ministring of baptisme in his Church, is by his authoritie, & therefore that it belongeth vnto him to make it auailable & that it is only his spirit whereby we be regenerate. For if euery man could wash his own soule: it might be sayde that the minister baptiseth with water, and  $\bar{y}$  euery man baptiseth himselfe with truth; but it can not be sayd so: for that were as much as to robbe Gods sonne of the thing that is peculiar vnto him. He hath reserued that honour to himselfe, & neuer giuen it to any creature, no not vnto  $\bar{y}$  Angels of heauen. Therefore let vs vnderstand, that nowadayes when it is tolde vs, that we must make the outward signe auailable vnto vs, by being baptised in our soules: we must therewithall immediately submit our selues vnto God, praying him to performe the thing by the power of his holy spirit, which he representeth to vs outwardly by the figure thereof; and to mortifie and renewe vs in such wise, as we may haue the truth of baptisme sealed vppon and ingrauen in our soules. In like case was it with the people of olde time.

True it is that here Moses exhortheth  $\bar{y}$  Jewes to Circumcise their heartes: but yet we shall see hereafter, howe he will say, the Lorde our God Deut. 10. 6.

will circumsise your heartes, it may well seeme at the first sight, y these two things stande not wel together, but that there is some contrarietie in them: and yet they agree both together very well. For (as I haue touched afore) it is our durie to be circumsised; that is to say, to cutt off all that is of our owne nature, and to ridde it quite away, y God may reigne in vs. But doe we discharge our felues therof? No: but God must be faine to supply our want: And therefore it is he that Circumsiseth vs. Why then doeth he commaunde vs to doe it, seeing wee haue neither power nor abilitie to doe it? It is to the ende that we should be sorie at the sight of our owne wretchednes, and y seeing wee faile, and are so blame worthy, we should on the other side resort vnto our God, condemning our felues, & on y other side be ecouraged to desire him to do y which wee our felues can not. There is yet one other reason, y whereas God doth all in vs, yet he calleth his doing ours, and will haue euerie of vs to endeuour ourselues, though he be the worker of it. Thus it is he y doth all, notwithstanding that we be not as blockes; For he hath giuen vs a will by nature. Neuertheless that will is wicked, but he correcteth it and maketh it good; & his working is after such a sort, as he will haue vs to indeuour our felues lustily like good men of warre, in so much y although we do nothing, & that that which we do cometh of him; yet will he haue vs to haue such feeling of his power, as to ouercom all temptations, & be circumsised in our heartes, by renewing of our minds, & by forsaking alour own affections, to fight against Satan, vntil wee haue gotten the vpper hande.

But yet by the way we must vnderstand, that this serueth not to magnifie our owne free wil as the Papists haue imagined. We haue shewed already, y we be so litle able by nature to come vnto God, that we drawe cleane backe fro him. Neuertheless to the intent to shew vs plainly what our ductie is, he sayeth vnto vs, do it: & although we be not able to set hand to the worke, no, nor to put forth a finger towards it: yet doth he commaund vs to do our duty, notwithstanding y we be vtterly vnable by any meanes to perform it. And that is to the end y we seeing our default, should be the more ashamed of it, & humble our felues before God, and againe y we should be prouoked to pray him to worke in vs, seeing it is he y doth all in vs, notwithstanding y it be his will, that we should be y instrumentes of the power of his holy spirit. For as he is so gracious vnto vs, as to impute his owne doings vnto vs & to make vs partakers of the: so also it is his will, y we should acknowledge and take them for our owne.

And now to go forward with the matter that I haue touched already, let vs beare wel in mind, that if our heartes be not circumsised, we shalbe condemned of falshood, for breaking of the promise, y we haue made to our God, as this people were, who therefore were oftentimes vpbroyded with the vncircumsisednes of their heartes. The Prophetes cried our oftentimes to the Iewes, come on your waies with your circumsision. You beare your felues in hand that God is greatly beholden vnto you, because you beare his marke. But you deale too claudily w him, & ye abuse his name with too wicked trecherie. That marke was giuen you to make you holy, & yet notwithstanding ye be defiled, inso much y ye ly weltring in your owne dung, & (which worse is) ye make your circumsision a cloke of hypocrisie to couer your wickednes withall: So that if ye were stripped naked, ye would be ashamed to see your own filthinesse. But now because ye haue Circumsision, ye imagine y that should hide all your vncleannesse; and thereupon ye fall to spying of God, by your corrupting & falsifying of y thing which he had ordeined for your welfare & profit. Away therefore ye vncircumsised, worle th the verie heathen themselues. Away ye people of Chanaan, your father was an Amon hite and your mother an Hethit: that is to say, ye be worse than the veriestes naughupackes in the worlde. Hence ye Harlots birds, come ye hither to boast that Abraham was your father? Go seeke your anceters somewhere else; for ye be bastards and vnworthe, to be counted Abrahams childre or seede. We see howe the prophetes did curte the combes of the prating Iewes, to the intent they should not brag any more of their circumsision, yea and euen Saint Steuen vseth the same maner of speech in the seuenth of the Actes. Go to ye vncircumsised of heart & stiffe-necked people (sayeth he) ye be like your fathers, who hath alway rebelled against God, & you follow their footestepes, or rather ye goe on from euill to worfe. And think we that such vpbraidings concerne not vs nowadayes? Yes: For if we be once baptised, wee shall pay decre for our desling of the water which God had dedicated to so holy & sacred an vse. In dedde the water of it selfe is nothing; but when it is once ioyned to the word, there is as it were an authenticalle seale which God hath ingrauen in it. Nowe hee that counterfaiteth y seale of a Prince, shal hee not be punished? Beholde, this is the seale of God, which serueth not to seale conuiciences of earthly possessions; as Landes, Medowes, Vineyardes, and Lordeshippes: but to assure vs that we be called to the heauenly life; it is such a seale as bringeth warrant with it, that we be washed cleane from our sinnes by the blood of our Lord Iesus Christ, and regenerated againe by his holy spirit; and that we breake all this, & scape vnpunished: The let vs looke well about vs and consider, that our Baptisme will cost vs very deare if we make it not auailable, so as it may take effect in vs by being truly baptised in our soules.

And he addeth immediatly, Harden not your necks any more. We haue expounded the like similitude heretofore: but yet must I tell ye briefly in this text, y by this figuratiue speech which I am about to expound, Moses ment to expresse that the Iewes circumsising of their heartes, was their submitting of themselues vnto God by receiuing his yoke, so as they kicked no more against him like wilde colts. Ye see then y the thing which God requireth at our hands in that he will haue vs to be renewed, is that we should be obedient vnto him. And hereby wee be warned, that as long as men abide in their owne nature, they be rebellous against God, and doe nothing else but spite him by drawing the contrary way from his righteousnes, so as (to be short) they be enemies to all goodnesse. And for prooffe thereof, God requirerh no more but that we should bow down our neckes vnto him, and beare his yoke meekely. That is the whole perfection of our life; and the greatest holinesse that God commandeth, is that men should mortifie all their wicked affections, according to the former saying, that they should be circumcised to please God, that is to say, they must die to liue well, that is to wit, God must ridde them of all that is their owne, if he intend to haue any good of them. Then let vs beare in minde that there will bee nothing but stubbornesse in vs, to make vs to lift vp ourselues against God, and to play the wilde beastes, so long as we abide in our owne nature. To be short as long as a man foloweth his owne inclination; hee must needs be at warre with God, and all goodnes: for there is not that veine in him, which tendeth not althergeth to euill. Nowe let vs go bragge of our owne freewill, and say that men may well binde God to the by their good works and desertes, as the papistes haue imagined. For when the Papists heare that God commandeth vs to doe any thing; they conclude thereupon by and by, that then it is in our power to doe it. Yea, but (as I sayde before) God respecteth not our abilitie or power, but our ductie. Neither passeth he for the gay appearance or outward shewe, to accept the things that carrie a faire countenance to the worldwarde. But the thing that liketh me (sayth he) is y<sup>e</sup> ye receiue my yoke which I lay vpon you, not by tyranny or cruelty, but [of fauour & good will], so as it shal be sweete and amiable to you, if you can inure yourselues to it with humilitie. Thinke not y<sup>e</sup> I come to be pleased with your faire countenances. In deed ye can well ynough pretende outwardly, to be as lowly & meeke as sheepe in hearing the voice of your shepheard: but inwardly ye be as stalfedde buls, ready to strike at him wth your hornes; ye be wolues & foxes; there is nothing in you but pride & crueltie; there is nothing but hypocrisie, guile, & spitefulness; ye be of so sturdy nature, y<sup>e</sup> it is vnpossible to tame ye: & therefore it behoueth you to be quite & cleane changed, or else ye can neuer away wth my yoke, but ye wil be like wilde beastes, so as I shal not be neuer able to cōpasse you. Such then are we by nature, & such do we cōtinue still vntil god haue reformed vs by his grace, & we see the proof of it here before our eyes. And yet not withstanding we wil nedes stil magnifie our owne reason & say we haue some feedes of goodnes in vs, so as we be inclined vnto goodnes, & can help to further Gods grace, so he aid vs, & so we make a hotechpotech of halie figs & halfe reasons as they say. True it is y<sup>e</sup> God stirreth vs vp & putteth vs forward (say they); but we go on of our own self mouing: & afterward as he increaseth his grace, so do we put to our collup; and finally our atteyning to y<sup>e</sup> accomplishment of our enterprises, cometh of our owne wisdom, strength & forwardnes. But Moses giueth no place to such follies:

Ezec. 16. 3. 4.

Ae. 7. 51.

but contrariwise, he sheweth, that (spite of our teeth) this sentence of cōdemnation must nedes stande, namely that if we intend to be obedient vnto God, we must first & foremost be circumcised, so as all y<sup>e</sup> is of the world must be killed in vs. Let that serue for one point.

And herewithall we haue to marke, that (as hath bin tolde vs oftentimes) God maketh more account of obedience, than of all the precious things y<sup>e</sup> men imagine theselues to haue. For in all ages men haue inuented fond deuotions, and they haue borne theselues in hand y<sup>e</sup> they should please God well ynough, with deuising of apes toys of their own brain. But cōtrariwise y<sup>e</sup> thing y<sup>e</sup> God requirerh of vs, is y<sup>e</sup> we should submit our selues to him & say; Lord reigne thou ouer vs, & be thou our only master; so as al our righteousness & holines may be to frame our selues according to thy worde, & not to make long vagaries to inuent this or that; but to holde ourselues contented with thy single will, to yeeld to y<sup>e</sup> which thou cōmandest, & to beare thy yoke quietly; yea and to learn to stoop & to bow down our necks vnto it, though it seeme painefull to vs. That is y<sup>e</sup> subiectiō which God requirerh at our hands. Whereas Moses saith: Harden not your neckes any more; he rebukerh the Iewes for their former life, as if he should say, It is enough & too much y<sup>e</sup> ye haue hitherto bin stubborn against your God; according to this former saying of his heretofore, Fro y<sup>e</sup> first day y<sup>e</sup> I was acquainted with you, vnto this hour, I haue seene nothing but naughtines & frowardnes in you. He reherseth y<sup>e</sup> same here, as a thing y<sup>e</sup> should make them ashamed. For we like not to haue our former faults laid in our dish. As soone as a man doth but touch them, because our eares are nice, it is a corsie vnto vs, & we thinke y<sup>e</sup> all such things should be buried in forgetfulness, so as they should neuer be remēbred any more. In deed if we our selues did beare the well in mind, it should not neede to tell vs of them any more; but we see how euery of vs falleth asleepe in the, & it greeueth vs to come to any backereckening of the offences that we haue committed against God. We cast them a great way behinde vs, it is a matter of heauinesse to vs: and yet ought wee to bethinke our selues diligently both euen and morne of our former faultes. Howbeit not to be rechelesse of them; or to fall into despaire for the; but to be forie in such wise for them, as we may walke more warily than wee haue done, and be thankfull to God for his goodnes in y<sup>e</sup> hee hath vouchsafed to correct vs, as I haue declared often heretofore. Ye see then how men ought to haue good remembrance of their faults, though they were neuer warned thereof by others. But what doe we? Wee forget them, and can not abide that any man should tell vs of them: and that is a doubling of the fault. Therefore let vs assure ourselues, that it is needefull for vs to be tolde of our sins oftentimes, and to be put in remembrance of them. And that is the cause why Moses sayth againe; Harden not your hearts any more. He doth not alonely warne the Iewes but also therewithall accuse them, telling them that euen vnto that time they hadde behaued

themselves to ill; as it was verie requisite for the to be done to vnderstand, that it was but a fondnesse for them to boast themselves to be Gods people.

Nowe to the intent we may learne to put this doctrine in practise as it ought to be; Let vs vnderstande, that such as will needes harden themselves in naughtinesse, shalbe destroyed by God who will make them to feele y<sup>e</sup> force of his power according to this saying of his. If ye fall to stubbornes with me, I will deale stubbornly with you againe. And it is all one with this saying of the xvij. Psalme, With the frowarde I wil be froward, and I wil deale roughly with such as harden themselves against me. Then let vs learne that Gods intent is to lay a yoke vpon our neckes by his worde, of purpose to bring vs in subiection to his righteousness: And all is for our benefite. Insonmuch that although it bee so vnpossible for vs to fulfill the Lawe, that wee can not so much as put fourth one of our litle fingers to the furtherance of it, nor no once thinke a good thought: yet is that yoke gentle & amiable of it selfe, and all the harme of it cometh of our felues. For if wee will not bowe downe our neckes, but strout them out as hard as if they were steele or brass; so as in steede of being as Oxen to labour, or as sheep to heare the voyce of our shepherd, we become sturdy buls and fall to striking with rage & furie to shake off the yoke, so as we not only followe not the worde, but also shake off all subiection, and in harden ourselves against God, what excuse will there be for vs, seeing wee yeelde not our felues vnto him willingly to be taught at his hande? Yet for all that, we see how the world goeth. God therefore must be faine to ouermaster vs, & to tame vs by maine hande. And in verie deede, looke what afflictions fouer light vpon vs, we ought to take the as strokes of Gods had, to make vs bowe our neckes vnder him, and to become tractable and obedient. But when we go awke and cleane contrary after that fashion, the doth he threaten vs thus by Moses, I will deale stubbornly as well as you. He vseth that terme of purpose, to the intent y<sup>e</sup> men should not dally with him. For at the first blush the saying might seeme straunge which I alledged out of the xvij Psalme; namely, that hee will deale frowardely with such as are froward. For howe can that be? Can God be frowarde? No: But it is all one as if he shoulde say: yee shall finde in me a greater hardnesse than yours is: Let vs incounter together, and see which of vs is stoutest and best able to holde out. I tell you, it is you that are like to be confounded and go to wrecke. And therefore let vs leaue our naughtinesse, and repaire vnto God while he calleth vs; and when we be come to him, let vs suffer ourselves to be gouerned by his holy spirite, which is, the spirite of meeknesse, that we may submit our felues obediently vnto him. And for perfoumance thereof, lette vs marke the lesson that Moses addeth immediately.

The everlasting thy God (sayeth he) is the God of Gods, a great, a mighty, & a strong God: yea but let vs marke also, that he doth not accept (that is to say, regard) men persons; but iudgeth according to y<sup>e</sup> truth. Beware therefore y<sup>e</sup> trust not any more in your circumsicion nor in such like things, but beare in mind that God will haue your seruice to be such, as your hearts may be wholly dedicated vnto him; and that he wold haue you to submit your felues vnto him, so as he may haue you in his possession, and you enioy the inheritance which hee promised to your fathers, and which belongeth vnto you. Gods greatnesse which Moses speaketh of in this place, is the first foundation which wee must lay whereby to take courage to serue him. For if there be no certaintie in our religion, wee shall alwayes make but a colde worke of it, and if it bee macched with any wilfulnesse, it will make vs to stande in our owne conceites, yea and starke fooles; so as there shall be no truth nor right in our dooings. Howe so euer the case stande, I say if men bee not sure who the G O D is whom they worshippe; they shall but runne a straye and at randonne, without any zeale to serue him. For although the Papisutes bee so greatly giuen to their idolatrie, that to their owne seeming they haue sure houlde of the things that they haue imagined: yet it is but a doubtfull opinion and surmise, which deceiue them. In deede they doe their seruice with many ceremonies; but if a man come to the searching of their heartes, hee shall finde them alwayes doubting, and so snarled in their superstitions, that they knowe not where they be. And truly whensoever they be pinched with aduersitie, then doeth the venime breake out, so as they shewe that they wote not whether there is a G O D or no, but by blaspheming of him, by gnashing their teeth against him, by finding fault with him, and by accusing him of crueltie, for punishing them (as they suppose) without their deserting. Loe in what taking all they be, which followe their owne fancies in cases of religion. True it is that the Idolaters become so beastly in their superstitions, that they followe them with a burning affection, as the prophetes say, who vprayde the Iewes that they were like stoned horses noying after mares, that is to witte, they were so diuclishly minded, that their doinges were not counted as an ordinarie kinde of whoore dome, but as a villanie euen against nature. Likewise in the Popedome it is not seene that such as are taken to bee the earnestest maintainers of their religion, are rather carried away with rage, than moued with any true zeale to Godwarde? Yes certainly: and thereby they doe the more bewraye their owne leawdenesse and shame. In deede they be balde ynough to skorne vs, as though wee were turned away from the right religion: but lette it suffice vs, that wee may alwayes vprayde them that they knowe not what G O D they worshippe, whereas wee on our side haue good warrant of the doctrine y<sup>e</sup> we follow, and are sure that God accepteth the seruice which we yeelde vnto him according thereunto, and that in so doinge we may boldly offer our felues vnto him.

Yee see then that vnlesse we bee sure of our religion, we shall neuer haue any right ordred zele, nor hearts disposed to serue God. And that is the cause why Moses sayeth heere, Go too, ye be not as the heathen that go at al aduventure, weening that they doe well in seruing their Idolles, howbeit that it be but a weening, so as they know not what the Gods be whom they serue, for it is but a fancie of their owne deuising. But your God is the God that made heauen and earth, it is he that hath reueiled himselfe vnto you. Now then, if yee followe them that haue not the like assurance, and fall to disguising of Gods seruice: what excuse will there bee for you? Were it not meete that ye should rather giue ouer both your bodies and soules to him, so as hee might bee honoured at your handes all your life long? And so we see here the intent of Moses as concerning this text.

Rom. 12. 1.
& 1. Cor. 6,
20.

Now let vs learne heereby, that wee can neuer rule our liues to Gods liking, vnlesse we first knowe him. For what a thing is it if wee thinke we lue vprightly, and in the meane while know not the God whom we ought to serue? For when is our life to bee counted good and holy? When it is spent in the honouring of God: that is the finall ende of it. For if wee knowe not what God it is, nor what his will is, well may we royle our selues all our life long, and yet shall all of it bee but confusion. It is as if a man should runne gadding ouer the feeldes, he might well breake his shinnes, and tyre his whole body, and yet be neuer the further forward, but rather the swifter hee runneth, the further is he off from his journeyes ende. Wee see then that all things are out of order in the Popedome, because they bee blinde and ignorant, and wote not what God they serue, nor what Saunt they should make their voves vnto, as sayth their owne prouerbe. In somuch that when they haue tyred themselues with trotting vp and downe, they wote not where they bee, but are newe to seeke in their imaginations, whereas to knowe God as hee hath shewed himselfe to vs in his woord, that they might yeeld him the reuerence which is dewe vnto him: they can no skill of it, neither is there any tydings of it among them. But as for vs, if wee intende to knowe the true seruice of GOD, and to obey him thoroughly, the first poynt that wee must come vnto, must be to knowe him. In deepe this lesson cannot be dispatched at this present, and therefore it shall suffice vs to knowe in one worde for a conclusion, that it is an inestimable treasure to vs, when it pleaseth GOD to shew himselfe vnto vs, so as wee bee sure that our religion is good, and that he alloweth it, and that we goe not by opinion or by weening, as these wretched beastes doe, which suffer themselues to bee lead by the nose, as not hauing any certaine rule whereby to guide and to gouerne themselues. Marke that for one poynt.

And for the second poynt let vs marke also, that for as much as our God is great and terrible; it behoueth vs to be humbled vnder his mightie hand, and to learne to walke in such wise in his feare, as wee not onely be abashed at his Maiestie, but also besides our honoring of him with feare and reuerence, wee repaire and resort vnto him without any doubting that he is our father.

Nowe let vs fall downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgment of our sinnes, praying him to touche vs still more and more, so as wee may bee made to knowe that wee haue nothing but stubbornnesse and naughtinesse in vs, and therefore may seeke to him for the spirit of meekenesse, lowlinesse, and feare, that being reformed by his grace, wee may seeke to amend our whole liues according to his righteousness, and fight continually against our wicked lustes, vntill wee bee discharged of this mortal body, and be gathered vp into his kingdome: Reseeching him further to graunt vs such grace as wee may neuer cease to followe him whither hee focuer hee calleth vs, and in the meane while to beare with our infirmities, till he haue rid vs quite and cleane of them: and that for as much as we haue now our Lord Iesus Christ, who is the end of the law, and the substance and truth of the Sacramentes that hee hath giuen vs, it may please him to graunt vs the grace to be so washed in our hartes through the power of the holy Ghost, as all our filthinesse may be purged and cleansed, so as in the end we may be wholly transformed into his glory. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

17 For the Lord &c.

18 Who doth right to the fatherlesse and widowe, and loueth the straunger to giue him foode and rayment.

19 Therefore loue the straunger: for you your selues haue beene strangers in the land of Egypt.

20 Thou shalt feare the Lorde thy God, and serue him, and sticke to him, and sweare by his name:

21 Hee is thy praise, hee is thy God, who hath doone those great and terrible things for thee, which thine eyes haue seene.

10 I sawe yesterday, that to haue a right zeale and affection in seru- ing GOD, wee must bee sure that the religion which wee holde of, is good and allowed of him. For so long as we stand in doubt, it is vnpossible for vs to goe on with a free courage: we shall alwayes goe limping and as constrained: and if there bee any earnest minde in vs, the same proceedeth of an insensiblenesse, and not for that wee bee giuen in good earnest to serue the GOD whom wee knowe not. And therefore wee must bee well and dewly instructed, care wee can bee disposed to doe well. And that is the cause why Moses saith expressly here, that the GOD which vttered himselfe by the Law, and shewed himselfe afore to the Patriarkes, is the God of Gods, and that there is not any other to bee sought: inso much that although wee were very well disposed, and that wee were neuer so full of deuotion (as they say) yet should all that euer wee were able to doe bee nothing worth, without faith. Therefore wee must bee sure and knowe, that wee doe not any thing in vaine, nor at adu-

Rom. 14. 23. uenture: but that we followe Gods will, and that he liketh well of our dooings.

Now Moses hauing told the people, that this Lawe was the Lawe of the liuing God; addeth now further, that hee is great, strong, and terrible. For wee see how men take leaue to despise God, and ouerthrow themselves so much in their pride and presumption, as they cannot bee brought to any subiection. To the ende therefore that men should not dally with such a Lord, he sayth expressly that the God which willed his Lawe to bee published vnto them at that tyme, is great, mighty, & dreadfull. His terming of him Great, is to shew what honour is dew to him. His terming of him strong or mightie, is to withhold men from standing against him. And his terming of him terrible or dreadfull, is to make vs knowe that if hee doe but touch vs with his hand, wee must needs be vndone. Therefore let vs beware we despise him not: and when he calleth vs before his Maiestie, let vs tremble and quake for feare, that we may come with right humilitie. Thus do we now see Moses meaning. And therefore let vs marke, that if we will direct our liues aright, wee must haue pure doctrine, that our religion may be grounded vpon Gods truth, so as wee may be sure that the doctrine which we professe, is infallible, & therewithall we must beware that when we know God, we set not light by him, but y<sup>e</sup> our knowing of him doe bring a lowlines with it, so as we submit our selues wholly to the honoring of him y<sup>e</sup> is so high and incomprehensible, before whom the very Angels themselves doe tremble. Ye see then how the thing which we haue to marke, is y<sup>e</sup> men shall neuer know God, vntill they haue gotten such feeling of the infinite glory that is in him, as maketh them to stoupe, yea & to make none account at al of themselves, that they may giue ouer themselves wholly to the honoring & seruing of him. But this is very yll put in vre. For euen they that make greatest boast of their profiting in the Gospell, can skill to babble well ynough, & they beare themselves in hand y<sup>e</sup> they be iolly fellows, when they can prattle at pleasure, though it be without any reuerence at all. And we see how the holy scripture is shamefully abused nowe adayes by a number of mens discoursing of it as it were but of a fable, or to shew the fincencle of their wit, by raunging into curious and vnprofitable questions. Thus ye see how Gods word is abused nowe adayes at mens pleasures, without any feare or reuerence, for want of considering that which Moses telleth here, that is to wit, y<sup>e</sup> when we resort vnto God, wee must be thinke vs of the dreadfull Maiestie that is in him, that it may bridle vs and holde vs in subiection to him, and make vs to yeeld him such honour, as to be abashed at his speaking to vs, vntill we haue conceiued what he saith to vs & vpon the knowledge thereof, to be ready and forward in obeying the same, without any gain-20 sayng. And so ye see what we haue to gather vpon this text, where he saith y<sup>e</sup> the God which hath vttered himselfe by the Law, is great & terrible.

30 Certaine it is that GOD intendeth not to driue vs away from him, but rather to win vs to him by gentleness. But yett must we bee fayne to bee tamed, because of the pride that is in vs, least wee growe bold to offend him, and cannot finde in our hearts to be inured to his yoke, than the which there is not any thing more harde for vs to doe. Wee must (I say) bee first subdued by the feare or terrour that Moses speaketh of here, before wee can conceiue Gods goodnesse. But yett must it be so tempered, as we thinne not his good instruction, nee bee so dismaied as to refuse Gods word out of hand; but as it may be as a preparatiue, to make vs good scholars, and to drawe our wittes to such a teachablenesse, as all that euer we haue of nature may be done away, and nothing may hinder vs to receive his doctrine without gain saying, but y<sup>e</sup> his word (besides that wee loue it) may also bee reuerenced at our handes, and we follow it by submitting our selues to it alwayes and in all cases.

Now after that Moses hath said so, he addeth that God hath no respect of persons, nor receiueth any rewards. Whereas he saith y<sup>e</sup> he hath no respect of persons, his meaning is that there is no fauor to be had at his hand for the things that men are willingly moued with. For this word Person be- tokeneth the outward appearance. It is not takē here nor in any other places of the scripture, for y<sup>e</sup> which we meane by the word person when we say, Lo here is one person, Lo here are two persons: but it is taken for riches, pouertie, birth, nobilitie, or honour. All things therefore y<sup>e</sup> carie an outward showe before men, to moue vs to fauor them or to hate them, to honour them or despise them, all those things (I say) are comprehended vnder the word Person, for they be but as vizors. And after that maner is it sayd that God accepteth no mans person. To what purpose now doeth Moses speake thereof? It is because that the great ones perceiuing themselves to bee borne out by the world, thinke they may doe as much before God, & thereupon become proude. If a man haue once won credit, so as me dare not open their mouthes against his misbehaviour, but he dasheth the out of countenance as many as stand against him: he beares himselfe in hand y he may beare as great sway with God, & thereupon playes y prince among them. That is the cause why a nūber ouer shoote themselves, & cast away all feare of God. For when they see men feare them & stand in awe of them, or whe they see men commend them and fauour them: Then they thinke they haue won the gale, then they fal to triumphing, & they beare themselves in hand y they should no more bee called to account. Now because men ouer shoote themselves after y fashion: Moses summoneth them to gods iudgement, which is done according to truth, after which maner S. Paul speaketh of it where he expoundeth this same saying, y God hath no respect of persons. He iudgeth truly (saith he) according to the dede & according to righteoufnesse, so as men must not thinke they shall fare euer the better for their alleaging this or that.

Furthermore he signifieth therewithall, y God is not contented with cyrteuice, but hath respect to the trueneffe of the heart, & nor to y outward seeming of things, as is said in the first booke of Samuel. And so we haue to marke, y although a man be great to the worldward, yet he must not lift vp his head or his necke against God. For they shal gaine nothing by it, because all y greatnes of the world, is but as smoke before him. And on the other side they y are vnderlings, must not thinke that God will beare with them the more for y, as they now and then moue mortall men to compassion thereby. Therefore away with all these things that must afore our eyes, & whereby we be moued to loue or hatred: for all this is neither heere nor there before God: When we come before him, the first thing y he will loke vpon, is our harts: and although they be now wrapped vp, and (to our owne seeming) we haue lurking holes to hide vs in: yet shall all be laid open. Therefore let vs not beguile our felues in y behalfe. Again, let vs consider, that God will iudge according to y truth of the dede. We may well face out matters for a while, as we do because we be naturally giuen to hypocritise: but al y paintings and all y gay colours y we pretend as now, shal be wiped quite & cleane away when we come once before God. Therefore let vs walke vprightly & with a pure hart, & in especially let vs rule all our workes by his law, knowing y he hath no respect of persons, & let y bridle vs all. Let such as are in authority & of power to grieue y inferior & weaker sorte, forbear e to do so. And on the other side let the weaker beare in minde, that God will not faile to iudge them for all that, because he is not an accepter of persons: & therefore let vs bring nothing with vs but righteoufnesse & soundnesse of conscience before him, for nothing will passe for payment but onely that.

It is not without cause, that Moses addeth y further, that God taketh no rewards. If a man aske vs whether God be like mortal iudges that will be corrupted with bribes & money: truly there is none of vs all but will say no: yea and it is such a blasphemie to say otherwise, y euen the wickedst persons y are would abhorre it. For they would say, what hath God to do with gold and siluer: is God corruptible? But yet for all that, wee cease not to deeme that thing of him which we know to be false. And how so? Because y as we see that worldly iudges are corrupted, in somuch that if a mā greate them in y hand, they will suffer themselves to be caried away, and whereas they had done him wrong afore, they will nowe doe him right, & they be to be bound & chaunged euery way: we beare our felues in hand y God will be dealt with after y same maner. We will not speak it with open mouth: but surely men would neuer be so bold to doe cuill, if they did not transfigure God, & beare themselves in hand y he is playable, & such a one as will be won by rewards. But let vs come to the ordinarie custome of al ages. What is the meanes wherewith men thinke to pacifie God in y Popedome, but by setting vp of tapers, by burning of perfumes, & by doing such other pratie trifles: It seemeth to them y he should hold himselfe contented with such payments, as if a man brought a bribe to an earthly Iudge to corrupt him & to win him y will. But this had not his first beginning in Poperie. The Iewes were deceiued therewith. Al so y heathen men had y same superstitiō, notwithstanding y some of them misliked it, I meane some of the whose bookes we haue, in somuch y they haue cried out against it, saying: what intend ye to do ye wretched folke? When ye haue giuen your felues to deccit, thest, open wrong, crueltie, extortion, & all maner wickednesse, ye come by & by to reconcile your felues vnto God. And howe? By bringing him some part of y bootie. But forasmuch as y guise of y Popedome is best knowne vnto vs, let vs see what is done there. Whe a mā hath pilled & polled his fill, if he giue some Cope to y Church, if he build some chappel, if he found some Masses, if he cause some puppets to be made, or if he doe some other such gewgawe: thats a fellow alone, God is well recompenced at his hand, he needs not to doubt of y forgiveness of all his sinnes before God: If he doe but offer him a peece of the boone, he is wel ynough contented, his mouth is so stopt y he cā demand no more. In dede men will not say thus, but yet is it no neuertheless. For whereof comes it y the wicked surmise all their wicked dedes to be couered, but of y they imagin themselves to haue compounded w God, so as he knowes not what to say any more, when they haue once as it were bribed him after that sort with some present: Now then because the world doth daly so with God, & beareth it self in hand that it can agree with him for rewards: Moses saith on the contrarye, that God is not like mortall men, nor will yeeld a whitte for all that: and therefore he wold not haue men to beguile themselves. For if we desire to be reconciled vnto him

Col. 3. 25.

I. Sam. 16. 7.

Perfius Satyra 2.

when we haue offended him; there is none other way for vs, but to cast our felues downe, and to come to him with a sorry heart for it. For as it is said in the psalme, that is the sacrifice which hee accepteth aboue all: And when he receiueth vs into his fauor, let vs assure our felues that it is for his paimentes sake, which was made in the person of our lord Iesus Christ. Wherefore let vs not presume to bring him any thing of our own, but let vs borrow elsewhere, that which we haue not in our felues. Yet for all this, it behoueth vs to hate sin, if we meane to God should admit vs into his fauor. Yea and we must condemne the euill which we know to be in our felues, if we intend to be acquite of it. And therefore let vs not come any more with our owne vaine felings, vpon hope to pacifie God with such pancing trash, or by likening him to a corrupted Iudge, that will haue his eyes blinded with rewardes: let vs not imagin any such thing in him, but let vs walke foundly.

Now then we see howe Moseses intent was to bridle vs, by shewing vs what the nature of God is: and he exhortheth vs to feare him bicause he is terrible. And again, for as much as he regardeth no mans person, let vs put away all pride & presumption. Let the great ones know that they shall gain nothing by their stoutnes, but yet all creatures must stoope to him. Finally let vs not think that when we haue offended God, we shal please him again with this fond shift of offering him some amends for it. For he doth so greatly abhorre & loath sin, as he can by no meanes away with it, neither is there any payment in the world which can make satisfactiō for it. What is to be done then, but to resort simply & plainly to our God, submitting our felues vnto him, & seeking nothing else at his hand but to be reformed by him, so as al if euer he misliketh may be corrected & cast downe in vs? Furthermore when as it is saide that God taketh no rewardes, we be done to vnderstand, that (as much as in vs lieth) we defile the blood of our Lord Iesus Christ, which is the only payment & satisfaction for our finnes, when we be bold to sin vnder pretence of reconciling our felues vnto God. They (I say) which take such libertie to doe euill, defile the blood of our Lorde Iesus Christ, as if they trampled it vnder foote. For to say that when we haue done a fault, we may be discharged of it by bringing some raunsome or recompence for it, were a plaine declaration that we loue not our gold & siluer: at all. If a man should breake all lawe bicause he is sure he hath to doe with corrupt iudges, whose fauour he shal win by his purse, and yet notwithstanding for all his offending after his sort, had no care howe he wasted & consumed his money, men would say he were witles. But we haue not any other meane wherby to be reconciled vnto God, than the only blood of our Lord Iesus Christ. Now then if we fall to lashing of it out after his fashion wout discretion, is it not a token of too villanous contempt? Yes. And therefore let vs learne to hold our felues to the inestimable price which was paid for our raunsome: let vs learn (I say) to hold our felues in the feare of God, so as we giue not our felues ouer vnto euil. And there will let vs learne also, to behaue our felues in such wise towards our neighbors, as if mightie greene not the wecke and feeble. For although we may scape in this world, yet when we come before the heauenly iudge, we shall be punished double for our abusing of our power & credite after his fashion. According wherunto S. Paule warneth maisters that they should not mistreat their seruants: for God (saith he) iudgeth without respect of persons. Wherby he sheweth, that such as are set in high estate & authoritie, ought to abstaine vtterly from all crueltie & pride. For why? They may well be serued of the same fauce the felues. And it is not for the to think the felues to haue a better hand bicause that as now they haue a vantage & are in better degree: for all which geere shalbe dashed, when it cometh before God. Thus ye see what we haue to beare in minde.

Now for a further declaration he addeth, that God doth right to the fatherlesse, the widowe and the stranger: that God hath a care of the stranger to giue him clothing & food. Yea & he telleth the Iewes that they had bin strangers in the land of Egypt, & therefore they ought to be mndefull still of the state of theirs, that they might vse all manner of gentlenesse towards strangers. This serueth for the prooffe of his doctrine which I touched euen now: is to wit, that god hath no respect of persons. And in respect doth Moses say, that the widowes, fatherlesse, and strangers that be vexed in this world, they shall haue none to beare them out, men shall suffer the widowes to be troubled, the fatherlesse shalbe made a pray, strangers shalbe laid open to all iniuries, & no man shall withstand it. And why? For in as much as they beare no countenance in this world, nor haue any kinsfolke or friends to maintaine them: it seemeth that they may be put to the bearing of all things: is the custome of this world. But contrariwise it is said here, that God is a defender of the fatherlesse, a maintainer of the widowes, & a protector of strangers. This is vtterly against the common custome of men. For (as I haue said already) men are giuen to the pleasuring of such as may stand them in some sted again: Kinsfolke & friends will help one another: & in the meane while poore people are forsake. But see here how God dealeth with cleane contrarie way. When he sees men trust in their owne staies, and in their own strength, he letteth them alone, as if he should say to them, Very wel, try what ye can doe of your felues. For commonly when meane are preferred vs in this world wherby to helpe vs, we despise God, & we beare our felues in hand, that we may well ynough forbear him. Not that we will so say; but for as much as fewe folke doe call vpon God when the world fauoureth them: therefore doth God also make no account of them. Beholde, it is the widowe, the stranger, and the fatherlesse, that are constrained to make their mone vnto him; and when they haue looked about them, they finde no fauour nor helpe among men. They shalbe dalyed withall, and although some fayre promises be made them, all is but holywater of the court as they terme it: in so much that the poore soules wote not where to become. This kinde of intreatance driueth them to God, & he hearkeneth to their sighes & complaints. And so we see, that by such examples, Moses hath well confirmed the lesson which he had set downe; namely that God respecteth no persons. For the things that are despised in the world, are precious in his sight: and whom men hold scorned to bestowe a looke vpon; them doth he giue good care vnto.

Such it is so, let vs mark for the first point, that if wee vex such as are without defence in the world, God will set himselfe as an aduersarie against vs. And surely, were wee well perswaded thereof, we wold be more afraid to offend a poore fatherlesse child, a widow, or a stranger, than to offend those that are best friended, and are able to reuenge themselves to the worldward. But what? Our vnbeliefe bewrayes it else in that behalf: in so much that if there be a man that is riche, mightie and well propped vp, we dare not withstand him. And although he haue doone vs some wrong, yet we put it vp meckly, & dare not complaine of it, & much lesse dare we lift vp our hand against him. But as for a poore man, we will not tarie till hee haue doone vs some wrong or outrage, we will be at hofte with him aforchand. For why? Wee feare not that he will be cun w vs; he may not bee so bolde as once to murmur against vs. And if he doe, we can put a barre in his way, with who are you sit? He shall obtayne no right in Law. And if he doe, yet shall he haue the worse end of y staffe. Thus stand we in feare of men if they be armed with any power, but in y meane while we feare not God, who declareth himselfe to be the defender of all poore folkes y are destitute of help. If we beleued y holy scripture, surely this only one saying of Moses would more abash vs, than all the worldly consideratiōs that could befall vs. On the contrary part, when we be so bold in troubling poore folkes; it is a tokē that we beleeue not any whit of al that is contēned in the holy scripture, and that we be worse than heathen folke: And yet for all that, it is the cōmon fashion of y world. But herby it appereth, y nowadays vnbelcef ouerfloweth y whole earth, like a water flud. In deede it is a horrible thing: but yet is it so, & it cannot be denied. What is to be done then? Let vs loke into our selues. If the Armes of a common weale or of a prince bee set vpon a house, or vpon a peece of land, no man dareth presume into it, for it were a breaking of his aleagance and not a private offence. Behold, God setteth his armes or badge vpon y widow, the fatherles, and the stranger, & he telleth vs that hee hath taken them into his protection. Now if a man fal to troubling of them, & deale outrageously with them: is it not an open despising of God, and a desying of him, as it were to bid him batraile? In deede we wil not take it so, but God wil not referre himselfe to our vaine opinion and fancie. Whatsoeuer come of it, let vs marke well, that although the widowes bee shaken off as to the worldward, though fatherles children bee put to the spoyle, though poore strangers be skorned and troden vnder foote: yet doth God set neuertheless store by them, but hath his eyes continually vpon them, and will surely maintayne them. And therefore vnles we purpose to haue God our aduersary, and that he should shew himselfe to bee our deadly enemy; let vs abstaine from all wrong dealing, extortion outrage, deceite, and malice, towards those that are friendlesse in respect of the world, and vtterly destitute of all shufes, and after a sorte let open to the spoyle, as I said afore. Let vs not oppresse them, least God set himselfe against vs, & shew himselfe to be their continuall shield. Mark well this first fruite which wee haue to gather of the said lesson that was giuen to the Iewes in old tyme, to the end that if we feare not the punishment of men, we may yet be afraid of the determinate sentence that God setteth downe: which is, that hee will not ouerslip the wrongfull troubling of poore folke, without shewing of himselfe to be on their side, and that he hath taken their quarell in hand, according to this saying, that he will doe them right.

He saies not, only that he loueth them, or that he pieteth them; but that he will doe them right. Now then, if we see that the Iudges on earth do but mocke poore folkes when they come to them for succour, and y in stead of helping them they do but skorne them, let vs vnderstand that those Iudges must come before the heavenly Iudge, who will surely punish both those whome he had put in commision to defend poore folke, and also those that haue abused the liberry which they had in this world, by dooing the more euill because they saw they might scape vnpunished. God therefore looketh vpon them, and yet maketh as though he saw them not, for a time; so as if men misintrat poore folkes, be they widowes, fatherles, or strangers, in deede he letteth not himselfe againt their dooings at the first, but when hee hath let them take their pleasure a while, then layes he his hand vpon all such as haue passed their boundes in doing outrage to the feeble and little ones; and specially vpon such as haue not doone their office when they were in authoritie to doe Iustice, nor haue succoured poore soules when they were oppressed. For God must needs redresse such enormities, and shew such persons their negligence, by setting himselfe againt them, as againt the corrupters of the lawe when it was put into their hand. And so ye see what Moses ment, in saying y God doth right to such as are wrongfully trode vnder foote, and are not regarded in the world.

By the way, wee haue also great comfote to receiue of this text: so that if wee be destitute of worldly helpes, our God here taketh vs into his tuition; yea and he taryeth not till we come vnto him, but telleth vs that he is our defence, and y he will be our maintainer. Now then although poore folk be wronged, and haue neuer so much violence offered them, so as they be in maner troden vnder foote: haue they not wherewith to content thē selues, sith they know y God looketh vpon them with pitie, and will in y end stretch forth his mighty hand to succour them? True it is y they must bee excercited with patience to lōg as pleaseth God: but yet if they be not too vnthankfull, they haue well wherewith to content themselves, in that they be sure  $\bar{y}$  God neuer forgetteth them, but succourerh them, & keepeth a register of all  $\bar{y}$  wrongs  $\bar{y}$  are done vnto them, to bring the to account in time conuenient. Howbeit to the intent wee may inioy this comfort, let vs note also,  $\bar{y}$  it is not ynough for men to be fatherlesse or straungers, or for womē to be husbandlesse; but wee must also be truly distressed before God, so as we humble our selues & resort to him for rescue whē men afflicke vs wrongfully. For if a straüger be prouder than he  $\bar{y}$  is at home in his owne countrey and among his friends: it is in vaine for him to trust  $\bar{y}$  God will be  $\bar{y}$  defender of his welfare. When a straüger is so lordly,  $\bar{y}$  he will take more vpon him than  $\bar{y}$  partie that hath wherewith to helpe himselfe: he may goe seeke his maintenance ellwhere than at Gods hand; for he shal not finde it there. But if a straüger perceiuing himselfe destitute of all worldly helpe, & yet  $\bar{y}$  God is on his side, do call vpō him & put himself wholly into his hands; surely then shal he finde at length,  $\bar{y}$  Gods promising to doe right to  $\bar{y}$  straüger, is not in vaine. If a widow play the shee diuell, in troubling and vexing of other folks, and  $\bar{y}$  there is more to do with her than w a dosen men: let her not thinke  $\bar{y}$  God will trouble himselfe for her. But if a widow be helpless, & behaue her selfe meekely, & seeke no further than to liue peaceably with al men: such a one wil the heavenly Iudge receiue into his protection. In like case standeth it with the fatherlesse. If they giue themselues to naughtines, shaking off all yoke, & become vnthrifs in spite of God & the world; they beguile themselues if they think that God fauoreth them, vnder pretence of this doctrine. And therefore let vs marke well,  $\bar{y}$  this is set downe exprefly for such as suffer afflictions patiently, & auenge not themselues, but put their case into Gods hands. Although then that such folke be scorned of the world, and poynted at with the finger, and triumphed at by such as treade them vnder foote: yet doeth God take their case in hand, and will surely shewe it how long so euer he delay. Wherefore let vs learne hereby, to comfort our selues in our afflictions: which is, by being tamed and made to stoope, so as we seeke to be pitied at Gods hand, & referre our whole case vnto him, casting all our cares & sorowes into his lap. And again, let vs be wel aduised,  $\bar{y}$  although the world giue vs leaue to doe euil, so as we may vex & trouble men at our pleasure; yet shal we not scape Gods wrath: wel may we wrangle with him, but it shal not boote vs at all. Thus ye see what we haue to remember vpon that text.

To be short, let vs marke, that here Moses intended to commend equitie and vprightnes vnto vs. If ay he sheweth vs how our Lord will be serued at our handes: namely by behauiug our selues plainly with our neighbors, so as we offer no violence or wrong to any body, & specially to the weaker sort, and to such as haue no maintenance at māns hand. God then will not haue vs to serue him with Ceremonies, but wee must deale iustly and vprightly, so as we yeelde euery man his right. That is the true seruing of God, as is shewed vs oftentimes in the holy scripture. And fiō thence also is it,  $\bar{y}$  the Prophets haue drawn these sayings, That God requereth mercie & not sacrifice; That God will haue vs to liue amōg our neighbours without doing harme to any body; That he will haue al violence to ceasse; & that he will haue al crueltie & deceite to be farte frō vs. The Prophets haue good store of such exhortations: & the soutaine whereout of they haue fetched them, is this doctrine of Moses,  $\bar{y}$  God wil not be serued with I wote not what superstitions as men are wont to do, who vse much pompe & gloriousnes in seruing God with faire temples, goodly pictures, gay imagerie, sweete perfumes, ringing of bells, setting vp of tapers, & such other pelting trash. They beare themselues in hand  $\bar{y}$  God delighteth in such things, & that when they play vpō their Organs, they make him to daunce as if he were a little babe. But let not vs busie our heads about such small trifles, for God will be serued w truth, righteousnes, & foundnes of heart. Againe he will haue vs to indeuour to serue our neighbors: for we haue nothing else  $\bar{y}$  is worth the bringing vnto him: but he will haue vs to communicate together, so as euery of vs according to his abilitie, do fraine his wits to luccour them  $\bar{y}$  haue need of help, & in any wise to beware that we take not libertie to doe any hurt or harme to any body. Now then let vs make wel the meane of seruing our God according to his wil, that we trāforme him not by our vaine folly, by bearing our selues in hand,  $\bar{y}$  he is wel honored when we bring in our own pelting trash, as it were to dañle his eyes withall, which thing is vnpossible.

Now after that Moses hath shewed that God is terrible, and that it is not for vs to daly with so great a Lorde, who can well ynough hamper vs if we rebel against vprighty; and therefore that it behoueth vs to liue vprightly, & to pitie  $\bar{y}$  poote, & to succor them  $\bar{y}$  are oppressed, so as we offer no crueltie nor tyrannie to  $\bar{y}$  weaker sort, & to such as are destitute of friends to support the: now after all this he addeth, that God is the praise of his people. And it is to  $\bar{y}$  end to win their heartes by genilenes & friendly dealing. And herein we see  $\bar{y}$  God omitteth not any thing whereby to draw vs to him, but  $\bar{y}$  after he hath vsed threatenings & put vs in feare, to make vs to stoope & to stand in awe of him, he commeth like a father  $\bar{y}$  should flatter his childe, & vscth myld & gentle words, rather than his fatherly authority. Thus ye see how our Lord laboreth by al meanes to win vs; & therefore so much  $\bar{y}$  more to blame are we, and  $\bar{y}$  lesse to be excused, if we cannot be bowed neither by faire meanes nor by soule, seeing  $\bar{y}$  our Lord trieth al  $\bar{y}$  waies to the wood, to draw vs to him. Therefore doeth Moses purposely say, That God is the praise of his people, & that he had done great & terrible things for their sakes. For this cause he saith, first of all that God is their praise. And by that spech hee meaneth, that when wee once know God, and he hath shewed himself to vs by his word; his will is that we should glorifie him. Marke that for a point.

Secondly he putteth  $\bar{y}$  people in remembrance of the great miracles that had bin done for the in their going going out of the land of Egypt. For they were as marks or tokens of Gods goodness, so as y<sup>e</sup> people could not but be convicted of vnthankfulnesse, forasmuch as God had vttered himselfe as familiarly as was possible, to shewe himselfe fauorable to Abrahams posteritie. To be short, we see how God not onely vteth his dominion & right of soveraintie, which hee hath ouer vs to make vs subiect to his lawe and commandementes: but also commeth to vs as a father, and vttereth as mild and gracious louingnesse towards vs, as can be; and all to the end to breake the hardnesse of our hearts. In somuch that if wee bee not moued at his maiestic, or if we yeelde him not such reuerence as we ought to doe in respect of his soveraintie ouer vs: at least wise yet ought we to be meekened, seeing he stoopeth to vs, & cometh downe fro his seat vnto vs, as if he should say, Wel sirs, assure yourselves I am your father, and therefore I pray you consider well the good that I haue done you, and whereby I haue witnessed my fauour towards you, and let it moue you at leas wise to loue and serue me. That is the very principall meaning of Moses.

But yet by the way, let vs marke also that God is neuer duely honored at our hands, vnles we lay all our glorie vpon him. For whereas he is retmed our prayse, by y<sup>e</sup> word he bereaueth vs of all glorie, & sheweth vs y<sup>e</sup> there is not any thing in vs, whereof we ought to be proud. Therefore let a man set as much store by himselfe as he listeth, yet in the end he shall come to shame, so as he shall perceiue there is not one drop of goodnesse in himselfe. What is to be done then? Let vs resort right forth to our God; to seeke all goodnes in him, & let vs glorifie him for shewing him selfe so liberrall towards vs, y<sup>e</sup> wee may also make our boast thereof, according as it is saide by Ieremie, that the rich man must forget his riches, and the strong man his strength, & the wise man his wisdom, and all that euer is of man must be beaten downe, that wee may fetch our glory at Gods hand, knowing that it is he that executeth righteousnes, iudgement, and mercie. Thus yee see what wee haue to remember in this worde, where Moses saith that God is the praise of his people. And if we be not moued by that which is tolde vs in the holy scripture, at least wise yet let vs open our eyes, and let the often experience of Gods benefites frame vs to such humility as wee may not presume to commend ourselues any more, but onely haue our mouthes open to praise and magnifie the things that wee shall haue receiued at Gods hand. For sith he sheweth vs so many waies, that all our welfare consisteth in him, and that it commeth only of him, if we wil shut our eyes at it like a sort of blocke-heads, and vouchsafe not ne list nor to hold our selues to the thing that is thoroughly known and apparēt, surely we shall be convicted of bereauing God of his praise, & of bringing him to nothing as much as in vs lieth, for his benefites are infinit towards vs. And therefore let vs learn by this les-so, to acknowledge the benefites thoroughly which God hath bestowed vpon vs: for they be a sufficient busines to keepe vs occupied. If we gather our wits about vs to consider Gods goodness towards vs, we shall find that we ought to seeke our whole praise no where els than only in him. And for that cause doth Moses adde, It is he that hath done the great and terrible things which your eyes haue seene. As if he should say, God needeth not to seeke here & there for record, or for iudges to arreigne you: for (spite of your teeth) it shall be proued to your faces, that your God is great, mightie, and terrible. For you were y<sup>e</sup> miserablest creatures in the world, you were in bondage like bruit beasts, and your God loued you so deere,ly, that he hath stretched out his arme against the Realme of Egypt, that stately & excellent Realme, y<sup>e</sup> realme so renowned, wherein all the wisdom of the world was inclosed, in somuch y<sup>e</sup> hee hath made more account of your welfare, than of y<sup>e</sup> Realme. Sith it is so, know ye that it is not for you to glory any more of your selues, but to glorie onely of him. Assure your selues y<sup>e</sup> looke howe manie benefites you haue receiued at his hand, so many records haue you to be wray you: lewdnes and vnthankfulnes, if ye acknowledge them not vnto him. And so by the example that is set vs downe here, let vs learne to acknowledge gods gracious goodnes, & to lay it vp in minde, and to make a good memorial thereof, & to call it often to remembrance, that wee may be prouoked thereby to yeld all glory vnto God, & to confesse that for our parts we be sillie and wretched creatures, in whom there is nothing but condemnation, and therefore there belongeth nothing to vs but wrath, & it is only God to whom all the glory & praise of our welfare perteyneth. Wherefore let it suffice vs that he is ours, and that hauing giuen himself vnto vs, he vouchsafeth also to make his benefites common vnto vs.

Nowe let vs fall downe in the presence of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs to perceiue them thoroughly, and that therewithal we may so know the greatnes of his maiestic, as it may moue vs to submit our selues to the obeying of him, and draw vs to such subiection, as we may frame our selues to his wil, and bee no more intrangled and wrapped in worldly things; but that we may bee so rid of them, as all our seeking may be to dedicate our selues wholly vnto him, y<sup>e</sup> he may acknowledge & accept vs for his people, & haue his hād alwayes stretched out to succor vs at our neede. And that in the meane while we may patiently beare al the aduersities that he shall sende vs for the tryal of our obedience, & so shall ouer selues thereunto, as wee may not sayle to take comfort in his goodnes, and to rest vpon the same, til he haue made vs to seele y<sup>e</sup> things perfectly, whereof hee hath giuen vs a tast already in this transitorie life. That it may please him to grant this grace, not onely to vs, but also to al people & nations of the earth. &c.

Rom. 8. 36.

Ier. 9. 23.

On Wednesday the xvij of September. 1555.

The Lxxiii. Sermon, in which the last verse of the tenth Chapter is expounded, and this is the first Sermon upon the eleventh Chapter.

22 Thy fathers went downe into Egypt, in number threescore and ten soules: and now the Lord thy God hath made thee in multitude as the stars of the skie.

The eleventh Chapter.

Loue the Lorde thy God therefore, and keepe his appointmentes, Ordinances, Lawes, and Commandementes for euer.

2 And consider you this day (for I speake not to your children which haue neither knownen nor scene [them]) the instruction of the Lord your God, his greatnesse, his mightie hande, and his stretched out arme,

3 And his wonders and workes which hee did in the middes of Egypt, vnto Pharao king of Egypt and all his Land:

4 And what he did to the host of the Egyptians, vnto their horses & Chariots, when the Lord brought the waters of the read sea vpon their faces when they pursued you, and how the Lord destroyed them vnto this day.

Haue already shewed
y meaning of Moses,
how that by rehearsinge
y wonders
y GOD had wrought for the deliuer-ing of his people out of captiuitie

he shewed the Iewes that they ought to haue bin the more conformable to him, in respect of the fauor and loue which he had shewed to them at all times. For he had alwayes shewed by his doings, that his promising to take Abraham & all his offspring into his protection, was not in vain. Ye see then an euident prooffe y God hauing receiued Abrahams offspring into his free fauour, hath also confirmed it by deedes & experience. And thereupon it is to be concluded, that if that people had not bene altogether froward, they ought of reason to haue serued God. And that is the point that Moses shot at. Consider with your selues (saith he) if ye be not bounde to giue your selues wholly to the obeying of your God. For he hath multiplied you as the stars of the skie. Through his gracious goodnes you are become so great a nuber, y euen you your selues may be astonished at it. To be short, if ye look vpon your body, y is to say your state, you canot but see such a woderful fauor of your God, as you could neuer haue once looked for or hoped. Sith it is so, there is now no excuse for you if you cannot find in your hartes to glorifie his name, seeing he hath shewed him selfe so good & merciful towards you. That is y summe of y matter y Moses intended to set downe.

And he speaketh expressly of the stars of the skie, because of the promise. For God speaking to his seruāt Abraham, shewed him in a vision y mul-tritude of the stars, which is infinite. Euen as they be past reckening (saith god) so also shal thy seed be. Now then the meaning of Moses in this text is, y Gods saying so was not in vain, & that Abraham was not disappointed of his hope in resting altogether vpon y promise: for we see the thing performed before our eyes. And this is wel worth the noting. For if God haue done vs any good, we wil indeed for maners sake say it was he y did it: but to be thoroughly persuaded of it in our hart, that is a very hard thing. Therefore is it requisite in respect of such rudenes, y we should be condemned by Gods word, to the end we may y better consider of his hand & power. As for example: if we had neuer read any whit of holy scripture, & yet notwithstanding god should haue deliued vs frō some aduerfite: to say y truth, our owne naturall wit would put vs in mind, to think our selues indebted to God for y fame: But when we be exercised in the holy scriptures, and haue seene there y God referueth to himselfe the issues of death, & that it is in him to succor vs, yea eue after a strange fashion when al seemeth to be vterly forlorne; so as if we call vpon him, he will heare our sighes: the performance thereof maketh it the easier for vs to conceiue his goodnes, because we be taught aforehand, the same things which we come to find by experience. For why? The word y went afore, is as a lampe to giue vs light. Of our owne nature we be as it were blind. True it is that God in lighteneth vs by his holy spirit: but yet are we still in darknes & cannot see two fingers bredth afore vs. But whē God teacheth vs by his word, y is as a lampe to guide vs & shew vs our way. Therefore let vs marke well y to profit our selues by the benefites y God bestoweth vpon vs, it is good, yea & needful for vs to be put in mind of his promise, & to compare that together God had promised it; & now he hath performed it: here we see a testimony y he is alwayes faithful in his sayings, & y a man may safely rest vpon his truth. That is y thing which Moses sheweth vs in this text, text, in that he speaketh not simply of the great multitude whereinto the people had bin increased, but also saith y God had multiplied them as the stars of the skie, to the intent that every mā should think vpon y promise which was vniuersally known among them, & thereby confirme themselves, inasmuch as God had so kept touch with his seruāt Abraham: & euery man consider thus in himself, indeed we ought to receiue gods simple & single word, although the effecte of it were not seene. But now that Gods hande & his mouth go ioinly together, so as he hath shewed a true prooffe of his presēce before our eyes, and that he meant not to disappoint the hope of his seruants; we know y our God hath a care of vs, & forgat vs not at such time as we were in the land of Egypt. For y time of the peoples abode there was as a kinde of buriall in their graues, so as it might haue seemed y all Gods promises had bin quite dashed. Whē he drew Abraham out of the land y he was borne in, he said vnto him, I giue thee al this land frō one side to another, to thee & to thine ofspring for euer. And yet for al this, yee see howe Abraham did but iourne there as a stranger: he was hunted & faine to flect frō place to place, & he trotted vp and downe like a poore man that had not a corner to hide him in. The like befel to his sonne Isaac, Jacob was banished thence during al the flower of his youth, & when he returned thither againe, hee was faine to remoue oftentimes in his old age, and in the ende God conuicied him away into Egypt. Thus was y house as it were broken vp & cleane banished out of the countrie. And where is the lande of Chanaan which was the heritage y God had promised thē? They were bereft of it. Indeede Iacob caused his body to bee conuicied thither againe when he was dead: but yet did the people abide still in Egypt, & god seemed to haue mocked thē in saying, ye shall inherit this land. But when god brought them againe out of the captiuitie & cruell tyranny wherein they were, it was as a rising againe frō the dead, & as a taking of them againe out of their graues. So then, y people are exhorted in this text, to vnderstand that they ought to impute this redemption of theirs to the promise that had bene made long time before.

And we on our side haue generally a very profitable lesson: which is this. As oft as we fall asleep and minde not Gods benifits so sufficiently as might make vs to perceiue his working & power; we must resort to his promises, y they may be as a light vnto vs to shew vs the good way. Let that serue for one point. And now by the way, we see how God vttered his power in multiplying the people after y fashion. For who would haue looked that of threescore & ten persons there should haue issued seuen hundred thousand & aboue? It is incredible (if we looke no further than to the course of nature) y in three hūdrēd yeres, three-score & ten persons should increase & multiply to so great a number. Had there come of them ten thousand or twentie thousand, it might wel haue bin imputed to the course of nature. But when it came to a hundred thousande, or a two or three hundred thousand, yea & to so huge a number as seuen hundred thousand; al men must needes be abashed at it, & it was not to be thought y euer it could haue bin possible. But we must not mesure Gods power by our wit: for it was his wil to work after that strange & vncustomed fashion, that men might be driuen to think it to be his worke. For if God worke after an ordinary maner y vs, we be so vnthankful, y we take the thing to happen by chance, or by our own policie, or by some mans fauor, or other meane which we haue found in y world: & we bereaue God continually of his honour. In deed we wil not say y we purpose any such thing; nay, we protest the cleane contrarie: but yet for al y, men are so wickedly giuen, y they alwaies deface Gods power & goodnesse to the vttermost y they can. God therfore is faine to bring vs perforce to the acknowledging of his works, so as we must be compelled to confesse y it is he which helpeth & succoureth vs. Let vs mark wel then, y when he multiplied his people after y sort, he meant to work a myracle that had neuer bin looked for, to the intent y men should no more doubt that it was he that spake vnto Abraham, & that he had not in vain promised him to become y defender of him & of al his ofspring. Nowadaies there ar a sort of scoffers, who to make al things doubtful, wil caule after this maner: Is it possible y in so short a space of time, threescore & ten persons should grow to so huge a number as seuen hundred thousand? Is it possible? Yea, & if that people had bin increased but after an ordinary maner, what would they say then? Came not this of other men? & should we then say that god governeth vs? Why? y order of nature affordeth as much. After y maner would the mockers prate. And therby we see the lewdnes y is in mē. For if God goe not beyond the ordinary course of nature, they haue no sight ar al to discernē his hand, but (to their seeming) it is fortune or theirown wisdom, or some inferior meane of y world. And on the other side, if God lift vp his mighty hand, & do a thing beyond mans capacite, and such as men would haue thought coule neuer haue bin done: then wil they say, how coms this to passe? And they could find in their harts euen to deface gods power quite & cleane, vnder color y it surmounteth their reason & capacity. But for our part, let vs learne to do god so much honor, (for so hee well deserueth) as not to iudge of his workes after our own fancy specially when they be miraculous.

And here we haue as it were a looking glasse, wherein to see how God raiseth vp his Church, according also to this his speaking of it by his prophet Esay, Loke backe to the quarrie of stone (saith he) whereout of ye were hewen, haue: n eye to the womb of your mother Sara. Loke vp Abraham your father: was not he alone? yea, & yet haue I now made you manie in number, as y thing it selfe declareth. In that place God liketh Saras womb to a quarrie of stone. See here (saith he) from whence ye be come. Howe is it possible that such a multitude of people as you be nowe grown vnto, should be drawn out of one quarrie of stone? And yet notwithstanding, from thence haue I fetched you, all of you are

come from out of that spring. For as for your father Abraham, what was hee? A sillicolde man forworne and broken with yeares. Who would haue looked for such a people from out of him? Nowe then, learne to knowe that it is I which haue so multiplied you, and that you bee beholde to me, for all that euer you haue. Thus ye see  $\frac{y}{y}$  the thing which we haue to gather, is that whē God calleth his Church & giueth it a being, his working is after such a sort in that behalfe, that (as saith Saint Paul in the first chapter of the first Epistle to the Corinthians) it may well be saide that it is he of whom we haue our being. And his meaning is not that wee were but created of him as mortall men onely: but that he hath gathered vs together to bee his people, and that he was inclined to the doing thereof, without any likehoode giuen on our behalfe. Therefore let vs first and foremost beare well in minde, to be as it were astonished at the power that God hath shewed, so as wee may reuerence the thing that passeth our small capacitie. And therewithall let vs vnderstand, that the maner of Gods raising vp of his Church, is, that where nothing was afore, but men reckened that all shoulde haue gone to wracke: there men are at their wits end to see howe things fall out cleane contrarie, as we finde by often experience. True it is that the people which receiue the doctrine of the Gospell, are but a handfull in comparison of them that refuse it: but yet was it not thought, that things shoulde euer haue spread so farre abroad as they haue doone. For when God stirred vp the poore Frier, yea euen out of a Cloyster or Cel: who would haue thought, that from thence the Gospell shoulde haue bene spreade farre and wide, and that so manie folke would haue submitted themselues vnto it? Againe we see that although the whole worlde haue conspired to oppresse this doctrine, and that the power of the enemies thereof bee such, as they be like enough to swallow it vp quite and cleane: yet doth not God cease to augment his Church still continually. It is seene what crueltie is executed against all her children: & yet notwithstanding she holdeth on still. Seeing then that in our time God hath gone beyonde all hope and all imagination of man: let vs vnderstand that hee hath renewed the remembrance of that which is spoken here by Moses: namely that out of nothing, it hath pleased him to raise vp a kingdom to himselfe in this worlde, insomuch that at this day there is as great a nūber of his, as euer there was at any time. If a man compare the children of Abraham, with such as haue some knowledge of the Gospell nowadayes, it is certaine that the number of the present sort is farre the greater. And therefore let vs learne to magnifie  $\frac{y}{y}$  goodnes & power of our God. And to the end  $\frac{y}{y}$  Gods glory may be the greater, let vs vnderstand that we come vp of nothing, & let it be considered  $\frac{y}{y}$  it is he which hath stretched out his hand, so as all must be fathered vpō him, and he must be acknowledged to be the author of all. Thus ye see what we haue to marke vpon that place.

Furthermore the people are warned, not to

glorie of their owne greatnes, as if it were saide, whatsoeuer you possesse, you haue obtained it at Gods hand, and therefore doe him homage for it with all humilitie. Therefore whensoeuer our Lord increaseth vs, so as we haue greater prosperitie than we looked for: let it not blinde vs, nor shut vp our eyes, but let vs alwayes remember to haue our eyes vpon Gods hand, who had promised to haue pitie vpon vs, & hath also shewed vs it by experience. And so ye see in effect what we haue to marke, where Moses speaketh of the increase of  $\frac{y}{y}$  church. For like as God raiseth vp a people where none was to be seene afore: so also is it his will to repaire his church again with his owne hand. And to be short, the holy scripture sheweth vs,  $\frac{y}{y}$  forasmuch as the Church is  $\frac{y}{y}$  spiritual kingdom of our Lord Iesus Christ: he will also worke after a marvellous fashion, when  $\frac{y}{y}$  case concerneth  $\frac{y}{y}$  preservation thereof. Therefore let vs trust in him by all means. Let vs not doubt but  $\frac{y}{y}$  he which multiplied  $\frac{y}{y}$  offspring of Abraham as the stars of the skie, is as well able to do  $\frac{y}{y}$  like with vs still at this day: & therefore let vs not be afraid but that God can well skil how to set vp his Church again, when it seemeth at  $\frac{y}{y}$  point to be vtterly ouerthrowen. And this is accomplished chiefly in our Lord Iesus Christ, as the scripture sheweth vs. For al  $\frac{y}{y}$  euer was before his coming was but a shadow of  $\frac{y}{y}$  things:  $\frac{y}{y}$  are nowadayes in their perfection. Therefore when  $\frac{y}{y}$  whole world seemeth vnto vs to be vtterly voide of beleeuers & that all is forlorne & as a wast wildernes, let vs loke vp to  $\frac{y}{y}$  stars of heauen, & both consider and hope  $\frac{y}{y}$  our Lord which did once raise vp so huge a multitude out of threescore & ten persons, can likewise do as much for his church at this day. And when he hath done it, let it not be vnto vs as a dreame, but let vs be amazed & astonished at it, forasmuch as it shal haue surmounted our natural wit and reason. But let vs come now to  $\frac{y}{y}$  conclusion  $\frac{y}{y}$  Moses maketh. Therefore saue the Lorde your God, keepe his Lawes, his statutes, his commandementes, his rights, & his ordinances, eue for euer. Hereby we be done to vnderstand,  $\frac{y}{y}$  when we once knowe Gods grace, we must bee the more inflamed to giue our selues wholly to the seruing of him, accordingly as S. Paul found not a more vehement & effectual perswasion, than  $\frac{y}{y}$  same where he saith, Brethren I beseech ye & adure ye by the pitie & mercie which God hath shewed towards you. Because S. Paul saw men slow & negligent, yea &  $\frac{y}{y}$  euen the faithfull, (for it is they to whō he directeth his doctrine) haue need to be quickened vp & pricked forward: therefore to giue the more liuelines to his exhortation, he taketh this for his ground, & saith: brethren, I beseech ye by  $\frac{y}{y}$  mercifulnes of God. As if hee should say how harde harted soeuer you be, yet must  $\frac{y}{y}$  great number of  $\frac{y}{y}$  gracious good turnes which God hath done for you, haue some power to moue you, & to set your harts on fire. Were your harts as cold as ice, yet must you needs be moued, & you cannot but feele how gracious and liberrall your God hath shewed himselfe towards you. Nowe therefore whensoeuer we finde not our selues sufficiently disposed to serue God, but  $\frac{y}{y}$  we be held back: and hundred by the vanities of this world, and by our own fleshly lusts, let vs put this saying of S. Pauls in vte: & when we be intangled in our delights, let vs come backe again & say: what? Shal God haue lost his labor in shewing himselfe so good to wards vs: & shal we become vnprofitable people towards him? We be his Vineyard, and he hath dressed vs, & we bring him forth no fruit but wild fower & bitter fruit, such as were able to choke one: & shal we by our naughtines defea t y grace that God hath shewed towards vs? After such manner ought euery of vs to rebuke himselfe, when we lue not as we ought to do. But when in steed of going forward, we go back, or els lie welling in our own idlenes: let vs be thivk vs of gods benefits, & keepe a register or booke of remembrance of them: & therupon fall to concluding y ther remaineth no excuse for vs, if we make not some acknowledgement vnto God, of y mercie y he hath shewed towards vs. That was the thing y Moses aimed at. Therefore loue y lord your god (saith he) seeing you know him to be such a one.

And further besides y thing that we haue sene already; which is y the true performance of the law beginneth at the louing of God: here Moses telleth vs, y Gods intent is not to be feared like a prince y desires no more but to haue his subiects to stand in awe of him, & therefore will not suffer any man so much as once to quetch against him, but wil haue thc to do al y he cōsidere thc: but y God cōmeth to vs after a more louing maner. Truly if we consider wel what the princes of the earth are, they be but smoke or verie wormes of y earth: but yet are they to be honored, because god hath printed his marke vpon thc. Albeit y they be nothing of theselues: yet are they so ful of pride, y their subiects must be faine to put it vp quietly at their hands, though they would fet their feete vpo the throtes of them. And they be so far of frō considering themselves to be shepherds or herd- 40 men, or to owe any dutie or good demeanor towards their people: y to their owne seeming, the world was created alonly for themselves. They passe not for meeke & quiet reuerence: but they wil needs haue an enforced & constrained bondage. But behold, our God whose maiestie is so great, y euen the Angels of heauen are faine to sinke vnder it, euen he I say stoopeth downe vnto vs, & saith, loue me. He could haue said, stand in feare of me, & trēble at my speech, or els ye shal 50 feele that there is such a glory in mee, as ye must needes be ouerwhelmed by it. Nay, he vseth no such spech, but saith: true it is y I am to be feared, for I haue soueraine dominion ouer heauen and earth, & therefore it is not for any man to dalie with me as with his fellow, for if he be so malapert with me, he cannot but go away with confusion. Now then, my desire is y men should reuerence me: but yet would I also y you should come familiarly vnto me, & y ye should come boldly as 60 to your father. And y is the cause why I require loue at your hands as the cheefest thing y I like best of. Loue me therefore, & shew your selues to beare me hartie good wil. For my mind is not to draw you to me by constraint of feare, my mind is not to rulye y like Oxen & asses. My intent is to hold ye as my children, without exercising anie tyrannical lordlines ouer you. I would haue but a fatherly authority ouer you, & y you likewise should serue me with a childly loue, & giue your selues wholly & obediently vnto me. Thus see ye y two points which we haue to note in Moses concluding, y the people shold loue y euerlasting their God. For if we will performe gods law well, we must first & foremost loue him before all things: 10 Wel may we be busie with our feet & hands, so as we shal be blameles before men: & yet shal all be nothing, except God possesse our affections, and y we serue him with a good wil, & with a free and vnfeined hart. That is the one point. The other is, y we must vnderstand how God appreth him selfe to vs, & fashioneth himselfe to our capacite, in that his wil is not y we should stand in feare & terror of him, but y we would take him for our father, according to his calling of vs, which is 20 so gentle and so full of allurement, as though he would fet vs in his lap, because he hath adopted vs to be his children. That is the effect of the things which we haue to remember here.

Now as touching that Moses addeth, that men should keepe gods obseruāces, his statutes, his iudgements, his rights, his ordinances, his cōmandements, & his decrees: I haue declared already here before why he setteth downe so many words. For it had been enough for him to haue said shortly, Keepe the cōmandemts of your god; you haue his law, which is the certain rule, hold your selues to y. But Moses thinking it not enough to haue spokē simply after y maner, to the intent to expresse the contents of the law, & what doctrine we haue to gather therof, setteth downe Statutes, cōmandements, rights, ordinances, & obseruāces. And why is that? To doe vs to vnderstand, that there we haue the full perfection of al holines. We know y in al ages men haue bin tickleheaded: & that their failing to serue god simply & purely, hath sprung of this that euery man would needes be casting of some peece or collup of his own making, to the things that God had commanded. And thereof come al the superstitions that are at this day in y worlde. The very ground (say I) from whence al the diuclish superstitions wherewith gods seruice hath beene corrupted, is that men haue not thought it enough to haue obserued the things that God commanded, vnles euery man added somewhat more of his owne deuising. But now God to hold his people in awe, saith thus: In my law ye haue 30 rights, ordinances, statutes, &c. And to be short, whē ye haue thoroughly examined the rule y I haue giuen you, ye shal find it perfect & without want of any thing. Therefore play not the loofe colts: but be contented to serue me simply, according to my wilk & ad not any thing of your own braine. Ye see then y as wel in this text as in other without nūber, (for ye shal find at y lest two hundred of the like) Moses indeuoreth to magnifie Gods law, to the intent y men should not esteeme it to be of vn sufficient authority, or but as able to teach vs by halves: but y they should know it to be their duty to hold theselues wholly to it, so submitting theselues to y same, as they may giue ouer their own wit, & not take vpo them to be wise in their 40 opinion, but but onely answered: Let GOD be obeyed, according to the praier which he hath comanded folke to make with this solemne protestation Amen, so as there may not be any replying at all to y<sup>e</sup> which God hath once vttered with his mouth. And that is the verie cause why the word Keep, is let downe here. For men wil needs haue manie things to keep, and they beare theselues in hand, that they haue kept the law very well, after what fashion so euer it be. But our Lord telleth vs that we haue things enough to keep and to obserue, in following his lawe, so as we neede not to adde any thing to it.

Furthermore to the intent y<sup>e</sup> the people may be the more moued, Moses confirming here the matter y<sup>e</sup> we heard euen now, saith thus: Beshinke you therefore: for it is not spoken to your children which haue neither seen nor heard of it, but to you your selues which are witnesses of the great myracles, mightfull workes, and tokens which God shewed in bringing you one of the land of Egypt, and specially in your passing of the read sea, where he wrought with a wonderful power. For what a thing was it y<sup>e</sup> the sea shrank aside to make you way to passe through it? And that afterward it swallowed vp al your enemies, that followed you with so great puissance, y<sup>e</sup> you thought your selues vtterly vndone: You haue seen those things with your eyes saith he. What a thing were it then, if ye should forget such wonderful workes of God, and suffer them to vanish away? Might it be imputed to any ignorance? No, but to vnthankfulness, & it were malicious spitefulness for you to tread the things so vnder foote, which God hath shewed vnto you.

And whereas he saith, It is not spoken to your children which haue neither seen nor heard of it: He meaneth y<sup>e</sup> he speaketh not of the as shall be spoken afterward. True it is that at this day when we reade the storie of the deliuerance that was wrought at that time, we ought to be moued at it. For it is an euerlasting euidence of the care which God hath had of his Church, And in y<sup>e</sup> same we haue a liuely picture to shew vs how God draweth vs as it were out of the dungeon and gulf of death, by choising vs to be of his house, and therefore it behoueth vs to make our profit of the things that were done then, although we saw them not. But here Moses reasoneth thus by comparison. If I speake to your children (saith he) yet were it their dutie to make their profit of y<sup>e</sup> things which they were taught: and although they haue not seene the things with their eyes, yet ought this recording of them, to do them good. But as for you, ye ought to be better aduised in taking heed to the things y<sup>e</sup> God hath shewed you. For your thanklesse is dubble, & much forer shall your condemnation be, if you profit not by the. What can ye alledge for your selues, if ye giue not your selues whollie to the magnifying of such grace, that is to say if ye honor not God, seing he hath bought you so dearly, and shewed that he setteth so great store by your welfare? Seeing that God hath shewed himselfe to be such a one rowardes you, what is your dutie? Here we be put in mind that when our Lord hath made vs to find fauour by experience, if we profit not by it to serue him with the better courage and earnest zeale, in must of necessitie come to account, & wee must looke for those horrible damnation in reward of such vnthankfulness. But now let vs see what we become the better by gods benefits. Hath it not bin sufficiently seene & perceined in our time, how he hath helped vs at our neede, & howe he hath stretched out his mightie hande? If euery man would acknowledge for his own part, how many waies god hath shewed himselfe boundles to him, surely we should be at our wits end. Againe, let vs loke vpō the state of y<sup>e</sup> Church in generall. Hath not god wrought after such a sort on al sides in our daies, as if we be not very monsters, or at leastwise worse than brut beasts, we must needs perceiue by his miracles, y<sup>e</sup> he ment to thew here how he reigneth in heauē: But now let vs see how eucry of vs is stirred vp thereby, to serue him. Nay it should seeme we seeke nothing else but towels to hid our eyes withal, and y<sup>e</sup> we belecue not the things which are & ought to be most apparant to vs. Yet was not this doctrine vttered to no end. For if God haue shewed vs by his deeds, that he dwelleth amōg vs, & haue reached out his hand frō heauen, to proue y<sup>e</sup> all power belongeth vnto him, and y<sup>e</sup> he wilbe y<sup>e</sup> fauor of his church, & yet we beleue it not, but play y<sup>e</sup> blind buffards, and turne our backs vpon him, shutting our eyes wilfully when we should take most heed to consider in what wise y<sup>e</sup> Lord hath shewed himselfe to be y<sup>e</sup> father & fauor, both of our selues & of al y<sup>e</sup> are his: what excuse will there be for vs? Ye see then here is a lesson y<sup>e</sup> toucheth vs. For if euer God vttered himselfe: surely we of our time haue seene such deeds of his, as are worthy of remembrance. And whē men shal reherse the a hundred yeres hereafter, (if y<sup>e</sup> world indure so long) it is certain y<sup>e</sup> they shal serue to make them ashamed y<sup>e</sup> shall haue heard the spoken of, so we may wel say, (as is said by y<sup>e</sup> prophets) y<sup>e</sup> the stragēnes of the shal make their eares to glow y<sup>e</sup> shal heare of the: for y<sup>e</sup> is y<sup>e</sup> manner of speech which the Prophets vse in such cases. And we haue seene these things, and had experience of them. Now if y<sup>e</sup> report of them in time to come, ought to moue y<sup>e</sup> people y<sup>e</sup> shal be then: although they shal haue had none other knowledge of the: ought not we much rather to be moued by them now presently? Ought they not to pearce our hearts? Must not Satan needes haue vtterly sotted vs, whē after such perceiuing of gods benefits & power, we see nothing at all, but go on stil & conceiue nothing? Is such blockishnes to be borne with? No verily. And therefore let vs bethinke ourselues, & consider wel how god hath wrought in gathering vs together, & in that we can worship him purely as he requireth. Who is he, (be he a citizen borne or a stranger,) which hath not cause to say, lo how my god hath so vttered himselfe to mee, as if I had seene his hand come downe from heauen to me in some visible shape: For what hope had they which are here townsmen borne, to be either in libertie, or to be but eue a mean people? Insomuch as it see med y<sup>e</sup> al should haue gone to wrack, & come to vtter ruine ere this time. As touching y<sup>e</sup> Gospel, this citie was but a hellish gulfe of superstitions

1er. 19. 30

EHauē scene heretofore howe Moses hath tolde vs , that such as haue bin witnesses of Gods wonders, are much lesse to bee excused than such as haue but only heard y things by report, and haue not scene them with their eyes. For when God hath bene so gracious vnto vs as to shewe vs his power to our faces; it must needs be that we bee too blockish, if wee bee not myndfull to therof. When our children shal but heare of it, it shal become the to be moued at it: & what ought then to bee done in the very present of the things? Hitherto Moses hath shewed after what manner God had delt with his people through his goodnes, for he had behaued himselfe as an vtter enemy to y Realme of Egypt, to shew him selfe to be the fauour of the Inage of Abraham. It is a benefite that ought to bee very highly esteemed, when God chooseth vs after that sort to be his: which is not for any worthines that he findeth in vs, but of his owne onely goodnes, in that he vouchsafeth to prefer vs before others, so that although wee be no better than they, yet he taketh part with vs, and fighteth for vs at our neede. If folke doe trouble and torment vs, and God be alway ready to succour vs; is it not such a bond, as if we keepe it not vnbroken, the verie world may condemn our malicious forwardnes? Nowe after he hath spoken of the wonders that were wrought in Egypt, & in the passing of the red sea, he telleth them briefly, that they ought to consider well, how God handled them in the wilderness. And vnder that speeche hee comprehendeth the thing which we haue scene expounded heretofore: that is to wit, both y great number of benefites which they had receiued at Gods hand, and also his chastisements: for both of them ought to teach vs to feare God, & to walk in his wayes. If he do vs good, it is to draw vs to him by gentlenes, y we shuld worship him. And if he correct vs for our faults, it is to necke vs, y we may learn to beare his yoke, & to serue him as becommeth vs. Moses therefore comprehendeth here both twain of them: As if he should say, Seeing y God hath fed you w manna, without any trauell or labour of your own; ought ye not to giue your selues al wholly to y seruing of him: If a mortal man had kept you in his house & maintained you w foode & apparel, shuld ye not be so bound vnto him, as your whole life might bee answerable to such a benefite? Behold, God hath maintained you in y wilderness, by sending you Manna from heauen. Now then if ye shold forget such a gracious good turne, what an offence were it? Nay, he hath not only sent you Manna: but he hath also preferred your garments, so as they haue not bin marred nor outworne by y space of forty yeares together. He hath shewed himselfe to be your guide in y night, in giuing you a visible sign by fire. & he hath kept you likewise ad y times from y heate of y sun, by spreading his clouds ouer you. In all sorts he hath tendered you as much as was possible. When ye were thirsty, he made water to come gushing out of y rock that was dry before. To be short, he left nothing vndone, when by he might shew himselfe a louing & liberal father towards you. Now then what can you lesse do, than yeeld your selues to y obeying of him? Again, remember what he did, when ye murmured against him for your fondelusts sake. Did ye not then seele his heauy hand for your labor? When ye required flesh, indeede he sent it you; but he made ye to pay deare for y shot: for y meat was as good as a choking of y. While the meate was yet in your mouthes, his wrath came downe vpon you. Again, when ye misbehaued your selues in whore dome, ye knew y his hand strake ye in such sort, y a great nuber of people perished among you. When ye were disobedient to his mouth, he set a fire among you y consumed you, vntill y brazen serpent was set vp. All manner of wayes therefore haue you bin chastised at Gods hand; so as if ye be not myndfull of it, ye be worfe than brute beastes.

Now after that Moses hath declared all these chastisements: he inferreth an example y was notable and worthy to be borne in mind aboue all y rest: that is to wit, of the rebellion that was made by Core, Dathan, and Abiram. For (as is declared in y sixteenth of y numbers), these three with another of y tribe of Ruben, made insurrection against Aaron, laying to his charge y he had vsurped the priesthood, which was an office of great authority among y people. For Aaron was there as in y person of our Lord Iesus Christ, & went into the Sanctuary to make attonement between God & the people. Nowe it spited these men, that they could not come to y like dignity, & therefore vpon enuy they would needs stir the people to a commotion, saying: What? This is a derogation to y prerogative y belongeth in common to al of vs y are the children of Abraham. God hath sanctified vs, he termeth vs his heritage and a priestly kingdom: & yet ye see here how Aaron and his children haue taken y thing peculiarly to themselves, which belongeth generally to y whole people. Therefore let vs maintain our right, & not suffer this dignity to be turned to a state of inheritance. This was their pretence: but indeed they did it of great spite. For first of all God had well prouided aforehand, y there shold be no indirect or wicked suspicion against Aaron, & his childre for the priesthood sake. Moses was y leader of y people; he was y setter of them at liberty, & therefore there was good likelihood y his offspring shold haue bin preferred before all others. Hee had childre: & yet he took not y priesthood vnto himselfe, but left it to his brother. True it is y he made no choice, god did that. But howe ouer he fared, to y intent that y law and the things y depended thereupon shold not be suspected: Gods will was not to doe Moses so much honour as to make hum y priest, but he was faine to stand hum bly aloofe w the rest of the people worshipping God, when Aaron his brother went to carie the names of y people of Israel into y sanctuary, & to offer sacrifice to God in their behalte. And what wer his childre? They abode in y inferior degree, without aduancement to y dignity, which remained to his brother Aaron. Whereby God shewed that those things were not done vpon ambition or worldly couetousnesse, but that it was his own doing, who had set down the order that shold be kept kept in his Church and Temple. Notwithstanding al this, those leawd persons set to rebelling, & charged Aaron falsly with vnturping y<sup>e</sup> dignitie of y<sup>e</sup> highpriesthood. So was God faine to maintaine his own doing. And thereupon Moses said vnto the, How now? What is Aaō? As if he should say, hath he thrust himselfe in of his owne head? No: & now although he be of Gods aduancing to y<sup>e</sup> high and honorable state, yet if ye consider all things aright, hee doth but onely serue you. But those malicious creatures were not contented wth that. We be sacrificid (said they) we be gods people; & what are you more? In this case god was to put to his hand for y<sup>e</sup> redies of it: And according as was commanded by Moses, To morow (quoth he) let euery of you bring his tentor, & you y<sup>e</sup> are the chief of this rebellion, (for they were as then to y<sup>e</sup> number of twe hundred & fifty) come together, & you shall see by your offerings, whether parties seruire is best liked of God. This done he said vnto y<sup>e</sup> people, Assure your selues that if these folk do dye y<sup>e</sup> common death, and y<sup>e</sup> God lay not his hand vpon them in your sight, so as some horrible & dreadful punishment do not light vpon their heads: I am contented y<sup>e</sup> ye shal not esteeme me as sent of God. But if ye perceiue y<sup>e</sup> god make good the thing y<sup>e</sup> I haue vttered with my mouth, then be ye sure that I haue don nothing on mine owne head, but that I haue faithfully performed that which was inioyned me from heauen. Hereupon the earth opened and swallowed vp those rebely<sup>s</sup> y<sup>e</sup> had made the insurrection among the people. And when this was done, y<sup>e</sup> people forbore not to murmur still & to say, See here I pray you, how Moses and Aaron fall to destroying of Gods people. Those whom God hath chosen must be faine to perish at their pleasure, to maintaine their priestly dignitie, and of y<sup>e</sup> same number are we also. What an vnkindnesse is this? Ye see here how God had wrought a myracle that ought to astonish & amaze the whole world, yea euen the very brute beasts & al, and yet this people which reported themselves to be chosen and holy, cease not to repine & rebel still of malicious set purpose, against God and his hand that was openly to be seene. God was faine to ratifie Aarons priesthood yet once againe: whereupon he commanded that euery of them should bring a woden staffe wth their names written vpon them and put them altogether, so as they might not be discerned asunder but by the sight of the names. These Staffes were laid before God in y<sup>e</sup> Sanctuary: & when they were taken thence againe, Aarons staffe that had his name vpon it did flourish, & al the residue remained drie: whereby God shewed that he had chosen that house to the Highpriesthood.

Of these things doth Moses here put y<sup>e</sup> people in rememberance, to do them to vnderstand, first y<sup>e</sup> if they dalyed any more with God by seeking any change, or by attempting any thing against the commandemēt of his word: they should seele his vengeance in likewise as they had teene it light vpon Coree, Dathan, & Abiram, and their partakers. Besides this, he telleth them of their spiculousnes, how they had prouoked God againe, eue after they had felt his iustice: to y<sup>e</sup> intent they should no more returne to such doings, because y<sup>e</sup> if they abused Gods patience & bearing with them for y<sup>e</sup> one time, he wold in y<sup>e</sup> end vse y<sup>e</sup> greater rigor against the. And so ye see what y<sup>e</sup> intent of Moses was. Now hereby we be warned to consider wel with our selues, y<sup>e</sup> whensoever any fault or offence is committed among vs, & God hath laid his hand vpon vs for it: we ought to beare it so printed in our hearts, as it may make vs to keepe his commandments, as Moses addeth afterward. For it is not ynough for vs to know y<sup>e</sup> bare storie: but we must also apply y<sup>e</sup> same to our instruction. So y<sup>e</sup> if god haue corrected vs gently, we must acknowledge his fatherly goodnes towards vs. And from thenceforth let vs not prouoke him any more, but to y<sup>e</sup> intent we may keepe our selues frō offending, let it suffice vs to know y<sup>e</sup> he cannot away with sin. That (say I) is y<sup>e</sup> thing wherof we be warned in this text. And here wth let vs also haue such humilitie printed in our hearts, as to be continually sorry for the faults y<sup>e</sup> we shall haue committed. And if our God haue bin so gracious as to execute his wrath vpon some others, let vs be wel ware y<sup>e</sup> we wrap not our selues in y<sup>e</sup> same condemnation with them, by taking their part. Nay, let vs shun them a great way off, and let vs haue nothing to doe with them, if we intende not to prouoke y<sup>e</sup> wrath of our God. That is the effect of the matter which Moses speaks of here. And it is written for our sakes, to the intent that euery of vs should haue an eye to himselfe.

I haue tolde you already, y<sup>e</sup> the things which were spoken as then to y<sup>e</sup> people of Israel, do concerne vs likewise. After what sort haue we felt Gods hand: I meane as well those that are Citizens borne, as those y<sup>e</sup> resort hither from strange Countries. Is there any of vs that hath not perceiued gods wonderful power in his deliuerance? For hath not this Towne bin as it were appointed to ruine and destruction? Was it not likely y<sup>e</sup> it should vtterly haue perished, and y<sup>e</sup> there was none other remedy as in respect of y<sup>e</sup> world? Yet hath God reached out his hand after such a fashion, as the world hath seen an incredible alteration. It was as a dreame, men wold neuer haue thought it: euen they themselves y<sup>e</sup> did seruire in it, were astonishd at it afterward. Nowe then, if this be forgotten, on whom shall we lay y<sup>e</sup> fault? And God hath not only giuen liberty to those y<sup>e</sup> were in bondage, and drawn them out of y<sup>e</sup> gulf of death at such time as it was looked y<sup>e</sup> al should haue gone to hauocke: but also vouchsafed to set vp his kingdome among them. He hath planted his Gospel here, he hath set vp his chayre of estate here, here hath he chosen him a sanctuary & a place to dwell in. And as touching them that are come from strange Countries, how hath god reached his hand to the? Were not they also as it were in y<sup>e</sup> gulf of hell, when they were in the cursed popedome? Ye see then how we be gathered here, altogether vnder y<sup>e</sup> hande of God. And therefore wel ought we to esteeme this grace, and not onely to preach it with our mouthes, but also to shew throughout all our whole life, that forasmuch as our Lord hath gotten vs to him, we be willing to be his, & thereupon in due order to please him in all things. Vnlesse we do so, surely there will be no excuse for vs, but y<sup>e</sup> we shall be hundred-fold more blameworthy, than those whom God hath let alone, so as they continue still in their old trade, w<sup>o</sup>ut finding him so gracious & favourable towards them. Besides this, Gods working in our behalfe hath not bin for once & away; but if we looke wel vpon his maintaining of the state which he hath established in this city; there hath not bin any yeare wherein he hath not renewed his myracles, & made it appeare openly by some notable signe, y<sup>e</sup> he hath had a continuall care of vs, and y<sup>e</sup> he hath neuer forsaken vs. And in deed we be worse than blind, if we perceiue not y<sup>e</sup> our life hãgeth as by a thread. For there needeth but y<sup>e</sup> turning of a hand to dispatch vs al: one conspiracy was likeinough to haue put y<sup>e</sup> whole church of God in daunger of destruction. But yet for all this God hath preferred vs. And after what fashion? We cannot tell. Had we any drop of wisdom, surely as oft as it came to our minde wee would be astonied at it & say; Lord, how far hast thou exceeded y<sup>e</sup> expectation of men! Againe on the other side let vs marke, let vs marke I say how God hath lifted vp his hande to punish such as went about to trouble y<sup>e</sup> order of his Church, and to ouerthrowe y<sup>e</sup> building which he had set vp by his Gospel. For it is certaine y<sup>e</sup> he hath punished them, to y<sup>e</sup> end that we should take instruction at their cost. He hath bin so gracious to vs as to let vs see and know his vengeance, and yet wee our selues haue bene exempted from it: not for our own desert, (for there is none of vs al, but vpon due examination of his doings, he shall find him selfe faulty) but because it pleased God to spare vs. Neuertheless hee hath shewed vs as it were with his finger, that it is not for any man to provoke him: and that if any bodie step vp against him, he shall finde himselfe too hardly ouermatched. This (I say) I hath bin tolde vs sufficiently. But what God worketh, and we haue no eyes to see his working; & although we haue, yet do wee wilfully shut them against him. Yea & (to goe no further,) let vs apply this storie to our owne vse. Truly I touch things as sobely as I can; but yet is not y<sup>e</sup> holy scripture written to y<sup>e</sup> end we should but onely know what was done to the people of Israel: but to y<sup>e</sup> end we should consider the likenes that is betwene them & vs, y<sup>e</sup> when the like matters befall amōg vs, we might do our selues good by the warning speaks that are giuen vs by thē.

I. Cor. 10. 11 According wherunto S. Paul saith, that y<sup>e</sup> things which God did at that time, are as a picture for vs to look vpon, to y<sup>e</sup> end we should refer al to our own profite: For y<sup>e</sup> end of time (saith he) is come vpon vs, and we see now the perfection of the things which God had but begun as then.

And here is mention made of Coree, Dathan, and Abiram. y<sup>e</sup> is to wit, of such as could not abide the obseruing of things in such sort as God had then commanded them by Moses. True it is that they professed themselves to be Gods chosen, & the children of Abraham, mark y<sup>e</sup> for one point. For they alledged y<sup>e</sup> they were sanctified; their intent was that their circumcision should be as a warrant for them that they were a holy & sacred generation. But yet for al y<sup>e</sup>, they would none of the precthood, at leastwise not as God had ordeyned it, but euery of thē would haue it to him selfe. Now I pray you, haue not we for our part seene the like rebellion against God & his word? For wherefore hath al the skirmishing bin, both against the doctrine & against y<sup>e</sup> discipline of the church with such rage; but to displace the order y<sup>e</sup> God set among vs? When heretikes, (yea euen such heretikes as brought mo blasphemies than euer were herd of since there was any christian Church) came hither: they were mainteyned here with tooth & nayle, & openly, yea euen by such as sate in the seate of iustice; in so much as they tooke part with them, and shewed them as much fauor as Turkes should haue vnder Mahomet. Afterward when other heretikes came hither to bring in Freebil again, & to set it vp to the derogation of Gods grace, blaspheming his election and p<sup>r</sup>ouidence: they had those mē for their Patrons & Aduocats, which ought to haue bin their Iudges: & those spake for them in our presence, and that with such impudencie, as if they had bent them selues like buls to strike vs with their hornes, & to set themselves as shamefully as could be, against God and his doctrine. This haue we seene. Againe, when things were shewed them so plainly by the holy scripture, as would haue bene receiued euen among the very papists, and when so cleare and euident texts were alledged, as could nor be gainesaid, which things we not only spake by mouth, but also gaue them the articles in writing, & set downe y<sup>e</sup> sentences of the scripture whereby the truth was pointed to as with ones finger: They were not ashamed to reiect all, but stepped forth proudly still, as it were to say; wee will fight against God whatsoeuer come of it. True it is that they spewed out our such sayings with full mouth, for they protested still to hold themselves to the Gospel. O (sayd they) our desire is to haue y<sup>e</sup> Gospel. Yea but what maner of Gospel? A tauerngospel. There was no talking among them of the grace of our Lord Iesus Christ: For it was a comon by word among them to say, There needs no more to be knowe than y<sup>e</sup> which al of vs know; that is to wit, that we must ioue God and our neighbour. And what needeth there to much preaching for that matter? If a man replied hereupon & sayd vnto thē, how can y<sup>e</sup> be? If yee will haue preaching to cease & the Sacraments to be superfluous, thē must the whole order which God hath set in his church be disannulled: Wel (would they say) then let y<sup>e</sup> Gospel be preached simply wout such storming. And againe as touching y<sup>e</sup> Sacraments, belong they not to vs as well as to you? Why not? would we y<sup>e</sup> there should be no more order kept? Nay we cā minister y<sup>e</sup> supper as well as you preachers. Such things as these (I say) were seene and herd. But if Coree, Dathan, & Abiram be condemned here by y<sup>e</sup> holy ghost, to haue intēded y<sup>e</sup> breaking of al order: I pray you what shall a man say, of those which haue sought so manifestly against god after this fashion: for these things were not done of ignorance. Although they be lo shameles as to say stil, wee haue ment no such thing: yet is their their malice too too apparant . For had no man spoken to them of it, or had no man pointed the as with his finger to y<sup>e</sup> texts of the scripture, so as it might haue bin saide, see here the will of God, there is no difficultie in y<sup>e</sup> matter, it needeth not any scanning as though there were any doubtfulness in it, see here y<sup>e</sup> open text: [they might haue had some colour for their pretence]. But [eing] things were so shewed vnto them, & yet they continued wilful still: see yee not that it was an open making of war against God? Is it not to be seene also what pretence was made by Coree, Dathan & Abiram? Our of question, their sayings were after this maner: Why? If Aaron haue the high-priesthood alone to himselfe, he shal haue all superiority, & what shal we be? Euen so standeth y<sup>e</sup> case with these men: to their seeming, all were made on their side, if God should beare y<sup>e</sup> sway. But god will beare the sway by this order, and we see it is no impeachment at all to the ciuill power which is a thing vtterly distinct from it, neither can any thing better maintaine Magistrates in their souerainty, forasmuch as y<sup>e</sup> order of Gods Church is spiritual, so as it medeth not with y<sup>e</sup> punishing of mens bodies, nor wth penalties, nor with imprisonments, nor with such other like things: but all is referred to y<sup>e</sup> word & the sacraments. Seeing y<sup>e</sup> this is apparant doth it not serue better for y<sup>e</sup> institution of Emperres, kingdomes, & Lordships: than if there were nothing else to be had than a confused tyranny, where nothing were referred vnto God & to our Lord Iesus Christ? And therefore when men streine themselves to y<sup>e</sup> vttermost of their power to ouerthrow y<sup>e</sup> order, do they not fall to spitting in y<sup>e</sup> face of Iesus christ to spite him withall? For it is his will to reigne among vs, yea & he will haue his kingdom to be in vs. Now the, when he chooseth men & setteth them vp to gouern his church in his name, is it not too shameful an vnthankfulness to say, we will not admit it, but thrust it from vs: As who shalld say, they would make men beleuee y<sup>e</sup> the Consistory were a thing vtterly seuered from Geneva it selfe, whereas God hath granted vs y<sup>e</sup> grace to make it a member of the body. Nowe then, to dismember Iesus Christ by separating y<sup>e</sup> things which he hath ioyned together, is it not a setting of themselves openly against him? We see then y<sup>e</sup> these rebellions haue happened among vs: & who is to be blamed for it? Truly y<sup>e</sup> heads of the sedition are to be seene, and y<sup>e</sup> perceiuing of the hath not bin at some one time, or a day or twaine ago, but it is now a seuen or eight yeares since it began, inasmuch as Gods children haue bin faine to grone and sigh vnder their burthen, & to cry our alas, beseeching God to haue pitie on his poore Church, seing it was in such a hurly burly. Things went worse & worse, and one licentiousnes brought in another, so as they bare the selues in hand y<sup>e</sup> all things were lawfull for them. And yet notwithstanding, of all that while they did but double the stings which they had felt afore in their wicked consciences, by thinking thus wth the selues: What? We can neuer hold our, except we lay our heads together to fortifie our selues thus & thus. Herupon they made continually new prouisions. And after what maner? By practising all maner of treason & disloyalty, & by applying their minds to all wicked shifts for y<sup>e</sup> maintenance of y<sup>e</sup> thing y<sup>e</sup> they had misbegun. But in y<sup>e</sup> end our Lord wrought. And what haue we to consider therein? That we be worthy of blame. For although those folk did fight openly against God: yet would he not haue suffered such miseries to haue happened among vs, but for our offences. And therefore let vs consider y<sup>e</sup> seeing he hath so punished y<sup>e</sup> parties that came to let themselves apparently against him, & made their reckning to ouerthrow all y<sup>e</sup> he had builded: he hath schooled vs at their coit, & therefore we ought first of all to thank him for his sparing of vs, and that he wrapped vs not in y<sup>e</sup> confusion y<sup>e</sup> was prepared for vs, but hath put a myraculous difference betwene them & vs. Thus yee see that the thing which we haue to marke, is on the one side Gods mercy in bearing with vs, & on y<sup>e</sup> other, the punishing of a few folk, which ought to serue vs for an instructio<sup>n</sup> to teach vs to fare y<sup>e</sup> better by it. For it is certain y<sup>e</sup> thereby God hath shewed vs, how it is his will to haue things goe peacefully, & to keep their ordinary course according to his worde. For it is not for men to pretend Gods name falsely in this behalfe, to swaue aside one way or other. The ministers of y<sup>e</sup> word & such as are appointed to be preachers, must for their part bee able to protest before God, & to shewe openly before men, y<sup>e</sup> they neither be nor desire to be counted any other, than as persons to whom God hath committed y<sup>e</sup> charge of preaching & of administering his sacraments, with such purenes as things may not be corrupted in y<sup>e</sup> church. Wh<sup>e</sup> it is so, let vs vnderstand y<sup>e</sup> we must submit our selues thereto, & that we shal winne nothing by struing against it, but Gods hand must needs be always against vs. For he forgetteth not what he hath ordained, but wil maintaine & defend y<sup>e</sup> same continually. Therefore let vs learn to leaue y<sup>e</sup> seeking of any change against Gods ordinance. Let vs looke vpon the rule that is contained in the holy scripture, & let no man attempt to incounter it by any maner of meanes. Let vs rather die than alter any thing, or attempt any thing against our God. Let vs be as sheepe, if we will haue Iesus Christ to be our shepherd. For whatsoever hee is that hath not a meeke heart like a lamb, is vnworthy to be counted of Gods Church, because our Lorde Iesus Christ wil not be our shepherd, but vpon y<sup>e</sup> condition. That then is the thing which wee haue to beare away in the first place. But let vs also looke wel vpon the maliciousnes of y<sup>e</sup> Iewish people, & take good heede that we become not like them. Sothly it is a terrible case y<sup>e</sup> God shold shew forth his power so vpon rebels, y<sup>e</sup> the very earth should open and sw allow them vp with their wiues and children. There were to the number of 250 that had murmured against Moses and Aaron, which were all rooted out in y<sup>e</sup> open sight of men, so as men saw that God wrought from heauen: & yet notwithstanding complaints were still cast fourth against Moses and Aaron, men charged them with all y<sup>e</sup> blame, all y<sup>e</sup> fault was laid in their necks. Seing it was so, must it not needs be that y<sup>e</sup> people was exceedingly hardhearted? Yes: but let vs nowe looke into our selues. For we also are guilty of the like maliciousnes nowadays in that

Mat. 16. 24.
& Iob. 10. 27

behalf. For there are a number to be seene which foster poyson in their hearts, & are wilfully wedded to wicked matters, and yet knowe neither why nor wherefore. If a man aske them what it booteth them: they cannot tell, sauing that the diuell hath so caried them away, that they bee easilly wonne to maintaine euill matters, and to murmure and grudge: and therewithal they fall to running vpon those that cannot doe withall, for none other cause but y<sup>e</sup> they indeuour to maintaine the things that concerne God. How haue wee had an eye to the things which God hath done beyond mans expectation? He wrought of al the while, when no mā thought it. There were neither Iudges, nor people, nor ministers of the word, y<sup>e</sup> cuer thought vpon y<sup>e</sup> things y<sup>e</sup> arc come to passe. Wel: is the thing done & past: and do we not perceiue y<sup>e</sup> God pitied vs in y<sup>e</sup> ende, and that thereby he ment to schule vs, and y<sup>e</sup> we shoulde be mindfull of that deed for euer? Why consider we not y<sup>e</sup> he laid his hand vpon vs to humble vs, to y<sup>e</sup> intent we shoulde henceforth liue in al subiection vnder him, & according to his order? Are they not too too vnexcusable, wh. ch. cannot make their profit thereof? Yes surely. For it is as a wilful shutting of their eyes againt Gods workes. But no maruel if things be so out of order nowadays. For wee see y<sup>e</sup> in the countries where the Gospel is, there is more inordinate liberty & more leaudnes than is among y<sup>e</sup> papists. Whereby we may vnderstande, y<sup>e</sup> God doth iustly giue them ouer. For when men haue heard y<sup>e</sup> goipel and will not beleuee it: they must needs alwayes become deuils incarnate and as badde as monsters, so as nothing may be seen in the but cursed disorder. In deede y<sup>e</sup> Papists, forasmuch as they be deadly enemies vnto God, are well worthy of y<sup>e</sup> reprobate minde wherein they be. But as for them that boast of y<sup>e</sup> Gospel, & make a mocke of it, vtterly refusing al good doctrine, & fighting againt god: must not God needs vtter greater rigor towards them, as men see he hath done? And a mā needs not to looke far for y<sup>e</sup> matter. Let vs but looke a litle about vs, & we shall see y<sup>e</sup> Gods vengeance hath broken out to y<sup>e</sup> vttermoſt, vpon those vnhappy creatures which doe so refuse his grace dayly offered vnto them. Now then, if those kind of folk conceiue rancor againt al goodnes, what get they by it, but y<sup>e</sup> they heape vp itil greater punishment vpon their owne heads? But as for our part, let vs learn to keep our selues in aray vnder y<sup>e</sup> itandard of our God: and then let vs assure our selues, y<sup>e</sup> as he made Aarōs rod to flourish in spyte of all y<sup>e</sup> rebels, so will he also make y<sup>e</sup> order to flourish which he hath set among vs. Let vs wait vpon him, & rest vpon that order: and in y<sup>e</sup> meane while shrowd our selues vnder his wings, and not seeke any thing againt his preheminece & dignity, but honour him all of vs both great & sma. If we proceede after y<sup>e</sup> fashion, we may well hope that as he wrought then, so will he continue also towards vs.

But by the way let vs beare in mind what Moses saith here. Behinke your selues (saith he) euens to keepe the commandementes which I set before you this day. Hereby he sheweth vs whereto y<sup>e</sup> minding of the

chastisements which we haue perceiued to haue bin done by Gods hand, shold serue vs. Namely to bring vs vnto his obedience. For if we think to quit our selues by condemning such as haue so troubled gods order, & gone about to ouerthrow the doctrine of our Lord Iesus Christ: and yet in the meane while do play the same pageants, and followe their footeſteppes within an houre after: surely wee shalbe double punished. Wee see what befell to Iehu, and it is a lookingglasse for vs to behold continually. For if a iudge turne his one hand vnto bribes, and punish theecus with the other for his owne profite: is not he himselfe worthy of dubble punishment? Euen so stode y<sup>e</sup> case wth Iehu. True it is y<sup>e</sup> God vsed his seruice in punishing y<sup>e</sup> ydolatries & abominations of Achabs house: but yet for al that, Iehu himself followed the same, & therefore was God faine to punish him also as a robber, & to vse greater rigor againt him than againt the house of Achab, though al things were out of order there and ful of wickednes. As much shall befall vs when we shall haue condemned the wicked, and the despisers of God, and such as haue turned quite & cleane againt him: if we our selues resemble the afterward. Therefore let vs take heede to y<sup>e</sup> which is spoken heere, which is that God calleth vs home to him, by our beholding of y<sup>e</sup> desolation that men had practised. Very well then, our Lord punisheth them: but his punishing of the wicked is for our benefit. For his meaning is y<sup>e</sup> by their example we shoulde learne to turne head when we haue gone astray, that whereas erst we followed him not, ne framed our lues according to his word, we shold come to attonemēt again in him, and take heede to our conuerſation, y<sup>e</sup> we obserue al the cōmandemētis which he setteth before vs.

Againe, Moses sheweth vs heere, that it is not ynough for vs to serue God by halues, as men commonly doe to make their market as they list themſelues. In deede we wilbe ashamed so to do, specially if we perceiue that God chastiseth any man for the like doings, and that wee our selues haue found that hee hath vouchsafed to beare v<sup>s</sup> vs, and to shewe himselfe as our father. If say wee will be ashamed to disdaine to haue any regarde at all of it. But what? We will set a good face vpon the matter, and we will pretend some shadow of vpright dealing, at leastwise in smal particular matters: but other wise, we will holde on still in our old trace, and we will do such things as may wel bewray that in al the rest there was nothing but hypocrisie, so as we went not to work roundly & soundly because we be doublehearted. But god admitteth no such parung of stakes. He saith expresly, Looke about you when I punish such as haue done amisse. For vnlesse ye purpose to wrap your selues in the same curse, ye must not only reforme your lues in one or two points, but also rule your selues throughout according to my law, ye must walk in such vprighnes, as it may be perceiued that ye haue giuen your selues to my seruice, and y<sup>e</sup> your whole seeking is to haue me to be your Lord & master. Thus ye see whereto Moses looked in saying. Therefore do ye all the cōmandemētis which I set before you this day.

2. Kin. 10. 30
31. & 15. 12

But surely mans frailty is such, as he can neuer attaine to the full performing of the law: but yett must we still endeavour towards it. When we haue enforced our selues to y<sup>e</sup> vttermost, yett thal we be behind hand stil in many things. And if we enter into accout for euery poynt which we shal haue performed, we shall haue failed in a hundred. Therefore let vs acknowledge our faults: but yett for all that, the marke that wee must shoote at, must be the obeying of our God without exception, so as we make no paring of stakes with him to say, Go to, as for in this thing, I am contented to yeelde to God, but hee must pardon me in that thing, and he must beare with me for the other matter. If we fall to such chaffaring with him, wee shall finde in the ende that our sond ouerwening hath beguiled vs.

And in any wise let vs wey well this saying, where he sayth: thou it is hee himselfe that seesteth the commandements of God. And thereby he bringeth vs back to Gods word in such wise as it is preached, for he wil not haue vs go seeke in the aire, nor yett aboute the cloudes for y<sup>e</sup> knowledge of his wil. We must be contented with his comming downe vnto vs, and with his speaking to vs by the mouthes of men. The rebellious sort haue alwayes sayd that their intent was to serue God: for it were too horrible a thing to be so blasphemous in wordes, as to say that they giue ouer God and will be none of his. Therefore doe they make faire protestations: but in the meane while they tread vnder foote the worde whereby God will be knowne and serued. This hath bin seene in all ages: and we haue found it in these despisers that haue crept in here among vs to corrupt vs, that all their talke hath tended to none other end, but to abolish some peece of the holy scripture. For they haue giuen forth that there is no more neede of the Lawe and the prophets, but that they be quite abolished. And this blasphemie hath bin held or rather flushed our in such sort, as it required to be resisted with stoutenesse. In so much as they haue not bin ashamed to spew out such wicked sayings as these in my presence: namely y<sup>e</sup> old Testament was to be reiected, and belonged not at all vnto vs. And on their Alebenches they made it a common prouerbe, that the hauing of the Gospell was sufficient, that is to say, that wee ought to holde vs contented with these two wordes, A man must loue God, and he must loue his neighbour. Thus ye see how they haue gone about to bring in a Turkishnesse vpon vs, yea and a confusion more horrible than Turkishnesse, in that they durst so openly pronounce all those leawd speeches. Let vs marke then how it is not without cause that Moses sayth here, The commandementes which I se before you, as if hee should say: come not hither to protest dissemblingly that your intent is to serue God: but say flatly y<sup>e</sup> ye wil not admit his Lawe because it is preached vnto you by me, by me (I say) which am a mortall man as you be and not your God, least ye should make an idoll of me. Alledge none of all these shiftes, sayth he: for God hath ordained me to set forth his Lawe, and he will haue it receiued at my hand. And seeing he hath giuen me that charge and office: it behoueth you on your side to obey. Now againe wee knowe that our Lorde Iesus Christ intendeth not to dwell here visibly in his owne person among vs. Hee hath ordeined Pastors in his Church, and hee will be heard by their meanes: that is the perfection whereunto hee bringeth vs, vntill wee come to that happy meeting, to bee thoroughly ioyned vnto him. Those are the wordes of Saint Paul. Now if wee will not submit our selues to that order: it is as if we would rend asunder the body of Christ as much as in vs lyeth. Therefore let vs beware that wee yeelde due authoritie to Gods word, and accept it reuerently when it is preached vnto vs. So then, whensoever we haue to deale with Gods seruice and religion: let vs not fall to fancying of high speculations, as if we would say, Let God shewe me what pleaseth him, and I will doe it. For that is but a vaine excuse, as wee shall see that Moses himselfe will tell vs hereafter where he sayth: Thou needest not to goe ouer the sea, nor to mount vp into the ayre, nor to goe downe into the deepe, forasmuch as thou hast the worde in thy heart and in thy mouth. And this word (saith S. Paul) is not only that which was preached by Moses: but also the same word of faith which wee preach at this day, Sith it is so, let vs beare in minde y<sup>e</sup> God ment as it were to bridle vs by telling vs y<sup>e</sup> it was his wil to make vs subiect vnto him, and y<sup>e</sup> for the bringing thereof to passe, it behoued vs to obserue the doctrine which he did set forth by the hand of Moses. And cosequently it behoueth our Lord Iesus Christes gouerning of vs nowadayes to be such, as we receiue and beleue whatsoever is preached to vs in his name. Ye feare the way for Gods word to haue due preheminance and authoritie among vs: is that wee gouerne not our selues after our owne lyking: but hearken to the voyce of Iesus Christ to submit our selues thereto, so as hee may haue the souereinite ouer vs that is giuen him by God his father, and we receiue his word without exception or gainisaying, knowing that that is the meane whereby God intendeth to try what obedience wee yeelde vnto him.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs perceiue them better than wee haue done heretofore, so as we may fare the better by all the instructions that are giuen vs, as well by the benefices that are dayly bestowed vpon vs at his hand, as by the chastisements which hee sheweth vs: that thereby we may be brought to feare him, and to honor him by all meanes, and not take vpon vs the name of Christianitie falsely, but become his people in very deede, being separated from all worldly infections, and from all wicked lustes that are contrary to his lawe, or which striue against it. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Tewseday the xxiiij of September. 1555.

The Lxxvi. Sermon, which is the third upon the eleventh Chapter.

8 Therefore keepe all&c.

9 And that yee may prolong your daies in the lande which the Lorde swaue to your fathers to giue to them and to their seede, euen a lande that floweth with milke and honnie.

10 For the land which thou goest vnto to possesse it, is not as the lande of Egypt whence thou camest: where thou diddest sow thy seede and water it with thy feete as a garden of herbes:

11 But the Lande which thou goest vnto to possesse, is a land wherin are hilles and plaines, and it drinketh raine water from the skie .

12 It is a land which the Lord thy God regardeth: the eyes of the Lorde thy God are continually vpon it, from the beginning of the yeere to the end of the yeere.

13 And if ye be diligent in obeying my commaundementes which I commaunde you this day, so as ye loue the Lorde your God, and serue him with all your hartand with all your soule:

14 Then will I giue the foreraine and the afterraine in season vpon your lande, that thou mayest gather vp thy Corne, thy Wine, and thyne Oyle.

15 Also I will giue thee grasse vpon the feeld for thy Cattell . So shalt thou eate and haue thy fill.

After that Moses hath warned the people to keepe Gods commaundements, now hee harteneth them by setting Gods promises before them, as if GOD should tell them, that his will was they should not serue him but for good wages. And in deede, God perceiuing how loth & slowe we be to follow him, allureth vs to it, by promising vs that wee shall not lose our labor in so doing. Not that he is bound to doe it, or that he intendeth to haue vs as hirelings, or that we can deserue or earne any thing at his hand: wee must rid away all such imaginations. It is meete y<sup>e</sup> wee should yeeld obedience vnto God, though no reward at al were beightened vs. For we ought to loue him for his owne sake, & not for any recompence that can be looked for. Again on y<sup>e</sup> other side, our affection must be francke & free, and not lyke theirs that wil doe nothing, except their prohibe be alwayes before them. We must loue God wth a free heart. Thirdly, we can deserue nothing at all by our doings: doe what we can, God is neuer y<sup>e</sup> more bound vnto vs for it. For we be his already, & what can we bring, which is not due to him already by nature? Yet is he contented to apply himselfe to our rawnesse, in saying y<sup>e</sup> if we serue him, there is a reward ready for vs, so as we shall not neede to be afraid y<sup>e</sup> our Labor in honoring him shoulde be vnprofitable to vs if we indeuour fo to honor him. Now we see what a fondnesse it is for men to conclude, that because God promiseth rewarde to such as keepe his Lawe, therefore men can deserue at his hand: For that is not his meaning: but it is done for our infirmities sake because God seeth that wee haue neede to bee quickened vp. And therefore all the promises of the lawe are as strokes with y<sup>e</sup> spurre. Besides this, we must also come backe to the doctrine of S. Paul, which is, that whatsoever promise with condition God doe make vs in his lawe, it standes vs in no stead. For wee on our side, in steade of performing the thinges y<sup>e</sup> God commaundeth vs, doe goe cleane backe from them, and by that meanes are farr off fro all y<sup>e</sup> benefit y<sup>e</sup> is beightened vs there. And whereas the Lawe sayth, hee that doth these thinges shall liue in them: that booteth vs nothing at all vntill God of his owne goodnesse be at one with vs againe. For then writeth he his lawe in our heartes, and we learne to obey him: which thing we cannot doe by nature. And yet for all that, we doe it not then perfectly, but there is still some blemish in our doings, so as God might iustly reiect our workes, because they be altogether sinfull. Neuerthelesse hee taketh them in good woorth, and yeeldeth vs reward, not as of ductie, but of his owne good will.

Therefore to come againe to the first matter, let vs note y<sup>e</sup> God prouoketh vs to the keeping of his commaundements, by such meanes as he knoweth to be most conuenient for vs. And that is the cause why he sayth, that if wee be wholly his, he also is ours: and y<sup>e</sup> if wee draw neere vnto him he will drawe ny vnto vs: & will bleise vs, & he wil not only prosper vs in this transiorie lyfe: but we may wel hope for a far greater reward in y<sup>e</sup> kingdome of heauen. All these thinges are told vs: and to what end? Not to puffe vs vp with any vaine presumption, as though wee were able to deserue aught at Gods hand, but to incorage vs the more to doe well, seeing that our God which might might well exact the performance of all that is contained in his Lawe, without allowing vs any rewarde at all, doth neuerthelesse voutsafe to binde himselfe freely of his owne accord. Marke that for the first point. For we see here, y<sup>e</sup> Gods promising of all these things to that people, was not for any obedience that they had yielded vnto him; for the land had bin promised to their fathers, yea euen by o<sup>r</sup> he, long before they were borne. And if a man speake of the time that was to come: we see that God had no respect of that, he looketh not that the people should behaue themselves so well as to receive reward of him for it; but he saith; I haue already promised you the land, yea I haue promised it you for your inheritance, to the intent ye should not thinke ye haue gotten it by your owne purchase. And for prooffe thereof, I assured it vnto you by free gift before you were begotten; but yet if ye intend to inioy it, take heede that yee giue your felues to me. Here yee see how God preuenteth all deferring: he regardeth not what we haue deferred, but whereas he seeth vs to be wretched and destitute of all goodnesse, so as he findeth nothing but sinne in vs, whereby we deserue to be reiecte: yet neuerthelesse he of his owne infinite mercie bindeth himselfe vnto vs, & telleth vs he will doe vs good, as though we had serued him according to his law. Marke y<sup>e</sup> for one point.

And thereupon he ceaseth not to say, Do the things that I haue commanded you, that ye may inioy the benefites that I haue promised you. The reason is, that he will not haue his goodnesse dalyed withall. If he be liberall, he will not haue men to abuse it as they commonly doe. When it is told vs that all that cuer we haue at Gods hand, is of his onely free gift: wee beare our felues in hand, that we haue leaue to doe euill, and to lue every man after his owne lyking, and that it is no matter what we doe. But God wil not haue his gracious goodnes so disgraced. For his shewing of himselfe fauorable vnto vs, is to another end and purpose, namely to prouoke vs to loue him againe; and that because wee finde him so good a father, we should be lykelymmed againe towards him, & behaue our felues as his children. That is the thing which Moses telleth vs here when hee saith. Looke that yee obey your God, if ye minde to possess the land which he promised to your fathers. For on the one side hee sheweth that the land of Chanaan was an heritage of free gift: and yet hee forbearth not to tell them, that they must not dallie wth God in abusing y<sup>e</sup> liberaltie of his, but so much the rather both loue him & feare him. And when they see that God hath powred out the great riches of his mercie so vpon them; the same ought to inflame them to say, let vs giue ouer our felues wholly to our God: Seeing that hee hath fought vs out at such time as wee were gone from him, & preuented vs wth his goodnesse, not respecting our vnworthinesse, but taking occasio<sup>n</sup> of himselfe to doe vs good: let it kindle y<sup>e</sup> greater desire in vs to submit our felues to his power and will.

And whereas Moses speaketh here but onely of the land of Chanaan, & of the fruites that the people should gather there for their finding and sustentance: it is not for that God meane not to leade the faithfull any further than so at y<sup>e</sup> time: for it is certene that they had the promise of life after the same maner as it is contained at this day in the Gospell. And therefore it is horrible blasphemie against God, to say y<sup>e</sup> God held the people of olde time lyke swine in a sty, and that they had no more but a certeine figure of y<sup>e</sup> spirituall good things which are giuen vs presently in these dayes, as that wretched caytife sayd which was punished here, who turned all things vpside downe, & was so bold as to belke out this heresie; y<sup>e</sup> the olde testamēt was nothing else but a figure: in somuch y<sup>e</sup> euen Abraham the father of all the faithfull, had but a fantasticall faith and knew not God aright. And for prooffe thereof (quoth he,) he worshipped Angels in stead of God, & had no knowledge of the euercasting lyfe. Loe what cursed fluffe here was: for we know (saith S. Paul) y<sup>e</sup> the fathers of old time were the childre of God, & heires of y<sup>e</sup> kingdome of heauē as well as we. There is but this difference, y<sup>e</sup> they were lyke young children: but yet for all y<sup>e</sup>, they failed not to possess y<sup>e</sup> benefite; howbeit y<sup>e</sup> they were stil vnder tutors and gouernours, according to y<sup>e</sup> similitude that S. Paul alledgeth there. The auncient fathers had the law & the ceremonies & such other lyke things: but yet they wanted not the substance & trueth alio. Now then, Gods setting forth of the land of Chanaan to the Iewes was not to the intent they should stand poring vpon y<sup>e</sup>, lyke swine that stand mulling with their groyns in their swiltrough: but vnder the earthly inheritance which he had promised to their fathers, he gaue them a taste of the heavenly heritage, accordingly as we see y<sup>e</sup> in their sacrificing, although they offered brute beastes: yet were they made partakers of the redēption that is purchased for vs by our Lord Iesus Christ; and their offering of y<sup>e</sup> brute beastes in sacrifice, directed thē to y<sup>e</sup> redēption y<sup>e</sup> was wrought by the sonne of God, when he shed his holy blood to washe away our spottes and finnes. And after the same maner was it wth the land of Chanaan. For such was their slender capacite, y<sup>e</sup> it behooued thē to be guided that way. The land of Chanaan then, was to thē not onely a pledge but also an earnest penny of the heavenly lyfe & endlesse wellfare which the fathers hoped for as well as we, inasmuch as they had the same faith that we haue. So then let vs marke well, that whereas here is mentiō made of the land of Chanaan, and of Gods mainteining of his people there in wealth: serueth not to the end that the Iewes should looke for nothing els but earthly things; but to the end that by tasting of Gods goodnes in this transitorie life, they should vnderstand that he had prepared thē another heritage in heauē, which was more worth than all the world.

But our Lord vseth no such maner of dealing with vs nowadayes. True it is that (as saith Saint Paul vnto Timothie) if we walke as becommeth vs, we haue promise both of this present life, & of y<sup>e</sup> life to come. God telleth vs y<sup>e</sup> he wil not onely receiue vs into y<sup>e</sup> euercasting life, but also y<sup>e</sup> he will neuer forsake vs so long as we be in this world and in this earthly pilgrimage, but will still haue a care of vs to doe vs good, and to succor vs and prouide for vs in all our needs: howbeit the heavenly lyfe is the chiefe thing, and that is the place whereunto our Lord draweth vs, notwithstanding that he ad this present lyfe to it as an aecessorie. And that is done because wee haue a greater light nowadayes, than our forefathers had vnder the Lawe. For Iesus Christ is come downe from heauen, and hath opened the euerlasting kingdome vnto vs: & he is gone vp thither as in our person: for he is risen againe in y nature of man which he took of vs. Ye see then y heauen is now opened: and therefore it is not to be wondered at though God speake in a larger language now, thā he did in the time of the law. For it behoued the people of those dayes to be led as we see little children are: & (as saith Saint Paule) we be come to mans estate, in comparison of them. Yet notwithstanding we may gather hereupon, that God intending to encourage his people to serue him with the better will, telleth them y he will shewe himselfe a father towards them, euen in respect of this world, howbeit not in all pointes, but onely so farre forth as may giue them some taste and feeling of his fatherly loue, that they may lift vp the eyes of their faith yet higher, and vnderstand that God hath reserved the true blessednesse and perfection of glorie for them, till they be taken out of this worlde and out of this corruptible lyfe. Thus ye see in effect what we haue to gather vpon that text: Yea and it behoueth vs to marke wel this saying, That thou maist be strengthened.

¶ Herby Moses declareth that God for his parte is faithfull, and that when hee hath once spoken the worde, we may well assure our selues of it. But forasmuch as we drag our legges after vs, and although he allure vs to him so gently, and draw towards vs of his owne accord: yet are we lazie & slow in coming vnto him: we haue need to be strengthened. That is the very end y al y promises of the lawe do tend vnto. It is not meant that God should binde himselfe vnto vs as our dettor: it is not for that he looketh whether wee haue deserued any thing at all or no: neither is it of purpose to bargain or indent with vs, as though he should take vp hackencies among vs to scue his turne withall, by constraint: but forasmuch as he sees wee be feeble, and haue not so resolute a minde as were requisite, but are entangled in this world, and held backe with a number of vanities, and wicked affections, and (to be short) are not so liuely as to yeelde our selues vnto his obedience: his purpose is to strengthen vs, and to help vs. He seeth our default, and he remedieth it. Be strōg therefore. And how? Euen by considering thus with your selues: Go to, Our Lord might commaund vs peremptorily at one word: for he hath full souerieintie ouer vs, and we be his by nature. And when we haue all of vs streined our selues to the vttermost of our power, yet can wee not doe as we ought to doe. Yet notwithstanding, he will not be serued at our handes wout recompence, but he faith y if we doe but a peece of that which is due to him, he bindeth himselfe to vs for it. Sith we see this, are we not too leauid if wee bee not touched to the quick, & amend not all storkfulness, to go forth vnto God lustily without stopping for any worldly impedimēt or hinderance? That is y strength which Moses spake of here.

And he addeth hereunto, that is: is not enough to be entred into the land: but wee must also abide and dwell there: for if wee haue once receiued the promise of saluation, and God hath blessed vs & made vs to prosper to y worldward: we must not thereupon fall a sleepe; but wee must still folowe our cause. We know that this life is a way, and therefore wee must still goe on forward. And whither is it that God calleth vs? Saith he to vs, when ye haue gone on a little way, tary still in-trangle in the world? No: but we must trauel stil vpward to the heavenly lyfe. And that can not be done without forsaking the world continually more and more. Then let vs marke well, how it is told vs here, y when God hath once put vs in hope of saluation, so as he hath taken vs into his Church and into his flocke, and begunne to doe vs good: we must not fall a sleepe vpon it, but proceede on stil, assuring our selues y al is to no purpose, vnlesse wee hold out to our lues end, without ceasing or failing in the middes of our way. This is it y Moses meant, in saying y when the people were once entred into y lande, it behoued them to haue an eye to y euerlasting inioying & possessing thereof which had bin promised them with the same. Hauing said so, he addeth that the land of Chanaā is not as the land of Egypt. And why? For your being in Egypt (saith he) was as it had bin in a garden. For men doe water their gardens, so as when they haue sowed or set their herbes, they will haue water at hand to moyten thē wal. After y same maner was it with you in y land of Egypt, which is watered partly by cunning, & partly by nature. For we must vnderstand, y that land hath one propertie which all other landes haue not. We reade not y any other countrie of the world is vnnoysted with raine and showers frō aboue, saue only Egypt. For once a yeere y riuier Nilus ouerfloweth his banckes, & according to y growing thereof, so doth it belight thē abundance of fruites. In so much y if it ouerflowe not aboue siue or sixe foote deep, it is a token of dearth, as who should say y God threatneth famine to y whole countrie. If it rise to twētie foote or somewhat vpward, well, there will be some abundance. But if it increase to thirtie or fortie foote, then will there be much more: so as in Egypt they haue none other signe of a good yeere & a fruitful haruest, than the ouerflowing of Nilus. Whereas all other riuers doe marre the landes where they ouerflowe: and although they be muddie, yet doe they much harme: This riuier, by his ouerflowing, causeth y land to yeeld great abundance. That is y cause why it is said, y at y tyme y Israelites had as it were euery man his garden, & were faine to haue water to moiste thē wal after y maner of y countrie, which is cut into many ditches & trēches to water the land wal: & all this is according to y ordinance which

which God hath set there. But here Moses telleth the Israeletes, that it shall not be so with the in the land of Chanaan. For why? There is small store of riuers in many of the countries, yea and in the most part of them. True it is that Iordan passeth through it, and there are certaine lakes also: but that is all, and yet one of them serues but to infect the land. For the lake where Sodom stood, did rather marre the countrie, than yeeld any commoditie. And therewithall wee see how the fathers had much adoe to digge pites, and were in daunger to be vndone with drought: in somuch that they were driuen frō place to place for lacke of water. Ye see then that the land of Chanaan was not watered after the maner of Egypt, neither had it water at hand and at commandement as Egypt had. And therefore is it sayd vnto them, See how God visiteth the land of Egypt but once a yere: and if the riuer flowe lustily ouer all the countrie, it is as good as if he had rayned neuer so much vpon it, so as the Egyptians are sure of a good haruest, when the riuer hath increased after that fashion. But your God must be faine to send you raine and conuenient moisture from aboue, from the one end of the yere to the other. When yee haue sown your seede, ye must waite for raine from aboue, and thinke thus with your selues, Alas Lord, wilt not thou make the seede to increase which wee haue layd into the ground? Now must thou shew that thou regardest vs, and that it is thy wil that our labour shal prosper. And when thou hast sought vs raine, we must be faine to returne againe and looke vp still to heauen, that thou our God maist haue thine eyes continually vpon the land, to make it yeelde fruite. For it is not enough for you y<sup>e</sup> your God send you raine once; but he must be faine to hold on still for other way there is none to water y<sup>e</sup> land, except your God power out his blessing vpon you from heauen. Other- wise the land must needs lye dry and vntilled. Thus doe we see how Moses meaning is, to stirre vp the people to lue in awe and feare, and to prouoke them to call vpon God continually, and therewithall to submit themselves to his gouernment, and to consider how great need they haue of his help, so as they may say: Alas Lord, what will become of vs if thou blest vs not?

Morouer hee putteth them in minde also, to consider what a fatherly care God had of y<sup>e</sup> land of Chanaan, sith it was his pleasure to raine so vpon it, not for once a yere onely, but yere-ly from the beginning of the yere to the ende of it. That is the effect of the things that Moses intended to say here. And thereby wee be done to vnderstand, that Gods bringing of vs into distresse and necessitie, is to prouoke vs to repaire vnto him, and to looke vp to his goodnesse, so as wee should not onely haue cause to giue him thanks for his benefites; but also bee driuen to call vpon him by being held at the staues end, and thereupon dayly redorte vnto him. After the same maner, wee see nowadayes how wee haue neede of faire weather; and that not for fower or fīue dayes in a yere: but as oft as seed is to be layde into the ground, or the land is to be tilled; or else wee see men coulde not put the plough into the ground, nor sowe their corne: if they should, it would rotte immediately, and neuer take roote in the earth, Againe the grapes would rotte vpon the vines and neuer ripen. Neuertheless, when corne is layde into the ground, it requireth rayne; and it is marvellous if there followe an vmeasurable drought. Afterward in sometime when haruest commeth, the time must be fit for it, and likewise for dressing of vines and for mowing of grasse. To be short, all the yere long God calleth vs to him, by making vs to haue neede of him. And although wee were not prouoked at all; yet the very wit and vnderstanding that he giueth vs by nature, may cause vs to see that he calleth vs dayly to come vnto him, and to put our whole trust in his goodnesse. This is the thing in effect which we haue to remember vpon this text.

But the chiefe point is to put this lesson well in practise. And therefore whensoever we see that our God hath looked vpon vs throughout all the yere; let vs vnderstand that his intent was to shewe the more familiarly, what a fatherly care he hath ouer vs. For if wee had any ruer lyke to Nilus which watered the land in stead of rayne: wee would thinke thus with our selues; well, now hath God done pitying of vs for this yere: & it would not touch vs so well, as when we see y<sup>e</sup> God not onely regardeth vs in the spring-time, but also holdeth on all the yere long, so as there is not any one day of all the yere, wherein we may not behold Gods wonderful goodnesse, in making y<sup>e</sup> earth to yeeld fruite for our sustenance, by considering how he is faine one while to hold y<sup>e</sup> raine lockt vp, & another while to open the windowes & water gates of heauen, that wee may haue moisture in due season: How hee is faine to send heate, and to asfwage it againe: & to send cold and to abate it againe; how hee is faine to send faire weather & fowle, and to temper the one with the other: so as finally, we haue neede of all these diuersities, in their due times and seasons. And sith we see that God prouideth vs of all these things; ought wee not to be the better assured that he hath a continual regard of vs and neuer forgetteth vs, and that hee is a father to vs all the yere long: Lyke as a man y<sup>e</sup> is myndful of his household sith hee becomes a morninges to goe to his businesse; & when hee hath done one thing, looketh about if there bee any thing els to set in order; forcausing in his minde how to dispose the things y<sup>e</sup> are giuen him, so as the benefite thereof may redound to his whole household: euen so God behaueh himselfe as a householder towards vs, so as hee ceaseth not to watch for our benefite both early and late; not that he is faine to toyler after the maner of men: but that howsoever the case stand, hee maketh vs to feele that he is more than a foster-father to vs, & we be too blind & beastly if we consider it not. Thus yee see how the practising of this lesson of Moses, consisteth in giuing thanks to our God, according to the varietie of y<sup>e</sup> time & weather which we perceiue in y<sup>e</sup> yere. And whē he hath prouided vs for the whole yere; let vs assure assure our selues that hee hath had pitie of vs, and regarded vs, and neuer turned his eye from our benefite, to the end that we might be furnished and prouided thereof. Furthermore, it is not enough for vs to thanke God when we haue so felt his goodnesse: but lyke as Moses sayth here, that his eyes are alwayes vpon the landes y<sup>e</sup> are full of hills & dales, where hollow groudes are not at commaundement to cut trenches in, nor streames at hand to water y<sup>e</sup> fields as it were gardens: so when we thinke vpon those things, we must beare in minde that God hath his eyes continually vpon vs, to y<sup>e</sup> end that we also should lift vp our eyes vnto him, to call vpon him and to resorte to him for succor all y<sup>e</sup> yeete long, & that when he hath giuen vs a good season, we should pray for the continuance thereof thereafter, as we should haue neede of it, and it ought to prouoke vs to doe y<sup>e</sup> lyke from day to day. But contrariwise, we see our owne negligence. For when things fall out according to our minde, we doe as it were despise God. If we see there hath bin a good seede time, then go to, let vs make good cheeres: seeing the seede time was so good, we are lyke to haue as good a harvest. And doe we wonder y<sup>e</sup> God disappointhe vs of our desire, because of such vnthankfulness? What a leauidnesse is y<sup>e</sup>? God hath his eyes vpon vs, & yet we shut our eyes at him; & kicke & spurne against him, & mocke at him: and thinke we y<sup>e</sup> he either ought or can beare wth such beastlynesse? Nay rather, seeing y<sup>e</sup> he sayth first, My children, I looke vpon you & haue a care of you, to prouide sustentance for you: it would become vs to be answerable vnto him. Seeing y<sup>e</sup> our Lord beginneth after y<sup>e</sup> fashion, what ought we to doe? Ought we not at leastwise to say, well Lord, and we likewise will haue an eye vnto thee? Nay, contrariwise, when we haue receiued benefites at his hand, we fall to kicking against him. He would take vs into his protection, & we fall to flinging away from him. Againe, where is y<sup>e</sup> care y<sup>e</sup> we ought to haue to call vpon him: it would become vs to consider thus with our selues, Our Lord holdeth vs as it were at y<sup>e</sup> stauces end, to y<sup>e</sup> intent we should stand in awe of him: now therefore, let vs not giue our lusses the head: as if a father shoulde say to his children, sirs, looke y<sup>e</sup> ye apply your selues wel, the one of you at his booke and the other at his worke, & then shall ye haue your dinners, & else ye shall haue nothing. If a father hold his childre at that point, so as they knowe not whether they shall haue meate & drinke or no, except it appeare that they haue done some good, surely it will moue the thought they haue no reason nor vnderstanding. Behold, our God could well giue vs at once all that euer we need: or else he could in one day shewe vs y<sup>e</sup> yere should be prosperous, so as there should be both a good harvest and a good vintage: but he will not doe it. When we haue passed ouer one day, we must beginne againe the next day to pray to him: & God hath ordaind that it should be so, because he sees wel y<sup>e</sup> it is more th<sup>e</sup> requisite for vs to be held in awe. And therefore let vs learne to profite our selues by this lesson: & when soeuer we want raine, let vs beware y<sup>e</sup> we be patient, in waiting quietly till God open y<sup>e</sup> cloudes. And on y<sup>e</sup> other side, when he voutsafech to water y<sup>e</sup> earth; let vs vnderstand y<sup>e</sup> he giueth vs sustentance wth his owne hand, and let vs call vpon him dayly: & sith we perceiue y<sup>e</sup> he watcheth for vs; let vs lykewise haue our eyes vpon him againe. Thus ye see in effect what Moses meant to declare here.

Now he addeth thereunto; If ye keepe the commaundemens which I set before you, so as ye loue your God, & serue him with all your hearts, in the lande which I will giue you. Here Moses putteth y<sup>e</sup> people in minde againe what y<sup>e</sup> true seruice of God is: namely y<sup>e</sup> we learne to obey him. This hath bin sufficiently layd forth already: but yet is it not wthout cause y<sup>e</sup> the holy Ghost speakech of it so often. For it standeth vs in hand to haue such warnings set before vs, as it were euery minute of an howre. And for prooffe thereof, how serue wee God, but by force & constraint? We haue no willingness nor desire at all to it. But our Lord telleth vs y<sup>e</sup> he accepteth no seruice y<sup>e</sup> is done vnto him, except it come from the heart, & that wee loue him as our father, according as it is sayd in y<sup>e</sup> psalme, y<sup>e</sup> we cannot feare God but because he sheweth himselfe mercifull vnto vs. For so long as we cocieue nothing in God but rigor; we can doe nothing else but shun him, & shinke away from him as farre as is possible: & although wee be constrained to looke vnto him, yet shall hee drawe nothing y<sup>e</sup> is aught worth frō vs. Therefore y<sup>e</sup> first step to serue God wel & to loue him, is to knowe his fauorablenesse, that we may rest vpon it, & looke for mercie & fauor at his hand. For lyke as in y<sup>e</sup> sayd hundred & thirtieth psalme: so also here, mention is made of obediēce after loue, to shew vs y<sup>e</sup> it is not enough to pretend y<sup>e</sup> seruice of God; but that we must lo submit our selues to him, as we may say, Lord thou hast giuen vs the grace to rule our lyfe aright; & therefore voutsafe to govern vs in such sort; as none of vs may take leaue to doe what he list, but all of vs may harkē simply to thy voyce, to submit our selues thereunto.

Now let vs come to y<sup>e</sup> word y<sup>e</sup> Moses addeth; which is, I will giue. Here he speaketh in the person of God. He had sayd afore, looke y<sup>e</sup> ye obey the commaundemens which I set before you, & the Lord your God will blesse you. And now he sayth: I will giue, as though he himselfe were god. It is not wthout cause y<sup>e</sup> he chaungeth the person after that fashion: for it serueth to giue the greater authoritie to his doctrine, & to make it to be the better receiued. For we be inclined to such contempt & skornefulness, y<sup>e</sup> when God speaketh vnto vs by men, we make no account of it, because his worde is preached vnto vs by mortall men. Behold, a man speaketh in the pulpit, & we be not touched with his doctrine as were requisite. It ought to haue there a heauenly maiestie; and we be so dull and grosse, that we perceiue not how it is God that speaketh there. In this respect Moses saith here; I will giue thee: and yet for all y<sup>e</sup>, he was not able to giue them one drop of raine. And what is his giuing then? Verily hee sheweth that his speaking is not of himselfe, but of God, and therefore that wee must receiue it as if God had spoken it with his owne mouth, and had shewed himselfe in visible shape, and vttered his glorie to the eye. Let vs make well then that in this text we be done to vnderstand, that when we come to the hearing of a sermon or to the reading of the holy scripture, wee must not bring deafe eares with vs to bee no whit moued at the wordes, nor to bee quickened vp by the commandementes and exhortations that are giuen vs there: but wee must yeelde our selues vnto our God, assuring our selues that although he serue his turne by men as his instrumentes, yet is it hee himselfe that sendeth the message and authoriseth the word, according to this saying of our Lord Iesus Christ: Hee that heareth you heareth mee, and he that receiuech you receiuech mee. And whosoener receiuech you, receiuech mee also, and lykewise my father that sent me. Ye see then how it is an open rebelling against God, when we dildayne to heare his word that is preached vnto vs by men, and to heare it with as much humilitie as if hee himselfe came downe vnto vs, or as if he sent it vs by the Angels of heauen. That is the matter which Moyses meant to shewe here.

Now in the end he sayth, that they shall haue their fill, and be well maintained, when they shall haue kept Gods commandementes after that fashion. Wee haue two points to marke in this text for a conclusion. The first is, that our Lord telleth his people, that hee wil not barely giue them whatsoever is needefull for them: but also giue them their fill of his benefites, so as they shal be throughly satisfiued with them. That is for the one. The second is a coming backe to that which hath bin touched already: namely, that although God speake but of temporall goods, such as concerne but this transitorie life; yet hee lea- deth them further thereby. First therefore let vs vnderstand, that God not onely giueth and bestoweth vpon vs, such things as hee knoweth to be needefull for vs; but also enlargeth and extendeth his riches yet further, by vsing a kinde of ouermeasure. And in very deepe wee see it to be so. For as in respect of naturall necessitie, what needed we more than bread and water? But God addeth wine to comfort and glad mans heart, as is sayd in the psalme. Again we see he vnterseth to pleasure vs after all sortes, by sending vs so many things as are in the worlde to delight vs withall, which are all witnesses of his liberallitie towards vs, in that he not onely prouideth vs of all the things which we coulde not forbear; but also addeth as an ouerplus, a great number of good things that serue for our pleasure: Whereby we ought to bee the more prouoked to loue him, and they ought to bee as wings to vs, wherewith to fly vnto him. But contrariwise, if God giue vs store, wee cannot forbear to pamper our selues like brute beasts, insomuch that wee be wedded to this world. I speake not only of drunkards and Gluttons that cram themselues till they be without wit & reason: but also of all such as are in loue with their delicates and delights, so as if they haue abundance more than ordinarie, they cannot holde themselues within any measure, but thereupon doe fall asleepe, and in stead of being prouoked to resort vnto God, doe runne away from him, or rather lye weltring and bathing of themselues in their pleasures, and forget themselves I wote not how. Wherefore let vs marke wel, that whē God giueth vs abundance, it is not to minister occasion of disorder, but to make vs the more in loue with him, so far as he handleth vs not as seruantes or hirelings, but as his owne children, from whom he withholdeth nothing. Now then, sith wee see this; let vs learne to fare y better by it. Thus much concerning y word Fill. But yet let vs marke, y although God giue vs not our fill; yet saileth he not to shewe his freegoodnesse in so dooing, insomuch that there was neuer yet so great a famine, but that our Lord hath alwayes shewed himselfe a father, yea and more than a father towards men: but ill is that considered of vs. And that is a cause also why he bestoweth not so much as were requisite. Because Gods benefites haue fo ill intertainment at our handes, he also is faine to shut his blessings from vs, and to lette vs alone in want and penurie. Thus much concerning the first poyn.

And touching the second, let vs marke that when God feedeth and maintaineth vs in this world euen to our owne contentation; the same must be a prouocation to vs to consider by faith, the infinite riches that are reserued for vs aboue in heauen. It is sayd in the psalme, I shal haue my fill of the abundance of thy goodnesse. Psal. 6. 11. And in an other place it is saide, Lorde howe great is the abundance of thy goodnes, which thou hast layd vp for them that loue thee? Psal. 17. 15. True it is that God maketh vs to feele the abundance of his goodnesse, partly euen in this world: but yet shall we neuer haue our fill of it, (as is said in the sixteenth psalme) vntill our Lord haue taken vs vp to himselfe, & rid vs quite out of this world. And so let vs marke, that the full measure of the good things that are promised vs, & which we looke to iuioy, is not to be found here beneath, it is enough that we see some part of them. Yea and although our Lord bestow but as much vpon vs as he seeth requisite for our infirmitie: Let vs alwayes be led vp higher thereby, so as it may make vs to consider, y when the time commeth wherein God wil shewe himselfe vnto vs face to face, then shall we be blinkt much nearer to him, than we be now: and (to be short,) that whē we be gathered vp into his heavenly kingdome, then we shall haue our fill of all things. Ye see then that we must so passe through this world, as we must not take our fill, contentation, and rest in the things that are here, but bee drawn euer higher and higher to the spirituall good things: and that if we linger in penurie heere beneath, we must consider that by that meane God prouoketh vs to come vnto him, vntill wee bee perfectly vnted vnto him, as the vnion shal be at the last day.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our faulces, praying him to make vs feele this better than we haue done, so as it may cause vs to hūble our selues continually, and to mislyke of our selues, and to aske him forgiveness of the great number of sinnes and iniquities which we haue committed; and that in the meane while it may

Psal. 104. 15

please him to beare with vs in our weakenesse, vntill he haue clothed vs againe with his owne righteousnesse, and also taken vs vp into his endlesse glorie. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all, &c.

The Lxxvij Sermon which is the fourth vppon the eleuenth Chapter.

16 Beware that your heart bee not beguyled, and that yee turne not away to serue other Gods, and to bowe downe before them,

17 Least the wrath of your God bee kindled against you, and hee shut vp the heauen that it raine not, and the earth yeeld not her fruit, and least ye perish sodenly from of the good Land which the Lord giueth you.

18 Therefore lay vp these wordes in your heartes and in your mindes, and tye them for a token to your hands, & let the be as frontlets written between your eyes.

19 And teach the to your childre, talking of the when thou art at home in thine house, & when thou goest abroad, and when thou lyest down, & when thou risest.

20 See thou write them vppon the portals and gates of thy house, 21 That your dayes & the dayes of your children, may be increased in the Land which the Lord sware to your fathers to giue you, as long as y<sup>e</sup> skyes are ouer y<sup>e</sup> earth.

When as Moses sayth here, that men must beware that they over- shote not themselues: thereby he doth vs to vnderstand, howe frail we be, & how inclined vnto euill, if we be not diligently restrained by the feare of God, & by continuall minding of y<sup>e</sup> doctrine whereby he guideth and governeth vs. To our seeming it had bin enough to haue sayd; Keep the commandements of your God. Yee see what he requireth of you: sith yee know his will, holde your selues to it. But forasmuch as men are vnconstant, & a small thing or nothing will make them start out of y<sup>e</sup> right way: he addeth yet further this warning, that they should beware; As if he should say; Syrs, keepe good watch. Why so? For we shall be surprised by and by, if we watch not to withstand Satans temptations & wiles. Specially when y<sup>e</sup> case cometh y<sup>e</sup> seruing of God, wee bee streightwayes turned aside, and we need none other bodie to tempt vs, for euery man shall finde continually some seede of superstition in his owne heart, and the minde of man is a warehous of Idolatrie, so as euen without schooling, euery of vs will forge idols, & ouerthrow the seruice of God. For y<sup>e</sup> diuill sleepest not, ne ceaseth to intangle vs in many fond & wicked fancies. Hereby therefore we may iudge how needefull this warning is for vs, where we be willed to be watchfull. Yea and we know y<sup>e</sup> frailtie of our minde to be such, y<sup>e</sup> if wee be not well fenced to withstand Satans temptations constantly, he wil soon haue turned vs out of the way of saluation, & from y<sup>e</sup> pure doctrine of God. And therefore let vs vnderstand at a word, y<sup>e</sup> we haue need to stand continually vpon our garde, as long as we liue in this mortall life. For why? On the one side y<sup>e</sup> diuill tempteth vs, & hath an infinite number of wiles to winde about vs euery minute of an howre: & although his temptations were not so great as they be; yet are we so weak of our selues, y<sup>e</sup> euery thing of nothing is able to ouerthrow vs. Sith it is so with vs, let vs watch, specially seeing y<sup>e</sup> spirit of God warneth vs so to doe. But what? It is well seene how we be takē vnwares & vnprovidē, and God punisheth our negligence in falling so asleepe, as though wee were at peace & rest here. Nay our life must be kept occupied here as though there were continual warre, & the diuell faileth not to put vs to infinite assaultes & skirmishes on all sides. And therefore seeing we on our side be so sleepe, and our enemy on y<sup>e</sup> other side is so watching to cut our throates: it is good reason y<sup>e</sup> we should so be overcome. For seeing y<sup>e</sup> God warneth vs to stand at our defence, & we voutsafe not to be mindful of it, & to call vpon him & to refer our selues vnto his protectiō; must he not needes shew vs by experience, y<sup>e</sup> his warning of vs is not vnto cause? Yes; & therefore let vs beare this exhortation in mind, & specially when God is to be serued (as I said afore), let vs assure our selues there needeth nothing to dazle our eyes, as appeareth by experience. As soone as y<sup>e</sup> true & pure religion is established in any place; & by mē fal to imbecing of it, for their very nature affordeth it. And therefore so much y<sup>e</sup> more behoueth it vs to hold our selues as impriōned, and not to swaue one way nor other, y<sup>e</sup> we may hold our selues continually in y<sup>e</sup> pure simplicitie of Gods word. Again let vs not be out of quiet though neuer so many mē do tūne out of y<sup>e</sup> right way: for it is their kinde so to do. Whether let vs strengthen our selues against such stumbling blocks, when we see corruptions creepe in againe, & that such as were in a good trade doe disgrace themselues. Sith it is so y<sup>e</sup> men doe easily fall asleepe, & take no heede to themselves: let vs not maruell though euery thing of nothing do corrupt them. Thus yee see how this sentence may serue vs to dubble purpose.

And it is sayde expressly, that our heartes should not be beguiled. For it is not enough for a man to abstaine from doing of euill wilfully: but also all fond deuotions are lykewise condemned, because our Lord wil not haue men to be selfewise, but to obey simply whatsoeuer God commandeth thē. Men thinke it to be a reasonable excuse before God, when they can say, I meant to doe well: but that meant is but a mockerie, as Moses shewed here. And for proof thereof, although our hearts be beguiled, so as men perceiue not their owne euill doings and destruction, but make their reckoning that God will take their doings in good worth: yet are they condemned here (as ye see) with all their good intents, and they faile not to offend God neuertheless, and in offending him they faile not also to heape vp vengeance vpon their owne heads. And why so? Euen because they walke not in obedience vnto him. Now then, let vs learne, not to shield or shrowd our felues any more vnder deuotions after the foolish manner that hath reigned too much in the world: but let vs vnderstand that our Lord will haue vs to fetch light at his word, and to rule our liues by that. And sith he is so good to vs as to teach vs what is good, to the intent that Satan may not haue any entrance into vs, but that hee may bee put backe though hee goe prying about vs and indeuour to vndermine vs, and seeke neuer to many bywayes to creepe into vs: let vs assure our selues throughly, y<sup>e</sup> we haue but only one way, from y<sup>e</sup> which it is not lawful for vs to step aside in any wise. And when we stand vpon our gard, let vs not doubt but y<sup>e</sup> God will reach vs his hand, & so fence vs on all sides, as Satan may well practise what he listeth, but hee shal neuer win any thing at our handes. For otherwise this exhortation were to no purpose. If God should say vnto vs, beware, & in the meane while we had no meanes to beware, hee might seeme to mocke vs. But inasmuch as when we resort vnto him, he vouchsafeth to guide vs, by giuing vs y<sup>e</sup> spirit of wisdom & discretion, to y<sup>e</sup> end we should not be deceived: surely whatsoeuer the deuill practise, yet shall he not preuaile, but we shall euer overcome his temptations, at leastwise if wee suffer our selues to be gouerned by Gods pure word, so as wee forsake our owne fantasies, & trust not to our own wit, but pray God to enlighten vs, and to shew vs by his holy spirit, what is acceptable vnto him. When wee goe to worke after that fashion, so as our warinesse is matched with humilitie, it is certaine y<sup>e</sup> God will alwayes reach vs into his mightie hand. Thus ye see that the thing which we haue to put in vre, is first of all to be vigilant & to keepe good watch: and secondly that so far as we know we may quickly be deceived, we must pray God to defend vs, & vtterly distrusting our selues, leane onely vnto him. These two things will so preferre vs, that we shall continually keepe y<sup>e</sup> right way, eue in the midst of darkeesse. For why? God himselfe will serue vs both for Sunne and Moone, as it is sayd in the Prophet Esay.

And now by the way he sheweth that if y<sup>e</sup> children of Israell continued not in y<sup>e</sup> seruing of God and in his pure religion, they were lesse to be excused than all the infidels of the world: for it is said vnto them, mine not away. Men that haue neuer had any good instruction, are by nature as brute beastes; but when God hath called vs and shewed vs the true foundenesse, then if we faile afterward, it is not with vs as with the fillic infidels that haue euer bin blinde and ignorant, but it is a rebellious turning away vnto wickednes, as though we meant to spite our God by separating our selues from him, by renouncing the covenant which he had made wth vs, to hold vs vnder his subiection. This saying therefore ought to be well weyed, & specially of vs in these dayes which haue the pure truth of y<sup>e</sup> Gospell, whereas wee see how all our neighbours round about vs runne headlong on still in blindness. In deede it is pitie y<sup>e</sup> they haue not knowne Gods truth; but yet shal not y<sup>e</sup> excuse them. But what is to be sayd to vs in comparison of them, seeing that our God hath shewed himselfe to vs, & hath layd the matter so playne before vs, as we cannot misse but knowe how to obey him: Wherefore let vs take heede y<sup>e</sup> we keepe on our course, when God shall haue set vs in y<sup>e</sup> way of his obedience, & taught vs how to do it. Let vs beware (I say) that we step not aside in any wise, vnlesse we intend to be worthy of dubble blame. Let vs be thinke vs of this saying, that y<sup>e</sup> seruant which knoweth his masters will, shal haue dubble punishment if hee doe it not. And y<sup>e</sup> we may so doe, let vs seeke to settle our selues y<sup>e</sup> more by Gods word. When he hath once told vs what he would haue vs to doe, let vs profite therein, & let vs be so strengthened thereby, y<sup>e</sup> the diuill (doe what he can, and inforce hee himselfe neuer so much against vs) may not be able to turne vs out of the way.

Now he speaketh afterward of strange Gods. For the wellspring of all euill, is the not knowing what God we should serue. If men bee to seeke in that point, needs must all the rest of their lyfe be vtterly vncertaine, & wrapped vp altogether in error. And therefore it is not for naught y<sup>e</sup> God strideth vpon this point, y<sup>e</sup> men should know him, & serue & worship onely him alone. For when we say we must serue no strange Gods: it importeth two things. The first is that we should be able to discern who is our God, so as we ground not our selues vpon false opinion or fantasie, but vpon substantiall certieintie: which thing cannot be if we giue way to our own mother wit. For y<sup>e</sup> is y<sup>e</sup> roote whence all the superstitions in the worlde haue sprong. And the very cause of y<sup>e</sup> huge confusion y<sup>e</sup> is still in the world at this day, is that men take leaue continually to imagin whatsoeuer comes in their heads. O (say they) I trow God will lyke wel of this: & to my seeming, such a thing is good. Now if men behaue themselves so after their owne imagination, all things must needs be out of order. Ye see it is euen a very seagulle. Therefore let vs learne to giue care to God when hee speaks to vs, & let vs not take leaue to conceiue any thing of him, otherwise this is shewed vs by his worde. This then is the first point, that we should learne to discern our God from all the Idols which the world forgeth to it selfe: & therewithall y<sup>e</sup> we should not attempt any thing, but that which he alloweth. For y Papistes can well enough protest, y their intent is to serue y God y made both heauen & earth; & so also doe the Iewes & Turkes: y case is common to them all. But yet for al y, ye see how y Turks haue wounded themselves into a maze of superstitions, through y deceitfulness of their Mahomet who hath bewitched them. Again y Iewes on their parte are grown out of kinde, & haue mingled y Lawe w their owne inuentions, refusing y redeemer that had bin promised them, who is the very foundation of all y religio which they should haue held. And as for y Papists, y world sees how they haue corrupted all trueth, & turned it vterly into lying. Therefore let vs learne, y if we will not worship straunge Gods, we must so holde our selues in awe, as we attempt not any thing, vnlesse we be sure y it is according to Gods will. For whensoever we fal to worshipping him aiter our owne detence, we doe set vp an idoll in our owne braine: & that is a thing which he vterly mislyketh, reiecteth, and abhorreth. Thus ye see y the thing which we haue to remember vpon this place is, y seeing God hath graunted vs y grace to haue his word to be our guide, we ought to be y more watchfull: & sith we be so weak as we neede not any thing to thrust vs out of the way, we ought to take so much y moore heede, y we may profit daily by his word. And besides y, let vs assure our selues throughly, that it is not enough for vs to weene we doe well: for we win nothing by being deceived, our case is neuer a whit amended by it before God: & therefore let vs learn to pray him to inlighten vs. And therewithall let vs knowe, y whē God hath shewed vs his wil, we must hold vs to it without adding aught thereto. Thus ye see in effect what we haue to remēber vpon this text of Moseses.

Now he addeth immediately, that men should lay up the things in their heaues which he telleth shē, 40 & that they should make a continuall monument of them: as if it were of bracelets about their wifes, or of attyres on their heades, or of denices in writing at the entrance of their doores: to the intent they might occasion them to thinke vpon the lawe of God, so as at their rising in the morning, & at their going to bed at night, men should talke & conferre of it, that their children might learne thereby. Hereby Moses sheweth yet better, y vnlesse men be held as it were by force, they will soone start away frō God: Lyke as whē a man thinks he hath made a Foxe tame, if he let him alone but one halfe day, he returnes againe to his kinde by and by. Euen so is it with vs. We be so wilde, y although it may seeme for a time that we be thoroughly brought home vnto God, & very well reformed: yet in y turning of a hand all is quite forgotten. And therefore our Lord is faine to put vs in remēbrance, (as hee doth in this text) & to quicken vs vp to inforce our selues to seeke al the means and helps y may be, to hold our selues in awe vnder his obediēce. That is the cause why he saith, y folke should make thē frontlets as ornaments of their heades. Whereas men doe commonly wear brooches, buttons, & such other things, & women wear billiments of gold and other costly attyres vpon their heades: the attire of the faithful must be to haue some remembrance of Gods law. In stead of bracelets & other fine toyes to apparell & deck our selues w, we must vse such an attyre as may teach vs to garnish our soules, yea & to giue our selues wholly to God, & to submit our selues altogether to his word. In stead of the hauing of gay things to furnish our houses withal for delight, we must haue some such thing as may put vs in minde to say, These are the things that our God calleth vs vnto, he will neuer haue vs to forget him. And if we haue ouerthor our selues, so as our minds do wander abroad, he calleth vs home againe, & telleth vs y we must not range so after our own vaine fantasies. Thus we see y summe of that which is contained here. We haue had the like saying in the sixth Chapter. But yet this sheweth vs more expressly, that it is not enough for vs to haue withdrawn our selues for once frō our vaine and wandering imaginations: but God must bee faine to bring vs to that point againe, by putting vs in minde of our sloth and negligence, or else we shall dwell in it continually, and he must be faine also to shewe vs the weaknesse & feeblenesse of our spirites. And in deede, very experience shewes it: for the whisking of a flye before our eyes, is enough to make vs run after it, & to do what we can to stopher. Wee builde castles in y aire, & by and by al vanisheth away. 50 Now then seeing there are so many vanities in our braine, do we wonder y we doe very quickly start away from God? What a number of occasions are there in this world, to turne vs this way & that way, so as we shal be led & caried quite away ere euer we thinke on it? Again, Satan is such a futtle Sire, that if we be not well armed aginst him, we shal neuer continue in y obeying of our God. This repetition therefore is not superfluous, where God telleth vs again, y it is good for vs to haue his law written euerwhere, so as we might reade his cōmandemens vpon our fingers. And he hath disposed them into ten sentences, to the end they should be y better knowne vnto vs. For looke how many fingers there are vpon our hāds, so many are y commandemens of God, to y intent they should be y easier to beare in remēbrance: so as there needeth no log registers, (which were hard to carie away,) forasmuch as he hath giuen vs so short a rule, y if we be long in learning of it, we proue our selues to be wilful. To be short, if we shut not our eyes wilfully, we cānot say but y we may soon haue lerned y things which our god sheweth vs. Againe sith it is his wil y in stead of y deckings wherunto both nien & women are too much giuen through fond desire of vainglorie, we should haue wherewith to put our selues in mind of his lawe, y we might be held in awe by it: what excuse wil there be for vs, if we fal to going astray, or if we be wedded to this world, or giue 60 our selues to wickednesse? Thus much concerning this text.

But according to y fashion of y world, which is alwaies giuen to hypocricie, & to shamefull mocking at al Gods ordinances, y Iewes made them frontlets of certain sentences of Gods law, and they obserued the law very well as in respect of ſ words ſ are let down here. For they had bracelets of them, & rolles, & attires on their heads, ſo as it might ſeeme ſ there was nothing but holi-neſſe in them. Alſo they had the commaundmentes written in their houſes. All this (ſay I) was well done. But they ſurmized that they ſerued God by theſe outward ſhewes; and that was nothing ſo. We alſo for our part ſhould come to the ſame point lykewiſe, if we conſidered not what the will of our God is, ro ſubmit our ſclues thereto. For as I ſaid afore) hypocriſie is ſo rooted in mans nature, that they would alwayes be dalying with God, & content him with counterfeirings, ſo as there might be nothing but diſſi-mulation; & yet for all that, they beare theſe ſclues in hand, ſ he ought to hold theſe diſcharged. But we muſt marke that God will not bee ſerued by the writing of ſome ſentence of his Lawe vpon a poſt or a doore, or at the entrie of a houſe; his reacion is nothing ſo. But what? Forasmuch as he ſeeth that we be ſhort wited, & that although we haue bin taught his word duely, yet we bee eaſily turned away fro it; it is not without cauſe ſ he will haue vs to ſecke all the helpes that can be, ſ we may haue the better ſtay of our ſclues, & learne the remedies of our frailetie, ſith we need none other thing to turne vs out of ſ way.

 And ſith we know ſ vice to be in vs; let vs bee the diligenter in ſeeking God, & let vs ſay: How is it poſſible ſ I ſhould hold my ſelfe in ſ feare of my God? If I ſhould paſſe but one day wout thinking vpon him & vpon his cōmaundements: I ſhould forget him by & by. What is to be done then? As ſoone as I riſe in the morning, the diuell offereth me ſ many lettes. Now it ſtandeth me in hand to reſiſt him, & that I tary not till mine enemy giue me ſ aſſault: but I muſt think vpon my God who calleth me to him. Againe at night when I goe to bed, forasmuch as a nighttimes the diuell ceaſeth not to put many fond ſancies in my head, and a man is not able to reſtreine his own minde from conceiuing ſome vaine thoughtes or other: it behouth me to be ſtil ſeneed by being mindful of my God, & by referring my ſelfe vnto him & by reſiſting wholly there. For if I tary long, I ſhall be ſo withdrawn from him, ſ I ſhall not finde the way thither againe, lyke as when a man taketh no heed, but runs galloping on wout minding of his way whether he be right or no; ſ longer he traucleth, the further he is from his way; yea & if there be ſolke to ſer him in the way, & he regardeth not to take the right way againe, then is hee well worthie to wander ſtill out of his way. If one ſay to him, Sir, you muſt take on that hande, and yet he will needes goe the contrary way, as though his wits were rouing in the aire, & ſo goeth on ſtill in the ende hee ſhall find himſelfe ſarre off from the right way. And therefore let vs beware that we be not ſo headſtrong in our vanities, as not to inducour to amend our ſclues. For (as I ſaid afore) we may eaſily wander out of ſ way euery minue of houres, ſo as we need not any thing to make vs ſtray fro ſ right way.
 But it wee bee out of it, let vs ſecke to come in againe by & by & to be reformed. For our God is not ſar fro vs, he promiſeth by his Prophet Eſay, that he wil be at our backs, as a ſcholemaſter is at the back of a yong ſcholar. And like as ſ mother ſ hath her eye alwayes vpon ſ childe ſ the bringeth vp, wil alwayes be at hand by it: ſo God ſheweth by a familiar example, ſ he wil be at our elbowe, ſ ſo be that wee ſecke him & ſuffer him to reforme vs. And therefore let vs learne to exer-ciſe our ſclues in ſ ſtudie all the time of our life.

 And ſpecially ſith we ſee there is ſo vrgent needſitie, let euery of vs quicken vp himſelfe, & let vs not tarie til ſ diuel haue caried vs ſo farre aſtray, ſ we can no more return into ſ way; but as ſoone as we ſet but one ſtep awry, or ſwarue neuer ſo little aſide, let vs bethink our ſclues againe by & by.
 Nay let vs not tarie ſo long; but let vs be aforehand, & let vs call ſo much ſ more earnestly vpon our God to guide vs, & to preuent vs with his goodneſſe. Let vs follow his word, which is ſ true ſhooteanker, & the very lampe to giue vs light.
 Let vs open our eyes to behold the light that he ſheweth vs, & let vs often call to minde ſ things which we haue learned. Let euery of vs marke to what vice he is inclined, ſ he may ſeek the remedie of it, as ſome be giuen to one affection & ſome to another. And ſo when we once know our owne diſeaſes, let vs apply the ſe medicines vnto them. In Gods word we ſhall finde ynow of them wherewith to heale & cure vs, ſo we be willing to vſe the good ſ is offered vs there. Thus ye ſee in effect how we ought to praſtiſe this text. It con-ſiſteth not in the doing of a fort of Ceremonies, nor in pretending faire countenances, by wearing texts of Gods law vpon our apparrell, or by writing vp of a number of goodly ſentences without any other minding of them at al; al ſ is nothing. What then? We muſt ſeek the meanes to confirme our ſclues in ſ feare of our God, and to recouer againe into the right way; & becauſe we bee ſo weak, wee muſt receiue ſuch remedies as God appointeth vs.

About al things we muſt obſerue that which is ſaid here; Lay vp the commaundements which I ſet before thee, in thy heart and in thy ſoule. To the intent then ſ men ſhould not ſtand poring vpon ſ outward faſhion & figure; that is the chiefe poynt.
 The marke (ſay I) wher at hee ſhootes, and whereunto all this doctrine is to bee referred, is that Gods lawe ſhould be in our hearts and in our ſoules. For though wee haue it euer before our eyes, & at our tongues end, ſo as wee ſeeme to ſer neuer ſo great ſtore by it, and yet in the meane while our heart is locked vp, & wee haue no courage to ſerue God: truly we doe but de-ceiue men, & procure our ſclues the ſorer condemnation before God. Now then let vs haue Gods law written, let vs haue the ſayings of it painted vpon our walles as in tables, & let vs haue thinges to put vs in minde of it eaſly & late; but let not ſ ſerue for our diſcharge, as though God were to be payed in ſuch coyne. How then? Let vs induer to haue it ſo grauen in our hearts, as it may neuer be wiped out againe, yea euen in our hartes & in our ſoules, ſ is to ſay, in ſuch ſort as it may poſſeſſe al our affectiōs. For that is ſ place where Gods word is to bee kept. But what? The thing ſ S. Iames ſpeaketh of, is ſeene more now-adayes than euer it was; namely that they which come to heare Gods word, take as much profite by it, as by looking vpon themselves in a glasse: they be no sooner gone, but all is forgotten. What fareth a man the better by his seeing of himselfe in a glasse? As soone as he turneth away his face, his shape vanissheth away. Euen so is it with vs. Whereas our comming to Gods word, should be to be transformed into y<sup>e</sup> lyknesse of God, (as S. Paul teacheth vs in the second to y<sup>e</sup> 10 Corinthians,) & whereas it is the power & proprietie of y<sup>e</sup> Gospel, to transforme vs into the glory of God, by beholding him in the person of Iesus Christ: we come to it but to make a pastime of it, so as anon all slipperth away againe, & there remaineth no substance nor power of it with vs. And by that meanes the precious seede of the Gospell perissheth. For it lighth amōg stones, so as it can take no roote. A man may loofe a good deale of corne, if he cast it vpon the drye 20 ground, or in a footepath, or vpon stones: for the byrdes will picke it vp by and by. Euen so let vs not maruel though Gods word enter not into vs, for whereas our hartes ought to be tilled as when a plough hath eared a peece of land: they lye still vnopened & vnbroken vp at all. By reason whereof, Gods word may wel be giuen vs as a feede, but it shall doe vs no good, the diuell will catche it away by and by, because it sinketh not into our hartes & our soules. That is the cause 30 why I sayd y<sup>e</sup> alij Moses hath spoken of frontlets, of bracelets, & of writings set vp in mens houses, must be referred altogether to this, y<sup>e</sup> we shall fare neuerawhij better for y<sup>e</sup> vttering of y<sup>e</sup> Lawe vnto vs, nor vnderstand any thing at all by it, vnlesse it haue taken roote in vs, & that wee haue receiued it with hartie affection to giue our selues vnto God.

And yet is not all y<sup>e</sup> wee haue to doe, neither doth God thinke it enough y<sup>e</sup> euery man should 40
indeuer to profite himselfe by it: but he will also haue the fathers to teach their children. Wherein he sheweth y<sup>e</sup> (as I haue sayd afore) it is not enough for vs to serue our God during our owne luges; but we must also prouide y<sup>e</sup> the seede of religion may remaine after our decease. For we be transitorie, & our lyfe is but a shadow: & therefore inasmuch as Gods truth is immortal, it is good reason y<sup>e</sup> it should continue for euer, & that it should be preferred frō hand to hand, & that 50 men should put their indeuor thereunto. And specially whē God hath giuē them childrē, it becometh them to know y<sup>e</sup> it is a treasure, and that they must yeeld an account thereof. For it is no small honor y<sup>e</sup> God doth to men & women, when he giueth them children. They be creatures fashioned after y<sup>e</sup> image of God, & we terme them y<sup>e</sup> seede of y<sup>e</sup> Church. Now then seeing that God committeth thē to our charges: it is good reason y<sup>e</sup> we should indeuor to bring thē vp in such wise 60 as God may be seruēd by them, y<sup>e</sup> when religion shall haue continued her course all our lyfe long, it may also hold out and continue still euen after our death. But here we see our owne negligence, or rather our leawdnesse. For wee be not onely slothfull; but we see how the most part of vs doe shun & eschew (as much as we can) to be trained in Gods worde. If men bee spoken to of it, it is a corsie to them, & if they perceiue y<sup>e</sup> there shall be talke of any good doctrine, they haue no regard to come there. It is well scene y<sup>e</sup> a number are worse than y<sup>e</sup> Turkes, & are so bewitched wth their owne fond opinions, y<sup>e</sup> as soone as y<sup>e</sup> bell tolleth to call & prouoke vs to come daily to y<sup>e</sup> hearing of Gods worde, they goe another way. And for 10 proofe thereof, what a number are there which wth drawe thēselues from it as much as they can? Yea & when they come, they stoppe their eares wilfully, because they bee occupied about their wicked affections, and the diuell hath so befoted them, as they finde not any fauor at all in any word that is spoken vnto thē, but are weary of it as soone as there is any matter spoken concerning God.

As for y<sup>e</sup> bringing vp of children, y<sup>e</sup> world sees what it is. Fathers are loth to haue their childrē better than thēselues, for feare least they should put them to shame. Forasmuch as they themselves haue despised God all y<sup>e</sup> time of their lyfe; they be contented y<sup>e</sup> their children shall despise him full as much or dubble: & if they happen to haue any regard of y<sup>e</sup> doctrine, it is but for fashions sake, & by way of constraint. But wee bee so taught these things in this text, y<sup>e</sup> it shall cost vs full care to haue bin so warned by God, if we regard not the things y<sup>e</sup> he hath tolde vs. There- 30 fore let vs bee alwayes careful to beare Gods word in minde, assuring our selues y<sup>e</sup> although we haue profited neuer so wel; yet are we but in the way, & we must goe on still; so as the once knowing of things is not enough for vs, but we must be faine to be put in remembrance of thē continually, & to be stirred vp by God; or else wee shall start away by and by. Now then let vs thinke vpon it, & let euery of vs haue an eye to y<sup>e</sup> charge 40 y<sup>e</sup> is committed vnto him. Let such as haue children bring them vp in the feare of God, & let y<sup>e</sup> be their chiefe care; for it is the best inheritance y<sup>e</sup> they can leaue them. For otherwise, although they leaue them neuer so riche, & set them at neuer so good a stay; al must needs goe to ruine. For God will curse all, if it bee not grounded vpon the pure religion. For whereas our Lorde speaketh of going to bed, and rising vp, of rest and labor: it is not for nought. For he sheweth vs that wee haue neede of all the helpes 50 that can bee, to put vs in minde of his lawe. And therefore sith we see that by all manner of meanes we be turned away frō the remembering of God, if the helps that are shewed vs here bee not set still before vs: these occasions ought to quicken vs and stirre vs vp thereunto.

First of al then, whereas it is saide; when ye goe to bed at night, and when ye rise a morning: it sheweth vs that wee may well take our rest, and thinke vpon all our bodily needs, so as a man may wel seeke his ease when hee is weary of tra- 60 uelling & of following his busines alday long; but if we be so careful to seeke the rest of our bodies: is it not said also y<sup>e</sup> the rest of our soules is to beare y<sup>e</sup> voice of god: If a man say, I haue no leasure: hast thou no leasure to rise in the morning? Againe, when when thou comest to the table to take thy repast, hast thou not time ynough to edifie thy selfe in the feare of God? Moreouer, when thou art about thy businesse all the day, or when thou art going a journey; must God needs be forgotten all the while? No; but yet doe men alwayes finde letters to keep them from coming vnto God. Indeede we may easily finde trifling excuses to content men withall: but when God saith vnto vs, Go to, what haue you to doe all your life long? are yee so fore troubled that yee cannot spare a little time to exercise your selues in my worde? I giue you time ynough to followe your owne businesse: and yet so as yee may bestowe some time in the studie of my doctrine: but you thinke not vpon it: Nay rather you take occasion to turne away from it at euery small let that can happen. And by that meanes you bee hardened in all euill, so as a man cannot reclaime yee, but ye become worse than wilde beasts. Thus yee see of what contempt and vngodlines we be constituted, when we benefit not our selues by Gods doctrine, when in we ought to keepe our selues occupied at all times.

Furthermore whereas he speaketh of raalking of it; it is a rebuking of the wicked corruption y<sup>e</sup> is among men, who neuer make an ende of their too h talk: but when they should speake of god, the matter must be cut off by & by by the waite, and they thinke it to be but matter of griefe. Yea and they be not contented to vse fond and foolish talke; but they do also vse ribaldrie & leawd talke, such as tendeth to the poysoning one of another. And therefore it is good reason, that God should tel vs that the things which wee haue heard to day, had neede to be brought oftentimes to our remembrance: and that God had neede to quicken vs vp, so as wee may be made to be thimk our selues; And that forasmuch as we be pulled backe with such sloth, and we see 40 our selues are carried away with so great and vrgent necessitie, that our mindes are giuen altogether to euill; inso much that whensoever God allureth them to good, by and by they shrinke away vnto euill: we perceiuing the same, should take the helpe y<sup>e</sup> God setteth down for vs, in telling vs that we must thinke vpon his lawe both at our vprising a mornings, and at our going to bed a nights, & that we must talk of them all the day long. Let vs assure our selues it is not without cause that God spake so to his owne people; but that it is a generall lesson for all men in all ages, and hee speaketh not onely to the rude and vnskilfull, that they should take those helpe to refresh their remembrance: but he saith All of you, doe it euerie one of you. Hee speaketh to those that weene themselves wisest. And therefore let no man thinke himselfe excepted here. Let such as haue the charge of teaching others, vnderstande that this is not spoken onely to the rude and ignorant; but also to the intent that euen they then selues should learne to rouse vp themselves, and y<sup>e</sup> all of vs together should shew our selues so desirous to profite in Gods worde; as we may seeke to be put continually in mind of it. And let vs assure our selues, that it is the chiefe thing wherein we ought to occupie our selues, so long as we be in this world.

And now let vs cast our selues downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgment of our faulces, praying him to bring vs to such repentance; y<sup>e</sup> being ashamed of our selues, our only seeking may be to win his fauor by fleeing to his mercy, and that we may attaine theereunto by meanes of our lord Iesus Christ, praying him not onely to forgieue our offences past, but also to correct them after such sort in vs, as our whole seeking may be to obey him. And that in y<sup>e</sup> meane while it may please him to guide vs by his holy spirit, vntill hee haue brought vs to the full fruition of the glorie whereunto we be nowe going. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and Nations of the earth &c.

22 For if ye do earnestly keepe all the commandements which I command you to doe, and that you loue the Lord your God and walke in all his wayes and sticke vnto him :

23 Then the Lorde will driue out all these Nations before you, and yee shall possesse Nations that are greater and stronger than your selues .

24 Whatsoeuer place the sole of your foote treadeth on, it shalbe yours . Your bounds shalbe from the wildernes and from Libanus, and from the Riuer, euen the riuer of Euphrates, vnto the vttermost sea.

25 No man shall be able to stand against you . The Lorde your God will cast the feare and dread of you vpon the face of all the Land whereunto you go, as hee hath said vnto you,

VE haue seene what promise Moses made to the Israelites: namely y<sup>e</sup> they shold possesse y<sup>e</sup> land which was giuen them to inherite. Howbeit forasmuch as their enemies might bee a stop in their way, and it might well seeme that God was not yet fully minded to performe that which he had said: he addeth further, that that let also should be taken away. As howe? Euen by this, that God would cast a terror vpon all the nations whom he had erst condemned, so as none of them should bee able to withstande the people that was so guided by his owne hands. That is the effect of Moses meaning in this place. And it is as much as if he had said vnto vs, Whē God hath once warranted vs a thing, although all the lets in the world shoulde incounter vs, yet ought we not to doubt of ains promise. For why? The things that may seeme vnpossible to men, are altogether in his power, because no creature is able to resist him. And therefore when we be abashed at the sight of the impediments that come before our eyes: wee must fall to the considering of the mightinesse of our God, which is able to ouercome all things. So then let vs marke well, that wee must fully conclude with our selues, that God is able to performe whatsoever hee hath vttered with his mouth: insomuch that although all accessses bee (in our iudgement) foreclosed vnto him; yet will hee wade through them all by his power. And therefore let vs not measure the effect of Gods promises, by our owne eyesight, nor by the conceite of our owne naturall vnderstanding: but let vs assure our selues that hee hath victorie alwayes in his hande, howe much so euer the worlde set it selfe against him, and strue to stop the performance of that which hee hath spoken.

Herewithall, it standeth vs in hand to applie this thing chiefly to our owne sttenthening: and forasmuch as we see the diuel euer ready to hinder our welfare, yea and to disappoint it vtterly: let vs haue this saying continually printed in our remembrance, that God which hath receiued vs into his fauour, and promised to leade vs into the heritage of the kingdome of heauen, is the God of holts and of victorie, and that although all the furniture of hel do set it selfe against him, it is all noughtwoorth, but shall be turned into smoke: insomuch that although wee bee driuen to abide neuer so many assaules in this worlde, and that the diuell neuer cease to practise one thing or other against vs: yet are we sure that god will welynough worke fuch deuses, as wee shall neuer be ouercome, so hee be on our side, as hee hath assured vs, so that wee keepe our selues vnder his protection. And this is to be vnderstood, not onely of Satan himselfe, but also of all his vp-holders. For the diuell vseth all the meanes that can bee: he hath all the wicked at his becke; hee ruleth them and driueth them to all euill. Forasmuch therefore as they be led by the wicked spirite; they vex and trouble vs as much as they cā. But we haue God on our side to fight for vs, and we shall be defended by his power. Wherefore let vs not feare but that hee will alwayes giue vs the victory, though we bee faine to indure much paine and trouble: for it cannot bee but that in such incouters, there must euer needs be some terrour, because we see that the wicked are alwayes as whor as fire to annoy the children of God, and that as soone as they bee able to stirre but one finger, by and by they begin a new skirmish. Therefore must we beate it patiently, when soeuer it pleaseth God to exercise vs after y<sup>e</sup> fashion. And we must waite for the end which Moses promiseth here to the faithful; which is, that they shal alwayes haue victorie of their enemies. And so we see to what end this doctrine is to be applied.

Now remaineth to be noted also, that wher-as God promiseth such things, hee hath mens hats in his hand: for he addeth the mean, which is, that hee will cast our dead and our feare vpon all our enemies. As if hee should say, hee will print his mark vpon vs, so as the wicked (be they neuer so full of rancor, and be they caried with neuer so great fury and rage) shall be abashed, dismayed, & vtterly at their wits end. As to the worldwarde, they may well seeme to haue the heartes of Lyons: but God will make them to melt away like water, so as men shall see with their eyes, that there is not so much as one drop of corage in any man, but so farre forth as God giueth it them. And as for vs, although we bee afraide, and haue not so stout a courage by nature: yet wil God change vs, & giue vs inuincible constancy, so as although we had hin men of warre, and very valiant; yet should our manlineffe bee nothing like to y<sup>e</sup> which he will make vs to feele in our selues, so we goe not presumptuously to worke, but rest vpon him, seeking to be vphelde by his hand and fauor. The matter therefore which wee haue to mark vpon that place, is, first that whereas our life is as a warfare, yet must wee not bee afraide, because god hath promised to fight for vs. Yea, but we haue to do with an ouermightie enemy: and it is not one diuell alone that wee haue to withstand, but infinite legions of diuels. What cā we do then, seeing wee be so fraile, and are tempted so on all sides, & (to be short) our safetie is set as it were to the spoile? For what haue we to defende our selues withall? But we must haue an eye to our god, I haue told you heretofore, that it is not without cause that he intiteth himselfe to be the Gods of Hosts. It serueth to shew that he will defende vs in such sort, as our enemies shall be disappointed. Although they aduance themselues with neuer so raging violence, & that we be scatered at their first alarms, yet shal we alwayes get the vpper hand, by the helpe of him which hath all power in his hand. And indeede we knowe that God hath his Angels, whom hee hath ordeined for our safeguard. Hee thinks it not ynough to reach out his arme to helpe vs, but hee hath also vttered forth all his blessings, to fence vs with them on all sides. Therefore let vs trust to it, and let vs walke on boldly through all the troubles that are prepared for vs, not doubting but that we shall ouercome them, hauing such a guide as is spoken of in this text.

Again, let vs also apply these things euen to the necessities of this present life. Indee the chiefe point is, that god should succour vs to the intent we may finish the course of this present life. But yet must we be faine to be aided by him euerie minute of an houre, fo as hee leade vs through the great number of euill wayes which we haue to passe, and preserue vs from all daungers. So then we must be fully resolued of this,  $\bar{y}$  God will not onely giue vs victorie in the ende, thereby to bring vs to the kingdome of heauen; but also will helpe vs continually in this worlde, fo as we shal wade out of al the troubles and perplexities wherin we be; in somuch that eue when we seeme to be vicerly ouerwhelmed, he needeth no more but to reach vs his hand, and by  $\&$  by wee shalbe afloate againe. Moreouer let vs assure our selues, that seeing God hath promised vs such victory against Satan and our Ghostly enemies: men also shall not bee able to preuaile, when they set themselves against vs; but although the whole world be bent against vs and at deadly foode with vs; yet ought it to suffice vs, that God is fauorable to vs. For inasmuch as he hath promised that al their practises which they attempt shalbe to no purpose, and that he wil turne them vsid downe: we may wel be quiet, and tary his leasure still with patience; and although we be abashed for a time, and perceiue not that God intendeth to worke according to his sayings: yet let vs stand stedfast in his doctrine, vntil he haue shewed vs the effect of his truth. That is the way for vs to despise and desie al the wicked  $\bar{y}$  seeke nothing else but to destroy vs. They be like a sort of madde dogges, and when they cannot bite they wil barke. They haue their throats alwayes open, and their teeth alwayes sharpened,  $\&$  their pawes are alwayes in a readines, fo as whensoever God letteth them loose, they be crueller thā Lyons or any other beasts. Let vs sticke alwayes to this that our Lord hath taken vs into his protection, and that when the wicked haue done what they can, in  $\bar{y}$  ende they shalbe ouerthrowen and all their attempts shall come to no purpose or effect: That is the thing which wee haue to remember here. Notwithstanding, forasmuch as it cannot but bee a trouble and vexation of minde vnto vs at all times, to see what power our enemies are of, and to see howe spitefull they shew themselves against vs; let vs haue recourse to that which is said here, namely that God hath mens hearts in his hande. And therefore be the pride of men neuer so great, and their stoutnesse sitch as were able to make the aire and the world to tremble: yet let vs assure our selues that our Lord will turne it into feare and cowardlynes, fo as the parties that would neede be so feared of others, shall in the ende haue lesse courage than women and children. For why? it is God that giueth men courage and constancie: and it is he that bereaueeth them of it again whē he listeth. Now then if we be fully perswaded and resolued  $\bar{y}$  our Lord bridleth mens hearts: we wil not doubt but that he will alwayes giue vs victorie against our enemies; and it is the point which the scripture standeth expressly vpon. And to the intent wee may know that men haue no one spark of pro-wesse or manhood in them, furtherfooth than god giueth it them, Salomon saith expressly, that the hearts of kings are in the hand of God. It should seeme that though all the rest of mankind be in subiection and bridled; yet kings be exempted from the common array: for no man dares once open his lippes against them:  $\&$  when they haue once spoken  $\bar{y}$  word, by and by it must be put in execution. It should seeme therefore that they haue a prerogatiue about al  $\bar{y}$  world beside.

 Yea, but like as God maketh  $\bar{y}$  riuers to run here and there, and turneth their streames which way he listeth: so also doth he hold  $\bar{y}$  hearts of kings in his hand saith Salomon. And what shall then become of  $\bar{y}$  little Goslings when they perke vp, $\&$  haue no power nor strength at al: Shall we be dismayed at their threatenings? The thing then wherin we must trust, is our yceling of  $\bar{y}$  honor to God which he requireth at our hands, to wit, $\bar{y}$  it belongeth to him to giue men corage when they be fearefull,  $\&$  to daunt the corages of such as are as lustie as if they had the thunder  $\&$  lightening at their commandement: for God will fo cut their combes, as they shal not know where to become, but be vterly dismayed, so that in stead of  $\bar{y}$  stoutnesse which they had shewed before; there shalbe nothing in them but weaknesse and fearefulness. After that manner must  $\bar{y}$  fairfull assure themselves. For otherwise what will become of vs? In what taking are we? As I said afore, we be hemmed in on al sides by Satan  $\&$  his ynderlings. There is not  $\bar{y}$  minute of an houre, wherin we haue not somewhat to be afraid of: a thousand dangers beset vs round about:  $\&$  therefore what will become of vs, if wee be not fo fullyperswaded of this doctrine, as to make it to serue vs for dyches  $\&$  rampyres, to hold out al  $\bar{y}$  assalts that our enemies make vpon vs? And fo, foras-much as our life is full of vniquietnesse,  $\&$  we be threatened with many sortes of death, fo as wee cannot stepfoorth one foote but wee shall meete with some mischance or other, specially considering the means which the diuell hath to annoy vs withal,  $\&$  the indeuer which he putteth ther-unto;  $\&$  also considering  $\bar{y}$  multitude of  $\bar{y}$  wicked, whom hee driueth forward  $\&$  carrieth headlong: let vs put this lesse in vre,  $\bar{y}$  the god of hostis who hath  $\bar{y}$  victorie in his own hand, is on our side  $\&$ wil defend vs, fo as we shal not be ouercome, but be preferred  $\&$  defended by his power. Haue we this once well printed in our hearts, we may go on boldly: and though we see men neuer so full of pride that they spew it out again, and fo spitefull that they coule finde in their hearts to eate vs vp at one bit; let vs not passe for that; for God will strike them in such a feare, that they shalbe daunted and discouraged; and although wee haue neither sworde nor staffe, yet shall they be vanquished by themselves,  $\&$  not perceiue why nor how, but only by Gods secret working. Let vs looke vpon it,  $\&$  experience will shew vs that God ment not to beguile vs when he beighted it vs with his own mouth. But our own vnbelief $\&$  leawdnesse, suffer vs not to perceiue the thing by experience which is spokē here, We cā wel ynough make our complaints and say; howe happeneth it that God giueth such prowesse to our enemies; how happeneth it y<sup>e</sup> we be so cowardly and forlorne? We can aske such questions wel ynough. But we consider not the cause of them: & yet it is in our selues: & our enemies haue none other power, than we our selues giue them: and I say the fame of Satan, as well as of all his vnderlings, For whē we forsake our god it is good reason y<sup>e</sup> we should be disarmed of his help, and y<sup>e</sup> he should let vs alone like poore forlorne cauits looking on either side of vs, & not cpying any remedy to resist our enemies withal, because we be bereft of y<sup>e</sup> garde and inuincible fortresse y<sup>e</sup> God promised vs, according as it is spoken of, both in Exodus and in the Psalme, where it is said that y<sup>e</sup> people were disappointed of their strong holde, when they had once forsaken God. I pray you if we stand not in awe of God, is it not reason that he should make vs afraide, both of men & beasts,

1. Cor. 6. 20. yea and euen of a flic when it doth but flic by vs, as the scripture telleth vs: Beholde, our God offereth himselfe in his maiesty, requiring that we should do him homage, by humbling our selues vnto him, and by offering our selues both bodie & soule in sacrifice to him, y<sup>e</sup> he may possesse vs: & we despise him, making but a mocke at his holie word, so as he can not get any seruitee at our hāds, for we strue against him like wild beasts. Seeing y<sup>e</sup> this is apparant, is it not reason that he should chastise vs, by making vs to stand in feare of me? Yes: for what are we? Behold I am scared & made afraide, at the peering of a worme that doth but put vp his head at me. I neede not to seeke farre to knowe the cause thereof. Let me but consider whether I haue behaued my selfe well towards my God, in yeelding him obedience in al things. Nay contrariwise, I haue turned away fro<sup>m</sup> him, and mouerour I haue played the rebell, I haue leaped beyonde my bounds, and to bee short, I haue fought against him: and therefore I must not thinke it straunge, if I bee afraide of men, which are nothing. Verily God will yet more laugh our pride and ouerweening to scorn. For he will make vs to quake at the falling of a leafe from a tree. To be short, as Salomon sayes, we shall flic when noman followeth vs: euerie little noyse shall make vs to thinke that we be pursued with maine strokes. Verily it is a singular gite of God to haue quietnesse of conscience, so as we may be assured of his defence. And on the contrarie part, if we be not vnder his protection, wee shall be dismayed without any cause on mans behalfe, onely because we haue God aginst vs. And so the cause why our enemies doe so trouble vs as wee wote not where to become; is that we regard not our god. For is it reason that hee should bee our friende when we be not on his side? No: but he must rather set himselfe against vs. And that is y<sup>e</sup> cause why Moses both in other places, and especially in his long that is in the 32. Chapter, saith, How coulde it bee that a hundred of you should flic before one man, and that a thousand of you should be chafed by a hundred of your enemies, if it were not for that the Lorde hath forsaken you, and deliuered you as prisoners into your enemies handes? Consider then (saith hee) that when yee be afflicted by your enemies, it is for that your God hath appalled you. For you be not worthy that he should put his power into you, or vttir it in your behalf. And therefore whensoever we stand too much in feare of our enemies, & are so dismayed that we can hardly call vpon God, but be ouerwhelmed with distrust and vexation of minde: let vs vnderstande that God hath withdrawn himselfe from vs, and hath left vs destitute after y<sup>e</sup> fashion, because we be turned away from him, and haue shaken off his feare, and not stood in awe of him as wee ought to haue done, in respect whereof hee threateneth vs by men, & maketh vs to feele our owne wretchednesse, to the intent we should returne vnto him. Furthermore hee sheweth well by the sequelle, that his promise was not in vaine. What a prooffe was there thereof, at the entering of the people into the land of Chanaan? For they had such a multitude of enemies, as might haue made them all dismayed. But what for that? God himselfe fought for his people. And that did the poore harlot well perceiue, when shee said to the men that were come to spie out the land, I know that your God is the God of heauen and earth, which reigneth ouer all. And for prooffe thereof, I see y<sup>e</sup> al the inhabitants of these countries, are astonished at the only fame and report of you, whereas they be discouraged, that they be as good as vanquished already. Shee attributeth this indeed to y<sup>e</sup> wonderful working of God. Now seeing that this silly woman, hauing but a little tast of faith, did lay so sure hold vpon it: I pray you ought not we to behold y<sup>e</sup> strength much more openly, which our Lord promiseth vs here, which is, that he will cast a terrour and fearefulness vpon all those that are much stronger & mightier than we? It is said y<sup>e</sup> euen when God stretcheth his mark vpon kings & princes, y<sup>e</sup> brute beasts which haue no reason do stand in awe of them. And why is that? Because God worketh by a secrete meanes vnknown to vs. If our lord had not such power to inspire men with assuredly principalties & eniorities could not continue one minute of an houre. Now then seeing that God imprinteth such a marke, y<sup>e</sup> he maketh not only me but also beasts to stand in awe, & to be subiect to those to whom hee hath committed the sword of iustice: let vs note y<sup>e</sup> if we be his children, we shall also beare his image; inso much y<sup>e</sup> if we be vnder his tuition, wee shall be defed in despite of our enemies: yea & we shall be feared, so as wee shall perceiue by the effect, that it is long of none but our selues that we be not succored by him, and y<sup>e</sup> although our vntaithfulness do beat backe his hand, yet doth hee ouercome vs wth his infinite goodnes. For we see y<sup>e</sup> although the wicked haue the Law in their owne hand; yet notwithstanding they be so abashed & dismayed, y<sup>e</sup> they be quite and cleane wout heart. We must needes seee it, or else we be duller than blocks. For our Lorde hath wrought with such power, that though wee were blinde, yet we might grope it with our hands, namely that God hath daunted those that thought to haue cut the throtes of his children, euen when no man durst lift vp his little finger against them , inſomuch ſy when they thought themſelues to haue wonne ſy golt, then were they ſeen to be ſo ſtricken down & diſcouraged, & caſt into ſuch feare & perplexitie, and ſo at their wits end, as they wiſt not what to do nor where to become. Indeede they had ſy Law in their own hand (as I ſaid), they had practiſes and deuices ynow, and ſy world fees ſy they had neither vprightnes nor faithfullnes in them. 10

But yet howſoever they fared, they were diſcouraged, & were made to ſtand gaping & gafiing one vpon another, & could not tel what to do for feare. Hereby we ſee that our Lord not only held their hands tyed, but alſo bereft them of heart; ſo as he diſappointed them of wit & reaſon, by reaſon whereof they were ſo dulle, that there was leſſe ſkill in them than in little babes, yea or euen in beaſts. Ye ſee then how it is a goodly proote of ſy which is promiſed here: ſo as if we yeeld god his due honor, we ſhuld bee the more itayed vnder his protection, to walke on continually, yea & to keepe our ſelues from ſtepping out of the way.

Now let vs take good heed to ſy which I haue ſaid, namely ſy ſuch as do ſo goe aſſray & giue theſelues to naughtines, haue not ſy protectiõ which our Lord hath promiſed: for they goe wiſſully to caſt themſelues vp as it were to ſy ſpole. Therefore it is good reaſõ ſy God ſhould forſake them, & that they ſhould find themſelues to be taken vnprovidẽd. But if we walk in humility, & ſeeke to be always guided by ſy hand of our God: then let vs hardly put our truſt in him, and we ſhall euer be maintained. Although men gape vpon vs like Lyons with open mouth; & although we haue not wherewith to reſiſt them; yet will God be able ynow to beate them backe. Wee may be driuen to fight, but in ſy mids of the incounter we ſhall be ſuſtained as God hath promiſed vs, and ſy will be an inuincible fortres vnto vs. That is the thing 40 which we haue to remember vpon this place.

Yea and Moſes ſaith expreſly, People or Nations that are mightier and ſtronger than you, to the intent wee ſhoulde not make comparation with the things that are ſeene, to thinke that God wil not helpe vs except there be ſome naturall meanes, or ſome worldly enteraunce. No no, wee muſt not bee at that point: but wee muſt conſider that his power is infinite. Therefore wee doe him great wrong, when we reſtraine his power to ſy which 50 our ſelues can attaine vnto. Nay, when our enemies are too ſtrong and too mighty for vs, and when it ſeemeth that they be ready to tread vs vnder foote: euen then muſt wee perſwade our ſelues that God wil vter his power to ſuccor vs. And therefore let vs go on boldly, at leaſtwiſe to there bee no preſumption in vs, and that we bee not ſubborn againſt our God. For there are two things which are very requiſite for vs. The fiſt is that we giue ouer our ſelues wholly to the ſeruing and honoring of our God: & ſecondly that we put our truſt in him, and ſucke in his promiſes, not doubting but that he will giue things a good ende, though they ſeeme vtterly paſt all hope. Thus you ſee in effect what we haue to remember vpon this leſſon.

ſoener the people ſet their foote, they ſhall poſſeſſe the whole land, from the wüderner vnto Libanus, and from ſy great River Euphrates vnto the Sea. For thoſe were the bounds & borders which God had promiſed to his people, as appeareth in the perſon of Abraham. For the promiſe that is made here is no newe thing, but a raiſing or confirming of the ſame thing that God had ſpoken long afore. As if he ſhould ſay, nothing ſhall bar you from intoying ſy heritage ſy I haue aſſigned you: ſtick you to me, & I wil performe whatſoever I haue ſaid vnto you. True it is that if ye haue an eye to ſy great nũber of Nations which you haue to ouercome; ye may be ſo ſcared as to ſay, How ſhall we nowe do? Indeede wee be a great multitude of vs; but what are we in compariſon of our enemies, which are men exerciſed in feats of armes, & hougẽ me like gyants: as we haue ſeene already heretofore. Againe they be huddled alreade, they haue their townes well fortified, and when we ſhall haue taken a two or three hundred of their townes, yet is it nothing in reſpect of ſy reſt, but our enemies will be continually both before vs & behinde vs. Ye ſee then ſy theſe were things that might well haue made ſy people afraid. But it is ſaid vnto the; Although ſy land be neuer ſo large, although yee haue neuer ſo many cities to take, and although there be neuer ſo great a number of battels prepared for you; yet lettle you your ſelues vpon the promiſe of your God, for he can ſkilfully enough how to performe the thing that he hath ſpoken. Shut you your eyes againſt all likelyhoodes of things that may daunt your corages, and open your eyes to behold ſy incuntible power of your God, & doubt not but he will ſhew himſelf faithful. Now we ſee wher at Moſes aimed. But yet was not this thing accompliſhed to the ful, vntill the reigne of Dauid & Salomon. For although Iofua made partition of their portions, & God appointed him to ſy office; yet were ſy vncleuening people mixed it with ſy Iewes; and (which worſe is) wher as they ſhould haue rooted them out quite & cleane, & haue had poſſible poſſeſſion of the land: they payed tribute to their enemies, which held the in bondage like ſlaues; & ſleece ſy wool from their backs. They were vexed in ſuch ſort, 100 ſy they were as good as ſlaine quick, & they indured ſuch cruelty as was pity to ſee. It ſhall ſeeme therefore ſy God kept not touch w them. But here is an excellent goodly text, to open vnto vs the thing which I haue expounded afore, and which wil come to be ſpoken of againe. It is ſaid that God will giue his people the victory, conditionally that they keepe all the commandements which are intynged them. God tyeth it w a condition. Do whiſtsoever I command you (ſaith he,) & then ſhall you finde my power to be ſuch, as your enemies (do what they can) ſhall not be able to preuaile any whit againſt you. Nowe let vs ſee if ſy Iewes were able to performe all Gods commandements. Nay, they were vtterly diſobediẽt vnto the. And we alſo ceaſe not to take ſy clean contrary way to ſy which god teacheth vs & commandeth vs vntil he haue re- 100 ſo med vs by his holy ſpirit. Ye ſee then that the Iewes were diſobediẽt vnto god, & therfore were diſappointed of his promiſe. Yea, but yet for al ſy he ceaſed not to make place for his owne mercy ſtill!

still by meanes of their leawdnesse. For although their enemies pricked them like thornes; yet they held still the possession of the dwelling place that God had appointed them. True it is that it is said expressly, forasmuch as ye haue behaued your selues leawdly, and prouoked your God, by refusing to goe forwarde when he was readie to guide you: therefore shall you not ouercome your enemies, but they shall remaine still, and be as thornes in your sides, & as waspes to sting you, yea and they shall euen picke out your eyes, because yee haue not taken courage as ye ought to haue done, nor submitted your selues to God, to go forwarde at his commaundement. Lo what thinckings are made vnto this: & they perceiue them welly enough; and afterward they become subiect vnto them, insomuch y they were faine to beare charges & tributes euen til they groned againe. But our Lord hauing chastised them so many waies, did afterward thew vnto them, that he failed not to pity them still; for he raised them vp such men from time to time, as saued them fro their enemies. And so howsoever y world went with the, they still inioyed Gods gracious gifts, at leastwise in part: not that they were worthe of them, but because Gods wil was to be as good as his promise, so as me might not be disappointed of it through their own leawdnes & vnthankfulness. In the end, Dauid and Salomon obtained the promise, so as God by their hand did set the people in full & perfecte liberty, & their kingdome was perfectly established, because god had so promised. But wee must note, y Dauid and Salomon were a figure of our Lord Iesus Christ: and we be sure y it is long of none but our selues, that God theweth not himselfe bountifull & liberall to the vttermost. For if we obeyed him according to his commaundement, wee should want nothing, but we should euen in this earthly life feele his drawing of vs vnto euerlasting saluation. And forasmuch as he is y fountain of all goodnes, he would giue vs such abundance of all things, that wee should haue all things at wil; and we should passe through this world as through an earthly paradise, and afterward attaine to y kingdome of heauen y is prepared for vs. Lo howe God offereth himselfe vnto vs in his law: but yet with condition y we do whatsoeuer he commaundeth vs. But we be so far off from doing it, y we drag back from it, and there is not that thought nor that affection in vs, which is not enemye to God & his righteousness. By reason wherof, in steede of the inioying of his benefites which hee hath promised in his Lawe, he is faine to become our enemye, & to arme himselfe against vs, and to consume vs till we be vtterly come to nothing. Sometimes hee thundreth in such sort, y wee be ouerthrowen in y turning of a hand. And wherof commeth that? Euen so it must needs be: for (as I said afore) god theweth himselfe liberal towards vs & vttereth his great treasures toward vs. But what? Our hearts are shut & locked vp. And therefore must we needs be bereft of them, and feele the paine thereof, we must be so vexed as we may grone againe, & be in such anguish of mind, as we may not wote where to become. Yet notwithstanding, if we be his, he neuer faileth to mingle some sweetnes continually with the corrections y hee fendeth vs. True it is that hee beareth with the wicked, and with such as are vtter castaways: but yet in the end he is terrible to them, and dealeth not in such wise with them, as he doth with those whom he intendeth to referue to himselfe. Although that naturally all of vs be disobedient vnto him, yet ceaseth hee not to haue pittie vpon vs: and although wee feele fore blowes at his hand; yet doth hee shew vs therewithall y he is not minded to roote vs out vtterly. But surely we should continue still in our sins to the end, yea and rot away in them, were it not for his raising vp of the promised Dauid, that is to say, of our Lorde Iesus Christ. For by his meanes we recouer y which we had lost by our owne finnes, and so yee see how Iesus Christ setteth vs in possession of the heritage that was promised vs by the Lawe. Yet notwithstanding we should be disappointed of it, and it coulde not belong vnto vs, vnlesse y Iesus Christ had as wel made vs partakers of the benefites of God his father in his owne person, as redeemed vs in our owne persons. Nowe then, wee recouer all this in him, whereas erst we were quite & cleane bereft and cut off from the inioying thereof. Therefore let vs marke well, that whereas God made so many & so large promises to the Iewes in his law, vpon condition that they should keepe his commaundements: he ment to shew that the same rooke no place, vntill the kingdome was established in the person of Dauid. And therefore wee must not alledge as the beastly Papiests doe, who say: Tuff, God promiseth vs this and that, if we keepe his commaundements; therefore it followeth that wee winne Gods fauour by our owne desertes, and that wee purchase the kingdome of heauen, and are able to attaine saluation by our owne obedience; for God hath an eye to yeeld vnto euery man according to his desert. They shew full well, that they neuer vnderstoode one sillable of the holy scripture. And euen this text without going any further, is ynough to bewray their beastlines & ignorance. True it is that God promised his people that they should inioy y land which he had appointed vnto them: but y performance thereof was to be deferred to the reigne of Dauid. Wherupon let vs marke how it is our Lord Iesus Christ which maketh y promises of y Law auailable towards vs, so as we shall not be disappointed of y things y are concerned therein. And indeed, y is the very cause why y promise is made expressly to Dauid & Salomon, as it had bin made before to all y people. And this serueth well to make y doctrine yet plainer which I com to treat of. For there are two sorts of promises in y holy scripture. The one is; He y doth these things, shall liue in the. The other is, He y beleeueth in y son whom y father hath sent, shall be saued. Loe here two promises, betwene y which it behoueth vs wel to put a difference: for they be far vnlike. When God saith, He y doth these things: he bindeth not himselfe to vs but with an if; namely that wee discharge our selues by performing his Law; and that, not only in part, but throughout and perfectly. But no man is able to do that;

and therefore yee see wee be flut out from all hope, and we cannot looke  $\bar{y}$  the promise should be of force any more towards vs, because of our default. For God continueth alwayes faithful, but wee suffer not his goodnes to come into vs. Now when he seeth vs so bereft of all his benefites; he findeth another new remedie for vs, which is this: Lo here any sonne who is vniuersal heire both of heauen and earth; hee holdeth all the worlde in subiection, hee hath the whole fullnesse of the Godhead inclosed in him, my image shyneth most perfectly in him: which is shewed forth in his Gospell: and therefore they that are members of his bodie, are made partakers of all the benefites which hee hath in him. That is the way for the promises to haue their effect and force in vs, and not to looke simply to the doctrine of the lawe. For when God sayd, I will giue you the lande: to whome spake he? To all the people. But yet with condition, if yee keepe my commandments. And that was made void. As howe? Because the people were disobedient, and kept not covenant with God. And so yee see that the whole coucnant was broken, so as God was set free againe, and no longer bounde vnto them, because it was tyed to a condition. What doeth he then? He sends vs a king to whome he sayeth, I will giue thee the lande for thine inheritance. Hee vseth the selfe same wordes that are set downe here by Moses. I will giue thee the lande (saith hee) for thine inheritance, from the wildernesse vnto mount Libanus, & from the riuier Euphrates to  $\bar{y}$  great sea. And to whome doth God giue it? To Dauid & Salomon. True it is that he had giuen the same land afore to all the people, but the people were banished from it through their own fault. And was it then but for one onely person? was it the worthines of Dauid or Salomon that made God willing to giue them the thing which hee had promised to all the offspring of Abraham? No: but it was because they were a figure of our Lorde Iesus Christ. And in verie deede when the Prophets intended to assure the people of the quiet state that was promised to the, and of the inioying of the land: they saide, I will raise you vp a Dauid. Now then, Gods offering to lay foorth his riches to all men without exceptio in his law, to maintaine them withall in this present life, as if he should say, whatsoeuer I haue promised to giue to the fathers of olde tyme, belongeth to you also, at leastwise if ye obey my law thoroughly in all points, & not by pieces & starts. But wee be so farr vnable to discharge our felues of that duetie, that we fall to despising of God, so as hee is faine to shewe himselfe an enemy vnto vs. That is al that we be able to win by our keeping of the lawe, if we wil needes stick simply to it as I sayd afore. Neuerthelesse there is this other remedie for it. Whē our Lord Iesus Christ cometh forth & reacheth vs his hande to pull vs to him; then we find that he is not without cause termed the vniuersal heire of all the goods which God his father hath. And his possessing of them is not for himselfe: for he is one selfesame essence w God the father, hee hath bin the God of glory at all times. But in this flesh of ours & in our humane nature wherewith he was clothed, he was ordeyned chief king, and the dominion of the worlde was giuen vnto him, euen as wel in heauen as in earth. Now then if we be once graffed into his bodie, and perfectly made one with him; then shall wee recover that thing in him, which we cannot obtaine by our deedes & desertes. And then shal we see that Iesus Christ being graffed againe vnto glorie, wil of his goodnes drawe vs after him, to make vs partakers of all things that he hath.

Furthermore, the telling of this thing vnto vs is not to giue men scope to doe euill, but wee must marke that when God referueth vs to himselfe to put vs in possession of his goods, he doth also reforme vs by his holy spirite. Yet notwithstanding, all that euer we can do, albeit that wee be gouerned by God & haue a good will to serue him, is of no value at all if it bee effected of it selfe: but yet for Iesus Christes sake God will accept vs and our workes, and the inheritance shal abyde sure & stedfast vnto vs: for we must not be afraide but that we shal attaine vnto it. It is not giuen vs for our own sakes, but because wee be partakers of our Lord Iesus Christ, & receiue the grace that he hath purchased vs, so as wee be reconciled to God by his death & passion, in respect whereof he is mercifull to vs, & we be sure of the forgiuenesse of our finnes, because all spots are washed & scoured cleane away. Although there bee finnes & imperfections in vs, which might make vs blamable before God; yet are we iustified and brought into his fauour againe, when hee hath once renewed vs by his holy spirite. Therefore if we go that way to worke, let vs not dout but the promise shal stand fast, so as we shal feele the effect & force of it to our saluation. But in the meane while let vs not glorie in our felues, for there is no matter nor cause why we should do so.

Now let vs fall downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feele them better, yea and so to feele them as that mistaking and condemning our felues for them, we may submit our felues to our Lord Iesus Christ, beseeching him so to reform vs by his holy spirit, as Gods image may shine forth in vs, and wee not faile to continue in the possession of the heritage which hee hath promised vs, because it is not grounded vpon our owne workes & deedes, but vpon his freebestowed goodnes. And moreover: let vs pray our Lord to be so gracious to vs, as to giue vs such strength while wee passe through this world, wherein wee haue a great sort of enemies to fight against, that we may get the vpper hand of them, & be alwayes certified more and more,  $\bar{y}$  he is neere at hand to such as call vpon him & submit themselves vnto him. that by  $\bar{y}$  meanes he may continually be glorified at our hands, & that it may appeare howe hee will alwayes vphold vs, if wee fight vnder his standarde. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Fryday the xxvij. of September. 1555.

The Lxxix. Sermon which is the sixth vpon the eleuenth Chapter.

26 Behold, I set before you this day a blessing & a curse.

27 A blessing if ye obey the commandements of the Lord your God which I commaund you this day.

28 And likewise a curse if ye obey not the commandements of the Lorde your God, but turne out of the way which I comaunde you this day, to go after strange gods which ye know not.

29 And when the Lord your God shal haue brought you into the land which thou goest vnto to possesse it: then shalt thou set the blessing vpon mount Garizim, & the curse vpon mount Eball.

30 Are they not on the other side of Iordan, on the west side in the lande of the Cananites, which dwell in y<sup>e</sup> plaine ouer against Gilgal, beside the groue of Moreh?

31 For ye shall passe ouer Iordan, to go & possesse the lande which the Lorde your God giueth you: and you shall possesse it & dwell therein.

32 Take heede therefore, & forpoume all the ordinances & lawes which I set before you this day.

HE protestation that Moses maketh here, serueth to shewe y<sup>e</sup> men themselves are the cause of all their miseries, & that it is not for them to seeke the blame thereof any where else. And on y<sup>e</sup> other side, that when God declareth his will vnto vs, the way of welfare is shewed vs, & it is long of our selues y<sup>e</sup> our life is not happie in al respects throughout. So then, the meaning of Moses is, y<sup>e</sup> God doth men a singular good turne, when hee vouchsafeth to teach them by his word. For whē they haue the record of his wil, it is as good as a shewing of them howe to attaine to saluation, & howe to prosper in this transitorie life. Contrarywise also they be warned y<sup>e</sup> if they fare not y<sup>e</sup> better by the doctrine that is deliuered vnto them, vnhappie are they, & they haue not cause to cō-

So then, first we be done to vnderstand that y<sup>e</sup> hauing of the knowledge of Gods wil is an incestimable treasure. All of vs are desirous to lead a happie life, but there is no meane for vs to attain to it, vnlesse God open vs the gate to come vnto him. If it be alleged, How then? Shal not men be blessed, if they indeuour to do wel? Wil not God accept all their seruice when he sees them go on with a good intent? Let vs marke first of all, that men may (to their own seeming) haue as greate deuotion as is possible, & yet they shall but erre. To weene that we do wel is not all that we haue to do. We must be sure y<sup>e</sup> way which wee take is no bypath, but the way that leadeth straight forth vnto God. Ye see then that we cannot be sure of any blessing, that is to say, that our liues please God, and that the seruice which wee doe him is wel liked of, vntill he haue shewed vs what he requireth & what he alloweth. For so long as we walke after our own imagination, wee go the clean contrarie way; & in stead of going forward wee go back. Marke that for one point. Againe, for the second point, when we haue done all, yet is God nothing beholden to vs for it. What oweth he vnto vs? [Nothing.]; Now then all that we can hope for is by reason of the promise y<sup>e</sup> he maketh vnto vs, & by telling vs that if wee keepe his law, we shal not lose our labour nor be disappointed, but we shall haue a good rewarde at his hand. Gods saying lo, is the ground from whence the blessing springeth that Moses speaketh here. And it is the same thing that S. Paul telleth vs, where he presupposeth y<sup>e</sup> euen before y<sup>e</sup> law, men could not deserue any thing; & not without cause For if we had done all that which were possible for vs to do, (as I said afore) were it possible for vs to deserue aught at Gods hande? No: for we owe it him euery whet of it, & he oweth nothing vnto vs. And so ye see why Moses sayeth here, y<sup>e</sup> when the lawe was published, then was a blessing set before the people. As if he should say, Heretofore ye haue knowne no rule, ye haue bene as the wretched infidels which go on at all aduenture & haue no certainte to trust vnto. But now hath your God gathered you to him, & shewed you y<sup>e</sup> right way. Therefore y<sup>e</sup> way for you to leade a happie life is to obey the wil of your God.

Also here is a promise added to it, whereby the people might bee in the better hope y<sup>e</sup> God would

would bl.ſſe them. It is al one then with y which I haue told you already, namely y God is verie gracious to vs, in ſhewing vs after what manner we ought to lead our life . For without that, we might martyr our felues as much as we liſted, & yet it ſhould be to no purpoſe. Wherefore let vs beware that we receive the word the more reuerently which is preached vnto vs in his name, ſpecially ſeeing it bringeth vs a bleſſing, not only in y we learne therby to know what Gods wil is, & how to lue in his fauour; but alſo for that hee binderh himſelfe of his own good wil; ſomuch y although no duetic compellum thereto; yet vouchſafeth he to covenant with vs in ſuch ſort, as we ſhal not ſerue him in vaine. But here a mā might caſt a dout, how it cometh to paſſe that Moſes ſpeaking of the law, ſayth that he ſetteth forth a bleſſing; For (as was declared yeſterday) whatſoeuer God promiſeth vs in his lawe, we fare neuer a whit the better by it, becauſe of the condition that goeth with it, which is that y promiſe of his bleſſing is tyed to performing of his commandmēt. But no man doth that; & therefore are we al diſappointed of the promiſe of the lawe, by reaſon of the vnpoſſibilitie of the condition. It ſhould ſeeme then y Moſes ſpeakes to no purpoſe in this text, in promiſing a bleſſing to the people. And in deede we heare how S. Paul ſpeleth of it. He ſaith y the law bringeth nothing but Gods wrath & vengeance; for it rebuketh euery one of vs, ſo as there is none of vs all that is righteous, neither hath euery any man bin. All of vs then are conuicted by the lawe, as tranſgreſſors againſt Gods rightcouſnes; & ſo be wee in danger of deſtroyed death. Sith it is ſo: it followeth y the law of it ſelfe can do no more but ſhewe vs that we be accured of our God; & that he is our deadly enemy & muſt needs be our Iudge. And where is then the bleſſing that Moſes ſpeakes of here? The anſwere hereto is this: that if we looke no further but what we be in our own ſtoward nature, in reſpect of the ſinne y we haue drawn from Adam: the law can doe nothing but curſe vs. For whereas God ſheweth vs what our rightcouſnes ought to be; if we fall to the examining of our liues; we ſhal find y we haue offended him in euery point, & therefore we be paſt hope. Yea, but y ſpringeth not of the nature of y law, but of our own ſinfulnes, in y we are ſtubboꝛne againſt our God, ſo that in ſteede of obeying him, we inuouor al together to follow our own wicked luſtes. The lawe then as in reſpect of our felues, bringeth nothing but wrath & death. But as in reſpect of it ſelfe, ſurely it bringeth bl.ſſing. For were we as we ought to be, that is to wit, were we ſo found & vncorrupt y we were as thoroughly diſpoſed to ſerue God as was our forefather Adam by creation before his fall: the lawe ſhould bring vs his bleſſing. For why? it ſheweth vs that we muſt loue God with all our heart. When we be once ioyned vnto him, & when we be once knit vnto him in all perfection of goodneſſe, of ioy, of life, & of glorie; then ſhal this ſaying be found true. For were we of nature good & right, we ſhould be anſwerable to this doctrine, & wee ſhould obſerue it; & ſo ſhould this bleſſing be performed towards vs. Whereof is it long y as now the law bringeth vs nothing but death & damnation? Euen for that we be not able to receiue the promiſes y are contained there. Our Lorde ſaith, Come ye to mee, & I will fill you full of all goodnes; & we ſhrinke quite & cleane from him. So is it not long of the doctrine. Whereof then? Euen of our felues. Where is the fault to be found? In the law? No; but in our owne felues. Now then let vs mark, that whereas Moſes profeſſeth here y he ſetteth a bleſſing before y people, his ſo doing is not without cauſe.

But here it might be replied, that although our own ſin be the let that we be not made partakers of y bleſſing that is bightened in y lawe to enjoy it; yet notwithstanding, for aſmuch as we be vtterly excluded from it; it is in vaine for him to ſay, I ſet before you a bleſſing. That is not ſo: For we haue two points to note. The one is, that Gods ſpeaking after that maner concerning his word, is to the ende y we ſhould haue it in reuerence & eſtimation, & alſo loue it & ſet our hartes vpon it; & moreover fall to the conſidering of our owne curſednes, ſo as we might be humbled & caſt downe, & be ſorie when we ſee our benefite turned to our bane, & our life into death be cauſe we be not diſpoſed to receiue it. But God ſhal haue wunne nothing at our handes by letting vs alone there; we muſt be ſaine to go one ſtep further. For aſmuch as we ſee our felues bereft of the bleſſing of the law ſo long as it continueth but a dead letter; that is to ſay, ſo long as it doth but only tel vs what wee ſhould do, & giueth vs not power to do it in deede; wee muſt reſort to our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, whoſe office is to write the things in our hartes which God had written in ſtones, that hee may make vs willing to obey, in ſteede of our ſwearing aſide to y contract. Againe, our Lord Ieſus Chriſt hath deſerted this bleſſing for vs; that wee might henceforth be receiued into fauour for his ſake, & our workes be accepted at Gods hande though they be nothing worth of themſelues. For we come not as euery man in his own perſon, nor as they y had performed the law the felues; but we come in the name of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, as members of his bodie. Ye ſee then that the bleſſing is perſourmed in vs by ſeeking the remedie which we want, which is that whereas God hath promiſed to bleſſe n en vpon condition, for aſmuch as the ſame booteh vs not, there is added another point of fauour, which is that he receiuethe vs for his ſonnes ſake, & writing his lawe in our hartes, imputeth not our ſins vnto vs; by meanes whereof we ſaile not to bee partakers of the bleſſing that is contained here, though we be not able to performe the law, but that the ſame paſſe our abilitie. Marke that for one point.

Now let vs come to y which Moſes ſaith concerning y curſe. He ſaith y like as the law offendeth vs Gods fauor, which is the bleſſing y tendeth to our welfare; ſo alſo we muſt not ſeelight by the threatmings y are ſet downe there. For if we giue deafe eare to Gods ſpeaking, ſo as our hartes rancle againſt it through ſtubboꝛneſſe, or y we play the ſcoffers which turne all things to

laughter: let vs beare this in mind, that howsoeuer the world go, Gods worde shall either be our life or our death, there shall not so much as one word thereof fall to the ground. Such as benefite themselves by  $\bar{y}$  things  $\bar{y}$  are told them on gods behalf, shall find  $\bar{y}$  the doctrine serueth to their saluation: And on the other side, the despisers thereof, & such as refuse to be taught by it, must yeeld an account thereof, and they shall feele  $\bar{y}$  no one iote of it shall be lost, neither is to be despised. For should the thing be vndone & vanish away w<sup>o</sup>ut effect, which passeth out of  $\bar{y}$  mouth of God: No. And therefore let vs marke well,  $\bar{y}$  if men cannot find in their hearts to vse Gods doctrine in their benefite when he sendeth it vnto them: it shall turne to their euertlasting death, & their damnation will be doubled, because they held scorn of the benefite  $\bar{y}$  was profered them. And this is very needfull for vs. For we see how men dally with Gods word; & they  $\bar{y}$  cast it not quite & cleane away, do thinke themselves to be more than half perfect; because they be com not vtter enemies to fight against it, they beare the felues in hand  $\bar{y}$  God ought to hold himself contented with it. But thinke we that God will forgoe a good a thing to perish: He offered vs life, and we refused it: and doeth not such vnkindnes deserue horrible vengeance? Again, God setteth more store by his own honor, than by the saluation of our soules. And good reason it is  $\bar{y}$  he should. Now he hath shewed vs after what manner he will be glorified by vs, & we make no account of it but reiect it vnterly. And therefore let vs consider well,  $\bar{y}$  if we receive the blessing of Gods worde,  $\bar{y}$  to say, if it serue not to reconcile vs to him,  $\bar{y}$  we may take him for our father: we must (spire of our teeth) feele him our Iudge, & his worde must condemne vs. Whereas it should haue been a witness of his loue towards vs to bring vs to saluation, & to the inheritance of  $\bar{y}$  kingdom of heauen: it must become an inditement to passe vpon our liues, so as we shall be accused in this present life, & alter our death Gods vengeance shall pursue vs for euer, because we obeyd not gods word when it was preached & set forth to vs.

Esa. 49. 8.

Now then, seeing  $\bar{y}$  God telleth vs  $\bar{y}$  this is  $\bar{y}$  conuenient to vs, &  $\bar{y}$  he calleth vs vnto him: let vs learne, let vs learne I say to go to him and to make haste, least this threat light vpon vs, that we be cursed for our wickednes, in  $\bar{y}$  we listd not to receiue  $\bar{y}$  benefite that was offered vs. And specially nowadays we ought to be  $\bar{y}$  more provoked therunto, because our fathers of old time had not the like occasion. It is true that Moses might wel say he offered  $\bar{y}$  blessing to those people in  $\bar{y}$  law: But we in these dayes haue the blessing set forth more openly in  $\bar{y}$  Gospel. The promises at  $\bar{y}$  time were dark, & they pointed at Iesus Christ, howbeit a farre off. They yeelded some smal taste of life; but wee at this day haue our fill of it, so as god giueth vs euen his hart there without omitting of any thing, to  $\bar{y}$  intent to make vs to perceive his insatiable loue, that by to draw vs & to win vs vnto him. Such it is so,  $\bar{y}$  the law sheweth vs it aloofe, &  $\bar{y}$  gospel bringeth it nearer to vs: let vs not bee loo slowarde as to shrink away as though we would needs spite God of purpose to be curied: but let vs rather embrace the blessing which costeth vs nothing as they say: For there is no more for vs to doe but to receiue it willingly, according to  $\bar{y}$  promise which he maketh vs, saying: Opē thy mouth & I will fill it. And for  $\bar{y}$  same cause also doth S. Paul say, Now are  $\bar{y}$  acceptable dayes, now are  $\bar{y}$  dayes of saluatiō; shewing how  $\bar{y}$  same is to be applied to  $\bar{y}$  preaching of  $\bar{y}$  Gospel. His alledging of that text of Esayes is as he should say, Our Lords desire is nothing else but to do  $\bar{y}$  office of a sauour among vs: & therefore suffer him to shew himself such a one. Again, let vs vnderstand  $\bar{y}$  we neede not to seeke farre for him; for he offereth himself to vs before we once thinke of him, to make vs perceiue his fatherly kindnes & goodnes. And on the contrary parte, when he threateneth vs & is minded to make vs feele his rigour, he runneth not vpon vs at  $\bar{y}$  first dash, neither listeth he vp his hand by and by to strike vs: but only sheweth it vs first aloofe. Yet notwithstanding, howsoeuer he fare, let vs marke  $\bar{y}$  the Gospel is neuer preached, but  $\bar{y}$  he witnesseth on  $\bar{y}$  one side  $\bar{y}$  he is ready to receiue men to mercy, & to open them  $\bar{y}$  gate of his kingdō,  $\bar{y}$  they may go into it: & on the other side that if they be stubborn & wilful in their wickednes, it shall not boote the to thinke to escape, or to ween  $\bar{y}$  the word shall be vaine & to no purpose: for god wil always giue it force & power. What to doe? To destroy those  $\bar{y}$  haue so refused it, & trode it vnder foot, & made a mocke of it, & openly resisted it. Now by the way we must call to minde again what I haue touched already heretofore in following Moses discourse: namely  $\bar{y}$  God promisseth not any blessing but to such as obey his cōmandements: like as or  $\bar{y}$  other side he threateneth none but such as turne away from him. And thereby he sheweth that men may well take much paine, but they shall lose their labour if they rule not themselves according to the lawe. Here ye see how al  $\bar{y}$  deuotions  $\bar{y}$  men deuise, are cast down. Moses saith they be vnterly fruitlesse. In dede  $\bar{y}$  Papists, Turks & Iewes doe perfwade themselves,  $\bar{y}$  they desire much at Gods hande by their doing of things vpon their own head, whē they be able to say, I take it to be very good. They beare themselves in hand  $\bar{y}$  they come very neere to God by their warding in their windlasses after  $\bar{y}$  fashion. But on  $\bar{y}$  contrary parte we see,  $\bar{y}$  God promisseth not any thing but to such as obey his word. Therefore if we intēd to be vndisappointed of our hope, let vs seeke to knowe Gods wil by asking it at his own mouth, & therupon let vs simply obey whatsoever he telleth vs. For as long as men rule themselves after their own imaginations, or after  $\bar{y}$  traditions of men; it is no obedience, but a displeasing of God, & he wil not admit it to come in their account. Thus much for the first point concerning this blessing.

On  $\bar{y}$  contrary, how much soeuer we reigne at it, setting themselves against vs, yea & condemning vs for our refusing to follow their foolish intentions; God acquiteth vs here, for he threateneth none but such as rebel against him. Nowadays  $\bar{y}$  Pope thundredth against vs, because wee wil not

will not be subiect to him as other do, which hold downe their neckes vnto him and yeeld themselves in bondage to him like wretched beastes.

True it is y<sup>e</sup> their imagining that he hath power to ding vs down to the deepe pit of hell, is y<sup>e</sup> thing y<sup>e</sup> amazeth them, & maketh the rude and ignorant fort to quake. But forasmuch as we heare it at the mouth of our God, y<sup>e</sup> we neede not to be afraid except we haue disobeyed him: let vs hold vs to it, & be bold to laugh at the popes manaces to scorne, for they be no better than the rattling of a bladder with a few beanes in it to feare a yong babe withal. In deed it makes a great noyse: but yet it is but a toy. And euen in like case it is with all the manacings that men can make.

But here is yet one other saying wel worthy to be noted. Moyses saith that the curse shal come upon the people when they turne away from their G O D to serue strange Gods, and such as they haue not known. Here againe he sheweth y<sup>e</sup> they which haue bin rightly taught, are much more blamewoorthe than the wretched infidels. For they spite God maliciously & wilfully: they offend not any more of ignorance, but turne aside wilfully fro y<sup>e</sup> way y<sup>e</sup> God had willed them to walke in, & seeme to make warre against him of set purpose: by means wherof they make their condemnation the grieuoufer. And therefore let vs marke well, that we which haue receiued y<sup>e</sup> doctrine of the Gospell, shalbe lesse excusable than y<sup>e</sup> papists, if we obey not our God. For the papistes holde on stil their old trade, they be gone astray like sillie beasts, & all that euer they do is but filth & abomination. This is true. And yet do we for our partes much worse in turning away from our God, after his comming vnto vs, & y<sup>e</sup> hee had brought vs nigh vnto himselfe. And Moyses saith expressly; The Gods which you haue not known. Where in he rebuketh the malice of men, in that they had leuer to follow y<sup>e</sup> vncertaine than the certaine. True it is y<sup>e</sup> we haue a cleane contrarie ground in nature. For if a man be demanded whether he had leuer to be sure of a thing or to be doubtful of it; He wil alwaies say he had leuer be sure of it. And yet for all that, we seeme all of vs to struie which may be most wauring, doubtful, & vncertaine of his soul health, & yet notwithstanding what is there that we should make more account of? And God is readie to assure vs of it, warranting vs it by his word, so as we cannot faile of it, if we obey him. We heare it, & can God ly? No: & therefore let vs go on as he hath comanded vs, Nay, we be loth to do so. And what do we in sted thereof? I trow, I weene. Loe at what point we hel! Let vs see howe the papists do. When they should pray vnto God, this one good point they haue, that they knowe themselves vnworthe to praise vnto him. That is true. But behold, our Lord giueth vs a remedy, which is, that our Lord Iesus Christ shalbee our spoked man: so as if he intreat for vs, we shalbe admitted & God wil heare all our prayers. It is the thing which the holy scripture assureth vs of eueriwhere. But what do the Papistes? I am not worthe to praise vnto God (say they) & therefore I wil go seeke to the virgin Marie, S. Michael, & S. Peter: & therupon they deuise & set vp a great sort of Saints at their own pleasure. And what a dealing is that? Sure we be that our Lord Iesus Christ wil not faile vs: for as much as it is his office appointed him of his father; y<sup>e</sup> hee wil discharge it. And why then do we not go right forth vnto him? Hee wil be a good stay for vs. Com vnto me saith he, alluring vs gently. Against wee haue promises innumerable, that if we refoit vnto him we shal not be disappointed of that which we hope for: & yet for all this wee leane to our own weening, & we say, to my seeming I were best to go to S. Michael or to our Lady. And so we fall to forsaking the certaintie y<sup>e</sup> God hath giuen vs, to ketch an vncertaintie: and in likewise wife deale we with al y<sup>e</sup> rest. For in seruing God according to his law, we be sure that our seruice shalbe wel taken. But the Papistes fall to inuenting of this & that, & leaue the law of God: & is nocht a forsaking of the certaine to followe an vncertaine: Yes, & that is against nature. Therefore it appeareth y<sup>e</sup> we be blinded by Satan. For we haue the cleane contrarie in vs by nature. We haue wit ynough to say, I would faine be assured & we be loth to hazard our selues at all adventure: & yet in this case we be so mad, that neither ropes nor chaines can hold vs. My alleaging of these examples is to shewe after what sort we should put this doctrine in vre: for it falleth out y<sup>e</sup> men haue wilfully estranged themselves from God in all cases. How so? For whereas God hath discouered him selfe vnto them; they haue not vouchsafed to hold themselves to him, but rather haue busied themselves about their own dreams & dotages. In deed they wil easily say, We know there is but one god y<sup>e</sup> maker of heauen & earth: but in y<sup>e</sup> meane while they hatch a whole swarm of other gods, as we may wel perceiue by y<sup>e</sup> idols which they haue forged. And wherof commeth that? Euen of this, y<sup>e</sup> wheras men knew God, yet they haue had no list to glorifie him, but haue wandred away after their own imagination, by meanes wherof they be turned away from him. And at such time as God gaue his law, y<sup>e</sup> blessing was more darksome than it is nowadays in y<sup>e</sup> time of y<sup>e</sup> Gospell. Beholde, God doth not onely report himselfe to be y<sup>e</sup> maker of heauen & earth; but also because he is incomprehensible, & his maiestie passeth all our vnderstanding: hee will haue vs to looke vpon him in his liuely image, that is to wit in our Lord Iesus Christ. He is the sonne of god, which hath shewed himselfe so familiarly, y<sup>e</sup> we may be sure ynough that we worship the liuing God forasmuch as we knowe that the whole fullnesse of glorie & of y<sup>e</sup> Godhead dwelleth in him. That is the cause also why y<sup>e</sup> Prophet Esay spake of him, saith, Lo this is he, lo this is our god. If the case stode so with the fathers of olde time, y<sup>e</sup> it behoueth them to stand vpo a certaintie euen in the time of the law, so as God woulde not haue his people hang in dout, but that they should be certined of as much as was for their behoote & benefit: much more ought we to be sure nowadayes. For we haue a larger discouerie of things in our Lord Iesus Christ, so as y<sup>e</sup> voyce of the prophet Esay; Lo this is he; lo this is our God, ought to sound continually in our eares; by reason wherof it is not for any man to turn away from it, nor to runne gadding at rourers, nor to reele one way or other; but we must knowe & assure our selues y<sup>e</sup> we haue y<sup>e</sup> ful & perfect measure of al wisdom, if we can hold vs to Iesus Christ, & to the things which his doctrine teacheth vs. But herein we see how the wretched world gad-deth vp & downe, euery man trotting after his own way, so as euery mans will is to go astray: & yet notwithstanding we shield our selues with ignorance. When we haue shut our eyes after y<sup>e</sup> fashion against y<sup>e</sup> light, when we haue stopped our cares against y<sup>e</sup> doctrin of saluation, whē we haue turned our backs vpon him at his shewing of his face, & whē we haue spit at him for his reaching of hand vnto vs: yet we fall stil to excusing of our selues by ignorance. So then the thing which we haue to remember here in this place, by Gods vpbraiding of men with their turning away from his word when it is preached vnto them; is that their so doing is through a diuelish stubbornnes, & y<sup>e</sup> cūen by y<sup>e</sup> wittnes of their own consciences it is a worshipping of gods which they haue not known. For our faith must not be vncertaine, it must not be an opinion or weening, but it must bring a sure knowledge with it. And what manner of knowledge? Truly as in respect of our own wit & reason, if we intend to come vnto god, we must worship him w<sup>ith</sup> al humilitie, & remember that his secrets surmount our vnderstanding. But yet here withall it behoueth vs to stande vpon so sure a ground, cūen by knowledge; as our owne consciences may beare record of it, & we be able to lay with S Iohn, we wote well y<sup>e</sup> we be y<sup>e</sup> children of God. Lo here what the true Religion is. It is not an vnadused zeale, or a liking that men cast in this thing or that; but a sure known doctrine grounded vpon Gods truth, wherethrough we be able to say y<sup>e</sup> it is he which hath spoken to vs, & y<sup>e</sup> he is a faithfull wittnesse of y<sup>e</sup> things y<sup>e</sup> are for our welfare & saluation. And againe, whatsoeuer we alleage, wee shall alwayes abide conuict of our inalice. So that when we haue once beene taught y<sup>e</sup> word of God, if wee afterwarde worship gods whom we haue not known, if we swaue aside to any superstition, or if we continue not in y<sup>e</sup> pure simplicitie of y<sup>e</sup> holy scripture; surely we shall iustly be accused to haue had strange Gods, & to haue bin forgers of them, as folke y<sup>e</sup> loue the vntruth better than y<sup>e</sup> truth. According wherunto S. Paul speaking of all such as obeyed not the Gospel, saith it is good reason they should be stricken with horrible blindness, & that forasmuch as they honored not the creator, it was meete that they should become vnderlings to the creatures, y<sup>e</sup> is to say, to the things which they had dreamed in their own fond braine & foolish fancies. Now the seeing y<sup>e</sup> our God hath taught vs, let vs learn to hold our selues at a stay to his word, & to vnderstand in what manner he hath shewed himself vnto vs; & let vs benefite our selues by al the records which he giueth vs, & beware y<sup>e</sup> we wander not one way or other, ne followe not our owne leadings. For there wilbe no excuse for such as would not be certified of God when he was ready to do it.

Now in the end Moses addeth, that when the people were come into the land of promise, they should diuise their companie in two parties: the one halfe vpon mount Garizim, & the other halfe vpon mount Ebal: & that they which should be vpon mount Garizim, should pronounce the blessings; & that those which should be vpon mount Ebal, should pronounce the curses, which thing we see was done accordingly.

For this commandement shall be rehearsed yet againe in the 27. Chapter of this booke. And Iosua in his eyghth Chapter declareth y<sup>e</sup> he had obeyed the cōmandement of Moses. The effect of y<sup>e</sup> storie is, that when y<sup>e</sup> people were entred into y<sup>e</sup> land, they should meete with two mountaines, y<sup>e</sup> one called Hebal & y<sup>e</sup> other Garizim. Now god had commanded y<sup>e</sup> one part of y<sup>e</sup> people, namely certain tribes, shold be on y<sup>e</sup> one side on mount Garizim; & y<sup>e</sup> the rest of the tribes should be vpon mount Hebal, & y<sup>e</sup> the Leuites shold stand in the middes of y<sup>e</sup> host bearing the Ark of God, to thew y<sup>e</sup> God was chiefe souerain there, & that the Leuites were as wittnesse or furies to vndertake matters in y<sup>e</sup> behalfe of the people, like as if there were two parties to make som solemne match or couenant, a notarie or register is present to take an othe betwixt them: euen so God had ordeyned y<sup>e</sup> the people should be there to heare & receiue y<sup>e</sup> doctrine of saluation, & y<sup>e</sup> they should answer on their part, as in y<sup>e</sup> passing of som solemne contract; to y<sup>e</sup> end they might knowe vpon what condition God had chosen the: & preferred the before al other nations of y<sup>e</sup> earth, as shall be shewed hereafter in the foresaid 27. Chapter. And what were y<sup>e</sup> blessings? They were a rehearsal of y<sup>e</sup> same thing that God had spoken afore: namely, al such as keepe my law shall be blessed; Al such as worship me with a pure conscience shall be blessed: all such as hallow my name, shall be blessed: al such as obey their fathers & mothers, shall be blessed: all y<sup>e</sup> lone chastly shall be blessed: all y<sup>e</sup> abstaine from deccit, extortion, & al manner of euil, shall be blessed. God then on his parte promised blessing after y<sup>e</sup> manner. Hereunto the people answered, Amen, Amen: y<sup>e</sup> is to say, So be it: where-by they ratified y<sup>e</sup> which had been spoken by the mouth of God. Again, on y<sup>e</sup> contrarie part, y<sup>e</sup> curses were vttered on mount Hebal in this wise: Cursed be he y<sup>e</sup> turneth aside after strange gods: Cursed be he y<sup>e</sup> dishonoret. his father or his mother: Cursed be hee that offendeth in theft or in whoredom: Cursed be he y<sup>e</sup> performeth not all y<sup>e</sup> cōmandements conteneid in this booke. Amen, Amen, said y<sup>e</sup> people. When the curses were vttered after y<sup>e</sup> fashion, it behoueth euery man to answer Amē. And so ye see what is said in this text.

word into our hearts, let beware ye like wel of it & ye we ratifie the promise of our saluatiō which he maketh vs. Nowe hee adopteth vs to be his children; and if we be his children we be also his heires. Therefore when we embrace the preached word by faith & obedience, although our mouth speake not a worde, yet doe wee confirme Gods truth to our saluation, according to this saying of S. Iohns, that as many as beleue in the only sonne of God, haue setto their seales that God is true. Thus ye see howe the full measure of our saluation and of the promise is accomplished & hath his full effect & power, when we on our side do aunswere rightly Amen. And although it be not spoken with the mouth, yet let the heart say it: for ye is the chiefe point. True it is that if there be faith in the heart, the mouth must needs agree vnto it also; according to this saying of the Psalme, I did beleue, and therefore will I speake, which saying, is alledged likewise by S. Paul to the Corinthians. But my speaking at this time is of the ceremonie; namely ye although wee haue not a mount Garizim & a mount Heball among vs; although we assemble not together into one cōpanie, to seuer our selues into two hostes, and although there be not a visible Arke among vs; yet is Gods once declaring thereof inough for vs, & his once setting downe of a memoriall thereof before vs is sufficient for vs, to make vs knowe ye same belonging to vs at this day, & ye the preaching of the Gospell vnto vs in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ, is all one as if we confirmed God to be our father by our saying Amen. That is ye very meane whereby we be receiued to be his children, & whereby we be assured of the inheritance of the kingdom of heauen. For otherwise, how were it possible that we wretched creatures should attaine to such dignitie, as ye God should vouchsafe to win vs by gentleness, & vtter ye good loue that he beareth vs, & be willing to haue vs to be his, to the ende ye he might be owner of vs? Must it not needs be ye we be worse than froward if we benefite not ourselues by such grace? Yes, & therefore let vs learn to answere Amen willingly, when our Lord behigheth vs his blessings. For on the contrary part, although wee harden our hearts & shut our eyes, yea & grind our teeth at God as it were in rage & dispire of him: yet must there follow an Amen (Aerupō), which shall burn vs like a searing yron, whereby God wil shew ye his word is as a burning fire to consume all things, so as we must needs feele ye inward scalding thereof when God vttereth ye power of his word, by reason whereof we shalbe in continuall inquietnes & torment for euer, if he set himselfe against vs. Yet for all this ye faithfull must answere Amē, as well to the blessings as the cursings. Amen, by embracing ye grace ye God offereth vs. Doth God offer himselfe vnto vs? Cometh he to seeke vs out when we be vtterly lost & forlorne? Doth he come downe to these horrible miseries wherein we be plunged: Well, then it is our duetic to go vnto him, and not to be so frowarde as to drawe back when he allureth vs so gently. Thus ye see howe we must answere Amen to the blessings, by embracing ye grace of the holy Ghost, ye we may be guided & governed by it, & made acceptable to our God, by fashioning our life after the rule ye he hath giuen vs, in resting vpon ye grace of our Lord Iesus Christ, whereby he is reconciled vnto vs, & accepteth vs for righteous, inasmuch ye although we be sinners, yet he receiueth vs for his sonnes sake, & couereth al our sins & vices. After that for therefore must we answere Amen, that our Lorde may performe all the free promises to which he hath made vnto vs.

Also we must aunswere Amen to ye curses. For why? We haue such a number of contrarieties in vs, as is pity to see. Although God haue giuen vs a good desire to receiue his word, & ye we receiue it in deede; yet do we it not to the full. For wee drag our legges after vs; there is alwayes some gainstribing in vs; we haue still some remanentes of our flesh; & besides that, there is too too much stubbornnes in vs, so as we be like asses ye haue need to be diuen forward by force. And therefore I sayd ye we must answere Amen to ye curses. When we see ye God will haue vs to passe through ye afflictions of this worlde, & through the cares ye are vpon earth: Let the prouoke vs to repaire vnto him, and let vs assure ourselues ye oftentimes his causing of vs to feele his curse, is for our benefite. Moreouer let vs consider thus with ourselues: Alas, if God curse all such as transgresse his commandements; what shall become of me? Now then let euerie of vs finde such fault with himselfe, as we may patiently indure whatsoever it pleaseth God to lay vpon vs in this present life. Thus our pronouncing of the curses must be to ye end that they light not vpon vs. For they ye quicken vpon themselves after ye manner, shalbe set free from the curses. And let vs mark by the way, ye when we shall not haue performed all ye commandements of the lawe, we haue a remedie for it in our Lord Iesus Christ, for otherwise we should be accursed euerichone of vs, according to this allegation of saint Pauls to the Galathians: Cursed are they ye performe not the whole Lawe to the full. Wherevpon he concludeth, ye all men are cursed of God as in respect of their owne workes, and ye if we will be iustified by our owne deertes, we must goe seeke our payment in hell. For God hath shot our one thunderbolt against all mankind, in saying, cursed be all they ye performe not the whole Law. But no man performeth it. Euen ye holiest men in the world are indebted in ye behalfe. So then S. Paul rightly concludeth, ye we be all accursed in ourselues. But yet he sendeth vs to our Lorde Iesus Christ, & telleth vs ye forasmuch as he is giuen vnto vs, we be set free from ye rigor of the Law: so ye whereas God as now doth teach vs his will, telling vs what way we should walke, & setting before vs both his promises & his threatenings: although our lues be still vnperfect, yet wil he not cease to accept vs, so we haue recourse to him which hath supplied our want. For our Lord Iesus Christ hath made such satisfaction by ye sacrifice of his death; ye God accepteth it in full paymēt to couer al our faults. Therefore let vs repaire thither, & let vs so plunge ourselues in it, as we may be clenfed & scoured free al our spots. Which thing will come to passe, if we learne to walke in

THese are the ordinances and Lawes which yee shal keepe, that yee may doe them in the Lande which the Lord God of thy fathers hath giuen thee to possess, all the dayes which thou shalt liue vpon the earth.

2 Yee shall destroy all the places wherein the people, whom yee shal conquere haue serued their gods, whether it be vpon high mountaines, or vpon the hills, or vnder any maner of greene trees.

3 Also yee shall digge downe their Altars, and breake their images, and burne their woods with fire. Yee shall destroy the images of their gods, and dispatch the names of them out of that place.

4 Yee shall not deale so with the Lord your God:

5 But looke what place soeuer the Lord your God shal choose out of al your tribes to set his name in and to dwel in: there shall yee seeke him, and thither shall yee resort.

Wheras Moses e shorteth y people here againe to obserue the ordinances & statutes of y law, 30 and to do the; it doth vs to vnderstand, y if we be not diligent in following Gods will, we shal soone be carried away vnto wickednes one way or other. For it falleth out vpon vs y we do comit many faults through ouersight, we stumble at euey turning of a hand because y deuill doth easily beguile vs; & we haue no great wit or discretiō in vs, our mind is ful of fondnes, & consequētly vncōstant: & therefore if we be not very diligent in obeying our God: we shall neuer obserue his law as we ought to do. Now the let vs beware y we set our minds earnestly to y ordering of our life. For if we bethinke vs not aduisedly of it, we haue any great care of it; we shal not fail to do amisse some way or other. That is y thing which we haue to gather vpon this place where Moses faith y we must not only put gods cōmandemētcs in execution, but also keepe the to do them. As if he should say, y if men holde not themselves well in a we, if they bee not very watchfull in following their duety, & if they be not well aduised & earnest in their doings: by & by they slip away, and there is no stedmes in them; and although there haue bin some good zeale in them, yet it vanisheth away out of hande.

And he sayth expressly that they be the statutes and ordinances of the God of their fathers. Which serueth to the better confirming of the matter y we haue seene heere to fore: which is, that the Land of Chanaā was giuen the by vertue of the couenant and promise y was made before they were borne. The Iewes then are put in minde in this place to thinke the selues beholden to Gods free bestowed goodnes, for their promised inheritāce forasmuch as they coule not boast of it as of a cōquest, because God had assigned it to their fathers before they were borne. Neuertheless his purpose is also to confirme them in the doctrine of the Law, to the end they might knowe y they worshipped not a new god, or a god lately found out; but the same God which had bin reuealed to their fathers in all ages afore, & therefore he telleth them they were lesse to be excused, if they held the not to the religion y had bin knowen in all times afore, at leastwise amonge their fore fathers. For we heare what God vpbraideth them withall by his prophet Ieremie. Go seeke all the worlde about (saith he) go ouer y sea, & see if the heathen nations haue changed their gods, and yet they be but idols. Sith you see such stedfastnes & constancie in the infidels, y they be not variable in their superstitions, but rather as it were wedded & wiffully giue ouer to the; what a shame will it be to you to haue forsaken the liuing God when ye haue knowen him, & not to continue in his word: Then let vs marke wel in this text, that Gods vpbraiding of y Iewes with his manifesting of himself vnto the & to their fathers folong time aforehand, is to y ende they should be the more worthy to be condemned, if they hid not them selues to the doctrine which had bin so well warranted vnto the. But let vs marke also y it is not inough for vs y our forefathers held some kind of religion: but we must also see y the same be allowable. And whereas it is sayd here, y their forefathers knew the same God which had set forth his Law to the at y time: the knowledge or opinion which the fathers had, is nor y chief ground that we ought to stand vpon; for God presupposeth y he had so certified the of his word, as they were nor in any doubt at all. Therefore first let vs learn to knowe what our Lord declareth vnto vs, and then let vs afterward go to antiquitie. And it is certaine that if the religion be true, & good, it is not new nor deuised in our time; but our repair must be to the things y<sup>e</sup> are witnessed in the Law and y<sup>e</sup> prophets. There we shall see how God hath gathered his Church, how he hath gouerned it, & how it hath alwayes had his truth, euen from the beginning of the world. In d<sup>e</sup>de the number of people is but small y<sup>e</sup> haue followed godlinesse: the rest haue turned away after their owne inu<sup>e</sup>- nations. Howbeit, we must not haue an eye to the world, but let it suffice vs y<sup>e</sup> god hath had a church of his owne in all ages, whereunto it behoueth vs to be ioyned & to become one w<sup>i</sup>th it. For although the Church haue bin despised of the worlde; yet hath it alwayes bin precious in Gods sight. And we see the like still at this day. True it is that the most part of such as boast themselves to be belieuers, are doted with leasings, errors & abuses: but wee must let the<sup>m</sup> alone, & submit ourselues to the truth y<sup>e</sup> God telleth vs, kniting ourselues in v<sup>n</sup>ity of faith & concord with the faithfull which are contented to followe whatsoeuer God hath shewed the<sup>m</sup>. Thus ye see y<sup>e</sup> way for vs to put this text in v<sup>r</sup>e where the God of the fathers is spok<sup>e</sup> of, is y<sup>e</sup> it is not ynough for vs to haue som antiquite as the papists alledge, saying; we haue bin a long tyme in possession; but we must be well ground v<sup>p</sup>o certainty, so as we know y<sup>e</sup> the God whom we worship is not an idoll. When a man knowes y<sup>e</sup> once, then let him proceede to the es-sent & agrement of faith, according to our belief wherby we confes y<sup>e</sup> there is but one almighty god, which is y<sup>e</sup> father of our lord Iesus Christ, and by the same read<sup>e</sup> our father too; y<sup>e</sup> our Lord Iesus Christ is the redeemer that hath appeared vnto vs; that we be sanctified by the holy Ghost, and also y<sup>e</sup> we can beare record of the nauety of our God, at leastwise according to his vttering of himselfe vnto vs by his holy scriptures. Which done, then let vs adde, y<sup>e</sup> we beleue the holy catholike Church, and that there is a cōmunion of Saints, so as there is but one body. But yett must God be faime to thewe him selfe to vs to be the almighty: that he is y<sup>e</sup> same which made both heauen & earth, that he is the same at whose hande we must hope for saluation; y<sup>e</sup> he is able to maintaine his owne glory, so as all the things y<sup>e</sup> men haue deuised of their owne braine are but lies.

 That is the first end wherat we must begin. And afterward we must agree with the holy patriarks, Apostles, & all the faithfull that haue liued since the worlde began. We must haue y<sup>e</sup> indissoluble band of faith, & al must come to this point, namely that they be grounded vpon the certaine and vnfallible truth. As for example, The Iewes that came after, had the fathers as well as they,
 of whom also they made theselues a sheelde. but God did vtterly mislike their so doing, according to this saying of the prophet Ezechiel; Walk not after the righteousnes of your forefathers. At the first blasp<sup>h</sup> here seemeth to be some cōtrarity. For in this same place it is sayd, Worship ye the God of your fathers, stick to him, & beware ye change not your religion. And there y<sup>e</sup> prophet Ezechiel sayth contrariwise, beware that ye follow not y<sup>e</sup> deuotion of your fathers. Yea verily: for there were two sortes of fathers among the Iewes: the one was Abraham, & the holy Patriarkes & Prophetes, and such as knewe the lining Iesus Christ, & serued him in all purenesse: those it behoueth the Iewes to rule themselves by. And in y<sup>e</sup> respect & doth Moses say now vnto them, beware; ye turne not away from the God of your fathers, but cōtinue still in their faith. Besides this, they had other fathers also, which were backsliders, & frowarde, and had corrupted the Lawe, & made a mangle of it with all the superstitions of the heathen. In respect of this it is said, beware ye to low not your fathers; for they were frowarde & false-harted towards God. In the same talking is the world at this day. The Papistes alledge their fathers. But what? Are not the Apostles the true fathers of the christian Church? Yes, but the papistes will not heare them speake, nor any other that haue stablished such order in the Church as God cōmanded. But they heare their a<sup>n</sup>cesters like themselves, which being a misbegottē generation, they take Monkes & old dotterelles for their fathers. Againe, when they alledge any of the auncient doctors, if there be any folly or superstio in their writings, they can shill to cull it out euery whit: but as for the good, they cast y<sup>e</sup> a great way off. Now then let vs beware of such maner of fathership, & let vs vse discretio in chosing out y<sup>e</sup> true fathers, & let vs put y<sup>e</sup> in v<sup>r</sup>e which Paul speakes of where he sayth y<sup>e</sup> all fatherhood dependeth vpon God and vpon our Lord Iesus Christ. Thither (say I) must we refer our fatherhood, if we wil haue good fathers; so as God may be the chiefe father of them all, & if they giue record y<sup>e</sup> they be his sonnes, y<sup>e</sup> they may beget vs by the vncorruptible seede of his word; or els there wilbe nothing but vtter confusion. Thus ye see what we haue to remember vpon that saying.

Now heretofore Moses addeth further, y<sup>e</sup> the Iewes must not serue God at the fist, and afterward become cold: but y<sup>e</sup> they must perseuere in it all the tyme of their life. And at the<sup>m</sup> manner will God be honoured of vs. For he taketh vs not to hyre for certain dayes, & then to let vs go, or to giue vs leaue to depart at the ende of our terme: he taketh vs for life & death. And it is good reason, as S. Paul sheweth vs where he sayth y<sup>e</sup> our Lord Iesus died & rose againe to reigne both ouer the quicke & the dead. Though that were one other respect than this, were it not ynough? Behold, y<sup>e</sup> son of God which bought vs by his death and passion, is risen againe immediately: & is it not meete then y<sup>e</sup> we shold giue our selues to him & to God his father, and y<sup>e</sup> we should be wholly dedicated vnto him, & that we should both induor to serue him as long as we liue vpon y<sup>e</sup> earth, and also y<sup>e</sup> our death should be as a sacrifice & offering vnto him, to shewe ourselues obedient to him in all points: Yes: & therefore let vs marke well, y<sup>e</sup> we must not doe it, as it were in a pang, as a number of folke do, who are very what in gods seruice for a two or three dayes, and afterward their mind is altered, & their deuotion is quite gone, & they shew full well y<sup>e</sup> there was no ze-le in the<sup>m</sup>. But let vs alwayes beare in mind to serue God as long as we liue. And therew<sup>t</sup> shall let vs also bethinke vs of y<sup>e</sup> which is set downe here, where

Eph. 3. 15.

Rom. 14. 5.

where Moses speaketh yet againe of the heritage that had bin promised to y<sup>e</sup> Iewes. For seeing that our Lord doth daily put vs in mind of his grace: it is good reason y<sup>e</sup> wee should plucke vp a good courage to honour him, & gather new strength to say, forasmuch as I haue liued out this day in the world, & haue serued God this morning, seeing y<sup>e</sup> I perceiue he cōtinueth his goodnes (stil towards me, yea, & increaseth it: is it not reason that my zeale & nime affection to serue him should be y<sup>e</sup> more kindled, and y<sup>e</sup> my hope should nor be abated? That is the thing which Moses ment in saying, Ye shall possesse y<sup>e</sup> land: & as long as ye possesse it ye shall haue a faire mirrour before your eyes to shewe you how your God calleth you to him, & maintaineth you in the possession of the benefit which he hath once bestowed vpon you.

And therefore let vs marke, y<sup>e</sup> we deserue well to be benefite of the grace y<sup>e</sup> God thal haue granted vs, if we acknowledge it not toward him, but for get it, & apply it to another end than he ment it. It hath bin sayde heretofore y<sup>e</sup> the Iewes should possesse the land, as long as y<sup>e</sup> heauen hung ouer the earth. And yet we see how they be put out of it, inso much y<sup>e</sup> at this day they possesse not any part of it, but wander abroad in the world, & are hunted to & fro. And what is y<sup>e</sup> cause thereof? Surely God had maintained them in the inheritance which he had promised thē, if they had not turned away frō him after y<sup>e</sup> fashion. For it was not without cause, that y<sup>e</sup> land was called Gods resting place. As if he had said, y<sup>e</sup> when all the residue of the worlde were tossed & turmoyled, y<sup>e</sup> Iewes should dwell at ease & rest in y<sup>e</sup> land, so as if any mā made war vpon them & troubled them, yet God would stablish thē there. Yea but they haue brokē couenant wth him. And therefore at this day (as we see) they be banished frō resting in any place of the whole world. They be as vagabonds euerie where. And what is the cause of it but their own vnthankfulness in y<sup>e</sup> they haue forsaken gods promise through their vnbeleefe and stubbornesse, and haue vtterly disanulled it to the vttermost of their power? Therefore let vs bethinke ourselues. True it is y<sup>e</sup> we must be as wayfarers in this world, if we wil be heires of heauen, as y<sup>e</sup> Apostle telleth vs. But howsoeuer the case stand, if we intend to be blessed of our God, & to feele y<sup>e</sup> he is a good defence for vs: let vs hold vs in obedience & subiectiō to him. Otherwise let vs assure ourselues, y<sup>e</sup> although al y<sup>e</sup> whole world hold with vs, yet we shall finde ourselues to persecuted and pursued, as we shall finde no rest any where. If a faithful man walke in the feare of God, although he be persecuted & tormented; yet may hee rest vpon this point to say, yet is God my protector; and he will call vpon him, & by his calling vpon him he shall finde cause of cōfort. But on y<sup>e</sup> contrarie part, if an vnbeleeuer play y<sup>e</sup> rebell against God, although he haue peace to the worldward, and be in fauor of men, yea & also dreaded: yet shall hee euer be vnquiet & agast. And the reason is, because he seeth not to be at peace with God. So then let vs marke that whereas Moses exhorteth the people heere to serue God all their life long; it is to the end wee knowing y<sup>e</sup> God renews his mercie and goodnes daily toward vs; should be inflamed to serue him with y<sup>e</sup> greater courage, & that frō day to day we should always continue therein as though we were at rest. We see y<sup>e</sup> euery sleepe setteth a man in good plight againe, so y<sup>e</sup> when he hath wearyed himselfe with walking or working, he becommeth ready and disposed to returne to his labour againe the next morning. Euen so must we take courage at our Lords incouraging of vs, and at his calling of vs vnto him, so as it may appeare that we be willing and ready to follow him.

But now let vs come to that which Moses hath set downe concerning the Lords ordinances and statutes. The first cōmandement y<sup>e</sup> he giueth the Iewes, is that when they be come into the Land which they were to possesse for their inheritance, they should beare downe all the altars of the heathen, breake and deface their ydoles, burne all the groves where they had used their superstitions, and vtterly root out the remembrance of them. Here we see againe how hatefull a thing ydolatrie is vnto God, and that he can not abide y<sup>e</sup> his seruice should in any wise be corrupted. Let vs marke I say, that God accepteth not any seruice at our hands, when it is mingled with any abuse or folly of our owne heads: but as we must serue him onely, so must we serue him not after our owne fashion, but according to his owne wil, cōmandement & allowance. Wherein we see how a great number of ignorant wretches beguile themselves nowadayes. For hauing protested that their intent is to serue y<sup>e</sup> only one God, they put to many patches of their owne, bearing themselves in hand that y<sup>e</sup> is not amisse. And why? So long as mine in deuour be to serue God say they, & that I do it of a good intent, why should it be condemned? Yea, but we heare how our God can not away with any companion, as he declareth euerywhere; and euen in this text we be taught the same expressely ynough: for God will haue all remembrance of ydols vtterly rooted out. For why? As long as ydols haue their vse, God is defaced & ouercouered that he can not be discerned, and likewise all things in the world are confounded by it. Therefore it is all one as if me should go about to spoile him of his maiestie & glory. And euen y<sup>e</sup> papists themselves auow the same thing in their cōmon byword, when they say that God is not known for the Apostles. And it was Gods will that they should make a common prouerbe of it, to shewe that they cut their owne throtes with their own knife, in that they can alledge no excuse at the latter day. For they say they ment it not: no, but will not their prouerbe proue them liars? Yes: for their owne wordes shall iudge them. Howsoeuer they fare, let vs note that if Gods seruice be not kept in the owne purenesse, all is mard: so that although men worship him neuer so much, yet hee misliketh it, as wee see by his speaking thereof in his prophete Ezechiell. Goe serue your owne Gods sayth he, for I haue done with you. As if hee should say; belong altogether to the deuill if you will; Seeing that ye hold ye not all wholly to me, but that I must haue companions ioyned with me, and ye make me but as one of the common sort, so as I must bee as good as no body: I enounce you and giue you ouer y<sup>e</sup> may goe to the deuil; for I will haue no more to doe with you. So then let vs marke well, that to serue our God aright, we must yeelde such preheminance to his maiestie, as to depende all wholly vpon his worde and doctrine, without adding any thing to that which hee commaundeth, as shall be declared more at length in the next Lecture.

Nowe furthermore, whereas it is sayde that the [very] remembrance of ydolles must be rooted out: it is to the end that folke shoulde be the better aduised. Truly God sheweth vs on the one side (as I haue sayde) howe greatly he hateth all ydolatrie, seeing hee willett men to burne the woods & all that euer hath serued to the maintenance thereof, insomuch that hee will haue the very stones beaten to powder, and the golde and siluer broken, so as all may be quite & cleane done away. Seeing that God doth so condemne the creatures which are good as in respect of the selues, because they haue bene instruments of superstition: thereby we see well that hee can in no wise away with ydolatrie. Besides this hee hath alwayes respect to the frailtie of man: for as soone as we meete with any thing, by and by we be miscarried: wee bee euer starting one way or other. And what is the cause? Naturally we be inclined to ydolatrie: and because wee bee earthly and fleshly; wee bee euer imagining of God some thing that seemeth good to ourselues, by reason whereof wee turre him into sundrie shapes. If we haue neuer so small an occasion, by and by we be drawn vnto euill. If a flye do but crosse our eyes, we make an ydoll of it. We see then wherat God looked when hee gaue so strait commaundement to beate downe the altars, to heaue downe the groues, to burne vp the woods, to breake the images, and to destroy the puppets vtterly. For had those things continued still among the Iewes; there would euer haue beene some among them, which would haue giuen themselues to the superstitions of the heathen. Tust, would they haue sayd: what and if a man had deuotio<sup>n</sup> to it: it is a hallowed thing: like as at this day, such as haue bene nussed in papistrice, are so held to it as long as they see their pelting trash, that they can neuer winde themselues out of it, though they would neuer so faine. If a man that hath bene long inured to the Masse doe see a chalice: his minde giues him still that there is some holinesse in it; whereas cleane contrariwise it is as filthie and stinking an infection as any can be, and yet notwithstanding wee can not conceiue it. For why? As I sayde afore, we be fleshly by nature: and besides that, Satan vseth such slight, that when he setteth such things before our eyes to beguile vs with, we be staired by them out of hande; and therefore there is none other remedie, but to make cleane riddaunce of all such things as may allure vs to superstition. Truly if their were puppettes among vs as are in the Popedome, it might be allcaged that they could not hurt vs as long as they were not worshipped. In deed it is true that they of themselues could not hurt vs: but lette vs looke into ourselues, and we shall finde ourselues so weake, that wee shoulde be blinded immediatly by such baggage, and it would turne vs away from Gods pure worde, insomuch that if we had altars still, we should not knowe that the Lordes supper were ministred vnto vs to the intent wee should be partakers of him, and inioy all his goods: but there would 10 remaine I wote not what a wicked imagination of y<sup>e</sup> hellish Sacrifice which is done in the pope doinge; namely of the Masse, wherein men thinke that Christ is offered there to GOD his father for the remission of our sinnes. And so there would alwayes remaine some wicked fancie still in our heade. That is the cause why God hath so straitly commaunded to breake the ymages, destroy the altars, and burne vpp the woods or groues where ydolles haue bene serued and worshipped. The Papis in these dayes replie that that commaundement was giuen but to the Iewes, because they were giuen to superstition. Verily as who should say that we were better disposed nowadayes than they were. True it is that GOD giueth not this commaundement to vs as touching the Ceremonie of burning all things wherewith ydolles haue bene serued: but yet for all that, his will is that we should make cleane riddaunce of all things that may turne vs from the pure religion. If it were of necessitie that all things shoulde bee doone away wherewith ydolles haue bene worshipped; this temple shoulde not nowe stande to haue the name of GOD preached in it. It hath bene a brothel-hou<sup>s</sup>e of Satans, but nowe must wee apply it to good vse, by taking away the trumperie that hath reigned in it, which was quite contrarie to Gods worde. But howe soeuer the worlde goe, if we looke well vpon our infirmities, wee shall finde that this Ieston belongeth to vs at this day, namely that all remembrance of ydolles is to bee vtterly rafed out. And nowe in-30 much as the maladie of superstition is so rooted in vs, there is none other remedie for it, but to take away all obiectes that may moue vs there-40 unto, that the deuil may haue no more any meanes to intangle vs in his nettes which hee layeth for vs: but that wee may knowe simply after what manner God wilbe worshipped and serued.

Also we may gather further vpon this text, howe mad men bee in their superstitions, accordingly as the prophetes doe speake thereof. For they vse such similitudes as these; namely that men not onely resemble such folke as are carried away with sonde loue, and haue lost both 100 honestie, witte, and countenance; but also resemble horses that ney after Mares, and such other brute beastes. Yee see then after what manner the wretched Idolaters are carried away in their superstitions. And this is declared vnto vs, in that wee heare him speaking of woods of high grouts, as men terme them, and of Mountaines and Hillis. For there was not that odde nooke wherein the Iewes hadde not

some peculiar deuotion; after which manner wee see howe out ydolaters also haue poylond the fountaynes, Woods and Hilles with the filthinesse of their superstitions and charmes. Wherefoeuer was any notable thing, by and by there was reared some Temple, or there was some chappell builded, and all to worshippe some ydol in. There is neuer any ende or measure when men take leaue after that fashion to worshippe G O D after their owne liking. 10 And forasmuch as wee see that, wee ought to brydle our selues the more, that we attempt not any thing without the warrant of Gods worde. For if we hold not ourselues within our bounds, and as it were tye our selues simplye to that which G O D hath commaunded: it can not bee but that Satban shall leade vs out of the way, so as there will be horrible confusion in our case.

The first reason then is, that such as will 20 needes serue G O D after their owne fancie, doe alwayes goe into such a dungeon as they can neuer gette out of againe, and they fall continually from one superstition to an other. Marke that for one point. And on the other side wee see howe greatly it will bee to our condemnation, that we can not finde in our heartes to dedicate our liues vnto G O D, seeing that the ydolaters are vs carried away by their foolishne fantasies, that they haue neuer doone with them, nor can neuer thinke themselves superstitious ynough. Therefore if we for our parte seeke not to keepe ourselues in obedience to our G O D, what will become of vs? For God hath layde such a yoke vpon our neckes, as is gentle ynough. He hath an eye to our infirmitie, hee giueth vs such strength as he knoweth to be meete for vs, hee beareth with vs as gently as may bee. And yet for all this, hee can not compasse vs, wee bee so nice as is pittie to see. 40 Wee fall to complaying and say; Alas, G O D pincheth vs too sore. And if wee doe him but halfe seruice, yea or but the hundredth parte of our ducie, wee thinke hee ought to holde himselfe contented with it: whereas in the meane while the ydolaters dee martyre themselves out of measure, they indure after a sorte the peines of damned soules, and they are euer readie to increase their superstitions.

Wherefore let vs looke well to ourselues; and seeing it is not lawfull for vs to attempt any thing beyonde Gods will: but it behoueth vs to knowe what he requireth of vs, and to submitte our selues wholly vnto him: lette vs be gentle and meeke minded to beare the yoke patiently which G O D layeth vpon vs, seeing it is neither harde nor greuous (as I sayde afore). And seeing that the ydolaters doe so followe their geere, and nothing can stay their trotting and gadding, but that they doe as it were flye to the seruing of their ydolls: Lette vs steppe forward also, sith wee see that our Lorde sheweth vs the way, yea and such a way as thought it be verie harde as in respect of our corruption, is neuertheless verie playne and easie to vs, in respect of the grace of his holy spirit.

Heere is this moreouer, that Moses sayeth not heere, y<sup>e</sup> the Iewes shall destroy and breake the ydolls in all places wherefoeuer they become: but that G O D commaundeth them to doe it in the lande that is giuen them to inherit. Wherein wee see that the holy Ghost commaundeth not all the faithfull in generall to pull downe and to breake all ydolls in the worlde: but onely where they themselves haue authoritie. And it is a point well worth the noting. For if we be among ydolaters, it lyeth not in vs to ridde the Lande from the superstitions that reigne in it. What is to bee doone then? Euerie inan must reforme himselfe in his owne heart, so as all ydolls may be thrust out from thence. When I see Gods seruice corrupted any where, I must forbear to haunt that place or to communicate in companie with those ydolaters. I must cutte off all the wicked affections that are in my fleshe, and I must shew moreouer that I am not minded to forsake my G O D, nor to falsifie the faith that I haue plighted vnto him by desiling myselfe with the ydolarries that are about mee. Therefore euerie man must first and foremost reforme his owne heart, and secondly separate himselfe from all things that may defile him. And that is because G O D hath giuen vs a charge of our owne persons, and made vs as it were keepers of his temples, to the intent that euery of vs shoulde looke narrowly to ourselues. That is a thing which it behoueth vs to doe when wee be in the countrey of Idolaters. Besides this, euery man must purge and cleanse his owne house from all filthinesse. So as if a man be a housholder, hee must looke well about him that he hold well his children and seruantes in the feare of G O D and in the purenesse of religion. For if a man suffer his house to be defiled, and all things there to goe to hauocke: hee shalbe sure to make account thereof to God. Not that a man can holde his wife and seruants continually tyed to his seruice to turne them to the christian faith when hee lyeth: but my meaning is, that hee must not suffer any superstition or ydolarrie. For why? Seeing that G O D hath giuen him soueraigntie in his owne house; it behoueth him to deale in such wise as G O D bee honoured there, and as no filthinesse be mingled with the pure religion, but that all be ridde quite and cleane away. But as for Kinges, Princes, and Magistrates, which haue power and authoritie, they must roote out all superstition and ydolarrie. And seeing that G O D hath armed them with the sword: it behoueth them to vse it in that behalfe, so as they doe not in any wise suffer or giue leaue, that there be anie vncleannesse to greue G O D withall, or to abolish or deface his seruice. Those are y<sup>e</sup> things which we haue to marke vpon this text of Moses. And therefore to be short, let vs remember that hee commaundeth euery of vs to keepe cleane his owne body body and soule. For why? God hath laide such a charge vpon vs, that he will haue vs to be the Temples of his holy Ghost: and therefore hee will haue curie of vs to keep his bodie as cleane as can bee. Nowe then let vs bee carefull: to drine al idolatrie farre from vs, and not to meddle with it in any wife. And agayne, let curie of vs haue an eye to his householde, that there bee no infection in it to mar the seruice of God. And thirdly let those that are in estate of cheefe founteintie; as kinges, Princes and magistrates, let them I say consider, that sith the Lord hath giuen them authoritie and power, if they suffer his seruice to bee defaced; they shall bee called to account for it. For it is saide that when thou art come into the lande: thou must drine out al Idolatrie, and vtterly deface whatsoeuer hath serued to any superstition.

And in speaking after that manner, Moses sheweth that the putting away of idols is not all that wee haue to doe: but that the cheefe point is the aduancing, restoring and establishing of Gods pure seruice. And that is well worthe to be noted. For wee shall see a great number nowadayes, which can wel enough mocke at the follies of the Pope, & at the abuses which reigne vnder his tyrannie. They dare well enough eat flethe vpon frydayes, and they make no great account of Lent & Saints cuens, or of the taking of holy water, or of kissing of Reliques, or of gadding on Pilgrimage, or of anie other such petie traie. They haue no great deuotion to y<sup>e</sup> masse, or to Shrite, neither passe they for the deade, or for the singing [of diriges and such other paltrick] for such as are deceased. Wee shall see a great number that can well enough despise all the superstitions of the Popedome, yea and euen laugh them to skorne and vtterly condemn thē. But what? There is no feare of God, there is no Religion in them. Surely it were much better for them to haue gone on still like brute beastes in their ignorance, than by such contempte to fall to rushing against Gods Maiestie like wilde beastes, and not to perceine that there is a God which reigneth ouer the whole worlde. Then doeth it not greatly boote to haue abolished Idols, except the true religion bee set vp in the steede of it: Like as when a house is builded amisse, if it be saide to bee nothing worth, or that there be many faultes in it; it shall be wel done to pull it downe againe, whereas notwithstanding if it were let alone in the same plight, so as a man had leuer to haue some Hoggecote to lodge in, yet for all the insauorednesse and faultinesse of it, it would serue his turne after a sorte being let stande still: but if it were pulled downe and rased to the grounde and none other builded vp in steede thereof, the pulling downe of it were to no purpose at all.

Let vs marke then that here Moses deliuereth vs a perfecte doctrine which consisteth of two rules: Namely that wee worship our G O D purely; and moreover that all superstitions bee cast downe, so as nothing may hinder the worshipping of God according to his worthinesse, but that men may haue an eye to him alone, & holdethemselues alonely to his Maiestie. And first he speaketh of the abolishing of al superstitions. Why so? For if a man intende to til & sow a feelde, if the same bee full of bryers, thornes, and noysome weedes, he must first and foremost cleanse y<sup>e</sup> ground, or else he must breake it vp wth y<sup>e</sup> plough to kil wicked weedes before he lay his seede into it. Euen so must all corruptions be taken from among vs, ere we can giue our selues ouer to the seruing of God. Well may it be preached vnto vs that there is but one God whome we ought to worshipping: but if wee bee possessed aforehande with fond fancies or imaginations, we shall be neuer the better for it, but our minds shall euer be intangled. That is the cause why Moses beginneth at that ende. But yet hee addeth further, that it is not inough to haue cleansed a peece of grounde, vntill it be also tilled & sowed, that it may bring forth fruite, for else it will continue barren still. And what is a man the better then for his plucking vp of the bushes and brambles that were in it afore? That is the thing which is shewed vs here. But first let vs marke, that it is but a flat mockerie, when men will needes set fourth Gods worde, without correcting of the vices that are contrarie to the right religion; after which manner there are a number to be founde nowadayes in the Popedome, which rowe betwene two streames, of which sorte are these hypocrites which haue perchance some taste of the Gospell, and can boast indeede of the preaching of Gods worde. But howe is that? Whereas they see the wretched worlde as sore blinded and besot as may be, so as nothing else is minded but idolatrie and superstition: yet they thinke it enough for them to say, there is but one God whome it behoueth vs to worshipping. They dare not say that he onely is to be worshipped: but let vs worship God, say they. And will not the Paynims say as much? Haue not the Papists alwayes sayd the same? And yet when they haue saide, wee haue Iesus Christ for our aduocate: it is seene neuertheless, that they let him alone behinde them and run gadding after the patrons which the worlde hath deuided, and holde the wretched world at such a bay, that (like a sort of traitors to God and his Church) they make me beleue that it is not euill to be partakers of all the abominations that are committed in it. But we see howe Gods meaning is cleane contrarie. For Moses saith not onely, You shall serue the Lorde your God: but before hee come to that point, he saith, Ye shall beat downe the Altars, breake the images, burne the groues, and make cleane riddance of all that euer hath serued vnto wickednesse: curie: whil of it must be vtterly done away. And why. For had the people continued still in such infections: it had bene vnpossible that God shoulde haue bene worshipped purely. Then it is not enough for a man to giue some tast of Gods truth: but if we see that Leasinges haue borne swaye aforetimes; they must be cut off, men must erie out against them, men must be reformed, they must be brought into the right way, and they must not bee sufferred to stray so any more. But yet therewithall let vs also learne, that when men haue cryed out against superstitions, they must not stay there: but they must chiefly proceed to y<sup>e</sup> setting vp againe of Gods seruice, as Moses speaketh thereof. For the very cause why there are so many Pictures in the worlde nowadayes, and why there are so manie folke that resemble swine and brut beastes rather than men: is that they be contented to mocke at the fondnesse and ignorance of the vnbeleeuers, and yet could neuer skill themselves what it is to worshippe GOD purely, and to stick to him, and to humble themselves to his worde. And therefore it is meete that they should be giuen vp to a reprobate sence, & that GOD should giue them the bridle, that they might no more haue any honestie, humanitie or aught else in them that is good. Wherefore let vs learne not onely to know that Papistes are miserable & wretched creatures, and to condemne them in all their follies & superstitions: but also to be ready to goe vnto God when he calleth vs.

And let vs vnder stand that when he hath bene so gracious vnto vs as to teach vs the true religion and doctrine of his Gospel, thereby he sheweth vs that it is he onely whome we ought to worship. Thus ye see what we haue to remember vntill the rest may be laide forth more fully.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our GOD with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feeble the more iucly, that being cast downe and as it were ouerwhelmed in our selues, we may go seeke y<sup>e</sup> mercie which he hath promised vs for our Lord Iesus Christes sake. And seeing he hath graunted vs the grace to put away all superstitions from among vs, let vs beseech him that his seruice may be so set vp againe, as he suffer vs not to become heathenish, but that as he hath once sanctified vs, so we may holde out in the same, and profit continually more and more therein, vntill we haue finished the course of this life. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth &c.

3. 4. 5 But looke what place fouer &c.

6 And thither shall yee bring your burnt offerings, and your sacrifices, and your tithes, and the heaue offerings of your handes, and your vowes, and your free-will offerings, and the first borne of your kine and sheepe.

7 And there shall you eat before the Lorde your God, and be merrie both you and your household in all things that you set your hande vnto, wherein the Lorde your God shall haue blessed you.

IN the Doctrine that I haue deliuered vnto you alreadie, there are two partes. The one is that God will haue all things vterly rooted out wherewith Idols haue bene serued. And good reason hath hee so to doe, because he seeth the frailtie of men: for if we haue neuer so small an occasion, by and by we be miscaried. For Idolatry is so rooted in our heartes, that we haue neede as it were to plucke ourselues from it by force: and what wil then become of vs, when we be drawn to it? Let vs marke wel therefore, that forasmuch as we be inclined to superstition, if we intende to serue GOD, we must put away all things that may turne vs from the right way, & from the simplicitie which God commaundeth vs. And men cannot stand too much vpon their gard in that case. True it is that a number of us do weene ourselves to be so strong, y<sup>e</sup> although they be neuer somuch conuerfant among y<sup>e</sup> superstitions of the vnbeleeuers, yet they shal not be attainted with them: But God is wiser than we. And therefore let vs remember the lesson that he telleth vs: namely that we must thunne all the superstitions of the heathen and the misbeleeuers, or else his seruice will be marred among vs by and by. But forasmuch as I haue declared that part alreadie, I wil stand no longer vpon it.

Let vs proceed to that which Moses addeth, namely that we must not deale so with God: by which saying he meaneth, that the Iewes must not go about to honour the liuing GOD by building vp the altars, Chappels, or any other of all the filthy things again which they had beat downe. As if he shoulde say, GOD will not be serued after the manner of Idols, and therefore regarde not what the heathen haue done, followe them not, neither fashion yourselfes to their example: but holde you to this one rule, of doing that which your God commaundeth you. And this is well worth the noting: for when we haue condemned Idolatry, we cease not for al that to imagine that God liketh well that we shoulde do y<sup>e</sup> same things in honor of him, which were done by the vnbeleeuers: and y<sup>e</sup> appeareth by the dealings in the Popedom. After that the Gospel had bene preached to the worlde, men fell to mingling of al maner of superstitions of y<sup>e</sup> heathen with the true seruice of God. And what was the cause cause thereof? The heathen had their Pilgrimages: and men knewe well it was a diuelliſhe abuſe: neuer theleſſe they did not put them quite and cleane away, they did but onely change them. In ſteede of going on pilgrimage to ſuch an Idol, they goc now to our Ladie of Laurette, to * the holy handkercher, to Saint Michael, to Saint James, and to viſite the holy Sepulchre. Men ſhould haue vterly rooted out all y things that had bene ſo brought in by Satan, and in ſteed thereof they did but change them. Whereas men ſaw that the heathen made great feaſts, and kept a great number of ſolemne holy dayes in honour of their Idols: O (quoth they) wee muſt no more doe ſoe, for that were a ſeruing of the diuell: but let euery pariſhe make a Church-holyday, to play, to daunce, and to feede in till they burſt againe, and all in the honour of God. Beſides this, let euery one haue their patron, and let them worſhippe him. And ſo in ſteade of the ſolemne feaſtes that were among the heathen, let others be brought in among vs. O ſirs (ſay they) theſe thinges are not doone any more in honour of the Idols; but in honour of Saint Martine. And then let them daunce and playe the drunckerdes, for all is well enough ſo it be done in the honour of God. Againe the heathen were wont to keepe a holy day which they called the feaſt of all Spirits: and we muſt change y word and haue the feaſt of all Soules. Moreouer the heathen had a Temple which was called the Temple of all goddes: and wee doe nowe call it the Church of all Saintes or all Hallowes. See what an act worthe of remembraunce and an Angelicall act the Pope thought hee did, as our Papiſts can well ſkill to make their bragges. For ſo (ſay they) there is a temple called the Temple of all the gods: but what? Wee haue but one God, and therefore it muſt not continue after that faſhion. Wel, we will change the worde, and whereas the heathen had a Temple which they called the Temple of All their gods, we will haue it the Church of all Hallowes, and we will haue a Church-holyday added to it. Again when they ſawe that the heathen had their ſacrifices: Needes muſt they alſo haue their Maſſes ſet vp in the roome of them. Moreouer perceiuing that the heathen had their waſhings, they alſo would needes haue their holywater. To be ſhort, whatſoeuer ſilth and infection was among the Infidels; the Papiſts tooke it to themſelues to keepe. And what was the cauſe thereof? Euen for want of taking heed to this text, wherein it is ſaide that whereas the Infidels haue many deuotions deuifed of their owne braine; we muſt not couet to doe the like to our God, nor looke that way; but we muſt hearken what he ſaith and commandeth. Were this ſaying of Moſeſes vnderſtoode; all the diuelliſh deuifes that haue reigned & doe reigne ſtill at this day in the Popedom, ſhould get them away to the bottome of hell. For we ſee here a generall condemnation, whereby GOD ſheweth that he heareth al ſuch things. And why? Becauſe he will not haue men to deale with him as the ignorant doe with their Idols. A thing may ſeeme faire to the worldwarde, & men may clap their hands at it: but behold God ſaith here, I wil not be ſerued after ſuch faſhion, or ſuch manner, let not men preſume into my preſence to deuife what they think good theſelues. And if it be alledged, yea, but ſhall ſuch a thing be ſhilt taken, when I doe it in the honour of God? Shall be ſaid that I ſerue Idols, when I doe ſuch a thing of a good intent, and all to ſerue God? Is it ſo great an euil that men ſhould cry out at it? No, no, men muſt hearken what God commandeth, and ground themſelues altogether thereon, ſo as they preſume not to adde any thing therunto. We ſee then that the meaning of this text is, that we muſt forget all the follies that haue beguiled vs, and not alledge cuſtome or continuance of time, but receiue the doctrine of the holy ſcripture like little children. A yong child will not ſay, thus and thus haue I bene taught; for he knoweth yet nothing at all: But he receiueth that which is put to him, and is the readier to learne, becauſe he is not inured aforehande with anie maner of miſteaching. But if a child haue bene miſtaught and nuſed in his fondnes: then if a man go about to amend him, O (ſayes he) I waſtaught ſo, and a man ſhal not be able to make him pronounce one ſyllable aright, nor to ſpeake one worde to any purpoſe. And why ſo? Becauſe he hath bin trained by an Aſſe, who hath framed him to his owne faſhion, and hee hath learned y right trick of him. After the ſame manner it is with a great number of folke that haue been brought vp in curſed poperie: alwayes they hold ſtil ſome reliques of it, ſaying, Yea ſir, but can ſuch a thing be euil? There is euer ſome reaſoning againſt God. But as for vs, let vs prauiſe y which is ſaide in the foure & forth Pſalme: My daughter, forget thine owne people and thy fathers houſe, and thy husband wil take pleaſure in thee. We know that in that place our ſpiritual marriage with Ieſus Chriſt is deſcribed vnder y perſon of Salomon. And firſt of all we be commanded to forget all that cuer is of our owne. For by our people and by our fathers houſe, is meant all that cuer we haue of nature, all things that we haue loued afore, and all the pleaſures & delights wherewith we haue bene helde backe. All theſe thinges muſt be thruſt vnder foote, or elſe the ſonne of God wil neuer like of vs, whoſe calling of vs to him is to make vs all one with himſelfe. Alſo we muſt put the ſame thing in vre which I haue alledged heretofore out of Sainte Peter: namely that we muſt be like newborne babes. For when a child beginneth at his Apſie he is eaſie to be taught and ſuffereth himſelfe to be ouer ruled: euen ſo in al things, let vs learne this leſſon which God teacheth vs in his doctrine, & let al our wiſedome be to obey him. That is the thing which we haue to marke in this texte wherein it is ſaid, thou ſhalt not deale ſo with thy God: for God wil not be weighed in the balance nor ruled by y meſure of Idols; but wil haue me to embrace what ſo euet he commandeth, and to reſt vpon it wout gainingy or replying. For declaration hereof he ſaith, Ye ſhal reſort to the place which hee ſhall haue choſen to put his name in, and ſo dwell in. Which ſaying here is expounded of some to bee his habitation, that is to say, his sanctuary or tabernacle. But all cometh to one end: Gods meaning is plain & vndouful, namely y<sup>e</sup> whereas the heathen had set vp many Altars, builded many Chappels, and gone on many pilgrimages: the Israelites shoulde holde themselves contented with the only sanctuary. Now if it were lawfull for men to bee ruled by their owne reason, y<sup>e</sup> Iewes might here haue pleaded in this wise against God, What, the countrie is great, and shall there be no Altar in no place of it but onely in one? There are diuerse great Cities; and shall there be neuer a Temple in them for men to offer sacrifice in and to doe their deuotions? There are a great number of countreies bordering vpon it, [which doe otherwise;] and shall we in worshipping G O D looke onely vnto heauen? Why shall there be no altar? It might seeme therefore that the Iewes had verie iust cause to refuse this commaundement and to say we will bee so deuout that we will haue some signe or marke of Gods dwelling among vs and we will worshipping him, and doe solemne sacrifices vnto him. But what? In this case men must bridle themselves and holde their owne wits in captiuitie, so as they giue God leaue to speake, and they themselves holde their peace, without attempting to go anie further than Gods mouth permitte them. Yee see then howe it is Gods will to humble his seruantes by making them subiect to his word. Wherefore let vs learne that we must not followe our owne sway nor our owne imagination: but this ought to suffice vs, that our seruice be acceptable vnto God, by ordering of it according to his will: there is no other way but that.

And it is said expressly in the place which the euenerlasting, thy God shall choofe; as if he shold say, it is not in the choice of y<sup>e</sup> Iewes to appoint God a place or to say vnto him, here will we sacrifice. Men must not presume so far. It belongeth to thy God to choofe saith Moses. To be short hee will haue Gods autoritie to bee receiued and him onely to be the ruler of his people, so as he may command what he listeth and be obeyed without gain saying. Yee see then that the foundation of true religion is not to say, it seemeth so to me, I weene so, I would faine haue it so, it is a goodly thing; but to let God speake, and to assure our selues that it is not for vs to doe any thing but y<sup>e</sup> which he alloweth. And so is meant by this saying that obedience is more worth before him than all manner of sacrifice. And in verie deed can we doe him any greater honour than to rest vpon his worde, and suffer our selues to be gouerned by it, and to be as poore blinde folkes vntill hee haue lightened vs and shewed vs the way? Now as for those that solow their owne deuotions, they be reue GOD of his fouercintie and yeeld him no reuerence at all: therefore it is but a building in y<sup>e</sup> aire and an vtter confusion. Wherefore let vs weigh wel this word choofe, that we may be fully resolu'd in our selues that none but God hath autoritie to set order how he should be honoured and serued.

And he addeth yet further, from out of al your tribes. Here the people might bee tempted to a kind of ielouse, for we know that men do willingly drawe things to themselves, and that it is a greefe and a corsey vnto vs when others are preferred before vs. The same might bee also among the Iewes. The lande of Chanaan is diuided into twelue tribes, for the Tribe of Ioseph made two, and the Levites had no portion at all. But yet for all that, yee see there were twelue Tribes, which had euery one his portion to inherite. Now G O D tolde them that his Tabernacle should be set in Ierusalem; and that his temple should be builded vpon mount Sion. Here vpon the residue might haue quarelled thus: What? Are not we the children of Abraham as well as they? with whom is it that G O D hath made his couenant? Are we not al of one stocke? Why then shoulde the Tribe of Iuda be preferred before vs? (specially seeing he is not the first begotten. Both y<sup>e</sup> birth right belong vnto him? Why then shoulde hee be more honoured than all the rest? Whence hath hee this priuiledge? After that manner might the matter bee debated. Also it might be alledged that the Arke ought to be remoued euery moneth of the yere fro one tribe to an other throughout al y<sup>e</sup> twelue Tribes. There are twelue moneths in the yere, and we be twelue tribes of vs: and therefore wee ought to begin according to the order of birth-right, so as the eldest haue the carying of the Arke the first moneth, and euery Tribe after in his order. Were it not reason it shoulde be so? Yee see then that the rest of the Tribes might haue made that allegation when they sawe the Tribe of Iuda preferred before all the other Tribes. But Moses presenteth that, saying, it belongeth vnto thy G O D to choofe and to commaunde what hee thinketh good. According whereunto it is saide in the Psalmes, that the land of Chanaan was in deede made holy, and that God had promised it to his seruant Abraham. But what? He refused the tribes of Manasses and Ephraim, and rested not there, but choofe the Tribe of Iuda. And why? because it pleased him. If a man shoulde looke vpon the outwarde apparence, it is wel known that the kingdome of Israell was farre greater than the kingdom of Iuda. True it is that in king Dauids time they were all one kingdome; but when the people fell away, then the Tribe of Ephraim became of greatest honour among them: but yet for all that, God reserued this dignitie to the citie of Ierusalem and to mount Sion, that hee woulde be worshipped there. Sith it is so, let vs vnderstande that to serue G O D aright, men must vncase themselves of al pride, so as they seeke not to aduaunce themselves, but submit themselves wholly to Gods wil without regarding to bee honoured about others after the ambitious manner of the Papistes which strue who shall goe foremost to the offering. They pretend to doe it of deuotion; but indeed they doe it of diuclish pride. And therefore if we wil haue God to accept our seruice, let vs learne to come vnto him with humilitie and not to turne our tayles to our neighbours: & if god vouchsafe to endue any others with greater grace than our selues, wee must not spyte them for it, as wee be warned of it. Wee see that God distributeth his giftes more vnto one than vnto another; What is nowe to bee doone? should wee haue spite at it? Should wee be gafe aboute vs howe to make our selues iolie fellows? Alas wee doe but wander away from GOD when we steppe forth to aduance our selues before men. Therefore let vs proceede with all lowliness, and not bee so fondly and wickedlie disposed as to haue a will to bee preferred before our neighbours. And so we see what Moses meant to expresse here in saying, God wil choose him out some certaine place from among thy tribes: and let it not greue them that are put backe from it. For why? If it bee Gods will to humble them, they shall gayne nothing by their coming to rushe against him. And therefore let euery man holde himselfe contented with his degree and measure, and let him that is little holde himselfe contented with his littleness.

Deut. 10. 9.

Psal. 78. 67.

And nowe hee addeth expressly also, that God will choose a place to put his name in. Whereby he meaneth that he is not to be inclosed in it as in respect of his substance. For (as I haue declared afore) there are alwayes two things which it behooueth vs to marke well. When we haue an outward order or forme of seruing God, wee must obserue two things therein. The one is that forasmuch as God seeth vs to be rude and earthly, hee stoopeth vnto vs, and pleasureth vs so far, as to giue vs things fit for vs. As for example, when wee in praying doe vse these ceremonies of kneeling down, of putting off our cappes, and lifting vp our hands: wherefore doe we so? It is not for that GOD hath neede of it for his part, but for our owne weakenesse sake. Because we bee ouer grosse, we bee faine to be exercised after that fashion. After the same manner wee haue Baptisme, and the Lords holy Supper, all which things are for the weakenesse of our nature. And so ye see that that is one thing which wee haue to marke on our part. But when as God beareth with vs after that fashion, let vs beware that wee firme him not to be like our selues, or that wee thinke him not to behaue himselfe after our lust. For men are alwayes in daunger of falling into that extremitie. The thing then in effect which Moses ment to say, is this: The Lord will choose him a place to set his sanctuarie in, there will he haue you to worshipp him: there will he haue you to offer your sacrifices to him, thither will hee haue you to bring your oblations; there will he haue you to honor him wth your persons & goods, protecting your selues to bee wholy at his deuotion. But yett must you not thinke that your God is come downe from heauen and shut vp in a cofer or chest. You must not thinke that he sitteth betweene Cherubins after the manner of men; but that it is ynough for you that his name is there, that is to say that he giueth you some token of his presence and power, to the intent ye may be sure that he will heare all our prayers and be mercifull to you. And yett for all that hee filleth heauen and earth, howsoever the worlde goe. Therefore ye must not fall to shutting vp of the infinite maiestie and substance of your God, into a corner, or into a materiall & corruptible Temple. Beware of such superstition, and be contented with the hauing of his name, that is to say, y<sup>e</sup> your God is there called vpon, that his Law is there preached to you, that his promises are there set before you, that you be grounded vpon his grace, that you neede not to doubt but that he is your father and Sauior, that you may boldly sue vnto him, and that you be sure he is ready to receiue your requests. That is the intent why your God is minded to be among you.

Of this place we haue a good lesson to gather, which is, that seeing God hath ordeyned means agreeable to our infirmitie to serue him withall; we ought to vse them, according to this saying, shew shall seeke out that place. For Moses haung warned the Iewes of their rudenesse, commaundeth the to besceite themselves by such meanes as the Lord teacheth them: that is to wit, by the ceremonies which he would giue them. Nowe adayes we haue not the like ceremonies to those that were vnder the lawe. But yett doth our Lord beare with vs also, so farre forth as hee seeth it requisite, and giueth vs such ceremonies as are meet for vs, in respect whereof we haue the meetings that are made among vs, as I haue saide afore. And why? To the end that Gods worde should be preached to vs, that we should make cōmon prayers as it were with one mouth, that we should confesse our faith, and christendome together, and that y<sup>e</sup> Sacramentes should be ministered in the companie of the faithful. Seeing y<sup>e</sup> our Lord giueth vs such meanes, it behooueth vs to vse them. For whosoever despiseth the, mocketh God openly. Let vs marke wel that whatsoeuer our Lord hath ordeined for our behoofe, we must receiue it, & be diligent to strengthen our faith therby dayly more & more. For if I thinke my selfe to be so perfect, y<sup>e</sup> I passe not to come at y<sup>e</sup> Church, there to besceite my selfe with others: it is a diuillish ouerweening; and it were better for me that I were some poore begger that had neither witte nor vnderstanding, (so as in the meane while I knewe mine owne pouertie) than to be so high minded. For it is the next way to cast me downe to the bottome of hell, when I will needes exempt my selfe from the common order. And therefore whosoever hath any zeale and affection to serue God, must doe that which is commaunded here in seeking the place that God hath appointed: that is to say, he must not holde skorne of any thing which he hath ordeined for the confirming of our faith. That is one point.

Againe we must alwayes beare in minde, that when God vouchsafeth to plant his name among vs, we must not serue him after our owne fashion, and after our owne rude manner: for his seruice is alwayes spirituall, and the things that he sheweth vs here beneath, must draw vp aloft to heauen. And hereby a man may see howe the wretched world hath bin beguiled. For y<sup>e</sup> greatest warrant that we haue of our Lorde Iesus Christs presence among vs, is lest vs in his holy supper. There he doeth as it were put himself into our handes, of purpose to be incorporated into vs, as the breade and wine become one substance with vs when we haue eaten it and taken sustenance of it. The sonne of God sheweth himselfe familiarly vnto vs. Yet for all this, we must not imagine that he is come downe from heauen, & that we handle him herbetweene our pawes, 10 or that he is inclosed within any certaine place. No: but his comming downe to vs, is to drawe vs vp to him. Therefore when wee receiue the communion, let it content vs that wee haue there a good and sure pledge of the grace of our Lord Iesus Christ, and that we be sure of his dwelling in vs, and of our being one with him. And yet for all that, we must not be so fleshly and grosse, as to ducke downe our heades to it, or to worship it: but rather wee must beholde 20 him by faith in his heauenly glorie, & seeke him there. For wee see howe beauly the papistes became: They beare themselves in hande that there was no God at all, if hee were not shutte vp in a boxe: they worshipped Iesus Christ after such a grosse manner, that they became vterly brutish and wilde. Forasmuch then as we see that the wretched worlde hath bene so bewitched by Satan, let vs resort to the remedy. For the fault grewe of this, that men followed not the rule that is contained in this text, There shall you see, & knowe your god. And why? For there is his name. Where as it is saide you shall seeke him there: it is not meant that ye should shut him vp there: but that ye should there glorifie his name. True it is: that notwithstanding the chosing of that place, yet the people were still taught to serue him spiritually. For God renounced not his own nature, when he appointed a temple to be worshipped in: but his doing thereof was to the end 40 that the people should exercise themselves continually in his spiritual seruice, notwithstanding that the Ceremonies were outward. That is the thing which we haue plainly to gather out of that place.

Nowe we haue to marke likewise, that God helde his people a long time in suspence, before hee shewed them the place where hee would dwell for euer. True it is, that wherofouer the Arke was, there the sacrifices were to be made. Yet notwithstanding the place was not appointed out, that is to wit Mount Sion. Although the Arke were for the most parte at Silo: yet did it wander vp and downe for a great time, and the people were in continuall wayting where it should rest: and that was a greate temptation. For see what might haue bene saide: G O D promised vs to chooseth out a place: but hee doeth it not. And why then should we not chooseth a place our selues? 60 And why should we not hee like well of vs for so dooing? Howe soeuer the worlde goe, it is not lawefull so to doe. The matter stoode not here vpon tenne, twentie, thirtie, a hundred, or three hundred yeares: but yee see the people were faine to taria a much longer time, euen to the reigne of Dauid. There had bene a number of changes, a great sorte of Iudges one after another, and a great sorte of gouernours: and yet of all that whyle G O D spake not one worde of that matter, whereby it might seeme he had vterly forgotten his promise he had made by Moses. But yet must the people taria his leasure still. And therefore let vs not bee as though wee stood vpon thornes, when our Lorde listeth to holde vs at a bay. Let vs beare in minde that hee tryeth our obedience. If hee vter not things vnto vs at the first as wee woulde wishe, it is his meaning therein to trie vs the better, whether wee can finde in our hearts to be subiect to him or no, & whether we haue the lowlines and reuerence to walk on in the simplicitie of his word. That is the thing which we haue to mark concerning his first point.

Furthermore, wee must vnderstande, that when God hath chosen a place: it is not for vs to remooue to and fro. And yet wee must not be drowned in so brutish superstition, as to thinke that G O D is tyed to the place which hee hath chosen. Indeede it was an excellent prerogative for the citie of Ierusalem: to be called the royall citie of G O D, so as he would vouchsafe to haue his Temple there. But we see what befell them for abusing so honourable a tittle, and for refusing to serue G O D with pure consciences. After that God had patiently wayted for their conuersion, hee withdrewe himselfe from them. When he sawe the Iewes become stubborn; hee tooke away his glorie from that place. Yea and the Prophete Ieremie had vpbroyded them with it aforehande. Goe your wayes to Silo (sayth hee) and see how desolate it is at this day. And yet notwithstanding Silo had bene preferred before Ierusalem. For Gods Arke had bene there a long time, and yet was that place tasted to the grounde. Beholde a thing euen at this present that might make your hayres to stand vp vpon your heades.

Doe yee boast of your Temple (quoth Ieremie?) Thinke you that God is so much bounde vnto you that hee can not withdrawe his glory from thence? The threatenings were vterred by Ieremie; but the people followed still their wicked trade: and in the ende Gods glorie was faine to departe, as is saide by Ezechiell. For the Maiestie of G O D was shewed him in the Temple, so as hee sawe there both heauen and earth, and things that were aboue nature. And yet for all that, hee sawe also that all vanished away as smoake, and the Temple abode empte and was vnhalloved, because G O D had forsaken it and giuen it ouer. Whereby wee see done to vnderstande, that when our Lorde sheweth vs fauour aboue others, we must liue the more warily and fearefully; and that if wee will continue in the possession of the benefites that we haue receyued, we must not abuse them. Had Rome bene chosen as was Ierusalem, howe proude would they haue bene? For although they boast themselves to haue the Apostolike sea, and that the Pope is the head of the worlde, so as the vniuersall su-premacie of all things is there: yet haue they not one syllable for them in the holy Scripture, but haue vsurped all that euery they challenge to themselves, and they haue no colour that God liketh of them. But what though there were some text that God gaue preheminence to that Citie? Yet we see that as now it is a very dungeon of hell, insomuch that they haue not onely burst out into all manner of leaudnesse, and by all means wrought dishonour vnto God: but also are become as voyd of religion as Sodome, so as the deuils themselves haue more feare and reuerence to Godward, than all those filthy and stinking rable that rule the roste there. Seeing then that there is such contempt of God, and so outrageous wickednesse there, thinke wee that God is so bound vnto them, that he cannot depart from them? He had said of Ierusalem, This is my resting place: but of Rome he neuer sayde any such thing. And therefore wee see what a fondnesse it is to make such bragges as to say, that howsoeuer the Pope doe, yet is hee still the head of the Church. Nay contrarywise wee haue God for our head, and it is not lawfull for vs to change him, except we wil go to destruction with those whome wee see to haue bene so farre ouerseen after that fashion. And nowe sith wee see that this is fallen out in the Popedome, let vs looke well to it when God dwelleth among vs, that we driue him not away, but that we serue him with all purenesse, that as hee reigneth ouer vs at the present, so he may continue with vs to the ende, and neuer forsake vs. That is the thing which wee haue to beare in mind when we looke vpon the examples that befell both to Silo and to Ierusalem. I say, to Silo where the Arke had bene a long time: and to Ierusalem where the place was appointed for the building of the Temple, according to the promise that Moses had made.

And now hee addeth, That they should resort thither to offer their Sacrifices and burnt offerings, there to doe all their deuotions, and to pay all their voves. As if he should say, that they might not attempt any thing vpon their owne fond heads, but hearken vnto God, and be gouerned by his only word. And herewithall wee must call to minde what hath bene touched afore; namely that Gods ordaining of Sacrifices, burnt offerings, voves, and such like things, was not for any neede that hee himselfe had of them, or for that they could stand him in any stead: but to keepe the people occupied with those ceremonies, and all because men are so fraile and earthly. God then did ordaine Sacrifices, And to what purpose? To instruct folke withall. For when the Iewes came therunto, it was for them to consider thus with themselves: Wee be wretched sinners, wee be not worthy to approche vnto the Makie of our God, for he is righteous and the verie righteousnesse it selfe, he is the fountaine of all cleannesse, and wee on our side bring nothing to him but all manner of filth and vncleannesse. Therefore it stood the Iewes in hand to haue some meanes to wash themselves and to make themselves cleane before God. It stood them in hand to bee discharged of their debtes, and of the curse wherein they felt themselves to bee wrapp'd. For the dooing whereof God gaue them the said Sacrifices. When they came to him, they protested on y one side, Alas Lord, wee deserue death, but wee hope that thou wilt heare vs for the bloods sake which is to bee shed for the washing away of our spottes. Besides this, they had washings, wherby they were made to acknowledge thus: True it is Lord that wee be full of filth, but it is in thee to make vs cleane. And so yee see that the Sacrifices were ordained to instruct the people, as I sayde afore, and wee likewise haue the same order at this day, which God would haue to continue still among the Christians. And therefore let vs referre all to that ende, namely that in asmuch as wee be grosse and rude, it is for our behoofe to be exercised with some Ceremonies. Yea, but yett must not those bee of our owne inuention. For wee shall neuer haue doone, if we go to worke after our owne fashion. Let vs content our selues with the playne things that are contained in Gods woord. For that is all our wisdome.

Finally Moses addeth, There shall yee eate and drinke in the presence of your God, both you and your households. And when yee come thither your God will blesse you. Heere Moses addeth that when the people submit themselves after the manner afore said, God will make them to prosper. That is the effect of his meaning heere. And heere withall he sheweth vs, that euen in the matters y concerne this temporall life, we must dedicate all things to the seruing and honour of our God. And that is a thing well worthy to bee marked. For wee see howe the worlde is desirous to discharge it selfe in such wise to Godward, that when they haue once serued God a little, they would haue truse for a good while after. As how? When the greatest hypocrites in the Popedome haue performed all their ceremonies in their Churches, as the besprinkling of themselves with their holy water, their crossing of themselves, and their much numbling of their Mea culpa: they beare themselves in hand that all the day after they may turne their backs vpon God as soone as they haue turned their rayles from the Church, and God seeth them no more. For why? He is well payde, and he must holde himselfe contented. After that manner doe men behaue themselves. And why so? It is because that although wee knowe Gods seruice to bee spirituall, yett notwithstanding wee consider not that all things which wee doe in this present life must be referred to the seruice of GOD: like as when wee eate and drinke, it is trewe that the dooing thereof is to sustayne vs in this worlde till GOD take vs out of it. Again, we haue other needfull things to bee doone, as the applying of euery mans trade, in traueling and labouring for his liuing. True it is that all these things are worldly and earthly, and therefore they must not withdrawe vs from the heavenly things, whatsoever come of it. Therefore when we eate and drinke, our taking of our bodily sustenaunce must bee after such a sort, as therewith we must find some further taste of the goodnesse of our God, and joy in him for that hee is our fosterfather, of whom we haue our dayly bread, as wee profess by asking it at his hande. And when we haue taken our repast, wee must proceede to take sustenance of y good things that are prepared for vs in heauen, against wee departe out of this worlde, that wee may haue some beginning of them afore hande, and trauell towards the attaynement of them dayly more and more. That is the thing which Moses ment plainly in this place saying, When yee haue offered sacrifice to your GOD, yee shall make merry there in his presence. For the people were wont to make feastes at their sacrifices. And what maner a ones? Holy feastes: not that God was honoured by their eating and drinking: but for that it was a testifying, that it behoued them to beare in mind that they were all their life long in Gods sight: So as it behoued them not onely to thinke vpon him at the beginning of the yeere, or a three or foure times a yeere when they came to Ierusalem to do sacrifice, but also to thinke thus with themselves continually: Although wee bee farre off from the Temple, so as wee cannot bee there to doe our sacrifices: yet doth not our GOD sayle to regarde vs: for hee watcheth ouer vs, and wee bee in his protection. Therefore whensoever wee eate or drinke, let vs assure our selues that hee seeth vs, and we cannot hide our selues out of his sight, neither ought wee on the other side to forget him, as men commonly doe when they be minded to make merry. They friske it out in such sort, as if they thought they could get away from him. But on the contrary parte, Gods will was to doe the people of old time to vnderstand, that whensoever they did eate and drinke, they should thinke that God sawe them. Wee in these dayes haue no such Ceremonie of feasting in Ierusalem and in the places neere about the Temple: but yet doth the truth thereof continue still to vs: which is, that we be done to vnderstand y after we haue beene at the Church, and haue mette there together in the name of our God; when euery of vs returneth home to his house to dinner, we must not let god alone in the Church, and take our leaue of him; but we must beare in mind that God guideth vs, and when we be come home to take our repast euery man by himselfe, we must beaue our selues as in the presence of our God, & our mirth must be after such a sorte, as he may bee the witnesse of our gladnesse. For we know that if our mirth be vnholly, it is cursed of God. Therefore let vs learne to beare alwaies in mind, that our God is our guide euery where, and that he neuer forsaketh vs, to the intent that we on our part shold not be as beastes that runne astray. That is the thing which wee haue to marke vpon this text. The Ceremonie thereof was in force during the time of the Lawe. But as for vs nowadayes, let vs bee contented with the truth therof, & learne to vnderstand y sith our Lord Iesus Christ is come, we neede no more any materiall Temples to tell vs that God is with vs. For our Lord Iesus hath not for naught taken to him y name of Emmanuel <sup>Mat. 1. 18.</sup> (as the Prophet Esay calleth him) that is to say: God with vs. And forasmuch as our Lorde Iesus Christ telleth vs y he wil be with vs continually to y worldes end, let vs not feare but y God will accept vs for his childre, so y in passing through this transitorie life, we haue our eye alwaies vpo him, and goe forward still towards his heauenly kingdom. For then wil he make all the rest to be dedicated to his honor, so as euen our eating & drinking shalbe a peece of his seruice, & he will take it in good worth & like well of it, so that we do wholly worship him, looking to be fed at his hand, not onely with this corruptible foode, but also with such nourishing foode to himselfward, as wee may liue with him the same life that he himselfe liueth.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our innumerable faults, which we comit dayly against his Maiestie without ceassing, praying him to make vs perceiue the better than we haue done, and in the meane while to beare with vs, vntill he haue rid vs quite & cleane from all vices, and vnited vs thoroughly to his righteounesse. And so let vs all say, Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

The Lxxxij. Sermon, which is the third vpon the twelfth Chapter.

8 Yee shall not doe according to all the things that you doe heere this day, that is to wit euery man as he thinketh good.

9 For as yet you be not come into the resting place and the inheritance which the Lord your God giueth you.

10 You shall go ouer Iordan, and dwell in the land which the Lord your God will make you to inherite. And he wil giue you rest from all your enemies round about you, and you shall dwell in safetic.

11 And when the Lorde your God shall haue chosen a place there, to put his name in: Ye shall bring thither all that I commaund you that is to wit, your burnt offerings, your sacrifices, your tenthes, your Heaue offrings, and all the choise of your voves which ye shall haue vowed to the Lord.

12 And ye shall make merrie in the sight of the Lord your God, both you your selues and your sonnes and daughters, your Menseruautes and your Maide seruautes, and the Leuite also that is within your gates: for he hath no part nor inheritance with you.

13 Beware that thou offer not thy burnt offerings in all places which thou seeest.

14 But in the place which the Lorde will choose in one of thy Tribes. There shalt thou offer thy burnt offerings, and thither shalt thou bring all the things that I commaund thee.

Although Moses haue treated of this matter heretofore, yet is it not without cause that he goeth to it againe for y<sup>e</sup> better confirming thereof. For as I haue told you already, Men are alwaies desirous to passe their boundes, & cannot submit themselues to God, to accept nothing beyond his word. Wherefore let vs marke well that God thinks it not ynough to tell men once for all, that they should behaue themselues according to his word & ordinance: but he repeateth y<sup>e</sup> same lesson oftentimes, to the intent that men should take y<sup>e</sup> better heede of it, and marke it the better. And because y<sup>e</sup> people had not as yet the law written as touching the Ceremonies; it is said expressly, You shall not doe as ye doe now. For it behoued the people to bridle themselues thereafter as they were taught. Howbeit, for the better vnderstanding of this text, it might bee demaunded first, whether the Israelites did for a time offer sacrifice at their own pleasure, without rule, or without being certaine what God required or allowed. The answere herunto is, that they had alwayes some marke to shoose at, and that they had not the bridle so loose in their neckes, but that they knew how they ought to sacrifice. And in deede, we heare how the Apostle saith to the Hebrewes, that fro<sup>m</sup> Abel forth on, there was no sacrifice accepted but by faith. And sayth importeth alwayes an obedience, so as if men deale at alauenture, there is no faith at all in them. But the Apostle saith expressly that Abels sacrifices pleased God because of his faith. Whereupon it followeth, that God hath euer shewed his will to y<sup>e</sup> faithfull, so as they haue none gone to worke vnadvisedly, but haue had such certaintie as was requisite for them. And whereas Moses reporteth in Genesis that Noy sacrificed of cleane beastes vnto God; it doth vs to vnderstand that Noy must needs haue had some knowledge of the difference of them aforesaid: for it passed his vnderstanding to finde out which beastes were cleane. Needs therefore must it bee that God had imprinted it in him: and that order hath continued for euer. And so is it certaine that the Israelites neuer had any such lawlesse libertie, but that they knew which was the trewe way of worshipping G O D. Also it is expressed by Moses that Abraham would instruct his posteritie in the iudgements, Lawes and Ordinaunces of G O D. Whereby he doth vs to vnderstand, y<sup>e</sup> although there was not as then any law writtē; yet notwithstanding Abraham failed not to haue knowledge of the things y<sup>e</sup> God required & of whatsoeuer else was requisite. For Moles coulde haue sayde at one worde, Abraham will reach his children to lue well and holily and according to the wil of God; but he sayeth that he wil teach them his Lawes, statutes & ordinances. To what purpose? I haue told you before, that it was to magnifie God the better, for his well prouiding of all things requisite to the seruing of him, so as the faithful could not stand in any doubt, but were sure of their dutie what they ought to doe.

According herunto therefore let vs marke, that when the people of Israell came out of Egypt, their sacrificing was not after the manner of the Heathen, according to the invention of man: but after a heavenly order, that is to say, according to the order which God had appointed. Yet notwithstanding, it is true that there was not as yet any such particular declaration made of the Sanctuarie, and of all the appurtenances and things belonging thereunto, as wee see is set downe in Exodus and Leuiticus. These things (say I) were not so particularly set forth: it was not yet sayd vnto them, You shall haue but one altar, which shall be of such a measure, of such a heigth, and of such a breadth: you shall haue a Tabernacle of such manner of stufte, of thus many peeces, thus long, and thus broad: You shall haue fire burning continually in the Sanctuarie: Your sacrifices shall neuer bee offered without Salte: there shall alwayes bee light and perfume in the Temple: The cakes that shall bee offered in the Temple shall be of such a fashion: There shall be bread continually before the Lord, and it shall be renewed day by day: Againe there shall bee a hygh Priest, which shall enter once a yeere into the narrowe Sanctuarie, and there shall be an Altar of burnt sacrifices for him to offer vpon from day to day. These things were not yet thus set out: & that is the thing which Moses meaneth in this text whe<sup>n</sup> he saith, Ye shall not doe after the same manner as we doe this day. For there was greater libertie before such time as God had set fourth his commandements to brydle the people withal, and to hold them in such awe as they should not attēpt any thing vpon their own head, nor step aside to the right hande or to the left; but followe the thinges roundly which were conteyned in his Lawe.

Hebr. 11. 4.

Gen. 8. 10.

And heereof wee haue to gather, that after as God vttereth his will vnto vs, so are wee the more bound to follow the same. For if we knew not what to doe, and that God had let vs alone in suspence: we might haue some excuse for our doeing of thinges as seemed good to our selues. For why? Our Lord hath not bin so gracious to vs as to say vnto vs expressly, Thus shal ye doe: And therefore we may do according to our owne skill, seeing we haue no expresse word to y contrarie. After that maner might a man reply. But now that God hath witnessed his will vnto vs, we must stoop to it, and it is not lawfull for vs to adde any thing thereto, For that were as much to say, as we would fall to scanning whether God or we were the wiser. And what a presumption were it, if wee would needes haue better thinges than those which he inioyneth vs? Yet notwithstanding, if men cannot find in their heartes to yeelde to the thinges that GOD commaundeth, they enter into this diuinish presumptuousnesse of purposing to be wiser than God hath giuen them leaue to be. Wherefore let vs learne, that when we haue once assurance what God alloweth, we must rest wholly vpon it. And herewithall we must marke, that God did not without cause giue the people of olde time so many rules to shewe them how to doe sacrifice. When we read the thinges that are contained in Leuiticus, to our seeming there bee many needelesse thinges. For God might well haue sayd in fewe wordes, I will haue a Temple, and there will I haue you to sacrifice vnto me. But there are such a sort of commandements as may make a man amazed and out of his wits. And what is y cause thereof? True it is that all thinges were made and doone according to the patterne that Moses had seene in the Mount, as God himselte declareth. And thereby we be doone to vnderstand that the figures, (although that at this day we know not perfectly in all pointes to what v they serued) had a spirituall truth, which may be referred to the thinges which we haue now adates by the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ: for hee is the very body and substance of all the shadowes that were vnder the Lawe. When we read that the highpriest might not enter into the Sanctuarie, but with such attyre as is there described; wee would thinke it strange to see a man so disguised, with so many thinges about him. And why was that? We must marke that it was to doe the people to vnderstand, that the partie which was to bee the mediator betweene God and men, was not of the common state and sorte of men, but that it behooued him to haue a speciall kind of holinesse to preace vnto GOD with all. And that was the cause why hee caried this tytyle in his frondet vpon his head; Hallowed vnto God, or the holinesse of God, Exod. 28. 36 Againe, hee had other attyres about him, so as hee coulde not goe or stirre, but there went a noyfe or sound from him. For hee ware belles vpon the skirtes of his garments; and that was to shewe that all men ought to giue eare, when it is told them that the sonne of God was offered for vs in sacrifice, so as the same may ring into our heartes, to the intent wee may seeke the meanes to be reconciled to GOD. There were other thinges whereof a man may perceiue the reason. As the twelue precious stones which the highpriest ware on his brest aloft vpon the Ephod: and the names of the twelue tribes grauen in other stones vpon his shoulders. Whereby was ment that Iesus Christ did nothing for himselfe but all for vs and in our behalfe: and that his going vnto God after that fashion, was to bring vs into his presence, according to this saying of his, I sanctifie my selfe to make you all partakers of the same holynesse. Nowe then wee see the reason of many thinges that were commaunded in the law, and we know it was not without cause that the Apostle sayde that all thinges were made according to the patterne that Moses had seene vpon the Mount: after the which maner Saint Steeuē allegeth the same text in the seuenth of the Actes. Neuerthelesse we must note, that Gods meaning was to hold his people in awe, that they might be the surer what to doe, and not bee occasioned to transgresse the true seruice of God, by mingling of any inuentions with it. I say it was Gods intent to inure his people to obedience, for if we shew our selues to serue God otherwise, all that cuer we doe will bee nothing worth: nay it will be sinne. If I weene I doe well, and in the meane while stand in doubt and perplexitie; al must needes goe to wrecke. For if wee bee not inlightened by certeintie of faith; God alloweth not any of our doinges. And therefore I say his intent was to keepe the people of old time in obedience. And that was the cause why hee wiled that there should bee light continually in the Temple. It was not to giue light vnto God, or to doe him any seruice, but to do the rude people to vnderstand, that we must not doe thinges disorderly, and be as blind folkes when we approach vnto God: but that we must haue light to guide vs by, which light is not to be found in our owne braynes, but must come from aboue. And for that cause the holy candlesticke had Lampes vpon it, wherein was oyle continually. Whereby was ment, y if men be not guided & governed by y holy Ghost, they do nothing but wander vp & downe, & in y end they shall fall into destruction. Again, God wiled that no sacrifice shold be brought vnto his Altar. Whereby is ment y men must not bring aught of their own to the seruing of God: but we must haue the holy fire, y is to say we must pray to God in y Church, & not go beyond his word, or beyond y doctrine y hee gueth vs. Moreouer it is sayd y no sacrifice shold be offered wout salt. And why so? For when wee offer things to God wout warrant y hee alloweth them & requirerh the, they haue no sauer at al before him.

him. Thus you see in effect how it was Gods intent to cōfort his seruants, & to incourage thē, y they might serue him as became them. And again, it was his will to cut off al occasiō of adding any thing which they had learned of y heathen. We know y although mē haue no incōuters before their eyes, yet they cease not to forge many fond things, weeing to please god by y means. But when we see examples on either side of vs, it is a futher prouocation to vs. Besides y ticklishnes which we haue already of nature, it pricketh vs forward to say, why should nor such a thing be good: For y Lewes had seen y fashiōs of Egypt & of other heathē folke: & therefore they might haue bin prouoked to fashiōn thēselues like vnto them: & that had bin a corruption to ouerthrow y whole seruice of god. To preuent this mischief, God gaue them a remedy, which held them occupied in such sort, as they had ynough to do in y things y were inoynded them, & had no leasure to withdraw themselves or to adde any deuise of their own. And so we see it was not for naught y God gaue his people so many lawes, rules, & ceremonies at their going into y land of Canaan. For first of al, it was nicete y the figures and shadowes shold supply y roome of y truth y was yet vnreuealed, vntill Iesus Christ was shewed openly to y world. Secondly it was Gods will to try y obedientnes of his people by y means. And thirdly it tooke away al occasiō of intermedling thēselues w y superstitiōs of y heathē & vnbelieuers.

And for y cause doth Moses say, You shal go ouer Jordan, & God wil giue you rest in the land that he hath promised you, & there shall you dwell in safesie, although you haue enemies round about you. And then wil he choofe him a place in one of your tribes, and thither shal you bring your sacrifices, burnt offerings, & oblations. And the very true sacrifice (saith he) is to do nothing vpon your own heads, but to obey your God thoroughly in all poyntes. Wl ē he saith y they shall come into y land, it is to shew y Gods deferring to giue his law til that time, was to declare more particularly what things he liked of. For it was his will to performe his promise made vnto Abrahā, before he would establish his owne seruice. And thereby he gaue thē to vnderstand y the land of Canaan ought to haue led thē to a further thing. For had there bin no further matter in it than y land it selfe; it had bin ynough for thē to haue bin settled in it, and there to haue had wherēv to finde them abundantly. But God seteth vp his seruice, & sheweth thē after what sort they shold honor him thēself: & al is referred to our Lord Iesus Christ. We see then y the land of Canaan should haue guided y Lewes to y hope of y heavenly life; so as they should not haue set their mindes vpon y inoying & possyding of the profits y came therof, but haue proceeded on further & considered y Gods meaning was to raigne among thē after a spirituall manner. That was y cause why he listd not to giue thē y ceremonies at y first, after the maner y they be set down in Leuiticus; but reserved the setting of them soorth, vntill the people were come into their inheritance.

And he saith expressly that the Lewes should dwell in

quies & safesie, notwithstanding that they were beses round about with enemies. Hereby we be done to vnderstand, y it was not ynough for thē to haue conquered the country, but y it behoued God to maintaine them shil vnder his protectiō. And as the Israēlites were warned of it thēso doth the same belong to vs at this day. For God telleth vs y if he hath once called vs, it is al one as if he had made vs to passe the red sea. True it is y he could cal vs without making of vs to chaunge our place. But let vs consider from whence God taketh vs, & whither he draweth vs. He taketh vs out of y bottom of hell. For so long as we be in our owne nature, we haue none accessē to y kingdom of heauen, nor any acquaintance with him, but are vtterly banished from y hope of life. And whē he hath drawn vs out of such confusion, he pulleth vs vp to himself, to the end we might cleaue vnto him: & although we dwell as yet on the earth; yet notwithstanding we cease not to be heires of y heavenly inheritance. This is a fare greater thing thā to passe the red sea. For we haue an enemy y is greater and much stronger than was Pharaō & al his people. For what can we do w hē we haue all y diuels against y, labouring to hinder our saluation, & being so futtle & hauing all y means y can be to do it withall: They be called the princes of y aire, & they reigne ouer our heads, so as they might easily ouerthrowe vs if God deliuered vs not from the m. Therefore it is a great power which God vttereth when it pleaseth him to gather vs vnto himselfe. And yet is y to no purpose, except we be preferred still vnder his hand & tuition. For as long as we be in this world, we shal be inuironed continually round about w enemies. The diuel ceaseth not to trouble vs; he hath wyles & flightes yn to doeit withall: & we on our side are vnarmed & vnprovided; & therefore it standeth vs greatly vpō, to haue God to be our defender. Nay, the diuell needes not to seeke farre: for we carie such a number of vices with vs of our owne, as we might be overcome a hundred times without any great adoe or noise. Let vs mark wel then, y like as God promised to maintaine the Lewes in the inheritance y he had giuen them: so it standeth vs in hand at this day to be maintained by his hand in the faith; y we may perseuer in his seruice: or else our saluation wil go to wreck euery minute of an hour, so as there wil be no stay nor continuance.

Now afterward Moses addeth: God will haue you thenceforth to serue him in the place which he shal haue chosen so pss his name in. Which is as much to say, as that we must not make this our rest; to inuēt this or that; but we must hold our selues in quiet, and abide vnder the government of our God. When we be at rest, then is our mind much troubled w vnquietnes, which is cleane contrary to Gods meaning. For if he giue vs respit, so as we be not troubled with feare & terror, to what end is it? Is it not to the end that we should be so mild as to say, go to my God, if I were vexed or disquieted in minde, I had some cause to be carryed here and there and to doe some thing or other. I should be seeking of sundry remedies. But now that thou vouchsafest to maintaine me in quiet rest, it is good reason that I should bee still, and suffer my selfe to bee ruled by thy word, and to bee bowed which way thou listest, without giuing heade to my lustes, for that were a wicked vithankfulnessse. That is the thing which Moses ment by that text. And the same matter concerneth vs also. For whensoever God vouchsafeth to giue vs rest from our enemies, wee ought to bee so much the quieter in our selues. As for example. If we were among the Papistes, wee might bee in such feare, as we should bee driuen to seeke new shifts euery day, as the poore soules are which bee among them, who may well say, Alas, I haue no liberty to serue God. How may I behaue my selfe in such sorte as I may not defile my selfe with the superstitions of these Idolaters? Thus ye see how these poore catifes are faine to seeke al the waies to the wood to finde some shift to swim between two streames. And no maruell though they be in that taking. In deede it is no sufficient excuse; for howsoever the world goe with vs, we must bee fully resolu'd in our selues to serue God neuerthelessse. But yet are we the lesse to be borne withal, when we abuse the time of quietnesse that God giueth vs. If we be at libertie, then must nothing withhold vs from hauing our religion pure and clean. For he offereth himselfe to vs dayly in his word. And therefore let vs reframe our selues from wandring after our owne imaginations, and let vs bridle our selues in that behalfe. Seeing that God hath giuen vs rest: let vs followe all that he sheweth, without attempting any thing at all to the contrary. But we see the contrary come to passe. For commonly it falleth out that when men be in rest, so as no man troubles them nor disquietes them; then fall they to bee lustie or sporting like a horse that is broken lose and hath neither bridle nor saddle. And the experience hereof is too comon, in so much y<sup>e</sup> those to whom God hath graunted such fauour as to haue his truth in most safetie, doe thinke it better to behaue themselves after another sorte, and to change their state: and what a kinde of dealing is that? It is a duellish rage that we be caried away withall, when wee cannot bee quiet in our selues at such tyme as god hath giuen vs outward rest, and holdeth our enemies locked vp, so as although they be round about vs, yet he suffereth them not to make any change to disquiet vs with all, and yet we our selues cannot abyde to sit in quiet. Wherefore let vs marke welly<sup>e</sup> seeing God is so gracious to vs as to grant vs libertie to serue him purely: it is our dewtie to holde our selues quietly vnder his obedience, without attempting any thing at all. But the Papistes haue well shewed in this case, that they cannot find in their hearts in any wise to submit themselves vnto God, and that their intent is not to yeeld him any obedience. For first of all they looked not what God ment by the olde figures of the Lawe, and yet they followed the things that Moses commaunded concerning lightes, perfumes, and apparell. And why was that? Bicause they considered not that all those things were referred to our Lord Iesus Christ. They were much more brutish than the very Iewes that had no faith at all. For the Iewes at leastwise held themselves to the rule that was giuen them. In deede they knewe not the right vse of their Ceremonies: but yet had they an expresse commaundement from God, & durst not attempt any thing against the same. But as for the Papistes, notwithstanding that Iesus Christ bee manifested, and haue accomplished all the things that were betokened in olde time: yet haue they vtterly ouerthrowen that good and substantiall foundation, and thrust his death and passion vnder foote. They fall to raking vp of lightes. And what needs that? The holy ghost hath shewed himselfe visibly in the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and afterward vpon the Apostles, to doe vs to vnderstand that we must no more looke for any outward figures, bicause we haue the truth and substance of them. But what? The Papistes haue abolished the infinite grace of God, and vtterly made a mocke of it. They will needes offer sacrifice, and haue atyred their priestes thereafter, disguising them as though it were to the playing of an entelude. And all this geere is but gугawes, for they bee not commaunded of God, and besides that, they be done as it were in despite of him. All that was doone in the law was of Gods setting vp: & these men fall to setting vpp of newe fashions such as God neuer spake of. Againe, they place a mortall man in y<sup>e</sup> roome of our Lord Iesus Christ; as who should say that the office of our Lord Iesus Christ were not welynough knowne and apparant, vnlesse it were figured out with newe and straunge toys. It is all one as if a body should thew forth the picture of a man when the partie himselfe is present, and should saye, Behoulde this picture, and yet the man is there himselfe who can much better shew himselfe what he is than the picture can doe. Euen so doe the Papistes in setting forth of y<sup>e</sup> picture of Iesus Christ. He is named the liuely image of God. Although the father be incomprehensible in his owne maiesty: yet hath he vttered himselfe in the person of his sonne, as wee may behold him there face to face, as sayth Saynt Paule in the second to the Corinthians. But the Papistes drawe a Curteine before it, and tell vs that wee must bee contented with pictures. It is therefore a turning of all things vpside downe, and a bringing in of duellish confusion. Neuerthelessse, wee see that in the Popedom there is no harking what God saies; but all is doone at the appointment of man. Looke whatsoever they doe, they terme it by the name of Gods seruice. Yea, but howe is God dewly serued? God sayth, ye shall not doe wharsoever seemeth good to your selues: seeing that I haue set you downe a certaine order, bee contented to be gouerned by my word. But what say the Papistes? Mee thinkes this is good: This we take to be excellent: euery man castes to his collup, and in all Gods woord a man shall not finde one syllable of al the things which they terme Gods seruice, and which they will needes haue to passe in their account. For let a man search all y<sup>e</sup> things through which are comprised vnder y<sup>e</sup> name in y<sup>e</sup> Popedom, & he shall finde the euerichone euery chone to bee forged and builded by men, and that God not onely disclaymeth them, but also condemnmeth them, becaufe he hath shewed vs his certeine and infallible truth, which is the thing that we must frame our felues vnto. Wee see then howe all this doctrine hath bene wickedly throwen downe in the Popedome: and that is becaufe they haue peruerted the true vse of the figures of the Lawe, and taken inordinate liberty to doe whatsoever came in their heades, without hauing any regarde to the witnessings that God giueth vs, whereby they might haue said, These be the things which we ought to do. Now so much the more diligēt ought we to be in marking this place: For were we still in doubt nowadayes what to doe, so as we knewe not what things God alloweth: then might wee haue some fancie to make vs to sway to and fro. But seeing that God hath tould vs what hee requireth at our handes: that ought to be ynough for vs. And now hath hee abolished, the Ceremonies of the law that were of his owne appointing: Yea, And wherefore? To shew vs thereby ſ he wil not haue vs any more intangled in the outward figures. The reason is added; becaufe we haue them thoroughly fulfilled in Iesus Christ. Now then, if we wil not deface the glory of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and ouerthrowe the benefits that he bringeth vs; we must put away the old figures. Marke that for one point.

Againe, wee see that God is contented with fewe ceremonies. For it is not his will that wee should haue any more deckings, lights, perfumes, Cakes, sacrificings of beastes, nor other such things: but his wil is that in our baptisme we should haue such an assurance of our washing & cleansing by the grace that is purchased for vs in our Lord Iesus Christ, as should continue with vs for euer. Haue we that? We must hold our felues contented with it. For God could haue added more, if he had listēd: but he listēd not so to do. And to y e see here is a bridle which must reine vs backe to gather vs home to G O D, or else he shall neuer be able to weeld vs. Now what haue the Papistes done? Tutsh, this simplicitie of baptisme pleased not them, they would needs adde this & that to it at their own pleasure. What say they? Should that be but sincere water? What a thing were that? yea, but god hath so ordeined it, Iesus Christ who is the infinite wisdom of God his father hath so appointed it. It is said that last of all God hath spoken to vs by his mouth, and that we must stand to whatsoeuer he saith. Now he hath ordeined it in water alone. Yea, but wee must haue a taper (say the Papists) to represent the holy Ghost: we must haue salt, to represent ſ heavenly wisdom, and the grace of God: wee must haue diuers other things, and we must haue spittle to make infantes and dum folks to speake, and we must haue a number of other gogawes to moeke God wall, which are so grosse, and sond, as they can serue for nothing but to make Christianity a laughingstock to the Iewes and Turkes: and the duell plays his part with them, when y world is sotted after such a sort. Wee see the that the Papists haue broken and transgressed Gods order, by adding after ſ maner to ſ things which he had set downe certaine, and in such measure as he would not haue men to go beyond them.

But there hath bin yet a farre more outrageous disorder in ſ Lords Supper. For therein our Lord Iesus Christ ment to shew vs, ſ his wil is ſ we should settle our whole trust in him, becaufe we be led w his substance, & therefore wee must not seeke life any where else thā in him: we must not eate there & drink fromwhere else; for we haue there full suffiance for ſ sustenance of our soules, we haue ſ full perfection of all goodnesse in him. That is ſ thing which he sheweth vs by his holy supper, & his wil is ſ we should receiue ſ bread & wine in witness thereof, and ſ it should be distributed among vs, to the end we should be knit together in him, to become members of his body. But on ſ contrary part, they haue set vp ſ abominable Masse, & wil needs sacrifice Iesus Christ. And whereof comes that? Euen of ſ they vnderstand not ſ they vsurpe ſ office which is allotted to him in the holy scripture, according wherunto he hath offered vp himselfe once for al, & behold, mē wil needs take vpon them to counterfeit him, for by their own saying, it is all one sacrifice. Yet for al ſ, they be but Apes to Iesus Christ. For it becommeth them not to take vpon them the office ſ is not allotted vnto thē. Againe they wil needs make a minglemangle of al things: for they not only disguise & falsifie all things that were ordained by our Lord Iesus Christ, but by all likelihood are fully bent to fight furiously against his institution. Iesus Christ ordeined ſ the bread & wine should be diuided among ſ faithful. But it is ynough w them ſ one doe take it all, & eate it vp alone. Yea & when the people come of purpose to communicate with them, (which is but once a yeere) they be faine to content themselves w the one part of it, & the other part is reserved. Besides this, there is no opening of Gods word, their saying is ſ they go to receiue their God, & they make a charme & sorcerie of their consecrating of the bread & wine. Thus y e see how proudly they be turned away frō Christs ordinance, so as they could not deuise howe to fight against him w more violence. Now sith we see these things, we ought to acknowledge Gods grace in drawing vs out of such confusion. And there shall let vs marke, ſ Gods standing so much vpon ſ point ſ his people should not do what they liked themselves, is not wout cause. For why? we see what mē are whē they once go astray. Whē they once take ſ libertie, they disguise the truth, and there is no end of their leasings. Therefore let vs beware ſ we hold our felues short, specially whē God hath giuen vs rest from our enemies, & we dwell in a place where we may worship him purely, let vs keepe ſ simplicitie ſ he commaundeth, & alloweth by his word, wout any swarting aside from ſ fame how little soeuer it be. For we had need to keepe our felues farre off frō al corruptions, if we be determined to obey our God. And why so? For mans heart is a dreadfull gulfe. And again, euery mē drawes his neighbor into error after him. Therefore it is like an endlesse maze wherof there is no way out again, vnlesse ſ thing he obserued that is spoken here: namely that men do not what every man thinks good in his owne eyes.

Luk. 22. 17.

And let vs note also, by this saying, al our inrentes (as nien terme them) are condemned, though they seeme neuer so good to our selues. For we be no competent Iudges; God must tell vs what is good: & if we on our side find any apparant reaso, it is altogether but smoke. So then for as much as God in this place setteth his own word, and y<sup>e</sup> testimony of his will, directly against all our deuotions, and al that euer seemeth good to vs: let vs assure our selues that it is not lawfull for vs to followe whatsoever we think good. For al that is nothing worth: but al y<sup>e</sup> seruice that wee do vnto god, must be grounded vpon his word & his infallible truth. Without y<sup>e</sup>, we doe but build in the aire, that is to say, all that euer we do is but dreaming.

Now Moses addeth y<sup>e</sup> same things again which he had spokē concerning Sacrifices, Burnt offerings, freewill offerings, vooes & tenthes; namely, that all those things must be done & paid in the place that God had chosen out of one of their tribes. This thing was not so soone performed as I haue shewed heretofore. And y<sup>e</sup> reason is, for y<sup>e</sup> god intended to proue his peoples patience, & also for y<sup>e</sup> y<sup>e</sup> people were not worthy y<sup>e</sup> God shold establish the order at the first, in such sort as he had promised it. And that is a thing well worthy to be marked. For we see y<sup>e</sup> gods gracious gifts arc oftentimes long in coming. And yet God saith, ye shal no sooner haue spoken, but I will be ready to succour you, yea & my hand shalbe stretched out to helpe you before your words be out of your mouths. So doth God promise: & yet notwithstanding he suffereth vs to linger. And why? Because we haue hindered the course of his grace by our vnbeleefe; and we be so reclus, that hee maketh no haste to come vnto vs, because we for our part come not to him but wth great hardness, & as it were limping. Yet notwithstanding he doth alwaies surmount all our vices wth his infinite goodnesse, as it came to passe in y<sup>e</sup> which Moses speaketh here. God had promised to choose a place for his Sanctuary to rest in y<sup>e</sup> for euer. Now y<sup>e</sup> thing was to haue bin done as soone as y<sup>e</sup> Israeletes were entred into the land of Canaan; & yet it was delayed a long time: ino much as there passed a hundred yeres or twaine, yea three or four hundred before y<sup>e</sup> promise tooke effect. And that was because the people were not worthy to be so satisfied, as God had declared, & therefore were faine to abide the punishment of their sin. For they draue not out their enemies as he had commaunded them, but became negligent: and besides y<sup>e</sup>, they themselues turned away & fell into all maner of vices & corruptions. That therefore was the cause why God withdrew his hand, and performed not his promise till the time of Dauid. Neuertheles, although y<sup>e</sup> people were malicious, although they were vnthankfull towards God, although they prouoked his wrath so many waies to y<sup>e</sup> vttermost: yet could they not vtruly disappoint y<sup>e</sup> promise altogether. The reason was, for y<sup>e</sup> it depended not vpon y<sup>e</sup> deserts of men. Therefore although men be vnworthy of it; yet doth God in y<sup>e</sup> end performe whatsoever he saith. Yet notwithstanding there is a delay made for a time, to the intent that folke should learne to know their own naughtines, and mislike of it, and be sorry for it. Wherefore let vs learne hereby, that if God at any time do shew himselfe vnwilling to put vs in possession of his benefites out of hand: it is because that we haue procured the delay of them by our own naughtines. But yet shal we not be vtterly bereft of them, fo we acknowledge our finnes and be sorry for them: but in the end he will reach out his hand again, to put vs in possession of the benefites wherof we had deserued to be vtterly dispossessed. Truly this wil not boot the hypocrites at al: but as for gods church, although it lue in suspence for a time; Yet will our Lord shew in the end, that his goodnesse surmounteth all the finnes of men, and that he will not fail to be faithfull, though all of vs be lyers. Sothly (as I said afore) we must not vnder this colour flatter our selues. For if we be stubborne in euil, our Lord will wely enough find the meanes to discharge himselfe of the promise wherof we shal haue bene disappointed. But let vs learne to acknowledge our finnes; & when we haue acknowledged them, let vs learne also to rest vpon the goodnes of our god, not doubting but that it is so great and infinite, that notwithstanding all the lets which we on our side shal cast in the way of it, yet it will so get the vpper hande, that in the ende we shal find the welfare from the which we had shut our selues out of doores. That is the thing which we haue to remeber vpon this text of Moses, where he saith that god wold appoint a place, euen such a one as he had chosen out from among all the tribes of Israel, where he would haue his name to be called vpon. The residue which cannot bee declared as now, shalbe pursued heereafter.

2. Tim. 2. 13

Now let vs fall downe in the presence of our good god wth acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs perceauē them better than we haue done heretofore, so as wee may mislike them more & more, & therby be brought back vnto him: and that sith wee for our partes bring nothing to him but vtter corruption; it may please him to graunt vs the grace so to reforme vs by his word, as y<sup>e</sup> sacrifices which we shall offer vnto him may be made holy by faith, and he accept them for our Lord Iesus Christs sake. And for as much as we knowe that he requireth spirituall sacrifices: let vs call vpon him wth such boldnes, as we may be hard at his hand, & yeeld him praise for all his benefites bestowed vpon vs; and moreover induer to discharge our selues of our ducties euery man towards his neighbor, because those be the sacrifices which he receiuet & alloweth. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth; &c.

On Tewſday the viij. of October. 1555.

12. 13. 14. And ye ſhall be merry, &c.

15 Neuertheleſſe, looke whatſoever thou haſt a mind vnto, that maiſt thou kill and eate within any of thy gates, according to the bleſſing of the Lord thy God, which hee hath giuen thee; as of the fallowe deere or of the Red deere: both hee that is cleane and he that is vncleane may eate thereof.

16 Onely of the blood ſhal you not eate, but you ſhal powre it vpon the ground as water.

17 Thou maiſt not eate the tithes of thy Corne, of thy wine, or of thine oyle, within any of thy gates, nor yet the firſt ingendred of thy kine, or of thy ſheepe, nor any of the vowes which thou ſhalt haue vowed, nor the free will offerings or the liſtings vp of thy handes.

18 But thou ſhalt eate thoſe things in the preſence of the Lorde thy God, in the place which the Lorde thy God wil chooſe to himſelfe. There ſhalt thou eate them, both thy ſelfe, thy ſonne, thy daughter, thy manſeruant, thy woman ſeruant, and the Leuite that is within thy gates. And thou ſhalt bee merrie before the Lord thy God in all things whereunto thou putteſt thy hande.

Moſes going forward ſtill with his matter, commaundeth the Lewes here to bee merrie in the preſence of the Lorde. Nowe although this leſſon haue bin laide forth alreadie, yet is it requiſite for vs to bee put in minde of it againe. For the treating of it heere newe againe, is not for nought, neither hath the holy Ghoſt let down any thing more than needeth, as I haue ſayde heretofore. Men cannot keepe meaſure in their mirth without ſome diſorder alwayes. And the cauſe thereof is ſo they haue not an eye vnto God in their making merrie. Nay rather (which worſeis) they thinke it is no mirth at all vneleſſe they turne their backs vpon him. Whereas we ſhould ſecke all our welfare in GOD to haue our reſt there: wee beare our ſelues in hand that wee be beſt at eaſe when wee be furtheſt from him. For this cauſe God ordeined the ſayde Ceremonie of ſolemne feaſting when the ſolke offered ſacrifice vnto him, as it were of purpoſe to put them in remembrance, that God was there preſent, and ſhewed himſelfe vnto them. Not that the doing thereof once a yeere was a ſufficient diſcharge to them; but that every man ought to make a leſſon & a generall rule of it, that whenſoever they did eate or drinke, they ſhoulde reſerre it wholly vnto God, accordingly as Saint Paule warneth vs to doe. And thereby wee ſee that ſo true a truth thereof abideth vnto vs, though the Ceremonie thereof bee done away. Wherefore let vs learne, tharin playing and ſporting after the faſhion of the children of this worlde, wee ſhake off God and bereaue him of his honour. And ſurely it is an vnexcusable vnthankfulneſſe, when we acknowledge not the author of all welfare. If we reſerre all our mirth vnto God, it will be alwayes moderate. Beſides that it ſhall euer haue a good end, God wil ſo hold vs in aw by his Maieſtie, as we ſhall not paſſe our boundes as we ſee the wretched and blind vnbeleeuers do, who haue no more ſtay of themſelues in their making merrie, than wild beaſtes haue. Now then, if our eyes be ſo ſet vpon God; we ſhalbe ſober and moſt ynough. Marke that for one point.

But beſides this, it is the meaning of Moſes alſo, that fathers ſhoulde teach their children, and maſters their ſeruants, to do the like. For it is not ynough for a faithful man, that he himſelfe ſerue God: but he muſt alſo gouerne his houſhold, aſſuring himſelf that it is committed to him to the ſame end, & that he is to yeeld account of it. And in deepe, what reaſon is it ſo a man ſhoulde haue ſuperioſitie ouer his neighbors ſo creatures faſhioned after ſo image of God as wel as he, and that in the meane while God ſhoulde be bereft of his right, and not be vſed as chiefe ſoueraigne of all? What a preſumption were that? Were it not an vtter peruerſing of the order of nature? Then let vs marke well, that heere wee bee warned to rule our houſes in ſuch wiſe, as GOD may bee ſerued both of great and ſmall. Let him to whome God hath giuen children, beware that he bring them vp in the right religion, & let him do the like to his men and his maides, ſo as God may be the common father and maiſter of them all. That was the thing wherof Moſes intended to warne the Lewes, & in their perſons it behoerth vs alſo to bee taught at this day to doe our duties, in ſo behalfe. And therewithall wee be exhorted to gentlenes alſo. For although the maſter of a houſe haue preheminence & authoritie ouer his houſhold; yet notwithstanding his inioying thereof, muſt not be to himſelf alone: but he muſt impart it to al his whole houſhold: for elſe it is a ſeparating of himſelfe from ſo ſtate of mankind, & a barring of the common societie which God hath set among men. Therefore there are here two points to be noted. The one is y<sup>e</sup> whofoeuer hath charge of children and seruants, must do his indeuet to lead them to god. And y<sup>e</sup> other is, that all such as are set ouer others and haue inferior persons vnder them in what state of subiection soeuer it be, ought to be kindharted towards them, and not to reigne ouer them with tyrannie and cruelty, but to rule them wth al gentlenesse, so as they make them partakers of the benefites and gracious gifts which they haue receiued at Gods hand.

That which Moses addeth concerning the Leuites, serueth for a further confirmatiō of y<sup>e</sup> which he had spokē of their reioycing or making merrie in y<sup>e</sup> presence of God. For (as I haue declared already) God had appointed y<sup>e</sup> townes of y<sup>e</sup> Leuites to be disperfed among y<sup>e</sup> tribes, to y<sup>e</sup> intent there should be good doctrine raught throughout y<sup>e</sup> whole country. We know what the state of y<sup>e</sup> tribe was, namely how it is said in y<sup>e</sup> second of the Prophet Malachie, y<sup>e</sup> lippes of the priest ought to teach knowledge, & that men shoulde seeke for good doctrine at his mouth, & that the Priests were as the messengers of y<sup>e</sup> liuing God. God then had chosen y<sup>e</sup> tribe of Leuic to be continually among his people, to hold them in the true and pure religion. For had they bin placed all together in some corner by themselves, after the same maner y<sup>e</sup> rest of the tribes were in their portions; all the people besides had bin vnto teaching. But inasmuch as there was no tribe where the Leuites had not some towne allotted to them; by that meanes the seede of Gods word was spread abroad, so as the persons whom God had ordained to gouerne his Church & to haue the charge of mens soules; were so disperfed y<sup>e</sup> land was furnished with them throughout. And now it is said y<sup>e</sup> the Israclts shal make merrie with the Leuites y<sup>e</sup> were mingled among the. And why? For they might holde the people in some awe. Though there had bin some vnruely persons, yet if they had seene the Leuites, who bare their marks, & were specially chosen to the spiritual gouernmēt of y<sup>e</sup> Church: it would haue bin a bridle to reframe the w<sup>al</sup>. Thus the Lord seeing y<sup>e</sup> frailtie of his people, gaue the this help to hold them in order & modestie. As if he shold say, True it is that I haue chosen you for mine inheritāce, & you be y<sup>e</sup> people whom I haue dedicated to my self; but yet is there a special holiness in the Leuites, because they peace into y<sup>e</sup> Tabernacle, and are appointed to teach you the lawe, and to keepe you from running into superstition, & from starting aside to strange gods. Seeing then y<sup>e</sup> I haue committed this charge to my Leuites: let them be in your company, that by your beholding of them you may be y<sup>e</sup> more prouoked to feare mee, and to bee merrie after a holy manner, without desyling of your selues with the lustes of the world as ye see the vnbeleueers doe, who rush out into all disorder: that seeing I haue appointed my Leuites to bee as messengers from me, and y<sup>e</sup> my lawe is in their mouth, & their office is to beare abroad my doctrine: you may not be so giuen to disorder, but rather consider y<sup>e</sup> I dwell among you, so as the very sight of my seruants may do you to vnderstand, that I am neere at hand, & that you ought not to separate your selues from me. And hereby we be put in minde to behaue our selues soberly and modestly, & that we haue neede to be exhorted dayly thereunto by the word of God, for feare of starting out into vnchristinesse; for we see what feeblenes is in vs. True it is y<sup>e</sup> when we be once entered into a wicked trade, we shall soone be hardened in it: but to be constant in doing good, we shal haue much ado. Therefore although we haue some good disposition & desire to serue God: yet must hee bee faine to quicken vs vp still from day to day. Wherefore let vs seeke the meane; which is to resort to the doctrine y<sup>e</sup> shoulde be our guide, and to yeeld willing care to the warnings y<sup>e</sup> are giuen to draw vs vnto God, & to confirme vs in his feare & obedience. Yea and when wee haue bin at a sermon, and haue heard y<sup>e</sup> word that is preached to vs in his name: let it serue to keepe vs in awe, & although wee be tempted to vnchristinesse, yet let it be as a bridle to reine vs backe vnto God. Thus you see howe we ought to vse the meanes & remedies y<sup>e</sup> God hath appointed vnto vs to redresse the frailtie that is in vs. For otherwise we would start away by and by, and wonder that we should be so vterly strayed away from our God. That is the thing in effect which we haue to remember vpon the first sentence that is set downe here.

Now he addeth afterward, as we haue seene already heretofore, that the people should not sacrifice in all places, but only in the place that God shold choose among their tribes. And that is to hold the people in obedience, that they shoulde not attempt to serue God after their owne fanse & imagination. In deede a man might say at the first blush, y<sup>e</sup> there needed no rehearsing of the thing y<sup>e</sup> was easie ynough of it selfe. But the case concerneth not y<sup>e</sup> only vnderstanding of it, there is another reason why God setteth down this saying so oft: which is that men cannot refrain frō swearing one way or other, but that although they be fully minded for a time to serue God, yet doe they start aside in the turning of a hand, because they be vnconstant & light minded. Nor wout cause therefore doth God rehearse here y<sup>e</sup> same thing that we haue seene here before, namely that the people shoulde not offer sacrifice in all places. And why? For things in those dayes were very darke, & it was needefull for the people to be restrained, to know y<sup>e</sup> there was but one God. The heathen had euery one their religiō by himself, & there was no certaintie at al among them. But it behoued the people of Israel to be fully resoluēd in this wise. The God whom we worship is the maker of heauen & earth: & because we be not able to gette vpe vnto him, hee hath shewed himselfe vnto our fathers, so as wee cannot doe amisse, if wee worship him according to his Lawe. It behoued the people of Israel to bee at that point. For had they had diuers altars, and y<sup>e</sup> euery man might haue followed his owne deuotiō: what a thing had it bin? There would haue bin store of inuocations: they would haue brought in diuersitie of religions, euery man would haue deuised what he had listid, & the God of Abraham should no more haue bin worshippid after his owne maner. For this cause is it saide, you shall haue but one Altar and one Sanctuarie, and God referueth to himselfe the choosing and appointing out of the place wherein he wil be worshippid & serued. We see then y here all libertie is taken from men, so as they may not take any thing at all vpon them in the seruing of God. Marke that for one point.

Againe, it is shewed vs here moreouer, y forasmuch as we be subiect to this corruption of forging sond opinions, & consequently of false and wicked opinions out of number: God ment to hold his people in y true vnitie of faith, and his choosing of one Sanctuarie was as a band of concord, to the intent y men should not run gadding euery one after his owne fanfic. To bee short, without agreement in y one faith, we cannot serue God or doe any thing to his liking. And hereby we see that men do themselves no good at all by their foolish deuotions, but rather prouoke Gods vengeance the more, by their straining of themselves to do the things y they haue deuised of their owne braine. For y very ground of religion is to knowe whom we ought to serue, as our Lord Iesus telleth vs in y fourth of Iohn, saying: We knowe what we worship. Nowe he speaketh there of the Iewes, bicause they had y law, & therein the full certaintie howe God was to be serued. But it is said by the Prophets, that at the coming of our Lord Iesus Christ there should be three Altars, one in Egypt, another in Assyria, & the third in Iewrie. Whereby is ment y God shoulde serued euer where. For the materiall Altars were beaten downe. As for the things that are termed Altars in the Popedom they be diuellsish abhominations: for their setting of them vp is to sacrifice christ on the. But he hath offered himselfe once for all, according to y office y was giuen him by God his father. And therefore it were high treason & blasphemie against God to haue altars now adayes among Christians. For Iesus Christ is our onely spiritual Altar: & when we be knit vnto him, then is God duely worshippid and as he himselfe requireth. Wherefore let vs learne y although the ceremonie be disallowed: yer y meaning of it may greatly profite vs;

Esa. 19. 19. &amp; 23. 24.

which is, y we must serue God, not by turning aside euery man after his owne conceits, but by linking our selues together in y bond of faith & by agreeing rightly together. And whereupon shall this concord be grounded: Vpon Gods word & vpon our Lord Iesus Christ, who is his very wisdom. For if we resort to him, we shal haue a certaine marke to shewte at, & such a one as canot deceiue vs. But as soone as we swarue aside from him, be it neuer so little; by & by we vanish away in our own foolish thoughts. Thus ye see in effect what we be taught as concerning this place.

Hebr. 9. 26.

And let vs marke wel that it belonged to God to choose the place, as hath bin told you before, so as y Israelites had not leaue to spee it out themselves, & to say, This is the fittest place: but God bare all y stroke alone. Hereby we be done to vnderstand y it is not for vs to set vp a seruice of god after our own liking, but y we must herken vnto him, and so receive his woord as nothing be added thereunto, as shalbe declared yet tetter in y end of this chapter. And verily when as he saith that he will chose it in one of their Tribes: thereby he doth vs to vnderstand that we must not enuie our brethren, though one of them be more honoured than another. Let it content vs that god accepteth our seruice; & although some of vs be lesser and some greater and excellenter than others: yer must not that breed any hartburning among vs, nor occasion vs to be greeued at Gods granting of more fauour vnto other than to vs: but euery of vs must doe his dewtie in his owne degree, & seeke no further but to bee receiued at Gods hande all together, both they that goe before, and they that come after.

Furthermore let vs make well, that whereas God saith he wil choose that place to put his name in: it is not ment that his being was shut vp in the Sanctuarie: but onely that foolke should there haue a recorde of his presence. And that was to the intent that the Iewes shoulde not buse their heads about grosse imaginations, as we see men commonly inclined to doe. When God stoopeth to imparte himselfe familiarly vnto vs, we take occasion to make him some Image; if we could wee wouldt ye him to some stone or to some piller, or coope him vp in some corner: and wee thinke we haue him not with vs, except wee haue some visible signe of him. And this was the cause why men made puppets and Idolles to represent God by. For this cause he telleth them expressly that he himselfe wil choose the place wherein hee will be worshippid and serued, howbeit not that his being shall bee shut vp there, but onely that his name shall bee there, that is to say, that hee will bee called vpon there. And moreover, the Iewes were to bee put in minde, to looke vp to the heauenly patterne that Moses sawe on the Mount, as oft as they looked vpon the arke of couenant and the other signes that God had giuen them, and thereby to be led to the spiritual seruice which was figured by those things, wherof Iesus Christ was y very substance. True it is that euen at this day still God commeth downe or stoopeth vnto our rudenesse; in so much that it is his will we shoulde haue temples or Churches to assemblen in, and thither we come together to make our comon prayers there.

Exo. 25. 40. Hebr. 8. 5.

Col. 2. 17.

Againe, Baptisme is ministred there, for Iesus Christ also is there among vs & rulerth ouer vs, & in his supper we haue an assurance y we be knit vnto him, & grafted into his body, so as we haue but one life comon to vs all. Yet must we not be held downe by the signes and tokens that God giueth vs for our helpe; but we must rather be conuicid vp by them, and not bee wrapped in superstitious, to worship god after a fleshly maner. Wee must consider that hee filleth all things, yea euen abiding in his heauenly glory, and there must wee seeke him by faith. When wee thinke vpon him, we must not draw him downe hither to haue him here after a fleshly manner, but wee must mounte vp by faith into heauen where he dwelleth, as the scripture speaketh of him. That therefore is the thing which we haue to remember vpon this place besides y<sup>e</sup> things y<sup>e</sup> haue bene declared already. For I doe but put you in remembrance of the things that haue bene discoursed more at large heretofore.

Nowe afterward there is leaue giuen by God to his people, to eate fleshe throughout all the lande of Chanaan, so it be not of any Sacrifices, tithes, burnt offerings, Heaucofferings, or silit fruites. It shall be lawfull then for you to eate of all common fl: the euery where; but as for that which shal haue bin sacrificed vnto me, let it not be eaten of in any other place, than in the same which I shall haue chosen to fet my Sanctuarie in. Howebeit, he addeth one worde more here, saying: according to the blessing which God shall giue thee. Here wee see first of all, that it were not lawfull for vs to eate one bit of breade, vnles we were sure in our minds that God giueth it vs and that wee haue leaue of him to eate it.

And that is the cause why Saint Paul requereth faith where he speaketh of eating and drinking; saying that whatsoever is not of faith, is sinne.

And whereof treateth hee there? Euen of the eating of fleshe or of herbes, of bread or of fishe, and of all manner of foode; and hee saith that it must be doone with faith. As howe? Some will say that faith is too precious a thing to be mingled with corruptible meates. Yea, but wee must be sure in all our life, that we attempt not any thing which may displease God, or that is not lawfull for vs to doe by his leaue or warrant giuen vnto vs. Therefore in the foresaide text, by the worde Faith, Saint Paul meaneth the recorde that we haue in our eating and drinking, that God sheweth himselfe a father to vs, by giuing vs foode to nourishe our bodies withall: and that our vsing of the benefites which the earth yeeldeth, is not by stealth as though we woulde robbe him of them; but as it were by receiving them at his hand. When a father giueth his children euery one his pittance, saying, hold here, & eat it: it is no more than God doth daily vnto vs, when we be certified by his word, y<sup>e</sup> he hath giuen power to y<sup>e</sup> earth to bring forth corne & wine for our vie, & deliuered vs y<sup>e</sup> beasts & all other things to eat of. Wee must assure our selues y<sup>e</sup> the growing & encreasing of victuals in the worlde commeth not by haphazard, but of Gods ordinance, who hath appointed them to feede vs through his goodnes. I tolde you this doctrine is verie needefull. For what a thing were it, if we could not eat a morfell of bread without offending God? And yet S. Paul auoweth it to be so. And why? For if in my eating & drinking at all times & in all places, I know not that I am beholden to God for y<sup>e</sup> good things y<sup>e</sup> hee hath ordeined for mee: it is al one as if I stole it fro him: I do but slich it fro him like a dog or a cat, which taketh that which was not ordeined for her. Yee see then that that is one fault.

Againe, it is as it were a burying of God, whē men knowe not that it is he which giueth them the foode for their sustenance. If wee bee not fully persuaded of that; then is God disappointed of the honour that belongs to him, so as wee acknowledge him not for our father and fosterer, but become so brutish that wee minde no more the life which is prepared for vs in y<sup>e</sup> kingdom of heauen. But his taking of such fatherly care of vs in this world, is to leade vs vp higher thereby. And so wee see that vnlesse wee be sure that God giueth vs leaue to eate and drinke according to his blessing; wee bee but as brute beasts, and much worse than they. Againe, on the other side, who giues vs authoritie to deuour Gods benefites? Shall wee wretched creatures which offend God without ceasing, presume to do it of our own heads, without considering that wee haue those things of his free goodnes, and that they belong not to vs otherwise than of Gods good will, who vouchsafeth to shewe him selfe liberal towards vs? Surely then doe wee rain all things to vs without any right or title. Therefore are we blame worthe euery way for our eating and drinking, till wee knowe that GOD is the giuer of all. And heereby wee bee doone to vnderstande further, that in our eating and drinking wee must not obserue the traditions of men, but content ourselues with the testimony of Gods good will. And therunto also doeth the holy scripture referre vs by condemning the fond toys that men deuise of themselves, as when they say, it is not Lawfull to eate flesh vpon such a day, this must be done and y<sup>e</sup> must be done. And what authoritie haue men to bid and forbidde such things? For the Pope and all his rable are not able to make a filly flye: and shall they forbidde vs to eate beefe, mutton, or any other of the things that were made for our sustenance? What else is their vsurping of such authoritie, than a robbing of GOD of his souerainetie ouer vs? Now then let vs haue an eye to the will of our GOD. And sith wee knowe that hee hath giuen vs all meates without exception: let euery of vs vse them soberly, and bee contented to bee ruled by his worde: for to him onely doeth it belong to lay Lawes vpon vs, and it is not for any mortall man to presume so farre. If any man take that vpon him which is not due to him, let vs despise him, yea and abhorre him; as one that goeth about to ouerthrowe y<sup>e</sup> authoritie of God. And so ye see what wee haue to marke in Gods suffering & giuing leaue vnto his people, to eate flesh in all places, so it were not sacrificed. As if he should say: In your eating and drinking consider well what is lawfull for you. And howe may you discern that? By my word, Giue your selues once ouer vnto me; and you shal no more be afraide of any thing. If men lay new Lawes vpon you; make no account of it: for it is ynough for you, that ye haue leaue at my hande.

And nowe Moses addeth expressly, according to the blessing which God shall haue giue thee, whereby he doeth vs to vnderstande, that euery man must haue an eye to his owne abilitie, and thereby rule his desires. For if the riche man hauing whereof to liue, doe fare according to his abili-abilitie, and the poore man will needes fare as well as he: he must needes smarr for it. And God liketh not of it when he that hath not wherewith will needes fare as dayntly as hee that is riche. Indeede we must alway beare this lesson of Saint Pauls in mind and put it in practise, namely that he which hath abundance giue not himselfe till he burst, he giue himselfe to his pleasures, according to his saying in the xiii. to the Romanes, that we must not haue a care of our fleshe to coker it too much: For our fleshe desireth not the best things, and our appetites are inordinate: and therefore the following of them were but a confused disorder. Although the richer sort haue great store of all things, yet must they not pamper themselves out of measure, so as they shoulde at any time fall into disorder, and not induour to bestow of their abundance vpon such as are in neede and pouertie. For Gods meaning is to try the charitie of such as haue wherewith, by giuing them more than they themselves haue neede of, to the intent they shoulde not be nigardly of the things which they haue, but be helpfull to their poore brethren & to such as want. Neuertheless, a rich man may fare according to the blessing y God shall haue giuen him, and the poore man must content himselfe with browne breade if he haue none other, and not strayne himselfe to eate whytebread as well as the riche man, but beare his pouertie patiently, and pray to God to nourish him as it were with Manna from heauen: And although hee haue nothing else but drie bread to feed on, the same must serue his turne in steede of all other vittels. That is the thing in effect, which Moses meant to shewe vs here. And it is a verie good and profitable lesson: for thereby wee bee doone to vnderstande that if God giue vs abundance, it is a continuall putting of vs in remembrance that hee dwelleth among vs, that wee bee not as these drunkardes which in a yeare when there is store of wine, do despise God and praise the very brute beastes, so that if they may not drinke wine till they spewe it our again, and powre it in as it were with tunnelles, they haue neuer enough. Let vs beware of such beastlines: and let vs beare in mind that we be in Gods presence. And surely if wee beare him that reuerence, we will bee ashamed to cram our selues like dogges or swine, and to defice his image in vs by vncensurable eating & drinking till we burst againe. Lo what we haue to beare in minde. Likewise on the other side, if the yeare be barren, so as there be small store of wine, and corne is deere: This text teacheth vs to thanke God for it, and to cur our morsels the smaller, and to briede our selues. For why? It is saide that our eating must bee after as our God hath blessed vs, so as we must haue an eye to the abilitie that God hath giuen vs: and accordingly as we haue wherewith, so must euery of vs learne to rule himselfe, and not play the vniuersities y are led away by their lusts, which put all into the platter (as they say) to satisfie their bellies withal. Some are so delicate of their diet, that rather than they will forbeare when God

1. Cor. 7. 30.

sendeth them scarcitie, they will sell their cotes, yea and their dishes and platters too. Such folke might consider, that it were good for them to keepe somewhat in store, for afterwarde, to the intent that if they fell into sicknesse or any other necessitie, they might haue wherewith to relieue them. Had they anie honestie or any stay of themselves, to thinke that it is Gods will to deale sparely with them at that time: Had they anie consideration at all I say: they might say, Lord thou hast all good things in thine hand, and that so plentifully, as thou couldest wel giue vs much more: but thou intendest to try our patience. Vouchsafe therefore to blesse the little that thou hast giuen vs, so as it may suffice vs. Let it be as the Manna to vs, that we may perceiue thy fauor towards vs, euen thereby though there were none other thing. But what? All our minde is vpon the filling of our bellies; yea euen without regarding how far God giueth vs leaue to goe. So much the more therefore ought all men both rich and poore, to mark wel this text. Let y man of wealth say in himselfe: it is the blessing of my God: & sith it is so, I must yeelde him account of it, and I must looke verie well about me howe I may vse these things aright according to his ordinance: so as I giue not my fleshe whatsoeuer it liketh or lusteth for, but that I be haue my selfe soberly howsoeuer the world go, and also imparte my ouerplus to such as haue want or neede, and releuee them with mine abundance. Let the rich deale after that maner. Againe on the other side, let the poore be thinke them thus: Wel, God giueth vs not wherewith to finde our selues, and therefore it behoueth vs to beare our poore state patiently, and not giue head to our lustes: for then shall we but prouoke Gods wrath, by following our deintie desires & such other like things: wherefore let vs be well aduised to content our selues with the little that he giueth vs.

Thus ye see that although the rich enjoye their ease & haue wherewith to maintaine their delights for the present time: Yet they must bee of such mind, that if God list to bereaue them of all things the next morrowe, they must not repine to giue ouer al, but so humble themselves as they may say, Lord I will iue to day according to the blessing which thou hast giuen mee: and if thou list to impouerishe mee to morrowe, doe thy good pleasure: onely graunt mee the grace to learne to content my selfe with anie other state of liuing than I liue in to day. Whereas to day I fare according to mine abilitie; if thou list to bring me downe to browne breade, let mee abide to be brought thereto, and let my necke be pliable to receiue thy yoke. That is the effect of the things which we haue to marke vpon this sentence of Moses, where he declareth that euery man must moderate his dyet and fare according to gods blessing, that is to say, according to the abilitie that God giueth him wherewith to doe it.

And wee bee further warned to beware that we deuoure not all that euer wee can get by pilfry and wicked trades: for that is no blessing of

God. When a man hath raked other folks goods to him by fraude and Leawde dealing, can that be called Gods blessing? True it is that riches come alwayes from Gods hande: but yet who-soeuer he is that enricheth himselfe by rauen & fraude, is ricche of God, and vterly milled of him. So then, let vs marke that although a man coulde by wicked thiftes gaine wherewith to feede himselfe fat; yet must he not take such libertie to him. For why? In this place we be restreynd backe to the blessing of God. Were this point wel marked, we should not see so much naughtinesse in the world as there is to be seene nowadayes. For all the care is how to gette wherewith to maintaine vs: but as for whether the meanes be Lawfull and reasonable, no man entereth into the examination of that: but so he may setape and catch, he neuer takes any further care at al. We see what rauening there is, we see what deceitful and leawde dealing there is: in somuch as there is not anie state or trade of men in y world this day, which is not so peruerted as wold irk a man to think vpon it. Every mans seeking is to pul to himselfe y goods of other men, & commonly all is fishe that comes to net. For why? We haue no regard of Gods blessing, but we winde them in vnto vs, some by lying, and some by faire glosing. And to what ende? Forsooth to finde our selues withal. Beholde, God calleth vs all, & tellerh vs that his blessing shall fight vpon vs, if we followe his worde simple: & that he will not faile vs in any thing, at leastwise if we endeavour to doe what we can. Indeede we may hap to fare hardly nowe and then, so as God will not feede vs to fall as we woulde wish: but yet howe soeuer we fare, hee promiseth to giue sustenance to as many as resort vnto him. But wee disappoint our selues of it by our owne leawdnesse. For first and foremost we be troubled and tormented with distrust; secondly our vnordinate lutes doe tempt vs and tuckle vs: & thirdly the diuell doeth so blinde vs, that wee make no conscience of pilling and polling, of deceyuing and beguiling, and of giuing our selues to al naughtinesse, so we may bee fat fedde, and liue deintily: as for all the rest wee make none account of it. And therefore let vs remember this worde Blessing, as whereby God sheweth vs that we must resort wholly vnto him, accordingly also as our Lorde Iesus Christ teacheth vs by bidding vs to aske our dayly breade of God his father, where by we protest that wee holde all things of his blessing.

Finally he addeth, That as well the cleane as the vnclane may eate thereof. Our Lorde doth not here giue leaue to the vnclane, to eat the fruits of the earth with an euill conscience: but his meaning is that there is not so great streitnesse to be vsed in the receiuing of the comon meats and drinke, as in eating of the sacrifices. For y eating of the Sacrifices was to another purpose. In thole holy feastes aforementioned, it behoued them in any wise to be cleane afore hande according to the ceremonie of the lawe: so as it was not for any man to come to the Temple and to eate of the Sacrifices, vntill hee hadde first cleane himselfe; and water was set readie at the coming in of the dore for the same purpose. But heretis saide that there was no such strait bondage to be obserued in their comon eating and drinking. That is the verie meaning of Moses. But yet must wee marke also therewithall, that all that euer we touch is defiled by our vnclannesse, if wee our selues be not dedicated vnto God, according to this saying of Saint Paules, that all things are cleane to the pure and cleane, which haue their consciences right before God, and cleane by faith: whereas on the contrarie part, the vnclane eaters and such as haue no feare of GOD, defile the breade and wine by their touching of it, and do but make all things vnclane, so as Gods creatures are infected by y filthines that is in them.

This must wee holde for a rule: and specially in eating and drinking wee must haue the saide cleannesse of dedicating our selues vnto God. Neuertheless wee must note that wee cannot at all times be so well disposed in our eating and drinking, as when wee come to the Church: there we must bee of an other minde. True it is that euen in our laboring, and in our looking to our householde, wee ought to haue God alway before our eyes; and that when we eate and drinke, wee ought to doe it in his name, according to the lesson that I alleaged out of Saint Paule. But when wee come to the Church God is yet neerer vs and more familiar with vs. For our Lorde Iesus Christ assureth vs that he is there among vs when we come together in his name: and by our holding vp of our hands towards heauen, wee shewe that our conning thither is to present our selues in the sight of our God. And therefore wee must haue a more singular and earnest affection when we bee come thither, than when wee bee doing of our common businesse. Ought there not to bee a difference put betwene the Lordes supper and our common eating and drinking? True it is that whensoever we receiue our ordinarie repast, wee ought to call vpon God and to giue him thanks, or else wee bee defiled. But yet when wee come to the holy supper, wee must be rauished after another fashion, as though wee were no more in this worlde: Our mindes must not runne vpon the feeding of our bodies, but vpon the sonne of GOD, who calleth himselfe our life, telling vs that his fleche is our soode, and his bloode our spirituall drinke. And therefore it is meete that it should be separated from the things that belong to the common order of this earthly life.

Wee see then that the meaning of Moses in this place where our Lorde giueth vs libertie to eate and drinke, is that wee shoulde call vpon him: and that although there bee infirmitie in vs, yet must not we therefore forbear y libertie and leaue that GOD giueth vs to vse the soode which he hath appointed to our vse: which thing wee may doe with a quiet conscience, not doubting but that GOD doeth well like of it, seeing hee hath giuen vs such warrant, & hath dispensed with vs of his owne free goodnes, And specially that when we were fort vnto him, we must retire & call our selues backe from al earthly cares, y<sup>e</sup> we may mount vp wholly vnto heauen. As for example, when we be to receiue the holy supper, or when wee see y<sup>e</sup> Christ assureth or warranteth vs by Baptisme, y<sup>e</sup> we be made cleane by him, and newly reformed, so as he accepteth vs and taketh vs for his members, to the intent that his fathers iudgement seate shoulde not be terrible vnto vs: when we thinke <sup>10</sup> on these things I say, it becommeth vs to bee drawn to the heauenly life, and to be as it were seclused from our earthly cares, that wee may the better sticke vnto our God, and fare the better by it all the dayes of our life.

And nowe let vs fall downe in y<sup>e</sup> presence of our good God w<sup>h</sup> acknowledge vs of our faults, praying him to make vs perceiue the daily more

& more, & to teach vs so to serue him, as we may abide continually in the pure simplicitie of his worde, without adding aught to it or taking aught fro it, vpon our own head. And seeing we know our selues gilty before him of so many sins committed against his maiestie; let vs flee for refuge to his mercie, and not doubt but that seeing hee hath vouchsafed (not to haue a visibie Sanctuarie among vs, but) euen to knit himselfe to vs in the person of his sonne Iesus Christ, wee may assure our selues that he alwayes hath compassion of vs, to receiue vs, notwithstanding that we be so wretched creatures as we bee well worthy to bee cut off from him, and to bee vitterly thrust out of his kingdome. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

19 Beware that thou forsake not the Leuite of all the time that thou shalt be v<sup>o</sup>pon the earth.

20 When the Lorde thy God shall haue enlarged thy borders as he hath saide, and thou sayest, I will eate flesh: if thy mind be delirious to eat flesh, eat thou what-focuer flesh thou hast a mind vnto.

21 If the place which the Lord thy God will choose to put his name in, be farre from thee, thou shalt kill of the Oxen and sheepe which the Lord hath giuen thee, as I haue commanded thee, and thou shalt eat of it within thine owne gates, according to thine owne hearts desire.

22 As the Fallow deere and the Reddeere are eaten: so shalt thou eate them. The cleane and the vncleane may eate thereof alike.

23 Onely take heede that thou eate not the blood: for the blood is the life, and thou mayest not eate the life with the flesh.

24 Therefore thou shalt not eate it, but shalt powre it vpon the earth as water.

25 Eate not of it therefore: that it may go wel with thee and with thy children after thee, when thou shalt haue doone the thing that is right in the sight of the Lorde.

26 But as for the halowed things that are in thy custodie, and thy vowes; thou shalt take and carie them to the place which the Lorde hath chosen.

27 And thou shalt offer thy whole burnt offerings both the flesh and the blood, vpon the altar of the Lord thy God. And of thy Peace offerings thou shalt powre the blood vpon the altar of the Lorde thy God, and thou shalt eate the flesh.

28 Take heede and hearken to all these words which I commaund thee, that it may go well with thee and with thy children after thee for euer, when thou shalt haue done the thing that is good and right in the sight of the Lord thy God.

E sawe yesterday why God appointed the Leuites to haue cities here & there throughout the land of Iurie: namely for the maintaining of the true & pure religion among his people. For if any of them would haue turned away to superstition, or idolatry, those whom God had appointed to his owne seruice, might haue amended them by good admonitions. So by y<sup>e</sup> meanes was y<sup>e</sup> seed of good doctrine sowne every where. now pursuing y<sup>e</sup> same matter. Moses addeth, Theas the peo-

people should beware in any wife that they defrauded them not of their rights. And not without cause. For as I haue told you before, God had appointed them of purpose to serue him, and the greater part of them also to teach his people, that his lawe might be knowen. Seeing it was so, it was good reason that they should haue wherewith to find and maintaine them. For in very deede a part of the inheritance belonged to them, because they were descended of the lineage of Abraham. But GOD had put them from it, to the ende they should not bee troubled neither with tilling of the grounde nor with any other busineses, but onely giue themselues all wholly to the doing of their office. And it is not without cause that Moses plainly exhortheth y<sup>e</sup> people to doe their dutie in this behalfe: for wee see the vnthankfulnesse of the worlde. The Idolaters can finde in their hartes to maintayne their priestes, and they spare for no cost: but as for them that serue God purely, there is commonly no account made of them, as hath bene seene in all times. We see how God himself complaineth that he was defrauded both of his first frutes and also of his offerings, and of all the residue which he had appointed to himselfe in his lawe. But if a man had inquired howe the heathen behaued themselves towards their idols: he should haue founde that they were willing to spende the most part of their substance in their superstitions. We see then as I haue told you already, that the worlde is so thankeles towards the liuing God, y<sup>e</sup> if men be not thoroughly quickened v<sup>s</sup>, they let slippe al that euer God commaundeth, and coulde bee contented that such things should neuer be spoken of. Specially as for those whom God hath ordeined to preach his word, men can finde in their hartes, not onely to set light by them, but also to forsake them vtterly. And why? It is because god rebuketh vs for our faults, but we would he were further off from vs, & that he would lay the bridle in our neckes, so as euery man might do what he listeth: & therefore it greeueth vs to be touched by Gods word. But yet for al that, if those y<sup>e</sup> haue that charge committed to them do their duty; they must be importunate in calling vpon vs, by rebuking, exhorting, and reproving vs, that they may overcome vs by their liuely rebukes & sharpe threatnings. Now, that is not y<sup>e</sup> thing which the world coueteth & desireth. Nay y<sup>e</sup> world had leuer to maintaine such as should neuer speake worde of ir, than to haue a preacher that would rebuke sin liuely. And if it were in y<sup>e</sup> worlds choice, it had alwayes leuer to maintaine a whole count of Munkes & Chanons to houle out with ful gorge, than to finde one preacher that would speake as he ought to do. Men can be contented to haue Organs. And why? For they put men to no grieue by rebuking their sins. But as for such as preach Gods worde to the quick, men could finde in their hartes that they were rid out of the worlde, if it were possible. And therefore it is not wout cause y<sup>e</sup> our Lord saith he will not haue them forsaken, which beare abroad y<sup>e</sup> true doctrine in his name. For by that meanes folke becaue themselues of the foode of life, in that they refuse to mainteyne those that bring them the doctrine of saluation, which is all one as if they ment to starue themselves for hunger. And that is the cause also why Saint Paul standeth so much vpon y<sup>e</sup> warning. Certaine it is that he fought not his owne profit. In somuch that he forbore to take his due wages in some places, because he sawe that men grudged at it. And he chose rather to take it of other Churches, where he serued not, than of y<sup>e</sup> Corinthians, because of the vnthankfulnesse, which he sawe among them. Nay, he chose to labour with his owne handes, rather than hee would giue them any occasion to speake ill of him. Thus haue we a man that is not giuen to his owne profite, but rather forbeareth willingly euen that which God had granted vnto him; and yet he ceaseth not to tel them, that y<sup>e</sup> preachers of Gods worde ought to be found & mainteined. And why is that? Because wee see the diuelles suttletie, who desyreth nothing so much as that the Churches should bee destitute of good shepherdes. Againe Saint Paul hath an eye to the spitefulnesse of the worlde. And that is the cause why he standeth so much vpon the said point, That those to whome God hath committed the charge of the preaching of his world, should be faithfully mainteined. It is a great matter (saith he) that we for bringing our spiritual goods vnto you, should haue wherewith to susteine our bodies. It is a very faire recompence. And yet if y<sup>e</sup> mislike you, you shewe great malice, and that yett set but litle store by the inestimable treasure sent you of God. Now wee see to what purpose Moses commendeth here the tribe of Leuie vnto them. It was not so much for the profite of those that were to be mainteyned by the offerings, first frutes, and tithes; as for the common benefite of the whole people. For it was to the end they should be mainteined altogether in the true vnion of faith, & that they might alwayes haue men to put them in mind to liue in obedience towards God, and that the Religion might be preferred in y<sup>e</sup> purenes therof. This is not for y<sup>e</sup> peculiar benefite of y<sup>e</sup> Leuites, but for y<sup>e</sup> general welfare of the whole Church of God.

Now hereupon Moses repeateth y<sup>e</sup> same thing again which I haue expounded heretofore: that is to say, That the Lewes might eat flesh throughout all the land of Iurie, conditionally that the sacrifices were reserved for the sanctuarie, & for the temple wh<sup>o</sup> the time were come that it were builded. I haue tolde you already that the cause why God gaue such leaue, was to the end that men should learne to refrain frō the attempting of any thing which they were not sure to be lawfull for them to do. And howe shall we knowe that the things which we doe are acceptable to God? By hauing his word which he giueth vs. For it is not for vs to be further of his counsell, than he discloseth vnto vs. To be short, it is shewed vs here, that in all our life wee must not stirre one finger, except we be sure that GOD hath giuen vs leaue. Now he for his part leauech vs not in doubt, but hath giuen vs a sure and vnfallible rule, so as we may alwayes discern the certaintie at least-

wife if wee will holde our selues contented with the thing that God alloweth, without adding any thing to his doctrine and his lawe. For there he hath vttered his wil in such wise vnto vs, that if we want any thing nowe, it is because we list not toarken to him that hath all dominion ouer vs. As for example, all the doubttes that are among the Papisstes procede of nothing else but of a foolish curiositie which they haue to do better than G O D commaundeth them. O (say they) I would be so holy as nothing might passe from mee which should not be good. And is it not enough to obey G O D? Yes (say they), but I would do yet more. He y<sup>e</sup> palleth those bounds, shall but torment himselfe, and dwell in vnquietnesse all the time of his life, as wee see these hypocrites are, which are alwayes tossed and turmoyled with some doubt. And what is the cause thereof? It is a reward which they deserue verie well because they will not rule themselves by Gods word. But (as the Prophet Esay saierh) if we walk purely and simple according to Gods word, we shall haue rest in our soules, and wee shall be free from all these troubles and debates which the wretched vnbeleeuers make: for they wote not at which ende to beginne, neither knowe they where to make an end. Therefore let vs marke well howe it is not without cause, that G O D speaking of eating and drinking, doeth giue here expresse leaue to his people, to the ende we shoulde not aduenture anie thing, but in his name, and to doe vs to vnderstand that he hath such a care of vs, that hee will giude all our steppes, and therefore we must liue as in his presence.

Furthermore let vs learne to receiue the libertie which G O D hath giuen vs, that we may enjoy it so far forth, as is expedient: for we know y<sup>e</sup> this libertie of ours ought to carie a restraint with it: & S. Paul telleth vs y<sup>e</sup> al the things which are lawfull, are not alwayes behouefull, because they do not alwayes edifie our neighbors. But yet howsoever the case standeth, we must haue our consciences free, so as wee may vse the things that G O D hath graunted vs by his worde. And therefore both in eating and drinking wee may giue him thanks with a cheerefull hearte, as they that knowe howe it is hee that feedeth vs, and that we doe receiue all things at his hand. Moreover we bee continually put in mind hereby, y<sup>e</sup> he is neere at hand with vs, and y<sup>e</sup> his prouidence extendeth euen to y<sup>e</sup> least things. For it may well seeme that eating and drinking are no such things as are without that God shoulde haue regarde of them. But yet it is Gods will to beare sway in that behalfe, to the ende that we shoulde knowe the fatherly care that hee hath of vs, not onely in respect of our soules, but also in respect of our bodies, though they bee transitorie and corruptible.

Hereunto Moses addeth, that the people shoulde refrayne from eating the bloude of beastes. Whereby he doeth vs to vnderstande, that wee must so vse Gods creatures, as we abhorre all crueltie. For at the first sight it seemeth an vnaturall thing to kill the beastes to whome

G O D hath giuen life, by knocking of them downe and by cutting of there throtes. It seemeth to be a chaunging of Gods ordinance, and an vtter peruerting of all things, when men take leaue to doe such things. Yet notwithstanding our Lorde sayth that men may lawfully eate the fleshe of beastes, and that hee hath created them for mans vse. Neuertheles Gen. 9. 3 to the intent to inure his people to meekenesse, hee willeth them to absteyne from bloude. But that serued but for the time of the Lawe and the ceremonies. For as wee haue seene already, our Lorde gouerned the people of olde time as little babes. And wee knowe that men teach young children all things that are good: but for asmuch as they haue not yet the capacitie to vse things as they that are come to mans estate: men holde them in awe, and suffer them not to haue things at will which are lawfull of themselves. As howe? Men beate a child for handling a knife, because hee cannot tell yet howe to vse it. So then G O D vfed a childlike kinde of instruction and as it were rudimentes, or euen as wee say, the A, B, C, to enter that people withall which was yet rude and weak; but yet wee knowe what the ende and intent of the Lawe was, in commaunding men to absteyne from the bloud of beastes. For Gods will was that men shoulde abhorre all crueltie. And the same exposition hereof is set downe by Moses himselfe in the ninth Chapter of Genesis. For after the floude God declareth that men may well eate the fleshe of beastes, so they forbear to eate of their bloud. And why is that? Because it is to be considered, that the soule or life of euery liuing thing is after a sorte represented by the bloude. And I forbidde you all manslaughter (sayth G O D): beare well in minde that men are created after myne owne image: and therefore yee muste not worke any outrage one to an other. For whosoever sheddeth mans blood, shall haue his bloude shedde by man. Wee see (I saye) that the respect which our Lorde hadde, was not of the brute beastes: but rather that his meaning was to holde vs together in brotherly loue. And therefore hee gaue the people of olde time a figure, whereby to put them in minde that they shoulde not offer any outrage to the reasonable creatures. That is the very effect.

Nowe as touching the Ceremonie, that is no more in vse: it was meete that all such things shoulde bee doone away at the coming of our Lorde Iesus Christ: but yet doeth the substance of it continue with vs still, so as G O D commaundeth vs to lue peaceably one with another. For seeing it is tolde vs in his Lawe, that it was not lawfull to eate the bloude of beastes: howe much the rather ought wee to spare the blood of men? For men are not sette in the worlde to make meate of; but G O D hath prynted his marke vpon them, and made his owne image to shine forth in them, to the ende that wee by our sparing of them, shoulde shewe what reuerence we beare towards GOD. There are two things which we ought chiefly to regard in maintaining concord and friendship among men. The one is that we be all of one kinde. Thou shalt not despise thine owne fleshe, saith the Prophete. And in deede, we see that euen the wilde beastes do through a naturall instinct keepe companie together, and euery of them liues quietly with others of the same sort. Needs then must wee be more peruerse and lesse reasonable than the brute beastes, if wee fall to deuouring one another, and play the cats and dogges, as they say. Neuertheless, considering the inordinate vnrliness that is among men, howe there is neither vprightnes nor indifferent dealing among them: surely there needeth none other iudge to condemn them of their crueltie, than the very wilde beastes.

But there is yet a further thing, which I saide to be the seconde point: and that is, that God hath set his image in vs. Therefore when I doe any outrage to my neighbour, it is all one as if I should deface the image of GOD, and so am I guilty of high treason. Wherefore let vs beare well in mind y<sup>e</sup> our Lord maketh great account of the maintenāce of peace & agreement betweene men: the meane whercof is that no man offer any violence or wrong vnto his neighbour. And surely wee knowe howe greatly God misliketh manslaughter. For the lawe was made so strait in that behalfe, that if a bodie were founde deade by chaunce, and it was not known who killed it, the elders should meete about it, and after great search for the matter, they should take a solemne othe that none of them was guilty of the murder: thereupon they should offer a sacrifice, to witnesse that the land should be as it were defiled if God punished not so heynous an offence, though the murderer were not founde. And what shall then become of vs when our handes are imbrewed with blood, and the murderer is known, and we be full of crueltie towardes our brethren? Thinke we to scape the hande of y<sup>e</sup> Iudge vnpunished, when as he hath pronounced such sentence? Yea and euen when manslaughter is committed in battels, although the same be permitted when the warres are Lawfull: Yet notwithstanding the scripture telleth vs there is a kinde of dehling in it, to the end y<sup>e</sup> euen when men are compelled to slae their enemies in the maintenance of iust quarels, they should consider thus with themselves: Alas, I must be faine to deface here the creatures that are shaped after the image of God: and thereupon be sorie and loth to doe it. Nowe then let vs marke that about all things it is Gods will we should liue quietly among our selues, without offering of any violence or outrage one to another. But truly, murders are about all things most horrible in Gods sight: and yet must we marke therewithall, that by that meanes all other outrages are forbidden. And that was the cause why the Prophete Esay vpbraided the Iewes, with the bloodinesse of their handes. It was not for that they had robbed by the highways sides, or for that they had so beaten or stricken foolke, as they might haue beene indited for it before earthly Iudges, but it was for the pilferies and extorsions which they had committed secretly, and for their wrongfull consuming of other mens substauces. Although then that there be no open murder committed not any such outrageous act done as may be condemned by ordinarie iustice: yet doeth not God accept that as sufficient, except wee be free from all raiu, and wrong dealing, and haue liued so vprightly among our neighbours, as we haue done nothing to them which wee would not haue done vnto our selues.

Moreouer we haue to note howe Saint Iohn in his Canonickall Epistle saith that he which hateth his neighbour in his heart, is a murderer alreadie before God. Although this hatred of ours be not known, although wee shewe no ourwarde token to the worldewarde that we be caried with desire of reuenge, although there appeare no such thing as may discouer our malice vnto men: Yet are we guilty of murder before God, if we haue any hartburning at all within vs. For euen that were a giuing of place vnto Satan, as Saint Paul telleth vs here where hee warneth vs that the sunne should not go downe vpon our anger. He saith that the partie which hath his heart so infected with hatred and rancor giueth Satan the possession of him to reigne ouer him. That is the thing which wee haue to beare in mind.

I tolde you euen now, that the vse of this ceremonie hath ceased euer since the coming of our Lorde Iesus Christ. And therefore we ought to be the more encouraged to serue GOD, sith wee see that wee be not reined in with so rough a bitte, nor held so short as the Fathers of olde time were. Yee see howe at this day, GOD giueth vs leaue to eat the blood of beastes, which thing was not granted to the Iewes. Wee knowe what istolde vs of it by the Apostles themselves. For they made not a decree of it, as the Papistes vnderstande it, neither changed they any thing in Gods word, (for that had bene high treason to God): but so far much as they knewe that our Lord Iesus Christ, had by his coming abolished the Ceremoniall lawe: they shewed that it might bee lawful to eate bloude, so it were done without offence to others. For their forbidding of it in the fifteenth of the Actes, was but for a time; and thereby they shewed that it was free for euery man according to conscience, to maintaine peace and concordewithall. In deed they counselled men to absteyne from it, howebeit that was but for a time (as I said) vntil the faithfull were better settled in the doctrine of the Gospell.

And nowe let vs applye this doctrine to our owne vse. I haue tolde you alreadie, that sith and foremost it behooueth vs alwayes to byddle ourselues, assuring ourselues that nothing is permitted vs which breedeth offence. And why? Because God bindeth vs one to another. But y<sup>e</sup> for al y<sup>e</sup>, we haue our consciences at liberty. So as wee knowe that the thinges are free to vs, which were not permitted to the fathers of olde time. Nowe then ought not this to moue vs the more to serue God, which iheweth himselfe so freeharted towards vs? For if we were vnder the bondage of the Lawe; wee ought to obtaine from manslaughter, seeing that the bloude of beastes were forbidden vs, which at this day is permitted vnto vs. And therefore let vs beware wee abuse not such goodnesse of our God: but rather the more that hee graunteth vs, the more let euerie of vs bethinke him to holde himselfe in his obedience & subiection, that we play not the loose Colts as the prouerbe saith. That is the effect of the thinges which wee haue to note vpon this text.

Now as touching the Vowes and Oblations wherof Moses speaketh so much; let vs remember what hath bin saide heretofore; namely howe it is not Gods will that his people should eate and drinke, without hauing some recorde that all commeth of him: As for example, whereas at this day he giueth vs leaue to eate and drinke euerie man according to his abilitie; his meaning is that wee shoulde giue our neighbours part with vs, and shewe by our almofeedes that wee doe homage vnto him with the things that he hath giuen vs, as belonging vnto him alone. There is not now adayes the like order that was vnder the Lawe of Moses, concerning oblations, firstfrutes, and Sacrifices: but Almofeedes are the sacrifices that God liketh of, as is shewed vnto vs, specially in the Epistle to the Hebrewes.

And it is a doctrine that is verie rise in the holy scriptures. But there it is saide expressly, that wee must not forget the brotherly loue which wee ought to haue in succouring our neighbours that are distressed: for they bee the sacrifices which God requirerth and alloweth. Sith it is so then, let vs marke well, that if a man haue witherewith to maintaine himselfe abundantly, hee must not exempt himselfe from doing seruice vnto God therewithall. And after what manner? Euerie man must streine himselfe to the vttermost of his power to succour and releue such as haue scarcitie & want of worldly goods. Thus yee see howe the right vse which our Lorde appointeth to all his creatures, is to offer them vp vnto him, to shew that we holde all of him. That is the very meaning that was intended in all the firstfrutes of olde time. And although the Ceremonie continue not at this day; yet ought the truth thereof to reigne still among vs. Wherefore let vs learne to cherish our selues in such sort, as wee forget not other folks: and specially let vs beate in minde, that our vnthankfulness will defile all our good fare, if wee acknowledge not God to be the giuer of all things vnto vs. Wee heare what our Lorde Iesus Christ saide to the hypocrites that tooke greate paines to make cleane their vessels that there might bee no spotte in them. Make cleane the insides of them too, quoth hee. And afterwarde hee addeth, that the right way for men to make themselves cleane, is to giue to the poore, and not to busie themselves about a sort of pelting trifles as the worlde doeth continually, who thinke to dally with God, and woulde giue him rittlerattles to play with as if hee were a babe, but they cannot beguile him so. Therefore according to Iesus Christes exhortation, if wee meane that the meates which we take shoulde be sanctified vnto vs, let vs looke that God bee honoured by them, and let vs beare well in minde howe it is of his onely freegoodnesse that wee bee nourished by them. And forasmuch as wee can neither doe him good nor harme, neither hath hee neede of any thing: let vs shewe our good will towards his poore seruauntes: For they bee his bailifes whome hee sendeth to vs, to receiue the fines and other duties that we owe him for all his beneficites. Thus yee see in effect what wee haue to gather vpon that saying.

Nowe it is saide further, that if the people doe the thinges that are right and iust before God, they shalbe blessed, both they and their children. Heretofore wee bee still warned, that if wee will direct our life aright, wee must not followe our owne good intents as they cal them, but hearken what God sayth vnto vs, and telt simplicly vpon his will, as shalbe declared more at large to morrowe by Gods will. Neuertheless Moses warneth the people here as he doth in manie other places, y they must not demean themselves after their owne fancies, but in any wise giue care vnto God. If thou doe that which is good and righteous saith hee; And in whose sight? In the sight of men? True it is that we ought to liue in such sort as wee giue no cause of offence to any bodie, so as if any speake euil of vs, they may haue their mouthes stopped. But yet must not men bee made iudges of their liues; that authoritic must be reserved vnto GOD. And that is the cause why the scripture meaning to betoken an angelicall perfection, saith that such a man hath walked before God. For if wee shoulde fashion our selues after the worlde, what a thing were it? Wee see howe the greatest multitude liue out of all order, and so shoulde wee make euill custome a Lawe. When whoredome, drunkennesse, outrage, violence, and blasphemie reigned; wee woulde beare our selues in hande that such thinges were permitted vs. And why? Because they be grown into custome.

Nowe therefore, if wee shoulde followe the guise of the worlde, wee should bee caried quite away. Again, euen they that pretende to bee fullest of deuotion, may chauce to vse some pelting trash and baggage in the seruing of God: they may happe to make a number of geugawes and risserrasse: but all such thinges are nothing worth, they bee but flatte mokerie. So then, it behoueth vs to walke before God; & although wee see thinges vtterly out of order, and all brought to confusion, yet must wee holde the right way still which GOD sheweth vnto vs. If wee see men goe astray, and deuise neuer so many fondc deuotions, let vs leaue all such thinges, and be contented to follow Gods ordinance, Surely although the worlde like neuer so well of our doings, yet shall wee not faile to bee condemned: but if God allowe of vs, then haue wee a good warrant. As for example, because that nowadayes wee vse nor the gewgawes of the Papists, we haue not any puppers here, we haue no decking of altars, we haue no tapers nor such other stuffe: they laugh our plaine dealing to scorne, and they thinke there is no seruing of GOD among vs. But howfoeuer we fare, we haue here a good recorde; which is, that wee doe the things that are good in the sight of our God. And it is not for once onely that Moses speaketh hereof. Wee haue seene other textes heretofore tending to the same effect: but here this saying is set down twice within tenne lines: and it is no more than needeth, considering howe strowarde wee bee to doe the things which the worlde liketh, inso-much that wee couet to bee soothed, and will needes alway iustifie our selues to the worlde-ward. Moses therefore bringeth backe to that point. No (saith hee), be contented to doe whatsoeuer our Lorde inioyneth you. For if hee allowe of your doings, then is it perfite righteousnes: and therefore hardly laugh all the world to scorne. So then, that is one point which we haue to beare in minde, when Moses telleth vs that wee must doe that which is good before God.

And nowe to giue the people the better courage, hee addeth immediately a promise, saying: To the intent thou maist prosper, both thou and thy children for euer. Here first of al wee see that which hath bene touched already; that is to wit, that our Lorde prouoketh vs to serue him with the better courage, by profering vs reward. Truly hee is not bounde to vs in any case: inso-much that when we shall haue serued him, yea though it bee a hundred thousande times more than wee doe; yet are wee still indetted to him neuertheless: for wee be his. And wee must marke our Lorde Iesus Christes similitude, howe that if a man haue a seruant that is as his slaue, when his seruant hath laboured all the day long, and cometh home at night, his master will not rise vp to giue him his supper, but commaunde him to waite vpon him still at his table. Nowe it is certaine that wee owe much more vnto God, than men owe one to another. Let vs streyne our selues to the vttermost of our power, yea and aboue al our power, and yet shall wee not bee able to discharge our selues of the hundredth parte of our duetie towards him, and what rewarde then can wee deserue at his hande? Neuertheless, of his owne freegoodnesse it is saide that wee shall not lose our labour in seruing him. So then let vs marke that Gods meaning is not to place any worthinesse in our workes by promising vs rewarde: but onely to incourage vs the more to them. And indeede wee bee too slothfull, if the regarde thereof moue vs not. Beholde, God might commaund me, and exact at my hande whatsoeuer he listeth, for I am bounde to him in all cases and all respects: and yet to the ende that no sloth should holde me backe, hee telleth me that if I serue him hee will prosper mee; and in his fo doing there pas- serch as it were a couenant, whereby he bindeth himselfe vnto vs. If this moue vs not, must it not neede bee that we bee more harde than fiones? Yet notwithstanding, wee see, that the wretched world cannot be wunne by any meanes. When the promises are set before vs; that God will blesse vs, though wee bee minded to giue our selues to his seruice, yet do we not cease to yeeld to all euill, and wee beare our selues in hande that wee shall benefite our selues greatly by pro- uoking his displeasure. If wee spie any likelihood of gaine; wee runne gadding after it, and euery of vs is raiust in loue of it. And what cometh of it when we go about to inrich our selues after that fashion by craft & wicked practises? When wee will needes attaine to some ambition or dignitie, what will bee the ende of it? Our Lorde will curse it euerie whit. It seemeth then that we intende to prosper euen as it were in de- spire of God. And wee bee so caried away by our affections, and so driuen by the headnesse of them, that God cannot holde vs backe, nei- ther by bridles, nor by ropes, nor by cheynes. Loe here a great mischicte, that although our Lorde allure vs neuer so sweetely to him, & la- bour to win vs to him by promising vs rewarde: yet notwithstanding we bee so full of mischicte, that to our seeming, all his promises are vaine & nothing worth; they moue vs not a whit. But as for the allurements of Sathan, they drawe vs to the, inso-much that we beare our selues in hand, that although God bee against vs and our ene- mie, yet wee shall not faile to prosper, for the worlde laugh vpon vs, and that there bee some likelihood of aduancement. Marke that for one point.

Furthermore, wee see that euen the wicked- est faile not to stande in their owne conceites. As for example, wee see nowadayes that in the Popedome men make a shielde of theses textes, to shewe that God is beholden to vs, that our workes are desertfull, and that wee bee able to purchase Gods grace, yea and euen euerlasting saluation; so as not onely God must needes prosper vs in this worlde, but also the heritage of the heavenly kingdome becommeth as a con- quest vnto vs. The world (say I) beguileth it selfe in this behalfe. And who bee they that speake so boldly of it? Euen the greatest despisers of God. As for example, ye shall see a sort of these Frier- ly flatterers dispute of desertes with full mouths; and yet for all that, they bee men without God, without religion, wicked out of measure, and scornors of God. Also let vs take the greatest pretenders of holinesse among them, and wee shall finde them full of pride and stanelinesse, full of malice and cruie against their neighbours, and burning with couetousnesse. They make a faire outward shewe of holinesse, but inward- ly, there is no foundnesse at all. Their life be- trayeth that they bee ranke rebulles against God, and that they doe but turne the best side outward in al their deuotions: and yet in the meane while, all their talke is of Merites, Me-

rites. And what manner of defects? Looke vpon their liues, and you shall see what they be. But first and formeſt, howe can our workes deſerue, but by Gods accepting of them of his owne free goodneſſe? For it ſtandeth vs in hand, not onely that he bind himſelfe vnto vs, as he doth notwithstanding that hee needs not except hee liſted; but alſo morouer, that hee accept our workes in good worth, forgiving the faultes & blemiſhes that are in them. For we cannot bring any one work vnto him which is not defiled with ſome imperfection, ſo as there is alwayes ſome fault to be found in it. Now then we ſhoulde be found blame-worthy in all our vertues if God liſted to examine them with rigour. And ſo what becommeth of the promiſes, which tell vs that our workes are deſertfull: Nay, let vs marke that after our Lords binding of himſelfe ſo freely vnto vs, hee yeeldeth vs rewarde for the ſeruite that we haue offered vnto him, and then accepteth our workes of his owne free goodneſſe. As howe? By putting all the blotts and blemiſhes of them out of his remembrance, ſo as hee imputeth them not any more. And that is the way for vs to proſper all kinde of wayes, through his onely free goodneſſe. But yet by the way let vs call to minde the matter that wee haue touched afore: namely that we be verie wretched, ſeeing our Lorde allureth vs to him ſo gently and with ſo great courtie, ſaying, Go to my childre, I deſire nothing elſe but to maintaine you in proſperitie, doe you no more but follow mee: and yet notwithstanding, after this choice of proſperitie offered vnto vs, wee forſake our GOD, and runne gadding after the vanities of this worlde, Sathan carrieth vs away with his trumperies, and wee ſhut our eyes wittingly, and wilfully, as though all our ſeeking were to be deſeued that wee might periſh: and yet for all this, wee ceaſe not to complaine when wee ſee the miſeries and aduerſities of this worlde light vpon vs. And in what a time are wee? Wee ſee nowadayes howe there is war on ſone ſide, and dearth on the other; all thinges are ſo farre out of order as it is pitie to beholde, and euery man mourneth, but no man hath an eye to the cauſe of the miſchiefe. For if wee thought vpon it, wee could not but perceiue Gods hande to be vpon vs, yea and that in ſuch wiſe, as it would make vs to be thinke vs after this manner: Alas, wee haue forſaken the fountaine of all welfare, and therefore it is good reaſon that wee ſhoulde nowe feele thirſt. For God is readie on his part to giue vs our fill, hee is not rigardly, his power is not diminiſhed, he hath the fulneſſe of all good thinges in him: and therefore if wee be deſtitute, of whom is it long? When a man runs gadding here and there, and forſaketh a fountaine, and goeth on wandering into deſert places where hee is in danger to die for thirſt, ſo as hee beareth out his tongue halfe a foot long, and ſindeh not a droppe of water to reſreſh himſelfe withall: is hee not worthe to die for thirſt, ſeeing he hath ſo forſaken the fountaine? So then let vs marke that God withdraweth his bliſſings from vs, becauſe wee haue forſaken him, and it is a juſt rewarde whereof wee be well worthe. And yet by the way wee be warned therewithall, to returne to our God: for his will is not that we ſhoulde pine in ſuch fort, as he ſhould not be ready to receiue vs againe. True it is that wee be driuen to feele our harmes in good earnest, that wee may be moued with hartie deſire to returne vnto him: But yet notwithstanding, for all his rough chaſtiſing of vs, and for all the long continuance of our miſerie, wee miſſe not to come into his fauour againe, and to be made partakers of his benefites, when we ceaſe to ſhinke away from him, and be fully minded to put our ſelues againe vnder his obediſſe.

So then, let vs learne to put this doctrine of Moſeſes in vſe, namely of doing that which is good and rightfull in the ſight of our God. And let vs marke howe it is not onely for a day or two that God ſaith hee will be mercifull and fauourable to his people: but that hee will holde out to the ende, yea euen after the deſeaſe of thoſe that ſhall haue ſerued him. And here in wee haue a confirmation of our hope of the euerlaſting life. For if God holde on in doing vs good euen after our deſeaſe, in the perſon of our children: it followeth that hee will not forget vs, but that when wee haue finiſhed our race in this worlde, we ſhalbe gathered vp vnto him, to inioy the benefites fully and perfectly, whereof hee hath giuen vs but a taſt by hope. Therefore muſt wee make that point; and ſuch wee be ſo naughtie and frowarde, that wee ceaſe not to go aſtray and to runne gadding here and there: let vs runne backe againe to him, and conſider that his uttering of his will vnto vs by worde of mouth, or his writing of it in paper or parchment, is not ynough for vs: but that hee muſt be ſaine to write in it our hearts alſo. Seeing then that wee be ſo frowarde as to ruſh out into naughtineſſe, and to turne aſide from the right way: let vs pray our good God to holde vs fo in by his holy ſpिरite, that although wee ſee thinges in horrible diſorder nowadayes, ſo as wee be moued at the beholding of the preſent ſtate of the worlde: yet notwithstanding we may not ceaſe to holde our ſelues ſtill vnder his hande, and gouernement: which thing if wee doe, ſurely wee may deſie all that euer the vnbelleeuers doe praſtice againſt vs. For if they deſiſe vs, if they ſhake vs off, if they abhorre vs: what for that? Yet are wee ſure that God hath not giuen vs his worde in vaine, but that if wee ſticke therunto, wee may be well apaide though men finde fault with vs, for wee ſhall be acquitted and iuſtified before GOD and his Angels, though the worlde haue condemned vs. Thus yee ſee howe we may walke in ſuch certaintie and hope, that although wee ſee ſtumbling-blockes round about vs, yet ſhall we neuer be thruſt out of the right way, and therewithall wee ſhall be well aſſured, that our Lorde will holde vs vnder his protection, ſo as when Satans vnderlinges haue wrought what they can, and the diuell himſelfe hath ſtreined all his force to the vttermoſt to ouerthrowe vs: yet not.

withstanding forasfinuch as wee bee throwed vnder the shadowe of our God, and haue his blessings printed in vs, wee neede not to feare but that hee will continue the same from day to day. And although wee see neuer fo many changes and backturnings in this world: yet are wee sure that we cannot light vpon our feete, so long as our Lorde bee our vpholder and stocke to leane vnto.

Nowe let vs fall downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs so to feele them, as wee may bee led to true repentance, and not onely craue forgiueneffe of the sinnes which we haue committed, but also obtaine such increase of his grace in vs henceforth, as he may bee glorified by our whole life, when hee hath brought vs backe againe to his holy Lawe. And so let vs all say, Almighty God, Heauenly father,

The Lxxxv. Sermon which is the sixth vpon the twelfth Chapter.

29 When the Lorde thy God shal haue rooted out before thy face the nations which thou goest to possesse, so as thou hast them in possession and dwellest in their Lande:

30 Then beware thou be not snared by them, after that they be ouercome before thee. And enquire not after their gods, saying: Howe did these nations serue their gods? I wil doe so too.

31 Thou shalt not doe so to the Lorde thy God. For they haue done all such things to their gods, as the Lorde abhorreth and hateth. For they haue burnt euen their sonnes and daughters in fire to their gods.

32 Therefore whatfocuer I commaund you, looke that yee doe it, and put not any thing to it, neither take any thing from it.

When we heare that Moses warneth the Iewes that they turne not away from the right seruing of God after his setting of them in possession of their inheritance: we may thinke they were a very malicious people, & right hard to be gouerned. For what is it that Moses requireth of them? That they should not forget the partie that had redeemed them, and afterward giuen them his lawe, but that they should holde themselves at a stay, and not defile themselves with the superstitions of the heathen. And they had two things to hold them to the seruice of God. For they ought to haue borne in minde after what manner he had deliuered them from the bondage of Egypt: and did not such a gracious goodnesse well deserue that they should haue persisted continually in the acknowledging of their redeemer? Againe they had very faire lookingglasses set before them for example, in that they sawe that Gods rooting out of the inhabitants of the Lande of Chanaan, was a token that hee could not away with any of all their abominations: and ought not the Iewes to haue feared the better by their beholding of such examples? But nowe that wee knowe the rauhnesse of that people, let vs come to our selues, and bee well assured that wee bee not better than they were, but haue neede of the warning that is giuen heere. And for prooffe hereof God doth daily renew his gracious goodnesse towards vs. Had we felt his goodnesse but once in all our life, it ought to serue vs for a bridle to hold vs vnder his obedience. But he ceaseth not to increase his benefices still daily, and yet wee forget it in the turning of a hand, and wee neuer thinke vpon it any more, to benefit our selues by it. To bee shorte, it seemeth that all our induour is to burie Gods benefices that he bestoweth vpon vs, that we might haue no occasion to honor him. Lo how our vnthankfulness bewraeth it self too much on y one side. Yet notwithstanding we see how God giueth vs sufficient warnings, by chastising others y haue doone amisse before our eyes, and by sparing vs: and ought wee not to bethinke vs better of the iudgements which hee executeth, after that fashion? Yes: for they bee no thinges done in hudder mudder, there is no more for vs to do but to take heede to them. But it should seeme that wee play the blinde buffardes wilfully, and list not to knowe any of the thinges which are too too apparant and notorious. Therefore whether it bee that God do drawe vs to him by the great number of benefices which he bestoweth vpon vs, or that hee teache vs to feare him by punishing offenders in our presence: al this booteth vs not, for we be vnthankfull, and the time is but lost in doing vs good, insonmuch that although wee see howe hee hath shewed himselfe iudge against such as haue offended him, yet wee thinke not vpon it, but let it slippe. Can wee cast our eye any where nowadays, but wee must needs see a great number of manifest examples, whereby wee ought to take warning to liue warily and aduisedly? Wee see howe whole Nations and Countries are not spared, and wee see the like in priuate persons: all is full of sighing and crying, and it is all one as if God should founde a trumpet to the punishing of some offender, that euery man might bee warned to take example by him. Wee see these things; but howe doe wee benefite our selues by the m? Let vs not thinke then that in this place Moses speaketh but onely to the Iewes: but let vs vnderstand y<sup>e</sup> it was Gods will to shew vs by them, that euen after wee knowe him to be our father and Sauerour, and euen after hee hath powred out the infinite riches of his mercie vpon vs; Yet haue wee still neede to bee warned to liue in his feate: for otherwise wee will turne our backs vpon him. Againe, when hee hath warned vs by many examples; that is not ynough vnlesse hee quicken vs vp to set our minds vpon it, so as wee may perceiue wherein it is his will that we should fare the better by it.

But there is yet another point; which is, that when wee bee so taught by other mens harmes, and by Gods bearing with vs in that heelest not to punish our faultes: we should atleastwise preuent his anger, and seeinge there bee so manie that suffer, yea and which suffer to serue for our instruction, the same should bee as a schooling vnto vs; that when wee see our Lorde vter his rigour after that sort, and shewe himselfe to bee a Iudge; wee should not tarie till hee smite vs on the heades, but come meekely vnto him, acknowledging our faultes, and taking good heede that wee wrappe not our selues in his curse with those against whom he hath shewed himselfe such an enemy and aduersarie. That is the thing which we haue to beare in minde.

And Moses saith expressly, Beware thou fall not into the snares after them. As if hee should say, If yee bee not starke blinde, yee must needs shunne these people and not followe their example, seeinge that God hath punished them after that fashion. For if yee meddle with their corruptions, God can make you to fall into the same pitte well ynough. Yee see into what case they bee false: and therefore take heede to your selues, or else it will be an open tempting of God, as though ye sought your owne destruction euen in despite of him. Neuertheless, wee see howe men playe the bestes in that behalfe. For when wee haue seene GOD correct a man for some offence, by and by wee faile not to prouoke his wrath in the selfesame sorte, that they did which were punished. Indee we haue witte ynough to condemne them that suffer the punishment; O it is good right say we, they haue well deserued it, they bee worthe of such correction. Wee can skil to talke after that fashion: but in the meane while, when wee playe the Iudges towards other men, wee cannot finde the fault in ourselues, and therefore must wee bee double condemned at Gods hande, because our hypocritic blinde vs, and wee looke not into our selues to correct our own misdoings.

Moses therefore speaketh heere expressly of the snares that the Cananites were false into. As if hee should say, whatsoever you see in any vnbeleeuers, is all one as if God warned you long aforehande, to beware that yee fall not into the like curse by followinge their steps; and therefore shunne them. For wee must vnderstande that as oft as our Lorde punisheth those that haue offended him, and wee knowe it, and hee will haue it so; it is all one as if hee should make some signe to vs, or rather arrest vs with his owne hande and say, Take heede to your selues, proceede no further, goe nor on still; for if yee doe, yee bee vndone, yee bee forlorne. Seeinge that our Lorde giueth vs such warning, may it not bee saide that wee bee worse than made if wee proceede on still? What excuse will there bee for vs, when God shall haue shewed vs the ditch and bidden vs beware, that wee fall not into it, and yet wee bee so wilful in wickednesse, that he cannot winne so much at our handes, as to make vs turne backe againe from it?

Moreouer wee see by this text, that it is but a simple shift to say, Other men doe so as well as I: and yet a gratee number of sillie soules beguile themselves with it euen at this day. If a man warne the Papistes of their superstitions, to bring them to Gods trueth; O (say they) I am not alone, there be many others in the worlde. They beare themselves in hand that they may by and by disappoint God, with the multitude of their partakers. But Moses telleth vs heere, that all shall bee tyed together in one bundle, and one of them shall not helpe to acquite another or to diminish the others fault, but that all of them shall bee rooted out together, according to this sayinge of our Lorde Iesus Christ, If the blinde leade the blinde, they shall both fall into the ditch. What shall I haue gained by it, when a great number of people shall haue perished with mee? Then let vs not thinke our faultes the lighter for the greatenes of the number of them that offend with vs; but rather let vs marke on the contrarie parte, that there is not a worse thing than euill custome: and it is the thing that wee had neede to beware of as long as wee liue in this worlde. For wee see verie fewe of that sort of men which guide vs the right way; but on the contrarie part the multitude is infinite of those that thrust vs out of the way: so as if wee leane vnto men, wee shall scarcely finde one among a hundred, which walketh aright, but all of them doe go astray. Also when the Prophet Esaiæ speaketh of the disorders that reigned euerywhere, hee saith no more but that euery man had turned aside after his owne wayes. Whereby hee doeth vs to vnderstande that we neede not to be beguiled by others, for euerie of vs beguileth himselfe too much. Therefore when men followe their owne imaginatiōs, then are they quite and cleane out of the way of saluation. And sith it is so that we shal finde verie few that can amend vs, and all the rest doe but draw vnto euill: what shall become of vs if we grounde our selues vpon custome? If wee say, O, there be thus many and thus many that take this or that to be good: yea, but God misliketh it, and it makes no matter what men doe, for wee see they be: all giuen to naughtinesse, and are corrupted in their vnderstanding. Againe, their hearts are ful of malice, so as they dragge cleane backe from that which God hath shewed them. And if wee alledge, It is not nowlate that this thing came vp, it hath bene vsed of custome in all ages long agoe: verily it is all one as if wee shoulde say, the worlde is hardened in naughtinesse. But yet hath it not gotten so sure holde that it can displace God from being Iudge, that he shoulde not condemne them as they deserue. And therefore let vs marke wel how it is shewed vs here, that if we followe the steppes of such as haue gone astray; when God hath punished them, wee also must come to account after them. Yea and wee deserue double punishment, when we fare not the better by the corrections that God hath shewed vnto vs: for it is all one as if we resisted him wilfully. The matter in effect which wee haue to gather vpon this saying where Moses (speaker of the snares that are laide for vs, is; that when our Lorde hath once warned vs, and we haue seene the verie examples themselves before our eyes; we should let our minds vpon them, that wee intangled nor our selues in the curse that is prepared for the despisers of Gods word.

And it is saide further, that men shoulde not inquire after their gods. Heereby hee doeth vs to vnderstande, that men are oftentimes turned away from well doing, by their foolish curiositie. For when wee bee once instructed in the pure simplicitie of Gods worde, if wee holde our mindes imprisoned, that is to say, if wee holde our selues contented with Gods trueth; then are wee sure that our Lorde will confirme vs more and more, so as though all the worlde were on a broyle, yet shoulde wee bee knitte still in good agreement of faith. But our wittes are so fickle, that they bee alwayes rouing: wee cannot holde our selues from inquiring of this and that: not for any benefite that wee reape by it, for wee wote not what is the reason thereof: but yet our desirousnesse so tickleth vs, and so prouoketh vs, that wee cannot holde our selues in quiet to say, let vs obey our God. Therefore Moses meant plainly to condemne the vice that reigneth ouer much in men, and is too deepe rooted in their nature: which is, that in steede of sobernesse to holde our selues in simple obedience to Gods worde; wee bee continually turmoyled with vaine fancies, and all our seeking is who did this and who did that, that wee might bee cunning in iudging thereof. As for example, wee see a great sort that would faine knowe al the Religions of the worlde. And to what ende? It leemeth to them that they bee not sure of the Christian faith, vnlesse they knowe Machomets Alcoran; and al the diuellishnesse that hath reigned among the Paynims and Papiſtes; and haue their heads full stuffed and bestowed with all the dotages of the Iewes. Thus doe they play the beastes through their wicked curiositie, and it appeareth well that there hath bene nothing in them but vter vanitie and hypocricie. Wherefore according to that which Moses hath declared heere, let vs learne not to be too inquisitiue of the things that are not good for vs. Wee see that euen in reading Gods worde, wee must vse this modestie of forbearing to seeke things needelesse which serue not to edifying: & what will come of it if wee disguise Gods worde, by ripping vp the things which cannot but infect our mindes, and corrupt them, and turne them from the pure trueth? True it is that such as are to make warres are faine to be inquisitiue of the force and policy of their enemies, that they may beware of them; but when wee be so eager, that without any occasion or neede, wee will needes knowe that which doeth not touch vs nor concerne vs; is it not a tempting of God? is it not a casting of our selues into the snares which wee see that Satan hath laide for vs? Therefore when men haue bene taught the Gospell purely let them abide quietly therein, let them bee contented with this, that they are approved of God; who cannot deceiue them, and let them refuse all manner of trumperies, which can serue to no purpose but to intangle them in trifling disputations without profite, or without any furtherance to their faith. Wee see what hath happened to some, I meane of these wildheaded fellows that would needes be inquisitiue of all things, and there was not any sect or opinion, but they would needes know it and haue skil to dispute of it. Verie well: but what wonne they by so doing? God gaue them vp, so as they were destitute of vnderstanding, and there was lesse wit and discretion in them than in little childre. Where things were in quiet they would needes set all on a broyle, yea euen without any rime or reason, so as they sawe not a whit euen in the things that were so visible and apparant, that they might haue picked out their eyes with the. Seeing then that G O D doeth so punish these troublesome heads that cease not to martyr themselves in their owne inquietnesse, and cannot bee satisfied but that they must needes bee inquisitiue of the things that are not for their profite; wee ought to bee the more mindefull of Sainct Pauls lesſon, which is that wee must not bee ouer wise, but wise according to sobrietie. Let vs bethinke vs of our slendernesse, howe rude and grosse witted wee bee, and let it suffice vs that G O D can well skil to teach vs, if wee take him for our master and teacher. And seeing we haue his worde, let euerie of vs keepe himselfe within the boundes thereof, and not

play the colts that are broken loose.

Nowe after that Moses hath spoken after y<sup>e</sup> maner, he saith Thou shalt not do to the Lord thy God, as theſenations heere haue doone to their gods. As if he ſhoulde ſay, we muſt not looke upon men, when we intend to ſerue God aright; but Gods only will muſt bee our rule, as he wil adde for a concluſion in the end. Let vs marke well then that there is not a worſe thing, than to faſhion our ſelues after the cuſtomes of men in caſes that concerne the ſeruing of God. For that hath bin y<sup>e</sup> very cauſe of ſo manie mingle-mangles and of ſo great confuſion of all things in Chriſtian religion. A man needeth but a litle Leuen to ſowre a whole batch of dowe. But there hath bin ſo much Leuen brought in, that it hath marred all the righteouſneſſe wherunto G O D calleth thoſe that are his. For as I haue declared heretofore, men haue thought it good that in ſteede of the faſhions that were vſed by the heathen, there ſhould bee ſome ſuch faſhions brought in as had ſome reſemblance of them.

As for example, the heathen worſhipped ſuch an idol, or helde ſuch a high feaſt on ſuch a day; and therefore muſt wee alſo appoint a feaſt to ſome Saint vpon the ſame day. Yea, but that was but a changing of the name of the idol; and the neerer they came vnto it, or tooke couert vnder it, the more did they falſely abuſe God his name and deſile it. Thus made they an exchange of the ydols of the heathen, and in their ſteeds tooke vp Heefaints and Sheefaints and made ydols of them. Nowe ſeeing that this manner of dealing hath bin the cauſe of the peruerſting of all things; it ſtandeth vs the more in hand to take heede to the things that Moſes telleth vs here, to witte, that God requireth not that we ſhould do as the wretched and ignorant infidels doe to their Idols: but that if we will walke rightly wee muſt keepe vs from counterfeiting the things that wee may happen to ſee euery where. True it is that forasmuch as wee bee fleſhly, wee will thinke the things that are done by men to bee very godly: but what ſhall wee gaine in this caſe, by bringing our owne weightes and balances? For God will haue vs to hearken vnto him; and ſhall not wee then make a faire bargaine, to ſay I weene I doe well? All ſuch ſuffice is nothing woorth, it muſt bee ſtricken off, euery whit. That is the cauſe why Moſes in this text expreſly preſuppoſeth that God wil not haue the things done to him which the wretched infidels did to their idols.

And yet to perſwade vs the better in all theſe things, he addeth that they had done ſuch things as God abhorred, as namely the burning of their children in fire. Here vnder one kind, Moſes ſheweth that the wretched Paynims ruſhed out into ſo beaſtly dealings, as would make a man to abhorre their crueltie to thinke vpon it. For how is it poſſible that they ſhould bee ſo deſtitute of all reaſon, as to forget euen natural kindeneſſe, when they meant to ſerue their Gods? What a thing was it, that they ſhould goe burne their owne children? Beholde, the fathers which ought to haue conſidered, that when God had giuen them children, it was a ſingular bleſſing, forasmuch as hee had ordeined them to bee in his owne ſtead, to the end there ſhould alwayes bee ſome ſeede in the worlde to honor him and ſerue him: euen the fathers themſelues (I ſay) did caſt their owne children into the fire, and became murderers of them. Wherby wee ſee that idolaters may well bee caryed away with ſome deuotion; but the ſame is but as a fury, they bee out of their wittes, and the diuell doth ſo poſſeſſe them, that they haue neither wit nor diſcretion any more. And ſhal wee allowe of ſuch doings? Wee ſee then wherat Moſes aimed in declaring here that the wretched Paynims burned their owne children, by meanes wherof they became ſtarks diuels, and there was not a more horrible thing than was their deuotion, though they commended it neuer ſo much. If it bee objected that G O D commaunded Abraham to doe the lyke; wee ſee the ende thereof. True it is that G O D meant ſo farre forth to try Abrahams ſayth, by commaunding him to kill his owne ſonne: but that was a ſingular example for a ſpeciall purpoſe, and not a common rule. On the other ſide, G O D provided for it, and ſhewed that hee deſired not to haue mans bloud ſacrificed vnto him: for hee preſerued Abraham from doing it when it came to the point. Therefore there is greates diuerſitie betweene the obedience that Abraham yielded to God in going about to ſacrifice his ſonne Iſaak: and the madneſſe of theſe blinde wretches in purpoſing to honor their idols by murdering their owne children.

Hereby let vs learne generally to marke well, that whenſoever wee ſee the wretched vnbeleueers ruſhe our into diſorder lyke brute beaſts, we muſt learne to haue the more ſtay of our ſelues that wee followe them not. As for example; wheretas it is ſayd nowadayes in general, that wee muſt not followe the ſteppes of the Papiſtes, becauſe that all the things which they rearme by the name of Gods ſeruite, are but a heape of vaine fancieſ, ſuch as euery man liſted to forge of his owne brayne, and a horrible hotch-potch of things confounded together, for the dooing wherof they haue not ſo much as one ſyllable in Gods worde to allowe it, and yet they martyr themſelues exceedingly in the doing of them: beſides this, they become ſo brutiſh, as wee ought to be euen aſhamed of them. For prooffe wherof, what a thing is it that they ſhould goe kneele downe before puppets, as though G O D were preſent there? They ſay they worſhip not the images; but men ſee what reuerence they yeeld vnto them, and it is the firſt leſſon that is taught in their Synagogues. And ſurely what excuſe ſoever they make, when they kneele downe before the image of S. Barbe which neuer was, (for yee muſt vnderſtand that men haue made a God of ſuch a creature as neuer was in the world) or when they goe to S. Catherin, or Saint Chriſto-

Christopher which are things of the same stamp and say nine Paternosters and an Aue Marie to them: to whom speake they? Is it not a flatter mocke of God, or rather a villanous blaspheming of him? The heathen therefore had much more than the Papistes, wherewith to colour their abominations when they did things so farre out of square as was pitie to see, and yet thought they pleased God in so doing. When they drinke til they be drunken vpon the holy day, they thinke that God is content therewith. Againe, when they be well apparelled, they suppose it is a good seruice of God. To bee short, they haue such fond toys and gewgawes, as are worthe to bee spit at as often as a man heares them spoken of. And whosoever hath but one drop of good vnderstanding may perceiue the fondnesse that is in them. In somuch that when wee consider the matter, wee thinke it vnpossible that men should bee so brutish as wee see they haue bin. But it is Gods owne doing, who executeth this threat, made by the prophets, that hee woulde powre out the spirit of giddinesse and blockishnesse vpon the world, to blinde it withall, because that such as haue forsaken the pure doctrine of God, and turned away from the holy scripture, are worthe to be so caried away, to the committing of such vnreasonable things as we ought to bee ashamed of and vterly to abhorre. And this is tolde vs to teach vs to shun their companie, and euen that is the meaning of Moses when he sayth, Marke what is befallen vnto them. Now then, let vs beware that God punish vs not after the same maner, by giuing vs ouer to a reprobate sense. Wherefore let vs receiue the light of his worde, and followe the way while hee sheweth vs it, suffering our selues to be held altogether in obedience vnto him. For step we once aside one way or other, in deede we shall not at the first dash fall into so great confusion as wee see the idolaters are, but in the ende wee shall be payed home to our smart. For how became they so brutish? Had they neither wit nor reason? yes: but God punisheth them because they submitted not themselves to his word. Let vs therefore stand in feare of the lyke condemnation: for it is certeine that the lyke shall fall vpon vs, if wee followe their steppes. And wee heare how Saint Paul speaking generally of all such as list not to obey Gods will, sayth that they must needs haue their eyes stopped, so as they may not be able to discern any more, but be trayned in all things to other mens lures. And this threat pointeth at vs. And therefore let vs keepe good watch, and bee wel ware that we fet not one foote forward, without the direction of Gods worde; for there is not any other way that is certeine.

Now let vs come to the conclusion that Moses addeth. Looke thou doe all that I commaunde thee this daye, without adding any thing to it or taking any thing from it. Heere hee sheweth vs the remedie to preferre vs from all stumbling, and from all the wiles of Satans and all his snares, and from all occasions that are ministred to thrust vs out of the way of saluation: and that is, to bee contented with the rule that GOD giueth vs, and to followe the same, and to bee so pliable to it, as wee alwayes haue our eares stopped against all other sayings whatsoeuer, reiecting all things else, that none but onely GOD may haue dominion ouer vs. And so let vs marke well, that wee shall neuer haue the witte to keepe our selues from superstition, and from Satans sleights; except our Lord remedie the matter by his word. True it is that wee ought to giue good eare to the counsell that is giuen vs, and not to followe the follies and errors of the world, nor intangle our selues in such a sorte of fond toys; but to bee shorte, to eschewe all the foolish deuotions that men haue deuised of their owne heades; wee ought well to marke that. But yet is not that enough. For there is none of vs all which hath not a storehouse of many errors in his own head, in so much y<sup>e</sup> euery of vs is a prouocation to himselfe although we be not furthered by others. What remedie then? There is none other way, but to suffer our selues to be governed by God. And that is the cause why Moses, after all his exhortations, telleth vs that if wee followe not Gods worde, wee shall euer bee intangled in many wicked imaginations, whereby the diuell will finde a gappe open, or as it were a breache to win vs by. Therefore if wee purpose to put Satan backe, and to bee preserved from all vncleanesse of superstition: let Gods word haue his authoritie among vs.

And first of all Moses sayth; Doe whatsoever is commaunded thee. Whereby hee meaneth (as I haue declared in other places) that it is not enough for vs to obey GOD by halves (for hee can away with no such partnership:) but that wee must submit our selues to his commaundementes in all cases and all respects, without any gainsaying. And that is a thing very worthe to bee noted. For most men can well enough finde in their heartes to confesse that it is good reason that GOD should bee serued, yea euen according to his owne wil as hee himselfe requireth: but yet they cease not to take exceptions still, and to say, This lykcs mee not, such a thing woulde doe better. To bee shorte, for all their pretence of obeying GOD, and although that in many respects they yeelde to the things that are spoken to them; Yet doe they beare themselves in hand, that they may let the rest alone. But contrariwise, GOD admitteth not any exception, but sayth that whatsoever hee commaundeth, must be done; and that wee must not enter into disputation with him, to make him amendes in one thing for missing in another; but that his Lawe must be obeyed, yea euen according to the contentes and substance thereof. For if I should receiue some couenant or some publike instrument or writing made vpon it, and yet say, as for this poynt or that article, I will not admit it: what a thing were it? It were to disanul y<sup>e</sup> whole. So the let vs marke, that to honor God and to yeelde him obedience, his worde must beare the whole sway, so as wee submit our selues wholly vnto it. Marke that for one point.

Againe whereas Moses sayth This day; it is a summoning of the people to follow without delay when God calleth them. For is it a small matter that God communicateth himselfe so familiarly vnto vs? Then is it not for vs to require space to deliberate: but as soone as God openeth his mouth, by and by wee must giue care to him, and bee conformable to his worde out of hand without delay, by submitting our selues thereunto. And not onely this place serueth to warne vs how forward wee ought to bee to followe his Lawe: but also wee heare how it is sayd in the Psalm, To day if you heare his voyce: so that our Lord generally meaneth that as soone as men heare him speake, they should by and by followe his saying, and fashion themselves thereafter. And the Apostle in the third Chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrewes, sheweth vs what is meant by this worde To day: Namely the very same times wherein our Lord is so gracious as to send vs his worde, whatsoeuer these times bee. Therefore let vs not delay till to morrow, for it were too great a mockerie: and it may bee that the gate shall be thut against vs. Seeing then that God speaketh vnto vs to day, let vs giue care vnto him readily and without any delay. That is the thing which wee haue to beare in minde. And therefore when we come to a Sermon, or reade the holy scripture by our selues, as soone as wee haue heard a sentence, let vs enter into our owne consciences: and if wee finde any sloth there, let vs waken and quicken vp our selues, and thinke thus: what? It is no dalying with god in this case, it is not for vs to defer to come vnto him when hee calleth vs, but wee must answer him with such readynesse, as the thing that is commaunded vs here by Moses may bee performed, so as wee burie not Gods word, ne suffer it to hang in the hooke; but receiue it into our heartes at the first, that it may take good roote there, and bring forth fruit. Thus see we that wee haue to make vpon this worde This day, or To day.

Now let vs proceede to that which Moses addeth. Without adding aught to it, (sayth hee) or without taking aught from it. And this is an excellent text to the vs how mens lyues may be well ordered. I haue tolde you before, that it is a good tryall of our subiection vnto God, when wee receiue his worde, and that his commaundements beare such sway with vs, as wee bowe downe our neckes to receiue the yoke that he layeth vpon them. But that were not sufficient, vntill wee had that which Moses addeth here, which is, that it is not lawfull for vs to adde any whit to y things y God commaundeth, nor to take any whit from them, as the Papistes doe in these daues, who beare themselves in hand that they cannot doe amisse in mingling their owne follies with Gods word. And why so? For wee doe as G O D commaundeth vs, say they. Wee deny not but that wee ought to keepe God Lawes; but what harme is it for vs to doe more? If we vse some deuotion of ouerplus, will not God take it in good worth? If I doe more than I am bounde to doe, why should not God accept it in good part? I may well doe whatsoeuer hee appointeth; yea, & I will adde sonewhat more to serue him withall. When the Papistes get such a shew of heere, they beare themselves in haunde that all their matters goe very well, but in the meane while they consider not y God will haue none to be counted wise but himselfe, nor none to haue the authoritie to bee our Lawgiuer but himselfe. The Papistes then doe blaspheme G O D two wayes: first in taking vpon them to bee holier than hee would haue them to bee. For when wee deuiſe meanes of our owne head to please God withall after that fashion; it is all one as if hee had not bin well aduised in the matter. Behold God sayth that all our wisdom must consist in hearkening vnto him, Wee haue seene it in the fourth chapter & also in y tenth, where it is sayd, O Israell, what is it that thy God commaundeth thee but only to sticke to him, & to be wholly his. Hereby wee see how it was Gods intent to compisse y sunne of al holynesse and righteousnesse in his Lawe, so as it is a full perfection whereunto nothing can bee added. Neuertheless men thinke and suppose that they themselves can doe yet much better. And what is that to say? Is it not a blaming of God, as who should say hee had forgotten himselfe, and foresawe not all things? Verily that is a cursed and diuillish blasphemie. Therefore let not the Papistes boast of their seruing of God: for the diuell is their founder, and God disauoweth all that euer they doe. For hee may alwayes reply against the and say, Who required these things at your handes? And not without cause: for their so doing is all one as if they charged God with enuy towards men, as who would say he had not faithfully taught them all things that were for their behoofe to doe. And I pray you is that blasphemie tollerable?

But there is yet another point which I glanced at. For those two may bee put both into one. The other point then is; that they vtterly deface the soueraigne dominion that God hath ouer vs. For thus doe they alledge: Very well, God hath ordeyned by his lawe, that we should keepe his commaundements, Statutes and Ordinances: but yet it is not amisse to adde moreouer what I my selfe would haue done. But if a priuate person shoulde fall to mingling of the inuentions of his owne braine, with the statutes that are set forth by publike authoritie, should he not trouble the whole order of the Common weale? And as for such as tooke part w him, should they not shewe themselves to bee rebels to their superiors? Now our Lord saith by his prophet E say y he himselfe wilbe known to be our onely lawgiuer. That is a title which he chalendgeth to himselfe. Seeing then that God will bee our onely Lawmaker, what shall we say when men doe thrust themselves into his place? Is it not more than to confounde heauen and earth together? And surely Saint James exprelleth

Eccl. 33.12.

expresseth yet better the same thing that was sayd by the Prophet Esay. For he sayth that there is but onely one Lawe-giuer which is able to saue and condemne. When men are set vp in state and authoritie of making Lawes to gouerne our soules by, I meane as touching the spirital gouernement; (for wee treat not here of ciuill Lawes, but of the seruing of God;) when men (I say) are so highly exalted or take so highly vpon them: it is all one as if they be reaued God of the title of Sauour and Iudge. For if hee be not the onely Lawemaker, Saint Iames concludeth that he is not the onely Iudge, nor the partie that hath power alone to condemne vs or to saue vs. And what a presumption is it that the creature should procede so farre, as to father our saluation vpon wretched carkeffes and earthwoormes, which is to be fathered alonely vpon God? So then let vs marke well, that whereas Moses hath tolde vs heere that it is not Lawefull for vs to adde any whit to the thinges that God commaundeth in his Lawe: thereby hee condemneth all the deuotions that euer were inuented by the world. It will seeme strange why God hath so strictly forbidden men to adde any thing to his Lawe: but ought not the reasons to suffice which I will alcadge? Verily the world condemneth it selfe by his owne mouth. Hath this prouerb bin inuented in our time: Hath it nor bin euer a common saying among the Papists to say, Thou art the devils seruant, for thou doest more than thou art bidden? This manner of speech hath bin vsed a hundred yere before we were borne: It hath bin a common byword. And what haue the Papists done? They haue let the commaundementes of God alone, to runne gadding after their owne inuentions, and gewgawes: And yet neuertheless they say dayly still, Thou art the devils seruant. If a Master bee angrie with his seruant for leauing the thing vndoone which he had commaunded him; to do the thing which he had conceiued in his owne imagination, and he thinketh to content his Maister in saying: I haue done better than you were aware of: thou art the devils seruant (wil his Maister say) for thou hast done more than was commaunded thee. And I pray thee, what art thou? Thou doest the lyke to God. For thou wilt needes serue him after thine owne fashion, without regard what he hath commaunded thee. And therefore let vs beare in minde, that forasmuch as GOD is robbed of his honor, and the creatures set themselves in his iudgement seate, when they take vpon them to make Lawes for the stablishing of a spirital gouernment: God declareth that he wil take horrible vengeance of it, & deale terribly with them. And why so? Euen because they haue serued him after the commaundementes of men, and not held themselves to his single worde, and therefore hee will blind the wisest of them, so as they shall be destitute of all reason, and become so brutish that they shal not be able to discern any thing at all. Is not this enough to make the hayre stand vp vpon our head? What is to be done then? Let vs followe this saying: That obedience is better than sacrifice. Let here a sentence that needeth no glofe. The Papistes shew themselves to be farre past shame in these dayes, in that they will needes maintaine the tyrannie of that idoll, and still continue in their wilfulnesse of following their owne fond deuotions, which haue not any foundation in Gods word. Behold, our Lord requireth but obedience, that is to say that men should submit themselves to his truth, and be contented with that which he commaundeth. And the declaration hereof is deliuered vs here by Moses in two wordes; that is to wit, that they should neither ad nor diminish aught at all in Gods worde; but that when God speaketh, they should receiue his saynges with quiet obedience, saying: Yea Lord, all this is iust and rightfull, there is not any thing to bee gainsayed in any one poynt. Againe, thou Lord hast set vs boundes within the which it behoueth vs to holde our selues and not presume to say, this is good, or I will doe this more than is commaunded me. No, but wee must assure our selues that our true wisdom and perfect foundnesse, is to submit our selues meekly to thy word. If wee haue that, let vs not doubt but that God alloweth our whole lyfe. And if wee swaure neuer so little from it; wee shall not onely bee verily mislyked of him, but also prouoke his vengeance against vs.

But now let vs kneele down in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs to perceiue the better, so as it may bring vs to a true and luely repentance. And because wee be so much inclined to followe our owne inuentions, it may please him not to suffer such hardnesse of heart in vs, as may make vs to turne away from his commaudemets, but rather that eury one may submit our selues to his word, and frame our selues wholly thereafter, that being voyde of all ouerweening of our owne wit and discretion, we may suffer our selues to be guided & gouerned by his hand: and specially that when he sendeth vs preachers to shew vs his wil, hee vouchsafe vs such grace, as wee may submit our selues thereunto, so as wee may not onely receiue his word when it is preached by the voyce of men, but also haue it written in our heartes by his holy Ghost. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and nations of the earth. &c.

On Fryday the xj. of October. 1555.

The Lxxxv. Sermon which is the first vpon the thirteenth Chapter.

IF there rise vp among you a Prophet that is a dreamer of dreames, which giueth the signe or a myracle;

2 And the signe or myracle which hee hath tolde thee, commeth to passe: and he say vnto thee, let vs walke after other Gods which you haue not knowen, and let vs serue them:

3 Thou shalt not hearken to the words of that Prophet, or dreamer of dreames; For the Lord your God trieth you, to weete if you loue the Lorde your God with all your heart and with all your soule.

MEERE godsheweth what steadfastnesse of faith ought to bee in those yhaue bin taught by his word namely euē such as may be able to withstand all the lyes and sleights of Satan, so as they be not hindered by any false doctrines or errors; but may continue alwayes in the truth. For if wee receiued his worde when it is preached vnto vs, and yet it had no hold in vs; but that wee should turne aside from that which we had learned as soone as we perceiued any thing to the contrary: what a thing were it? It is sayd that faith must be the victorie wherby to ouercome the whole worlde: for so doth Saint Iohn speake thereof in his first Epistle. And if wee yeelde to euery winde, so as euery blaste of vntueth is enough to withdrawe vs from G O D: our faith will soone bee ouercome; and where is then our victorie? Therefore let vs marke that when G O D graunteth vs the grace to bee taught by his worde; it is not onely to the end wee should learne the things that are spoken, and beare them in minde for a while; but also to the ende wee should stye vpon them, and bee so grounded vpon them, that if all the troubles of the worlde should rise vp against vs, wee should still holde our owne, and continue steadfast and inuincible. If this were sayd to the people of olde time, which had not so large instruction by a great deale as wee haue: much more dood it belong to vs nowadayes. G O D gaue the Iewes sufficient instruction, so farre forth as was requisite for their welfare. That is true: but yet did he teach them vnder shadowes and figures, which manner of teaching was darkesome in comparison of that which we haue nowadayes. For in the

Gospell wee haue the sunne of righteoussesse shining as it were at nooneday. So then, Gods worde must serue vs, not onely to shewe vs the right way, but also to inable vs to withstand all the temptations of Satan and his vp-holders. We must (say I) be so armed, as we may fight and put backe all errors and falsehood, so as after we haue once knowne God, we may stick to him steadfastly to the vttermost. And that is the cause why Saint Paul treating of the vse of the Gospell, sayth that we must not be lyke little babes which are drawn too and fro, so as we should no-sooner see any trifling toy to beguile vs, but we should by and by be gadding after it: and what a thing were that? But we must (sayth he) be so settled in the sayth, that if there come any couisers that goe about to leade vs by craft, and to deceiue vs, wee may bee fenced against them, and not bee shaken by them ouersoon. True it is that we must needs haue a begetting in our Lord Iesus Christ, and that at the first our faith may be so weake, that we shall be lyke little babes: But we must growe still, and dayly gather new strength, vntil we come to mans estate that we be perfect to meete with our Lord Iesus Christ. Thus yee see what force the doctrine of trueth ought to haue, when it is taught vs. That is to wit, we must not onely count it good in consenting to it; but also be so well assured of it, that the duell, doe what he can, may not be able to remoue vs, by reason of the certeinete which wee haue, whereby wee bee inabled to beate backe whatsoever shall be set against vs. And doubtlesse wee see by the example of our Lorde Iesus Christ, that such as haue bin faithfully taught, may well repulse all the wiles of Satan. For when Iesus Christ was tempted, wherewith armed he himselfe but with the holy Scripture: Wee see that if there rise vp neuer so many false Prophets among vs, yet if wee be thoroughly well grounded in faith, & settled in it as we ought to be: we shall continue steadfast, & the duell shall win nothing at our handes. True it is that now & then we shall find some impediments; (for Gods seruantes shall bee sure of trouble, that serueth to humble the;) but yet whatsoever it be, their faith is always the better proued by errors, heresies, & such other lyke things, whereby our Lord sheweth that we haue profited well in his schoole, & that wee can neuer be led away vnto wickednesse, whatsoeuer betideth. Also we heare what Saint Paul sayth, when hee armeth vs against all spirituall battels that may befall vs: hee giueth vs the sword of Gods word, hee deliuereth vs the Shield of faith, and hee giueth vs the helmette of hope. And thereupon hee inferreth, that wee shall not onely be inabled to withstand all the assaultes that Satan can make vpon vs, but also bee defended from his fiery dartes when there is no lykelyhoode for vs to escape from his subtleties. Now therefore, whensoever the Gospell is preached vnto vs, or that wee reade the holy scripture, let vs learne not onely to receiue the things as true which are told vs out of the mouth of God, but also to bee so fully resolu'd of them in our selues, as we may not be trayned vnto wickednesse nor turned aside from the right way when the diuell stirreth vp any heresies. And so ye see what is told vs in this text. For our Lord thinkes it not enough that the faithfull should serue him and hold them to his truth when they bee in quiet & without temptation; but also hee will haue them to yeeld such truit vnto his worde, that if the diuell fall to sowing of his darnell to marre al, and wicked men rise vp to deface the truth by all the meanes they can, and to turne it into lyes: such as haue learned what the true religion meaneth, should not change nor be fickle and vncoustant, but shewe that the things which they knowe are of God, and an abiding trueth, so as it is not for men to swarue or start from them in any wise.

Now the, let vs beare this warning wel in mind, and euery of vs examine himselfe; and when we haue once vnderstoode y things y haue bin told vs, and are necessary to our saluation: let vs not imagine our selues to haue a perfect and tight faith as is requisite, vnlesse wee bee so coustant and fully resolu'd in the things that our Lorde hath shewed vs, that we abide by it and followe our course still, whatsoeuer come of it. For whosoever flecteth or starteth aside at euery matter, sheweth that hee neuer knewe Iesus Christ as hee ought to doe. And therefore Saint Paul in another place vseth two similitudes to shewe of what force Gods word ought to bee with vs, to hold vs fast vnto him in his obedience. Hee faith that wee must be thoroughly grounded and rooted. For many haue a kinde of faith: but that is but in outward thewe and appearance: as for inwardly it hath no huely nor deepe roote. For if a man haue but a faire branch couered with flowers, to what purpose is that? One blast of wind will deface it. But if a tree bee well planted, the roote of it will hold it fast in the midst of all stormes. Euen so must wee bee rooted in our Lorde Iesus Christ, and we must be thoroughly well grounded vpon him, so as men may perceiue not onely that wee haue knowledge, but also that our heartes doe yeeld record of our playned dealing. And marke here the cause why so many men are so greatly hindered, and indeuour no further but to purchase themselues credit among men. When they come to a Sermon where the Gospell is preached, for the most part they thinke they haue well profited, when they can skill to talke of it: and there are very fewe that haue a care to be so grounded in it, as to lay it vp in their hartes, that G O D may be witnesse of it: there are very fewe that indeuour to attaine to that stedfastnesse. And therefore doth God abhorre that foolish vameglorionnesse, wherethrough men seeke but onely to win themselues estimation, by setting a faire face and countenance vpon the matter.

And therefore let vs marke in fewe wordes, that Gods word ought to serue vs to dubble purpose. First to teach vs his will, that wee may submit our selues simply vnto it: so that when wee haue the grace giuen vs to haue the doctrine purely taught vs, then euery of vs should agree thereunto, and hearken to the voyce of our shepheard, and followe whatsoeuer is tolde vs, without gaine saying. The thing which wee must doe when wee haue order in the Church, so as there be no sectes nor troubles in it, but Gods trueth is purely preached: is, that there must bee true concorde and brotherly loue among vs, to answer our God all with one hart and one mouth, that his truth may be aduanced among vs. The second vse thereof is, that when it falleth out that Satan indeuoreth to turne vs away, and there spring vp heresies, false doctrines and errors among vs: wee must withstand all such things, and shew that Gods trueth is strong enough to hold vs still vnto him; according to my former saying that our faith must get the vpper hand of all the world, so as wee bee starke deafe in hearkening to any of all the wiles that are put to vs to intice vs from G O D and his pure trueth. Thus ye see in effect what is told vs in this text.

And let vs marke well Moseses manner of speache. If a prophesie steppe vp among you sayth hee. Hereby hee sheweth that wee must not onely withstand the open enemies that fight against Gods word, and pretend not at all to bee of his flocke, or to haue any partnership or neighborhood with vs: but also resist our homebred battels, inso much that if there rise vp any deceiver among our selues, that is to say if any such as maketh pretence to be of the fellowship of the faithfull, and to be as it were of the very household of faith, step vp: we must nor bee troubled at it out of measure. And that is well worthy to be noted, for if the christian faith be impugned by the wicked, which pretend not to come vnto God, (as by the Turkes, Paynims, and Iewes) so as they blaspheme with open mouth: forasmuch as they be vtterly cut off from the Church lyke rotten members, their resisting of the Gospell, and their struing to abolishe the Christian religion, is no great woonder to vs. For why? Wee be as it were hardened with such examples. Therefore when the open enemies set themselues against God & his word, it is a temptation that that will easily bee ouercome. But when those that are knitte vnto vs, and are as it were of our owne bodie, doe fall to rearing of the vnitie of our faith in peeces, to peruert Gods trueth, and to marre it in such wise as it shoulde bee dishgured: that is such a perplexitie and griefe to vs, as wee wote not where to become. And that is the thing that troubleth so many simple folkes nowadayes. What shall wee doe, say they? For wee see so much disputing in the Church, and so greate diuersitie of opinions, that it were better to aske no question of any thing, in so much that a great number become carelesse, for feare to bee intangled in wicked matters and to bee beguyled, and therefore they let all alone, and will not in any wise come neere vnto God. Wee see a greate sorte of men of that stampe. Other some let loose the raynes of the brydle, and take libertie to maintaine one while one mans saying and another while another mans, and are neuer fully persuaded of any thing; but are in one mynde to day, and in another minde to morrowe, and chaunge at euery minute of an houre.

Wee see a number of wild heades nowadayes which haue no stay at all, but thinke that all thinges are lawfull. And why? For I see there are diuerse opinions, say they. But such men do shewe that they neuer tasted what Gods trueth is. The first sort doe well bewray a cursed vnbeleefe. For our Lorde promisseth that such as seeke him with a lowly heart, shall not be disappointed, but hee will shewe him selfe to them. Let vs knoeke, and the doore shalbe opened. If wee desire reuerently to be guided by God, surely he will not faile vs. Let vs distrust our owne infirmitie and rudenesse; and our Lorde will giue vs the spirite of discretion, so as wee shall not bee beguyled. To be short this saying of Saint Paul which I haue alleaged already heretofore shall cuer be performed; namely, that heresies shall turne to the true tryall of our faith, and not bee able to ouerthrowe it. For as touching those that are so fleeing without cause; they shewe that there was nothing in them but a falsc pretence, and that they did but play the hypocrites in making a countenance to sticke to Gods trueth; for had they become well rooted in it, as I sayde, they woulde haue continued stedfast in it still.

To conclude, let such examples prouoke vs to put this lesson the better in vre. And when wee see the troubles that are nowadayes in the world, let vs not be ouercome by them, neither let our faith be defaced. But the more the diuel labourereth and inforceeth himselfe to vndo it, the more let it aduaunce it selfe and get the vpper hande of such assaults. And when wee see false prophets step vp among vs, let vs not cease to yeeld this honour still to God, that wee hold our selues to his word, and start not from it by any means. And very necessitie constraines vs to it in these dayes, because wee see that such as call themselves Christians and take that title most vpon them, are the worst enemies of God that a man can finde. For the Turkes & Iewes are not more ferie and venomous at this day against God, to deface the whole doctrine of saluation; than are the Papistes. And therefore let vs arme our selues with the warning that is giuen vs heere: which is, that when wee see false prophets step vp in the sheepefold and in the middes of Gods house: yet notwithstanding wee must not faile to hold on still, nor make a stumbling blocke of it to step aside or start away, but ouergo it through the power of faith. Yea, and to come yet neerer the matter, when wee see these varlets that had pretended to be at odds with the Papistes, and had mingled themselves among vs, do theretvpo fall to inuention of false opinions: let vs not bee ouermuch amazed for all that. True it is that wee be not senselesse, & that we haue neede to be waked: but yett must wee alwayes conclude thus with our selues: How nowe? Our Lord hath bene so gracious to vs as to open his owne holy mouth to gue vs the certeinne of faith by his Gospel; and shall wee nowe turne away at euery push? After that manner (say I) must wee withstande all the temptations that may befall vs, when deceiuers and false fellows step vp among vs, of purpose to deface by their fittletie the pure doctrine that hath bene preached to vs, & wherein we haue bene trayned vp.

Now first of all it is said, Thou shalt not hearken to the Prophet when he sayth vnto thee, Let vs go and serue other gods which thou hast not knowne. It behooueth vs to wey well all these wordes of Moses; For here he speaketh to al beleeuers. He speakes not only to the great doctors that haue bene at the vniuersitie all their life long, but also to the vnlearned. Although then that we be no clerks, yett let vs learne that we must haue this constancie of faith, of not following the wyles of Satan to bee withdrawn from our God when he hath bene so gracious vnto vs, as to communicate himselfe to vs. Wee must not say, Alas, I haue no learning, nor finenesse of witte, to be so cunning; euery man hath not like measure. I graunt that euery man is not of abilitie to enter into disputation against sophisters, and against such as are full fraught with malice to deceiue & simple: but yett, all men from the moste to the least ought to haue this inuincible stedfastnes of sticking vnto God and his trueth when they once knowe it. There is no excuse in that case. For it is not in vaine that God hath set downe this generall law for all his Church. And it is certaine also that he will giue vs power, so wee resort to him, and seeke to him for succour. For what is & cause why so many folke are seduced, but onely their own fond presumption, or their negligence, or else their contempt of Gods worde? For yee shall see some stand so much in their owne conceits, as (to their own seeming) no man is able to ouermatch them: and yett for all that, they are but sillie beastes. Our Lorde therefore doth blow away their pride, as men may perceiue; and experience sheweth that God punisheth many folkes pride, which had too great an ouerweening of themselves. Now the, what is to be done? Let vs humble our selues & pray God to gouern vs so by his holy spirit, & to giue vs such wisdome,

Esa. 45. 19.
Matt. 7. 7.
Luke, 11. 19.

1. Cor. 11. 19.

as wee may not bee taken tardie when the diuel goes about to make a breach into vs to enter at. If we goe y way to worke, let vs assure our selues that God will guide vs, and that wee shall neuer be caught in Satans snares. But there are many that keepe on their race without care, as though they were priuiledged from all dangers. But let vs for our part keepe good watch, and haue such a care to warde our selues, as the deceiuers (who they come) may not finde vs asleepe. And that will so bee, if wee beare such reuerence to Gods worde, as wee acknowledge it to bee the preciouslest treasure that we haue. For if a man make so little reckening of a thing, that he leaue it at all aduenture: the first that cometh may robbe him of it: but as for him y locketh vp his goods, (pecially those that are the chiefe and which he counteth to bee most worth:) he cannot bee so bereft of them. And therefore let vs put our faith in good custodie, and be so warie in the keeping of it, as [it may appeare] that we haue it in such estimation as it deserueth; for it is an inestimable treasure. Thus yee see what wee haue to note here, where Moses speaketh to all such as had tasted what Gods lawe is, exempting no man from standing stoutly in battaile and defence against the lyes and sleights of Satan.

Nowe hee addeth, If he say vnto thee, Let vs followe strange gods, which thou hast not knownen. This serueth to shewe vs who be false prophets. For God telleth vs that wee cannot withstande the wyles of Satan, without the knowledge of the truth: that is the onely meane. And no maruel though the wretched worlde nowadayes be assured to destruction: for Gods worde is as it were buried: and when men are destitute of that light, it is certaine that they bee in horrible darkness, so as they cannot but stumble & stray here and there, because they haue no certaine aime at anything. But here our Lorde declareth that wee must bee instructed in his worde; and thereunto allo is this saying after a sort referred. For hee presupposeth that wee bee in a good trade alreadie, and that wee knowe the way of saluation: accordingly as Moses wil protest hereafter; saying, I haue shewed you the way of life and the way of death. Nowe therefore, whensoever we will resist false Prophets, and their lyes, let vs take to vs the doctrine of ruth. And that is the cause why it is saide, The gods which thou hast not knownen. For in this case wee must match the liuing God whome wee haue knownen, against all the ydolles which the worlde hath forged to it selfe. For God speaketh not to such as neuer heard nor vnderstood any thing of him before: but to such as he had giuen his lawe vnto, whome hee had set in the right way, and to whome hee had giuen an infallible rule. When hee hath so fenced men aforehande, then sayeth hee vnto them, Beware that yee followe not the gods whome yee haue not bene acquainted with.

To be short then, it is shewed vs that this doctrine concerneth such as haue bene duely instructed in the faith. Will wee beate backe all Satans deuices? Let vs haue the skill to f. y.

It is God that hath certified vs, hee is a faithfull witnesse to vs, wee neede not to be in doubt or vncertainie any more, or to cast doubt, or to say, What? Which way shall we goe? We may well assure our selues that this is the way, that is the thing which wee must fy vpon. That in effect is the order which wee haue to keepe, according as it is shewed vs in this text.

But let vs marke also, that wee must haue our eares so stopped, as we may vtterly mislike whatsoeuer may cause vs to swaue to the contrarie of those things which we haue learned by Gods worde. For as soone as wee giue care to them, by and by wee be halfe corrupted, according to this similitude which Saint Paul alleageth in the seconde to the Corinthians, that when a woman giueth care to a bawde or a Ruffian, although shee consent not to him out of hande, yet is shee alreadie peruerted, and it is already an euill token. For if a woman bee chaste and shamesfast, shee will in any wise shunne all such messages as may be brought to her to intyce her to follic, and to make her to breake wedlocke. Shee must eschewe such manner of things. Nowe Saint Paul sayeth, that as long as wee abyde in the simplicitie of the Gospell, wee bee as a chaste wife that keepeth her faith & troth to her husbande, and that our Lorde Iesus Christ who hath made such couenant with vs, to choose vs to be of his bodie, takeh and receiueth vs for his owne. But if wee hearken to the lyes and trumperies that are brought vnto vs; and wee refuse not to learne what Darnell is: it is an euill signe, and wee bee corrupted alreadie. And therefore let vs beate well in minde, that wee ought so little to consent to false prophets, as wee shoulde not in any wise giue care vnto them, but shunne them a farr off, as soone as wee perceiue that they goe about to deceiue vs and to entyce vs to naughtinesse. And to say the truth, this cursed curiositie hath bene the cause of many ones destruction. For it seemeth to many high minded persons, that all things shoulde passe the tryall of their wit: and that when they haue sifted things after their owne imagination, they may followe whatsoeuer they themselues thinke good, for they bee able enough to discern the truth of all things. But when our Lorde findeth such our boldnesse in them, hee putteth them to confusion. The truth is, that they would so inquire of all things, as nothing might escape them: in so much as they could finde in their hearts to mingle Mahometes Alcoran, and all the dotages of the Heathen, and all the superstitions of the Papiests with the purenesse of y Gospell, and to make a medly of them, that wher they had well clowted them together in their owne brayne, they might saye, This is the thing that is good. But our Lorde (as I saide afore) cannot alvde that men shoulde trust so to their owne wittes. And againe on the other side, hee cannot abide such iniurie to bee done to his worde, as that it shoulde bee matched with the wyles of Satan, so as it might bee sayde, now will I choose what liketh mee best.

It is too high a mounting for men to make themselves iudges and vmpers of Gods truth, which the Angels do honour with all reuerence. Needs therefore must such men fall into horrible destruction. And therefore lee vs beware that wee brydle our selues, so as our mindes wander not out into fond curiositie. And as soone as wee perceiue that y<sup>e</sup> diuel goes about to falsifie Gods pure truth, let vs stop our eares, and not harken to any such thing, but vterly abhorre it.

Now moreouer Moses saith, That although the false prophets shew some signe or miracle, & the same cometh to passe, yet must not men giue eare vnto the. Here he sheweth that we must haue such constancie and stedfastnesse in our faith, as it may not bee ouerthrowen though there bee neuer so great occasion of stumbling. As for example, if there bee such an illusion of Satan, that a false prophet say vnto vs, such a thing shall come to passe, and it commeth to passe in dede: then are wee at our wittes end, and it is ynough to ouerthrowe our whole building though it were neuer so well builded, vnlesse God worke on our side about the power of mans abilitie. But yet how soeuer the world go, Gods truth must bee of such force with vs as to holde vs backe against all such temptation, so as if the diuel bring any illusion, he may not gaine any thing at our handes, nor preuaile against vs.

And let vs marke, that before that Moses saith so: he giueth vs a sure declaration of false prophets, that is to say, of such as go about to turne vs from the true God, whome wee haue once known, and would wrap vs in wicheid superstitions wherein there is no reason. If any such thing befall vs, no matuel though our Lorde will haue vs to resist all that cuer the diuel putteth to vs to blear our eyes withal, yea, cuer though there bee false miracles, in so much that although all that the false prophet or deceiver foretelleth, do come to passe; yet must wee not be led away by it. We see then in effect what the meaning of Moses is, that we must be so well fenced by gods worde, that although the diuell rush against vs with neuer so great violence, and worke all the meanes he can to beguyle vs; yet we must not be ouercome, but our faith must be as a wel garded fortress, that notwithstanding any assault, or any battrie made against vs, yet it may warde all blowes, and bee able to saue it selfe from being vanquished by any enemies.

And now let vs marke, that if God sende such false miracles; it is not to intrap those that are his; but to punish such as haue not beleued the Gospel, as Saint Paul speaketh thereof in the seconde to the Thessalonians. And therefore doth Moses also adde, Then is it Gods will to try thee whether thou lovest him with all thy heart & all thy soule or no. It is a saying that deserueth to be wel marked. For first Moyses doeth vs to vnderstande, that such things happen not without the ordinance of God: and secondly hee sheweth the ende or reason wherefore; namely that the faithfull may haue wherewith to be confirmed, knowing well that God will giue them constancie to holde out, though the temptation be neuer so rough and violent. Those are the two things which wee haue to remember here. First, it is sayd, God tryeth thee. Herceby hee sheweth, that Satan hath no power ouer vs, nor can sow any wicked weedes, further forth than God giueth him leaue. And that is a verie needefull thing for vs to marke. For were wee perswaded that the doore were open for Satan, and that all errors might spring vp at all adventure, and that God ouer ruled them not alas what a thing were it? For wee see howe mad the diuel is to ouerthrowe all truth: we see with what furie hee goes to worke when hee is to fight against the kingdome of our Lorde Iesus Christ: and we see what spite hee beareth to our saluation. And therefore things would go too much to hauocke if God wrought not to hinder Satan of his full scope, that hee might not set vp his lies among vs. Wherefore let vs vnderstande, that when soeuer there is any trouble, diuision, or diuersitie of opinion in the Church, the same happeneth not at all adventure, but God worketh from aboue, and ouerruleth the whole matter, according to this protection of Moses, Thy God tryeth thee. Yee see then that by knowing that God holdeth vs vnder his hande, wee bee assured that no errors or abuses can haue access vnto vs, vnlesse so farre forth as our Lorde giue them access. And marke it for a speciall point, to the ende wee thinke not that the diuel reigneth at his owne pleasure, and doeth all things as it were whether God will or no: for hee must bee faine to haue leaue of his master.

And now let vs come to that which Moses addeth concerning the ende and reason why God doeth it: For wee may thinke it strange. What: That God shoulde trye vs? That errors shoulde bee saide to come so of God? Then is hee the author of lying. Againe, doeth God stirre vp the diuell vnto euill? Then might we take occasion of stumbling at it. Yea; but in as much as Moses addeth that God doeth it for iust cause, the stumbling blocke is taken away. Hee saith that God tempteth vs, that is to saye, that hee tryeth vs. After what maner: Whether we loue the Lorde our God or no. And hereby hee sheweth, (as I haue declared heretofore) that if wee haue a right meaning and pure heart, and haue receiued his truth without hypocrisie, he will helpe vs at our neede, and wee shalbe vpheld by his power, so as Satan may well straine himselfe to the vttermost, but the victorie shall alwayes go on our side. And this is the thing that I haue touched out of Saint Paul where he saith, that all the false miracles which befall vnder the reigne of Antichrist, (as many haue been seene) are all reuengements of God, to punish such as would not obey his truth. And it is good reason that Satan shoulde driue them to destruction, sith they would not open their eyes at such time as God would haue enlightened them. And seeing they haue thrust all good doctrine vnder foote; it is meete that they shoulde be deceiued by lies.

But let vs come backe againe to the wordes of Moses. He saith that wee be tryed, to seee if wee loue the Lorde our God. Heereby hee sheweth, that God putteth a difference betweene the hypocrites and such as serue him in soundnesse of heart, at such time as heresies spring vp and that there is trouble and disagrement. And why? For it is certaine that such as loue God are persecuted by the power of his holy Ghoste, & that the troubles which they suiteyne are a good prooffe and sealing vp of their faith, whereby the same is made autenticall. God sheweth by effect howe hee hath wrought in them, and that they bee in verie deede of the number of those whome hee hath chosen. So then let vs vnderstand, that all the errors and heresies which the diuell shall haue sowed among vs, shall bee turned to good ende to all Gods children. So farre off is it that they bring vs any hurte or harme, that they serue cuer to make our faith shyne the brighter, and to warrant vs that God hath succoured vs, and that hee will haue the same knowne to the whole worlde, so as he may bee glorified for it. And we also haue the more cause to rest vpon him with the greater certaintie of faith, and to trust that hee will neuer faile vs.

For as much then as wee see that our Lorde worketh in such wise as hee turneth darkenesse into light, and deadly poyson to our health: haue wee not wherof to reioyce? and ought wee not to bee patient albeit that troubles doe vex vs for a time, and that wee haue much adoo to resist? Yet ought not our heartes to quaike, seeing that God giueth it so happie an issue. Thus much concerning the first poynt; that is to witte, that if wee loue God with all our heart, that is to say, roundly and soundly and without countersaying: wee will not suffer vs to bee beguyled: but whensoever Satan comes to sowe troubles and heresies, wee shall bee confirmed still better and better, and profite in such wise, as wee shall neuer bee overcome. And therewithall wee shall haue the better prooffe that wee bee of the number of his seruantes, and of those whome hee hath committed to the custodie of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and that wee shall see this saying fulfilled, that hee will neuer suffer any of the things to perish, which his father hath put into his hande. Wee see then howe our Lorde Iesus Christ is the keeper of our saluation; & that wee finde the thing by experience which Saint Peter sayeth; namely that our saluation is kept in heauen by faith, and that wee our selues also shall get the vpper hande of all the temptations which the diuell stirreth vp against vs, by sowing such cockle and darnel to the preiudice of Gods truth.

But let vs marke also, that such as are winde-shaken, doe shewe that they neuer wist what it is to loue God with all their heartes, and that there was nothing in them but vanitie and hypocrisy. And therefore when wee see men seduced, let vs not wonder as though God were cruell to them. For it was meeete that their hypocrisy should bee discouered. They meant to mocke God, and vied a kinde of vernishing and painting to make a shewe of that which they were not; and God bewrayeth what they were in deede. Nowe therefore, whereas wee see the wretched worlde so carried nowadayes into darkenesse, superstition and ydolatrie; wee must not thinke that they doe it of mere simplicitie, as though they were innocent and faultlesse, and that God had giuen Satan the brydle without cause; but wee must rather consider that God with iust vengeance punisheth the vnkindnesse of such as had neither purpose nor desire vnto him.

Trueth it is, that a man shall see some outwarde shewe of holinesse in a number of those that are seduced in the popedome and elsewhere. But yet for all that, they bee double hearted, and God perceiueth what they bee in secret. So then, let vs vnderstand that God is a iust Iudge, and let vs glorifie him for his punishing of such as loued him not soundly in their heartes as they should haue done. That is the thing which wee haue to note.

And in deede, experience sheweth in such as turne backe and fall to naughtinesse after they haue once knownen the Gospell. Wee haue seene here that when Satans vnderlinges haue come hither to set troubles in the Church, those that haue beene seduced by them haue knownen them welynough of olde, and not nowe of late, for I speake of the space of eyghtene yeares. Since the troubling of this Church, diuers sectes haue beene seene, and stil God hath bene faine to shewe and to poynt these out with his finger, which had nothing in them but dissimulation & hypocrisy, howe faire countenance soeuer they did make. And I say that this hath bene knownen nowe these eyghtene yeres; insomuch that euen they that haue pretended to bee great vpholders of the Gospell, are well knownen to mee howe they haue behaued themselves, & I could rehearse their doings if neede were, but it is ynough to giue men an incling of them, that others might take example by them. When the Anabaptistes came hither to infect all, there was great cheere made them in the townhouse, and this was about an eyghtene yeares ago. True it is, that men were constrained to reprove their doctrine openly: but yet in the meane while they were still chockt vnder the chinne; & in steed of resisting them lustily, feastes were made to entertaine them with. And since that time, wee haue seene in our owne dayes, (and that not long ago) howe other heretikes haue bene fauoured at their coming hither, and specially howe that horrible blasphemers was supported. And by whom? By such as had so long despised God, that in the ende their shame was of necessitie to bee discouered. They protested sufficiently that their desire was to haue the Gospell: but that was the gospell of Mahomet to turne all things vpside downe, and to bring all things to confusion. For the worlde hath seene howe farre they ouershot themselves; insomuch that they tooke parte against God and his word. Nowe sith wee haue such examples, let vs learne to lue in feare and warinesse, and alwayes come backe to that which is tolde vs here, that is to wit,

wit, that it is not without cause that our Lorde sayeth, that hee tryeth and examineth such as were disguised afore: and that when hee suffereth false prophets to bee stirred vp by Satan, to sowe their darnell among vs, it is to trye vs whether wee loue him with all our heart or no. And therefore let vs proceede more and more in the feare of our God, accordingly as it is said here, that wee must serue him and obey his holy commaundements, not douting but that hee will make vs to get the vpper hande in all assaults and conflictes wherewith wee be assailed, so as wee shalbe sure of the victorie, because hee will fight for vs.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good G O D with acknowledgement of our faulces, praying him to make vs fo to feele them, as wee may not proceede to prouoke his wrath through our vnthankfulnesse; but that seeing he hath giuen vs the infinite treasure of his holy worde, whereby wee haue full assurance of our saluation; wee may embrace it with all reuerence and liue in such purenesse of heart before him, as hee may bestowe his riches more and more vpon vs & make vs partakers of them, and that wee may walke the whole race of our life after such sort in his obedience, as wee may moreouer resist all our enemies, and by the power of the spirituall sworde of his worde, and of the shield of faith, beate backe all the assaults that shalbe made vpon vs. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs; but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Saturday the xij. of October. 1555.

The Lxxxvij Sermon, which is the second vpon the thirteenth Chapter.

2.3 And the signe or miracle, &c.

4 Yee shall walke after the Lorde your God, and feare him, and keepe his commaundements, and obey his voyce, and serue him, and sticke to him:

5 But that Prophet or dreamer of dreames shall bee put to death: for hee hath spoken to turne you from the Lorde your God. (which hath brought you out of the lande of Egypt, and deliuered you from the house of bondage) and to thrust thee out of the way which the Lorde thy God hath commaunded thee to walke in. And so shall you ridde away the euill from among you.

W E sawe yesterday wherefore God giueth the brydle to Satan, in such wise, that hee soweth many errorous and corruptions, not onely in the worlde, but also in the Church. For it is good reason that our faith should be tryed, to weete whether we liue in vprightnesse, foundnes, and loue before our God, or whether there be any faynednesse in vs. And there is not a truer tryall thereof, than when wee come to the incounter to know, whether Gods trueth ought to bee inuincible against all errorous and leasings. And therefore let it not offende vs when wee see him sowe darnell: but let vs bethinke vs of that which is sayde here, namely, that our Lorde wil search vs to the harde bottome, whether wee beare reuerence to his worde in good earnest and vnfeynedly or no. Not that hee knoweth not wel ynough what wee bee; (for it is not for himselfe that hee doeth it:) but to the ende that our faith should shewe it selfe, and that there shoulde be true record thereof.

Nowe moreouer it is tolde vs, that wee must folowe Gods worde and hearken to him, that wee may serue him and sticke to him. And this is still to shewe vs that which I haue declared afore: namely, that wee can neuer bee at any stay, vnlesse wee knowe well what God it is whome wee worship. For if wee bee in dout, there needeth nothing to shake vs downe, as wee see by experience. Therefore let vs learne to profite so in our Gods schoole, as wee may not bee remoued by false doctrines, but may haue wherewith to withstande the sleights of Satan, as was declared more at large yesterday.

But let vs goe hacke againe to this saying, that although the false Prophet haue giuen some signe or foresaide some wonder, and the same thing is come to passe: yet notwithstanding wee must hold our owne still. Here it might be demanded whether the diuell can prophesie or no. I stande not much vpon that, it is not materiall: but I haue answered before, that G O D is about him, and that it is his will that his Church shoulde liue in warefare, to the ende that the faith of all his might be exercised. Then if a deceiuer foretell a thing, and the same fall out in deede: it is not to bee saide, but that G O D hath giuen him the brydle. Therefore it is not for vs to trouble our felues greatly, to know whether Satan foresee things to come or no. For it is very certaine that norwithstanding all the craft and subtletie that is in him, yet knoweth hee not any more than our Lorde in: parterth vnto him. And all is to deceiue the vnbeleueers according to their desert: or else to shewe, that doe what he can, yet shall hee neuer get the vpper hande of the chosen, as is sayde in other places of the scripture.

Let vs then leaue these needeleffe questions, whereby many folke haue deceiued and intangled them felues; to wit, whether the diuels doe knowe more than men doe: for it is nothing to the matter as I sayde afore. But rather let vs vnderstande this iustice of GOD, that it is his will to punish the vnbeleueers, because they bee neuer contented with the single tructh, but will needes bee still wandering here and there, and therefore are they wortheie of such payment. Besides this, the faithfull also are exercised by incounters; and that is alwayes to their benefite, and to their welfare. For God doeth so preferre them, as it is not possible for them to be deceiued.

But as yet there remaineth one question more: for it is saide in the eyghteenth Chapter, that a man may discerne a true Prophet from a deceiuer by this selfe same marke. If a Prophet (sayth Moses) haue foretold a thing, and the same is come to passe; yee shall vnderstand that that Prophet hath spoken truly and in the name of God. But if he be founde a liar in the things that hee hath spoken, it appeareth that he was puffed vp with pryde and presumption, & that he tooke too highly vpon him: and therefore let him be druen away and rooted out from among you. It may seeme at the first blush, that here is some contrariety: but wee must marke that in so saying, Moses intendeth to declare, that God deceiueh not his seruantes as the ydols are wont to doe, that is to say, as the diuels haue vnder the title of ydols deceiued the ignorant wretches that did put their trust in them. For they foretold lyes: and the people founde them felues disappoynted in giuing eare vnto them. And that is the cause why it is sayd by the Prophet Esay, that the gods of the Heathen can do neither good nor euill. But our Lord separateth himselfe there from all the gods that had bene inuented by mans deuiſe, and telleth vs saying: It belongeth to mee onely to shewe what is to come. And why? For I order all things, and I haue the worlde in my hande; and therefore I can well tel what shal come to passe. But as for ydols, they haue no power at all: and therefore howe can they declare any thing to such as serue and worship them? This then is true in general. And according hereunto, the Prophet Ieremie speaking to Hananiah in his eyght and twentieth Chapter, confirmeth this saying of Moses which wee shall see in the eyghteenth Chapter of this booke of Deuteronomie. I wishe (sayth hee) that the thing which thou hast foretold may come to passe. For, that liar did foade the people with vaine hope. When Ieremie told them saying; you haue offended your God too much, and haue continued in your wilfulnesse vnto this daye; I haue often times warned you to come to amendement, but you would not heare mee, and therefore wee bee come now to the last cast; thinke not that GOD will beare with you any longer, but prepare your felues to beare the yoke and burthen; for yee must bee carryed away to Babylon, where your state shalbe miserable; Because you haue forsaken your God, hee hath giuen you ouer to bee a praye to your enemies, and therefore there is no more remedie but to dispose your felues to patience, that this aduersitie may tame you, and your GOD shewe pitie vnto you at the ende of the terme which hee hath set you: Hananiah setting himselfe against him, saide no, feare not that any such thing shall befall you. And therewithall hee went and put a yoke vpon his neck, in skorne of Ieremie who had worne bondes & lynes about his necke. Beholde (sayes hee) I come to breake the thing that Ieremie hath shewed you for a signe that you must bee prisoners in Babylon. Very well (sayde the Prophet Ieremie): I woulde it were so; I wish not any harme to my countryfolke: but yet must nor thou on the other side abuse them with vayne hope as thou doest. Moreover, thou shalt finde whether it bee so or no: and experience shall shewe whether thou bee a true Prophet or no: for whosoever foretelleth a thing and the same cometh to passe; yeeleth proofe that hee was sent of God, and that hee spake out of Gods owne mouth. But if it come not to passe, it appeareth that all was but a lye. In that place Ieremie had an eye to the reverse text which wee shall see hereafter. Yee see then howe it is a generall rule for all of vs to holde, that it belongeth onely to God to foretell things to come, and that such as declare those things truly, do by that token shewe and proue themselves to be true Prophets. Yet notwithstanding, it may well bee that particularly GOD will permit a deceiuer to foretell some thing to come. And yet doeth not that falsifie the generall rule. For why? when our Lorde foretelleth things to come, it is to frame all men to his lawe: And the selfe prophets what say they? In abusing the people, and turning them from God, they promise them that all shall go well with them: whereas contrariwise Gods seruantes doe alwayes matche faith and amendement of life with their admonitions; and they vse a kinde of teaching that hath a good foundation to buylde vpon: but the speaking of the other sort is altogether in the aire. Nowe wee see howe desirous the worlde is to be beguiled, accordingly as it is sayde in the Prophet Micheas, that the vnbeleueers doe like of none but such as bring them good tydings of a good vintage or of a good harvest. For so faith hee expressly, when it is sayde vnto them, Yee shall bee fatte fedde, and GOD fauoureth you, take no thought, make good chere. Those are the things which the worlde desireth. Neuerthelesse GOD will nowe and then then permitte the deceiuers to speake truth: but that is but in some peculiar case, and then doe they build without foundation. Therefore is that no impediment to the continuall truth of this rule, that when Gods prophetes foretell things to come, it is a prooffe to warrant their doctrine, so as men may thereby knowe of whome they bee sent. For in verie deece although there appeare some truth at the first blushe in the false prophetes: yet notwithstanding there is no holde of it. Marke that for one speciall point. Againe all the matter lyeth in the falling out, which in the ende sheweth it selfe cleane contrarie to that which was furnished. For in the turning of a hande all things goe backwarde, and the vnbeleeuers finde that it was but a blearing of their eyes to make them the more blockishe; and that their hauing of some trewe signe was but a baite to beguyle them, whereas in y<sup>e</sup> meane time they ceased not to hoord vp Gods wrath & vengeance still against themselves.

Then let vs beare well in minde, that whereas it is sayde in this text, that a prophete may say some thing that shall come to passe afterwarde, and yet neuerthelesse not haue the more warraunte to be taken for a seruauent of GOD: the reason is, for that his matter hath no grounde in the worde of GOD, as I haue sayde afore: And secondely, that it is but as a bayte, and a peculiar case, wherof there is no holde to be taken; like as when God suffereth Satan to transforme himselfe into an Angell of light, it is to harden the vnbeleeuers as they deserue to bee. And because they would not conuert, therefore must the darkenesse be made the thicker for them, and the deuil must haue all manner of effectualnesse of errour, as sayth Saint Paule in the seconde to the Thessalonians; inso much that GOD not onely giueth him leaue to deceiue, as a point belonging peculiarly to his office, and as wherein hee is his craftes maister: but also giueth him suche efficacy of etrouer, that is to saye such force and power, that men are blinded by him beyonde all measure. Thus yee see what wee haue to note. And therefore wee bee warned in effect, to pray GOD to giue vs the spirite of wisdom and discretion, that wee may not be snaled by Satans lyes, what colour or couerte of craftinesse so euer he vse. Marke this for one point, that men must in any wise beware of presumption. For they be not so well able to iudge as were requisite. But let vs resorte vnto God, and hee will make vs to discern betweene whyte and blacke.

Againc on the contrarie part, we must vnderstande that whensoever any good is promised vs, or any euill is threatned vs, wee must take Gods doctrine for our foundation, assuring ourselves that Gods will is not to separate his blessing and grace from his Lawe; And therefore that it is in vaine for vs to hope for fauour at his hande when wee haue offended him. For seeing wee haue prouoked his wrath wee shall finde that his threatening of vs is not in vayne seeing that hee sayeth in his Lawe, that hee will persecute all such as sette themselves against him; it must needes bee performed. Therefore let vs first lay the foundation of faith and repentance; and then shall wee not be deceiued as in respect of the particular prophetes, but that this rule shall alwayes holde trewe, to witte, that such as speake the truth are sent of GOD. Yet notwithstanding Satan will not leaue off to haue leaue after a certaine sorte to deceiue the vnbeleeuers as they bee worthe: but that truth is no truth (as sayeth Saint Paul): such miracles are but illusions to deceiue those that trust to them, and the ende that they tende vnto is but to seduce the wretched world. After the same maner also doeth our Lorde Iesus speake of them. And therefore let vs marke well that although the deceiuers haue a shewe of truth in some particular case, yet is it nothing worth: for there is no holde of it: and it is so farre off from any substantiall truth, that in the ende it appeareth to bee viter vanitie and vntruth, to deceiue the wretched vnbeleeuers withall, which are turned away from God. That is the thing in effect, which we haue to mark vpon this text. But howsoeuer the worlde goe, if we put the things in vtre which are spoken here by Moses, that is to wit, if we followe the Lorde and walke in the way which hee sheweth vs: wee neede not to feare but that we be out of all danger of being deceiued by the wylinesse of our enemie. Although the deuil be the father of lying, and doe forge an infinite number of illusions against vs, and although wee on our side be neuer so roughly assailed by him: yet will GOD preferue vs, so wee abide continually in the obedience of his worde, and be willing to harken to him in all cases.

But now let vs come to that which Moses addeth. As for the prophet (sayeth hee) or the deceiuer which shall haue deceiued and abused folke, to make them twine away from the Lorde their God; Let him be put to death, and let the euill be taken from among you. Here our Lorde will haue vs not onely to beware that wee harken not to false prophetes, but also to roote out such pestilent persons vtterly. And therein he sheweth how earnest wee ought to be in the mainteyning of his honour. Therefore to the ende wee shoulde abide in the pure singleness of faith, he had sayd afore, Beware that yee harken not to the false prophete. And not without cause hath our Lorde forbidden all his to giue eare to the bringers in of newe learnings. For why? Sith wee haue the worde of GOD, that ought to content vs well ynough: and if that will not satisfie vs, what an vthankfulnessse is it? For if wee will needes intangle our selues in false doctrines, is it not a yeeolding of our selues to bee a pray to Satan? Doe wee not well deserue that God should leaue vs destitute of vnderstanding, to be drawn into all errors like brute beasts? But it behooueth vs not onely to shunne false prophetes and to giue their subtilties no entrance into vs: but also (as Saint Paul sayth) to be diligent in purging of Gods Church from them, that such a plague be not nourished among vs. And truly if wee knewe our owne frailtie, and considered well on the other side what Satan is able to doe against vs: it is certaine that wee woulde stande more vpon our garde than we be wont to doe. Trewe it is (as I haue sayde already) that wee woulde fayne repose and staye our selues vpon GOD, so as we might not minister any occasion to Satan to beguyle vs; and surely if wee through our owne fonde desire of seeking lyes, did not cast our selues into Satans snares, wee shoulde be sure that GOD woulde alwayes preferre vs. But forasmuch as wee be too weeke, and Satan needes no more but to holde vpp his finger to vs, to carrie vs out of hande from the right way of saluation: in respect thereof wee ought so much the more to seeke the remedies whereby to preuent the mischief. Again let vs consider what Satan is able to doe: He is the prince of this worlde, and therefore wee shall soone be ouertaken by him, the rather if wee be slothfull, carelesse, or negligent. Then is it not without cause that our Lorde warneth vs to take good order, as such a plague may not lurke among vs; that is to wit, that wee may not haue deceiuers to beguile the simple, and to marre them by turning them from the pure truth. For it is a likelihoode that wee woulde fayne be turned away from GOD, when wee giue the mischief such scope. If there were a breach in our towne wall, and our enemies were at hand or that wee were already beleeged, so as wee looked for the assault euerie minute of an houre; would we not prouide for it? Now the case standeth so with vs, that our enemy is not onely at hande, but also is entered in already. When wee heare his lyes, and withstand them not, we make at count of them; we may seeme to be wilfully disposed to perish, as wee be worthie. And as touching vs that are shepherdes, it standeth vs in hande to haue a double voyce. For we must gather together the sheepe as much as is possible: and when they bee in the flocke, we must keepe them there quietly. But if there be wolues also, and the cues that woulde inuade the flocke: against those we must crye out aloud. And yet besides this, such as haue the sworde in their hande, must prouide for it also, and euerie man to his power must streine himselfe to keepe Gods Church from infecting with such peyson, that the deuil may not haue his full scope to falsifie the pure truth, to aduance himselfe against GOD, to ouertrowe the right religion, and (at a worde) to turne all things vpside downe: but we must let these things as much as we can. Wherefore let vs marke, that it was Gods will that false prophetes shoulde be rooted out from among his people. Nowe at the first sight this Lawe seemeth to be ouerstreite: for is it meete that a man shoulde be punished so sore for speaking his minde? Verily it is a wonder that we can abide that one shoulde be punished for speaking against a mortall man, and that when a man shall haue blasphemed the liuing GOD, we coulde finde in our heartes that he shoulde scape vnpunished. It appeareth what zeale is in them, which woulde haue such rigour abolished. If a Prince be misused, men will thinke that death is too small a thing for the offender, and that the fact can not be sufficiently reuenged, insomuch that whosoer speakech against the princes authoritie shall be punished, and no man will speake against it. If a man be founde so wicked as to procure a rebellion, or to raise an insurrection among the people, verie well, he must loose his heade for it, and no man will say that such a Lawe is vnjust or wicked. And why? Because it serues for the mainteynance of the state and common weale of the Countrey. And yet for all this, whereas GOD hath the soueraigne dominion of all, a woorme of the earth shall sette himselfe against him, and goe about to robbe him of his honour, and to deface his maiestie and authoritie; and yet all this shall be as nothing, it shall be let slippe, and because it is but wordes, there is no reason why such punishment should ensue of it. But they that say so, doe well shewe that they haue no loue at all towards GOD, but (which worse is) that they coulde finde in their heartes that all things were confounded together in a hotchpotche, so as men might scoffe at GOD and at his maiestie, and turne all religion into a mockerie and scorne. To be shorte, whosoer he is that speaketh so: he is not to be taken for an ignorant person, seeing hee woulde that false doctrines shoulde be vnpunished: but rather hee is to be counted a despiser of GOD, and an vpholder of the deuil, which seeketh nothing else but the turning of all things vpside downe in the worlde. For our parte, lette vs learne to haue Gods honour in such estimation, that whereas we reuenge the wronges doone to men, we thinke it much more reason that the partie shoulde be punished which violateth the maiestie of him that hath created and fashioned vs. And the matter concerneth not onely the honour of God, but also the saluation of our owne soules: for they be things inseparable. And that ought well to whette vs on the more, not to beare with the errorres and deceites of false prophetes. See howe GOD witnesseth the infinite Loue that hee beareth vs, in that hee matcheth our saluation with his owne glorie, so as men canne not touche the one without hurting of the other: insomuch that if a man deface the honour of GOD, the saluation of man is assayed therewithall. In respect whereof GOD sayeth vnto vs, suffer mee not to be misused among you, nor your selues to be incited to shrinke from my obedience: But if there be any wicked man among you, that goeth about to edge you away, beware yee nourish not such a plague. Doeth not our Lorde in so saying shewe, that wee can not serue to his honour, nor maintaine him in his estate, but that in so dooing wee procure our owne welfare? And therefore these dalyers and mockers that

woulde haue vs to beare with all manner of false doctrine, and that it should be Lawfull for euery man to spewe out whatsoever hee lysth, (besides that they shewe themselves traitours to G O D, and vtter defacers of his maiestie if it lay in them to doe it:) doe also bewayne themselves to be enemies of mankind, and desirous to bring their soules to ruine and destruction, so as they be worse than murderers. Let vs marke then that if Gods honour be precious in our sight, and that the saluation of our owne soules be deere vnto vs; we must not nourish heresies, nor abuses, nor any other of Sathans trumperies; but euery of vs in his owne state and calling, must procure the purging of Gods Church from all euill, that wee may worshippe him with one common consent, that his doctrine may be receiued, and that there may be no diuision among vs.

But this was sayde to the people of olde time. Yea, and Gods honour must not be diminished by vs at this day: the reasons that I haue alleaged alreadie doe serue as well for vs as for them. Then lette vs not thinke that this Lawe is a speciall Lawe for the Iewes: but let vs vnderstande that G O D intended to deliuer vs a generall rule, to which wee must tye our selues. In deede it is alleaged that when our Lorde Iesus Christ came into the worlde, he aduanced not his doctrine by the sworde, but rather both he and his were persecuted, and therefore that the right way to maintaine the true religion, is not to punish the such as set vpp themselves against it: but rather to holde our selues contented with the spirituall sworde, and to vse that in our fighting against Satan, so as our vnholding of the truth, bee alwayes by sufferaunce and patience, if the worlde doe persecute it. But lette vs see whether our Lorde haue excluded and banished Princes and Magistrates and Officers of Iustice out of his flocke, so as they may not be Christians. No surely. For when he speaketh of the kingdome of our Lorde Iesus Christe, hee sayeth expressly; Yee kinges stande you in awe; and yee Iudges of the earth, humble you your selues, and all of you kisse the sonne. Moreover, before hee speake to priuate persons, hee willeth expressly that Kinges, Iudges, and Officers of Iustice should doe homage to our Lorde Iesus Christ: then they be called to the knowledge of y<sup>e</sup> Gospell. And in deede, according hereunto it is sayde in the Psalme, that kinges shall come to submitte their selues to him that was to be sent to be the redeemer. And againe that they shall be as foster fathers to the Church, and that Queenes shall giue her sucke; that is to saye, that such as haue the sworde of Iustice in their hande, shall take Gods Church into their protection to maintaine it in the pure doctrine, and in the same Religion that is set downe in Gods worde. Sith it is so, it is to be concluded, not onely that it is Lawfull for all Kinges and Magistrates, to punish heretikes and such as haue peruerced the pure truth: but also that they be bounde to doe it, and that they misbeaue themselves towardes GOD, if they suffer errors to roult without redresse, and employ not their whole power to shewe a greater zeale in that behalfe than in all other thinges. For is it reason that he which sitteth in the seate of Iustice, should punish a theefe for doing wrong but to the valewe of fise shillings: and in the meane while let a traytour to GOD go vnpunished? Gods name is thereby blasphemed, his truth which is his image is trampled vnder foote, and it is much more than if a man should reude some [princes] Cotemour in peeces. In so doinge the liuing image of GOD is skorned, and as it were spitted at, and the saluation of mennes soules hindered: and shall the Magistrates sit still at it like ydolls? They must punish a theefe for the valewe of fiftene pence; and beholde, this is such a traytour as goeth about to confounde heauen and earth together, and must the same go vnpunished: What a dealing were that? Doeth not euen nature teache what is to be doone in this behalfe? And as for those that say that we should let the euill weedes growe still, doe they not shewe themselves to be grown out of kinde like monsters, and that they be more intollerable than if they were starke madde? For it should seme that their meaning is to defie the whole order of nature, and men see that they not onely speake against GOD, but also poyson mennes soules, and bewayne themselves not to haue one droppe of settled discretion. Nowe then let vs marke, that sith God hath declared that in the reigne of his Sonne, euen kinges should be called to the knowledge of the truth, and become a parte of his Church: It behoueth them to giue example to their people, and it is good reason that they should employ their whole power and authoritie to maintaine the good doctrine, and to cause GOD to be honored and serued, and to drine away all ydolatrie and superstition, and to see that it be not Lawfull for anie man to spewe out blasphemies agaynst GOD. That is the thing which we haue to marke vpon this place.

And whereas it is alleaged that Iesus Christ vied not the materiall sworde to aduance his doctrine withall: that is true, and wee also bring not the sworde in our hande into the pulpit to proue the things that wee preach. But lette vs learne to put a difference betwene offices, and let vs consider howe our Lorde Iesus Christ came to preach his worde, when hee woulde that such as receiue it should euery man in his owne state and calling, followe whatsoever is ordained for him. Nowe it is true that in the time of our Lorde Iesus Christ, the great men of the worlde claue not to the Gospell, no more than we see them doe yet still at this day: but the little ones and weakeinges were faine to be chosen, thereby to beate downe the pride of the worlde, as Saint Paule auoweth in the first to the Corinthians. Ye see (sayeth he) that there be not many noble men, men of power, or wise men among you. And why? For men are but too much giuen to the aduancing of themselves; and if God had begunne at the great ones, the litle ones shoulde haue seemed as nothing. But God ment to beate downe all pride, that men might learne to chalendge nothing to themselves. Notwithstanding howsoever the case stand, when the great ones are called to the seruice of God, then must they employ themselves in the things that belong to their charge. For the things that I alleaged out of Esay, Dauid, and diuerse other Psalmes, belong to the reigne of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and to the state of the Christian Church. Therefore must we needs conclude, that our Lorde will haue Princes and magistrats to vse the sword that is giuen them, to the mainteinance of his honour, and of the vnitie of faith and good agreement; so as if any man rayse vp trouble or goe about to sowedarnell, he may be rooted out. But is not that punishment too rigorous? [Yes:] for some will well ynough graunt (as contrained thereunto) that it is good that heresies shoulde be repressed: but that it were too great an extremitie to proceede so farre as to punish them with death. Yea, but (as I sayde afore) wee must esteeme Gods honour as it deserueth. For if wee woulde that deceiuers shoulde be reprooued, so as they might not haue their mouthes open, and yet that they shoulde not bee vtterly suppressed as were requisite: it were all one as if we shoulde say, In dedde we ought to please God, but as for to put a man to death for blaspheming him, what a thing were that? Loe at what point we be.

But God for all that, will not faile to be had in estimation as I sayde afore: yea and that to our cost, if wee goe that way to worke. For the very cause in dedde, why we see the worlde infected with so many troubles and errours, is our lazines in that wee haue neither zeale nor disposition to beate downe the leaseings of Satan. Nay rather (which worse is) there are a great number which maintaine them willingly. And yet in the meane while men crye out that all things are confounded, that all things goe to hauocke, and that there are so great troubles as is pitie to beholde. And what is the cause thereof? Euen the princes that are willing to maintaine errours, and further them by all the meanes they can, so as it may seeme that they bee of Satans setting vp, as it were to vpholde his part against God and his worde. Their people likewise desire nothing so much, as to be fedde with lyes; that is all their seeking, and God sendeth it them. For (as I haue shewed afore) it is a iuit rewarde for them. Why then shoulde men cry alas, or why shoulde they be greued at the matter, when all men both great and small seeke the vtter defacing of Gods trueth, and to giue scope to all manner of leaseings? Therefore let vs learne in any wise to haue the zeale and affectiō which our Lorde commaundeth vs: or else it wil come to passe that heresies and errours shall in the end picke out our eyes, if we feede them still as wee be seene to doe. Let vs take the forementioned example of Ananias, and Ieremie. Ieremie taught in the name of God, and it was prouoed sufficiently that hee stepped not forth on his owne heade: and yet for all that, the people woulde haue hadde him to let them alone, that euerie man might haue followed his owne wicked lusts; they could not away with him, God his threatninges were to corrafiue, and therefore euerie man sought to withstande Ieremie. Yea (quoth they) shall this fellowe trouble vs thus continually? Nowe hereupon God sent a deceiuer that went about to make Ieremie a lyer before all the people assembled in the Temple: and no doubt but a great number were offended at it specially such as might consider, or say thus: What? We haue heere the Temple of God, as hee himselfe appointed, and it is the place where hee will be worshipped; wee haue the Lawe, wee haue Gods promise that hee will dwell among vs for euer. And yet now beholde, here are two prophetes, of whome the one sayes, ye shall goe into captiuitie, and the other sayes, it shall not be so. Besides this the deceiuer fell to buffeting of Ieremie as it were to shame him, and giueth him the lye, so as Gods prophet was faine to stande there as abashed at the sight of such trouble. By reason whereof many might be moued as I sayde afore. But what? Let vs a litle consider the state of that people. For when the gouernours were assembled, (which ought to haue mainteyned the pure religion, and had the prophet Ieremie as it were in their keeping) they to shewe themselves voyde of all iust dealing, did not onely sette themselves against Ieremie, but also (which worse is) affirme him to be worthy of death. Thus yee see howe Gods prophet was condemned both of greate and small: in so much that euerie man ranne vpon him. For they were fully bent to giue themselves to all wickednesse, and to bee no more threatened in the name of GOD. If wee see the like nowe dayes, let vs vnderstande that wee be worthy of such payment. For without goinge anye further, for all the preaching of the Gospell among vs, howe is it receiued? what reuerence yeelde wee to it? All men rush out into disorder, and wee neede not speake any more of the popishe superstitions: for there is so deuillish wickednesse to bee seene, that euen such as haue bene counted the simplest cloynes, are fraughted full of blasphemies to spyte GOD withall and to laugh his worde openly to skorne. Yee see what murmuring there is, specially when vices are rebuked. To be shorte, mennes onely desire is to haue dumbe dogges, such as may haue no authoritie at all to speake, and vntruly people, drunkardes, gluttons, Leacherous, and I wote not what else. At a worde, men woulde haue either dogges or swine in the pulpit. This is the thing that they seeke for; And this is mennes desires in most places; who in steede of good and faithfull seruantes to GOD, doe choofe dogges and swine. And if a man seeke the remedie and the redresse of it: Hee must goe to the newfounde yles, for there is no man heere that will meddle with it. Sith we see such dealing, let vs consider what manner of obedience and feare of God there is in such folke. So much the more therefore doth it stand vs in hand to beare y<sup>e</sup> exhortation wel in mind which I haue set downe alreadie: namely y<sup>e</sup> Gods working of our saluation is alwayes matched with his owne glorie. And therefore whensoever he perswadeth vs to maintaine his honour, it is all one as if he sayd, Ye wretched people, if ye make reckning of the saluation of your owne soules: yee must prouide also that I may beare sway among you, and that I may be honored: and therefore see that yee lay for it. Gods meaning then heereby is to shewe vs that he will haue his honour maintained by making vs furtherers of his case, and that he will haue vs to sette it forward as much as in vs lies, or else we shalbe a pray to the deuill. Seeing that hee vttereth such loue rowardes vs, it is no reason that wee on our side shoulde be negligent: but it behoueth vs to indeuour that errors and heresies may be rooted out from among vs. For if we doe not, we must looke for the rewarde that I spake of, and God giueth vs too much prooffe of it. On the other side when wee followe the order that is shewed vs heere, we must vnderstande that it behoueth vs to haue Gods honour in such estimation, as all other things may bee nothing with vs in comparison of that. Which thing will come to passe, if wee sticke stedfastly to his worde, and holde ou<sup>r</sup> selues to it though wee bee assaulted on all sides; and specially if wee resist the mischief by looking to it aforchande, so as it neede not among vs. Therefore let vs take heede that we bende our selues to it euerie man in his calling; and then wee neede not to doubt but that G O D will strengthen vs and stablish vs in the faith which wee haue receiued of him, so as we shal continue stedfastly therein vnto the end, and be thoroughly well fenced against all the assaults of Satan and his vnderlings.

Nowe let vs fall downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs perceiue them better, And there withall forasmuch as wee should soone be ouertaken by false teachers, let vs flee for succour to our Gnd, and yeelde him thanks for his ridding of vs from the heresies and errors wherein wee were snarled, and for his giuing of vs the foode of life; praying him to make vs to tast thereof in such wise, as wee may neuer be turned away from it, but wisely discern the way of life and the way of death asunder, to the ende that our saluation may bee kept safe in his handes, and we in the meane while eschewe the wyles that Satan worketh against euerie of vs particularly, so as wee may put them from vs lustily, and they haue no access vnto vs: but that wee may sticke so stedfastly to our God, as our whole seeking may be to acknowledge him for our king, and wee behaue our selues as his people, that hee also may alwayes auowe vs to be so. That it may please him to grant this grace not onely to vs, but also to all people and nauons of the earth. &c.

On Wednesday the xvj. of October. 1555.

The Lxxxviij. Sermon which is the third vpon the thirteenth Chapter.

6 If thine owne brother the sonne of thy Mother, or thine owne sonne, or thy daughter, or the wife that is in thy bosomme, or thy neighbour that is to thee as thyne owne soule, goe about to intice thee, saying secretly, Let vs goe and serue other gods which thou hast not knowen, nor yet thy fathers:

7 That is to wit, any of the gods of the nations that are about thee, whether they bee nere thee or farr off from thee, from the one side of the earth to the other:

8 Consent not to him, neither giue eare vnto him: neither let thine eye fauour him, shewe him not any pitie, neither conceale him.

9 But thou shalt put him to death, thy hande shalbe the first vpon him to put him to death, and afterward the hand of all the people.

10 And thou shalt stone him with stones and so he shall die: ( for he hath sought to thrust thee from the Lorde thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage: )

11 That all Israell may heare and be afraide, and not doe such a wicked thing among you any more.

Pfal. 69. 10.

Ad we the zeale in vs that is spoken of in the Psalme, that we tooke the reproch which is done vnto GOD, as if it were offered to our selues: this lawe here were in a manner needelesse. For euerie of vs woulde willingly of his owne accomde indeuour to maintaine Gods honour. But nowe inasmuch as manie men thinke it to be too excessiue rigour to put the troublers and perverters of religion to death: thereby it appeareth that we despise Gods honour and make no greate account of it. For euerie of vs would faine haue his owne honour mayntained, and if anie man haue stormed against vs, we thinke the time will neuer come soone ynough for vs to bee reuenged. If a man doe vs any wrong or iniurie, we woulde that euerie man should sette himselfe against it in our defence: but if Gods honour bee trampled vnder foote, we lette it slippe. Wee see then howe colde and vnjustie wee be, but this vnlustinesse of ours deserueth a more shamefull name. For if a man suffer his father to bee scorned, folke will say hee is not worthe to liue in the worlde, because hee doeth against his kinde. And beholde, GOD is as it were torne in peeces by wicked mennes aduancing of themselues to rend asunder the vnion of the fayth wherethrough it is his will to bee knowne, and whereby it is his will to reigne among vs: and that is borne withall. And is not that a token, that if it lay in vs we woulde neuer haue any remembrance of GOD at all? But forasmuch as there is so litle zeale in vs; therefore is this Lawe giuen vs. And GOD declareth that hee is not vnmyndefull of his owne maiestie, but that hee will haue the defacing thereof to bee punished. Naye rather hee sheweth that hee disclaymeth vs for his people, if we haue not a speciall regarde of this case of his.

Wee haue hearde heeretofore what hath beene sayde concerning false prophetes: namely that if anie man troubled the Church of GOD, hee should be stoned to death without sparing. Nowe God expresseth yet better the thing that he hadde spoken: which is, that we must put all affections of nature vnder foote, when his honour cometh in question, so as the father must spare his sonne, nor the brother his brother, nor the husband his wife, nor the friend his friende y is as decree to him as his own life, y lie be not put to death. And good reason. For doe not all the friendshippes in the worlde proceede of that order of nature whiche the creator hath established? Then if wee will not sette the carte before the horses, wee muste alwayes beginne at GOD. And Saint Paule doeth not without cause say; that all kindred cometh from thence, and issueth out of that fountayne.

Also when there is any friendshipp betweene man and man; it must alwayes be referred to this marke, that GOD haue still the cheife preheminnce, and that wee be ioyned together in him. And cursed be al ayaunce that separateth vs from our maker, in whome consisteth all our life, welfare, and ioye. Then if a husbandle loue his wife, without regarde of GOD, hee is woorthie to bee thrust out amonge the brute beastes. In like case is the father, which aimeth not at the same marke in louing of his children. If wee be so linked together, and haue so plighted our faith and trothe one to an other, as wee may seeme after a sorte to haue as y would say but one soule in two bodies, and in the mean while GOD belette alone withoutought on: doe yee not see that it is too shamefull a beastinesse? Then is it not without cause that GOD hath tolde vs expressly that his honour is to be preferred before all worldly or naturall considerations. And lette vs marke well the wordes that are sette downe heere; for they be of great weight.

Moses coulde haue sayde singly, If thy brother, thy wife, thy sonne, or some friende of thine inuice thee, and goe aboute to alurre thee to nauightinesse; but hee addeth (which is of much more vehemencie) If thy brother the sonne of thy mother, which laye in the same bellie that thou thy selfe diddest. And to what ende is this doone of GOD, but to searche the bottome of our affections, by entering euen vnto our bowels, as if hee should say, I will see whether yee loue mee better than yee doe these carkesse? For what is thy brother? Hee is but a mortall creature: and I will see whether thou sette more store by him than by mee. Naye (say wee) but he and I laye both in one bellie. That is trewe, (sayth GOD:) but it is not meete that I should alwayes haue the vpper hande and highest preheminnce? The same case is it when hee sayeth, shine owne sonne, shine owne daughter, thy wife that sleepeth in thy bosome. Hee coulde haue sayde singly; thy wife; but hee sayeth, No, thou muste forgette and quite and cleane shake off all the loue which thou bearest to thy wife, if shee goe about to plucke thee away from me.

Agayne, If thou haue a friende (sayeth hee) which is as deere to thee as thine owne life: thou must lay thy hande vpon him also to stone him: thou must not onely bee his accusier and giue euidence against him; but thou must also sette hande vpon him without sparing: all mercie and pitie must bee put away in that case. Hereby wee see in effect, as I sayde afore, that Gods will is to trie vs, whether wee truly loue him. And for that cause doeth hee sette downe vnto vs whatsoeuer might holde vs backe, or hinder our desire from shewing such zeale as wee ought to haue to the mainteinaunce of his honour: declaring vnto vs that if any thing bee an impediment to our continuall keeping of the vnion of fayth about all things, in such wise as it is contayned in his wordes: wee be traytours and false hearted towards him, and hee will shake vs off; and in steede of taking vs for his children, hee will giue vs ouer and banishe vs from his kingdome and his Church: for hee will haue that order obserued

Eph. 3. 15.

obserued among those that are his. Marke that for one point.

And herewithall it behoueth vs to consider of whom hee speaketh. Hee sayeth not onely, if a man goe about to abolish all religion, as wee see some worldlings doe, which could finde in their heartes like a sort of dogges and swyne, that men shoulde make a mockerie of all the seruice of God; hee speaketh not of such kinde of men: But his saying is, if a man go about by superstitious meanes to turne thee from mee to the seruing of ydolles; although it bee of the gods that are moste renowned in the worlde, in the seruing and worshipping of whome, the people that are about thee doe thinke themselues to do well: If any man labour to turne thee from my worde, to make thee followe after those gods: let him bee rooted out.

Nowe then, wee see, that God punisheth, not onely those that woulde abolish all religion: but also those that woulde corrupt his truth. And therefore for the better vnderstanding of this lawe that is giuen vs heere, let vs marke at a worde, that it is not for vs to saye, There is no God, it is but folly for men to trouble themselues about any deuotion, for wee shall gaine nothing by it: but [wee must consider,] that if a man bee neuer so deuout, and thinke to doo neuer so well, yet if hee turne himselfe to the superstitions of the Heathen like a renegate, and knowe not the true God: hee is condemned. And it is a distinction which wee ought to beare well in minde. For our Lorde sheweth vs, that hee will haue vs to bee contented with his worde, and to rest wholly vpon it, that wee may bee brydled by it, and not attempt to alter any thing, seeing hee hath once declared with his owne mouth what hee alloweth.

And hee sayeth expressly, the gods which neither I nor my fathers haue knowne. By this saying hee doeth vs to vnderstande that it behoueth vs to bee well assured of our religion. For to put a man to death without hauing knowne which is the true God, were but a franke zeale, as wee see the Papistes doe at this day, and the Heathen haue beene wont to doe at all times, yea, and euen the Jewes also, who haue put this lawe in execution (howbeit amisse) against the prophets. And vnder the same pretence were our Lorde Iesus and his Apostles driuen to suffer persecution.

As for the Heathen, when they made lawes for the obseruing of the manner of religion that was established among them; they had a good grounde and foundation for the thing they did. For it is not ynough for Magistrates to make lawes to repress robberyes, murder, and violence; but they knewe also howe it was meete that God should haue the forhande. Nowe if nature taught them so much; what excuse will there bee for vs that professe Christianitie, if we say it is ynough for men to repress robberyes, aduoceries, murderes, and other such violent and outrageous dooings that tend to the hurt of priuate persons: and in the meane while make none account of God? What a dealing were that? The Heathen then had a good grounde in that they knewe that in a well ordered Common weale, religion ought to bee obserued, and that if any man attempted ought to the contrarie, he was to be punished: in so much that it was a matter of life and death among them, and it was obserued throughout all the worlde in all ages.

The Jewes did not amisse in beeing zelous in punishing false prophets after that God had giuen them this lawe. Likewise in these dayes, whereas the Papistes say that Heretikes are to bee punished; that is true, wee confesse that they bee worthe of it. But therewithall they ought to come to the poynt that is set downe heere, namely, that it behoueth vs to knowe which is the GOD whome wee serue, and that wee be sure that our religion is not a thing set forth at all aduerture, but that wee holde the infallible truth of Gods owne sending, and that it is preached vnto vs in his name & by his autoritie: so as it is hee on whome our faith is grounded. It woulde become vs (say I) to come to that poynt. But the Papistes play the beasts in that behalfe, bearing themselues in hand that fo they shut their eyes, they may execute their rage and furie vpon innocents.

And after the same manner haue the Heathen ouershot themselues. For, because religion was to bee maintained, they not discerning what they did, nor perceiuing whether it was good or euill: did set themselues against the seruantes of God. Likewise dealt the Jewes with the Prophets. Yee see then here is a point which it standeth vs in hande to wcy well all our life long: and that is, that wee must haue knownen the true God, so as wee may iustly and without grudge of conscience condemne the errors which men woulde drawe vs to. Which thing will come to passe, if wee haue the light of Gods worde to shewe vs the way: for thence it is that all good discretion cometh.

Nowe then, to the intent wee may benefite our selues by this text, let vs marke first of all what loue wee ought to beare to our Lord God, when hee hath vttered himselfe vnto vs. Namely that wee must beare that in any wise hee may bee serued without gainesaying, and that the rule which hee hath giuen vs bee vnbroken, and that nothing bee changed in his worde, but that we make much more account of the doctrine which wee haue receiued of him, than of our liues. And therefore let vs not bee plucked backe from the saide zeale for any worldly respect as wee see the worlde is, which fauoureth more his owne fleshy affections than God. But howsoeuer the case stande, yet must wee fight against all impedimentes and distresses; vntill the saide zeale doe get the vpper hande in vs, so as wee will rather cause them to dye which seeke the defacing of the true Religion, than suffer such a plague to preuaile in the Church, to the intencing and marring of our selues or of any others.

Pfal 69.10.

And hereof wee may gather a good exhortation; which is, that when wee see Gods honour impaired any manner of way, it must greeue vs at the heart, according to the generall saying of the Psalme, concerning all reproches. May wee must not beare with any thing whatsoever it be, whereby Gods honour may be impeached or defaced. But what? Little (in deede) is this doctrine embraced nowadays. For blasphemie hath his full scope euery where; and if a body be to be reprov'd for so doing; though a dozen persons bee at the hearing of the blasphemie; yet shall not a man finde so much as one witness. In this case God ordeyneth all both small and greate to bee his advocates, and hee will haue euery man to doe him seruice in it. For it needes not to bee sayd to a man, Haue a care to bewray blasphemie when ye heare it: No for hee is known to haue beene present; and yet if hee bee asked of it, hee doeth but wring his groyne like a swyne, and saye, I heard him not. Such folke are well worthie, not only that God should plucke their eares from their head, but also vtterly ouerwhelme them. They bee monsters that can heare the name of their maker blasphemed, and yet couer such filthines and suffer it to abyde vnpunished. Is it not reason that God should shew how it is hee to whom they be to yeeld accompt for it? And though he winke at it, yet let not vs thinke that they which forswear themselves so vnrustily, shall scape scotfree, but that in the ende GOD will shewe howe it is not without cause that hee hath pronounced, that to fauour euill is worse than to doe euill. For it may bee that hee that doeth this euill is carried to it by cholere or by some other affection: but as for him that cloketh it, he is not onely a partaker of it, but also a wilfull iustifier of it as it were in despite of GOD: and that is an vtter peruerter of the order of nature. And therefore lette vs learne by that which is tolde vs heere, that euerie of vs must beare such zeale to the mainteinaunce of Gods honour, as not to spare anie kinne or friende, if they steppe vpp to sette themselves against him to whome wee belong, and to whome wee owe all seruice, going about to ouerthrowe his seate, and to disappoint him that hee may no more reigne among vs. And therefore whensoever Gods honour is darkened or diminished among vs, let euerie of vs in his state looke to it that we be so zealous as to redresse it to the vttermost of his power. This is the first point which we haue to marke heere.

And moreover, if any man shoulde goe about to alter the Religion, so as GOD shoulde after a sorte bee driuen from among vs; it were meete that our zeale shoulde in that case be kindled yet more. For if wee bee nice in hauing our owne honour touched: what ought wee to be when Gods kingdom is in danger of vtter dispatch? If there be some wicked practise in a Citie, so as some treason, insurrection or alteration of the state is a bruing, and one hauing but some secret incling of it tolde him in his care, doe conceiue it; shall hee not bee taken as accessarie, and bee adiudged woorthie of punishment? If it be proued against a man that some wicked treason was a practising; and hee heard of the matter and yet discovered it not; hee shall be punished as a traytour, and men will say hee was well woorthie of such punishment. And shall we bee helde excused of our silence, when an insurrection is made against GOD, and men goe about to ouerthrowe his holy temple, that he might not dwell any more among vs, so as they indeuour to deface his maiestie, and furthermore to cast vp the saluation of mennes soules as a pray to Satan, and wec say nothing to it? Doeth not our dissimulation import both trecherie and perurie against GOD? Yet notwithstanding there be some so farre past shame, that they demaunde at euerie turne, Who is he that findeth faulte with mee? Whome haue I wronged? Behoulde, hee hath played the blasphemous and wicked wretch, in flushing out some matter so vglye against GOD, as hee ought to be rooted out for it; and yet hee sayes, Who complaines of mee? If hee had stolne but fiftene pence, hee shoulde be whipped; and for the seconde or thirde offence, hee should goe to the gallows: and like a Churchtraytour hee hath trampled Gods maiestie vnder foote, wherein hee hath doone worse than the theefe that cuttes a traucellers throte, in a wood; and yet to his owne feeling he is iust still. And whercof cometh this, but of the foresaid lasnesse, that no man bethinks himself of his dutie in that behalfe? GOD doeth vs the honour to make vs mainteyners of his trueth, as though he made vs a solemne commission of it.

And is not that such a preeminence, as of duetie ought to make euerie of vs to streine himselfe (yea euen beyonde his power) to shew a constant and inuincible zeale in causing men to serue and honour GOD? For if a prince employed a man in his affaires, and did put him in commission; hee woulde strayne himselfe so farre, as he woulde euen hazarde his life; and hee woulde thinke that what paine so euer hee rooke, though hee did much more, yet all were too litle seeing hee hadde so honourable a charge.

Beholde, the liuing GOD taketh vs as if wee were his defenders, and will haue euerie of vs to represent his owne person: and yet for all that, we despise all those things; when Gods name is blasphemed wee make no reckening of it; the partie himselfe that hath taken the othe to conceale no such thing, shall play the traytour first. And therefore it is no woonder though wicked folke take such libertie, and that when they bee conuicted, they alleadge that no man complaines of them, & that they haue done no man any wrong.

For were we the true children of GOD, surely wee woulde tender the wronges that are doone to him, more than the wronges that are doone to our selues, and wee woulde take them much forer to hearte.

For

For if wee ourselues bee offended, is it any great matter? But when Gods holy name is lightly esteemed, and reproched; then wee ought to bee verie tender hearted. And because wee thinke not of it; when wee haue blasphemed God, wee say wee haue done no man any wrong.

Furthermore, let vs consider (as I haue said afore) that if wee must endeuour by all the meanes wee can to haue swearing redressed: much more reason is it that wee should not suffer any man to step vp to trouble the Church, and to make any rebellion, but vtterly roote out such a pestilent fellowe out of hande. But yet before all other things, let vs looke that wee knowe Gods truth aforhand, that wee may be able to maintaine the same: for without that, wee shall goe lumpishly to worke, and our zeale shall bee but as the rage of madfolkes, as I haue already shewed by the examples of the heathen men, Iewes, and Papistes. The Papistes haue a faire colour, in saying that if a man deface the maiestie of a Prince, hee shall not scape unpunished: and therefore it is much more reason that men should bee punished for setting themselves against God. Yea: but in the meane while they wote not what G O D they worship; for they bee carried away with their owne wicked and diuclish superstitions. Let vs marke then, that wee must not take this lawe here at alauenture; but that to begin well, wee must lay this foundation, that wee bee sure that the religion which wee holde is of God. As for example, wee haue the holy Scripture; and there our Lorde hath shewed vs his will. Hee protesteth by his Prophet Esay that hee hath not spoken vainly nor couerdly, nor meant to beguile men in bidding them to seeke him. Then haue wee an open declaration of Gods trueth, so wee obey his worde by faith, and receiue it without gausfaying.

Esa. 45. 19.

When wee be at that poynt, wee may well with good conscience and safetie punish such as seeke to turne vs away from the trueth. But if wee be doubtfull and wauering, and go to it but by weening: what will come of it, but that wee shall punish innocent persons, as wee see the Papistes doe by persecuting our Lorde Iesus in his members? It were better for them nowadays that they killed one another without colour of iustice, than to persecute the children of God after that fashion. For the matter standeth not vpon the punishing of men by taking away their liues, or by heading of gillelles bloud through wicked crueltie: but vpon the making of waire against the liuing God, and vpon the suffering againe of our lord Iesus Christ in his members.

And let vs marke, that whensoever wee falsely pretende the name of God for a colour; our fault is doubled in so abusing it, and we become so much the more blame woorthie. As for example, when the Papistes nowadays doe persecute the faithfull, and vse such excessive crueltie as they doe: they can wely enough say, it is the zeale of God that driueth vs to doe it. If a man haue slayne one or robbed one; very well, hee shall bee layde vpon the wheele. And what shall bee done when Gods maiestie is defaced? Should the partie scape unpunished? So will they alleage. Yea; but first they should inquire of the case. For like as sometimes men punish gillelles persons accused of false crymes: so may it well bee (and wee see it by experience,) that Martyres are persecuted in steede of heretikes. Therefore were it meete to looke well to the matter.

But nowadays if a man say that wee ought to call vpon none but onely God in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and that wee should not seeke the further compasses after the imaginacions of men, by praying to the virgine Marie or other Saintes deceased to bee our patrons and advocates; but that wee ought to holde our selues contented with Iesus Christ, to whome that office is giuen by God his Father: By and by they crye out, to the fire with him. And howe so? It is the pure doctrine of the holy Scripture. Yea, but the church of Rome admitteth it not.

If a man say, wee must worship God after a spirituall manner, without making any puppets to him, and that the breaking of the rule which our Lorde Iesus Christ hath giuen vs, is vtter abomination; out vpon it, that a foule heresie, at leastwise by the iudgement of the popedom. But yet for all that, the Scripture beareth it. If a man say wee haue no freewill to doe good, but that wee bee vtterly corrupted; and that if there bee any goodnesse in vs, it proceedeth of Gods meere grace and mercie, so that our going forward towards the marke, is because wee bee renewed by his holy Ghost; and yet neuertheless that wee bee weake, and had neede to flee continually for refuge to the forgouenness which G O D proniseth vs, and whereby wee bee reconciled vnto him, whereunto wee attaine not by our owne desertes and satisfactions, but must bee faine to bee purged by the bloodshed of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and by that meanes wee obtaine saluation: if these things (say I) bee alleaged: by and by hee must bee haled to the stake. And why? Because all this is condemned by their Synagogues.

Yea, but it were meete for them that they should giue eare vnto God. For did hee forgo his authoritie when hee sayde that we should neither ad too nor diminish from the things that hee hath spoken, as wee haue seene already heretofore? For thereby doeth he shewe at what ende it behooueth vs to beginne. Then is it a hellish kinde of dealing, when men stay not vpon the things that G O D commaundeth, and that are conteyned in his worde, and yet notwithstanding doe take vpon them to burthen other men with what lawes they list.

If a man say that wee must serue God according to his commaundementes, and not depend vpon those that take vpon the to enioyne lawes to mens soules, and that all such inuentions are foolish: What? Shall the traditions of our mother holy Church bee so reiected? That were a deadly and intolerable cryme. If a man speake of the Sacraments, & say that baptisme ought to be ministred in a known tounge, that men may vnderstande to what ende our Lorde Iesus ordeyned it, what fruite it yeeldeth, and how to vse it aright: and moreouer that men may perceiue that baptisme fendeth vs to our Lorde Iesus Christ, and hath no power of it selfe further than God worketh by his holy spirite, which appeareth when wee haue an eye to him that is the verie substance of baptisme: and that all the trifling toyes ought to bee put away wherewith men haue mocked God: to the full, namely, the ceremonies of their owne inuenting which are but vtter corruptions of baptisme, as their spittle, their salt, & all their other maygames which they play withall: If a man talke so of their stuffe, he must be put to death for it out of hand. And why? Eye vppon him, hee is a ranke heretike, he is not to bee borne with. Yea, but they shoulde see first whether it bee an heresie or no. For by that meanes they make God him selfe an heretike for want of due examination; and what a dealing is that? If a man say that our Lordes supper ought to bee receiued according to the rule which hee him selfe did giue vs, that is to wit, that wee shoulde communicate together, so as the bread might bee a warrant to vs that wee bee truly become partakers of his bodie, and the wine a warrant that wee bee partakers of his blood, and consequently that the Masse is an abomination of the diuels owne deusing, for that therein the Christians are so farre off from communicating together, that one man separateth himselfe from all the rest of the company: beholde, then must excommunication serue as a sauce for all meates.

Againe, if a man come at Easter to receiue the Lordes supper, hee must haue but a morsel, and hee must holde him contented with the one halfe of it: and moreouer, contrarie to Christ his institution, which sayes: take and eate: they woulde beare God in hand that he shall receiue; wee giue it thee, say they. Besides this, if a man intende to bee reconciled to GOD, the Masse must serue as a new sacrifice, and although they say it is the same that Iesus Christ himselfe offered, yet doe they oftentimes reiterate it. If a man open his mouth against such abominations, O that is an vtolerable cryme. The sire must ring of the great outcries that shalbe made against it. How now, say they? What ado haue wee here? Hee hath spoken against the decrees of the holy Councils. Yea, but before that God commaunded the punishment of Renegates that shoulde goe about to trouble the Church, and to set diuision in the faith; he laide, Thou shalt not doe what seemeth good in thine owne eyes; but thou shalt submit thy selfe obediently to my sayings, and not step aside from my worde, but yeelde your selues to it both great and small; and therefore that order ought to bee maintained.

But wee see that all things are turned vpside downe. And therefore let vs looke that wee bee well informed, (as I saide afore) and that wee bee well assured that wee haue Gods certaine truth, and that wee bee thoroughly resolu'd of it, so as wee may bee able to say, It is God that hath spoken it, we haue beene taught it in his schoole, and wee renounce all imaginations of men: for wee knowe there is nothing but vanitie and vttruth in men. God then must bee the author of our faith, and allowe it, before wee can say, This is the truth. And when wee bee so resolu'd, then may wee obey this commaundement here.

But wee must marke therewithall, that it is not ynough for men to excuse themselves by saying, as for mee I meane not to abolish all religion; and yet if I like well of this thing, why shoulde it not bee lawfull for mee to haue it? Moses sheweth vs that although a man pretend the title of some god, yet is that nothing: for wee must haue the liuing GOD; and that when wee haue once the knowledge of the true Religion, that must suffice vs, and that if wee goe astraye, it is through our owne fault, and there is no excuse for vs. That is the meaning of Moses, and it is a doctrine well worthe to bee noted. For many men might finde starting holes in this behaue.

My not a man bee ouerseene through simplicitie? Yes: but when wee haue once known God, wee cannot bee separated from him, but our malice must needes bee vtterly vnexcusable. And therefore let vs take courage to benefite our selues: and when Gods worde is giuen vs freely and preached vnto vs purely, let vs bee so confirmed in it, as wee bee not anye more like waueing reedes, yeelding to euery wynde, nor as little children whome euery man may beguyle: but let vs vse wit and discretion. And in deede our Lorde giueth vs his worde, not onely to the intent wee should saye, Lo, this or that is good: but to the ende that euery man shoulde keepe himselfe from euill, & bee fenced and armed against all temptations of Satan, so as wee might haue wherewith to resist him when hee goeth about to thrust vs out of the way.

Nowe, Gods worde is tearmed a spirituall sworde: and therefore wee haue wherewith to outstande all assaultes, so wee haue profited in Gods worde as wee shoulde doe. And hereby it appeareth what diuels they bee, which would nowadays leaue all things in dout. For there are fantasticall persons which say, What? If a man will punish Heretikes, hee must doe it continually; because all things are out of order. True it is, that men ought to serue God. And if any man woulde saye there were no diuine maiestic in heauen, there is no GOD, there ought to bee no religion in the worlde, O, that were not to bee abidden. But as long as men holde this grounde, that there is a GOD; it is ynough.

And although the heathen keepe stil their dogtages, although the Iewes be wilfull in maintayning their falsc exposition of lawe, although the

Turkes

Turkes holde still their Mahomets Alcoran, although the Papistes bee still intangled in their superstitions: all is one, so they holde fast this principle, that there is a God. Yea, but Moses sayeth here expressly, that although a man pretende an intent to serue God: yet must hee bee stoned to death, if it be known that hee meant but onely to ouerthrowe or disguise the true religion. And what more then? For (as I haue sayd) wee must not onely pronounce with our mouth that there is a God: but wee must also discerne him from all the abuses that men haue inuented of their owne brayne. For otherwise it is but a mocking of all the holy Scripture. I shall say I worship God, and in the meantime I worship a puppet. And what is my God? It is a fantastic that I haue deuised in mine owne head: it is not the liuing God, hee disclaymeth all such dealings, & so am I but a forger. For (as Saint Paul speaketh of it in the first to the Romanes,) such as haue wandred away after their owne imaginations, haue transformed the maiestie of G O D, though their intent was to worship the liuing God, as the Papistes doe, which protest that they worship God the maker of heauen and earth; and likewise the Turkes, who say the same thing; and so also doe the Jewes, notwithstanding that they abhorre Iesus Christ.

1. Cor. 10. 20

And it is sayd in Saint Iohn, that hee which beleueth not in the Sonne beleueth nor in the Father which sent him. N y he that turneth away from Iesus Christ, doeth vterly renounce God. For where dwelleth the fulnesse of the Godhead but in Iesus Christ? When the Turkes set their Mahomet in the place of Gods sonne, knowing not that God hath manifested himself in the flesh (which is one of the chiefe articles of our faith): what a dealing is it? So then, how many things fouer men terme by the name of God, they bee but duels of their owne deuising and setting vp, if they keepe not themselves fast inclosed within the boundes of the holy Scripture. And therefore let vs marke well, that wee must holde vs to the pure Religion; and when wee be well assured of that, then must we come to this lawe whereof Moses speaketh here. And who soeuer aduanceth himselfe against it, let him bee rooted out.

Nowe if the man that would drawe vs to the seruing of strange gods, deserue to bee put to death: what is to be done to these dogges whose whole inducours is to turne all vpside downe, and to besotte the whole worlde, so as men may not knowe any more what religion is? And in these dayes wee see this kinde of weede to rise thorough the whole worlde, a sorte of heathenish people, which serue to no purpose but to scoffe and iest at all things that are spoken of G O D. Alas what shall become of those that commit so open blaspheemie, as they may seeme to make but a mockerie of all the holy Scripture, as though it were nothing else but fables? Nowe then, sith wee see that Moses speaketh so: what doe they deserue which do so trouble and defile the holy thinges?

Beholde there comes mee an hypocrite that woulde deuise a newe Religion, as it were to set vp a popedome here againe, or to bring in the Alcoran of Mahomet: nowe ought such a one to bee put to death without forbearing, for so hath God ordeyned. And if any man say, it is cruelitie; let him finde fault with God for it, and wee shall see if he can preuaile.

On the other side, if wee may well spit in such mennes faces, notwithstanding that they say that their so doing is to maintaine Gods honor, what is to bee doone to such as will needes after a sort deface it quite and cleane? But let vs come backe againe to the matter. There is a man that goes about to peruert the truth thorough sonde deuotion; and to turne it into vtruet: the same man ought to dye. There is a Royster that casteth forth lewd scoffes against the holy Scripture, as doeth that diuclish fellowe which is called Pantagruell, and all his filthy and ribouldy writings: and this sort of men pretende not to set vp any newe Religion, as though they were deluded by their owne foolish imaginations; but like madde dogges they belke out their filthinesse against the maiestie of God, and their meaning is to ouerthrowe all religion: and shoulde such be spared? Why not? for they haue the Cardinales for their wholders, they bee faoured and maintained by them: in so much that the names of these Lord Cardinales are blazed in those goodly bookes, which serue to mocke God as well as Mahomet. All is one, all may bee abidden, so the Cardinales bee curyed, it is welyough, and it doth them good to bee so registred: whereby a man may see that they not onely mocke at all Religion, but also coulde finde in their heartes to abolshe all religion quite and cleane.

But herewithall let vs also see howe we may apply this to our owne vse, for wee must not onely condemne those that haue shewed themselves such as I haue spoken of: but wee must also fare the better by their example, to the end wee may knowe howe it is too wicked, yea, and too diuclish a thing, that when men go about to make some backeslyding or to set some trouble among vs, and much rather to driue away all feare of G O D, and be faoured or shrowded, or hakened vnto, or haue any gappel left open to them, or be let alone vnpunished; it is the next way to vndoe and marre all. And yet wee haue seene examples of such as haue maintained so curled thinges, yea, and of such importance as the verie Papistes themselves coulde not endure them. For it is certaine that the two heretikes that were here, did wrest the holy Scriptures much more than the Papistes. As touching this Triacle-maker, who was the first of them; hee maintayned free will, & destroyed Gods election: and are those thinges maintained among the Papistes? Neuerthelessse wee see howe he was faoured, & hee was held vp by the chinne as it were in despite of God.

Againe, as touching the seconde, wee knowe howe he was so horrible a blaspheemer, that alme abhorred his leawde opinions: and yet for all that, had he not his maintainers and defenders? Yes: for men shewed them more fauour than if they had bene the needest of their kin. And yet was it nor euident that they conspired continually against God and his truth, to wage battel against him? Therefore let vs looke neerlyer to our selues, & to conclude let vs vnderstand that when God hath giuen vs the grace to haue the certeinie of faith, so as we be grounded vpon his worde; wee must holde vs to it after such a sort, that whensoever we see any bodie go about to trouble the order which God hath set, wee may all set our selues against it, and not tary till all agree in one, but that whosoever of vs doth first perceiue the mischiefe, the same doe discover it out of hande, and euery of vs do his dutie in such wise, as such plagie persons bee nor nourished among vs. For (as I haue declared already) wee see there is such frailtie in vs, that a verie little leauen will fower our whole barche

1 Cor 5.6,
& Gal. 5. 9,

Hebr. 12. 15,

God therefore beeing acquainted with our frailtie, meant to prouide for it by shewing vs that it behoueth vs to cur vp the wicked weedes out of hand. Accordingly also as the Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrewes sayeth, that wee must not suffer any euill weedes to growe: for they will marre the good corne, and if the time bee foreflowed, it wilbee too late afterwarde. Then must wee not driue off till to morowe; but euery of vs must quicken and stirre vp himselfe, following the exhortation that is made vnto vs heere.

Moreouer, seeing wee bee commaunded to plucke vp whatsoeuer is contrarie to the maicstic of God, and whatsoeuer may peruert or put away the true religion: let euery of vs see that hee so offer and dedicate himselfe to our God, as wee may not thrust one another out of the right way. If any man goe about to thrust mee out of the way: beholde, God commaundeth mee to rise vp against him; and though it were mine owne brother, my sonne or my wife; yet is it sayde that I ought not to spare them. Now then, if I my selfe thrust others out of the way, is it not a farre more heynous crime? I shalbe taken for an accessarie if I doe but conceale another bodys misbehaviour, and I shew my selfe a traytour to Godwarde: Nowe then, if I my selfe bee an author of euill, howe deepe am I in? So then, if wee will correct other folkes misdealinges so roughly, let vs beare in minde that wee must in any wise holde our selues in the feare of God, so as in cases concerning his honour, wee bee nor a stumbling blocke to driue wretched soules to destruction; but rather indeuour to gather home the stray sheepe into the flocke, & to bring back the wanderers into the right way, and to maintaine and further such as are in the good way already, and all of vs lende our helping handes one to another, that wee may goe serue our God with one common accord.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to receiue vs into his fauor, and that although wee be wretched sinners and vnworthie to come in his sight; yet notwithstanding it may please him to accept of vs, and to reourme vs in such wise by his holy spirit, as all our life may be employed to his glorie, and our whole seeking henceforth may bee to aduance the kingdom of our Lorde Iesus Christ his sonne. And so let vs all say, Almighty God, heauenly father, &c.

12 If thou heare say, that in any of the cities which the Lorde thy God giueth thee to dwell in,

13 Some wicked men are gone from among you, and haue seduced the inhabitants of their cities, saying, let vs go and serue other gods whome yee haue not knowne:

14 Then shalt thou search, and inquire, and examine the matter thoroughly, & if it be true & certaine that such abomination hath bene doone among you:

15 Thou shalt roote out the inhabitants of that citie with y edge of the sword, and vtterly destroy the citie, and all that is in it, and the verie cattell thereof with the edge of the sword.

16 And thou shalt gather al the spoyle thereof together into the middes of the citie, and burne vp the citie and all the spoyle thereof with fire to the Lorde thy God: and it shalbe a heape for euer, and neuer be builded againe,

17 And none of the cursed things shall sticke to thy handes, that the Lord<sup>e</sup> your God may turne away the fiercenesse of his wrath from thee, and giue thee mercie, and haue pitie vpon thee and multiply thee, as he swaie to thy fathers, 18 Because thou shalt haue obeyed the voyce of the Lorde thy God, in keeping all his commandementes which I commaund thee this day, to the ende thou mayest doe the things that are right in the eyes of the Lorde thy God.

WE haue scene heretofore what manner of zeale wee ought to haue to y<sup>e</sup> mainteining of Gods true seruice & the pure religio: that is to wit, that we must forget all y<sup>e</sup> friendship of the world, and shewe that we make more account of the honor of our God, than of all those that are as deere to vs as our owne soules. But now Moses proceedeth further, and sayth that wee must vse such rigour not only against particular persons, but also against whole cities. Now if a whole Citie ought to be rased for breaking y<sup>e</sup> seruice of God; what shalbe done to any one man? Should he be borne with? Here then we see how Gods honour ought to be preferred before the whole worlde. And because he had fer downe a right and pure order to y<sup>e</sup> people of Israell how to do it; his mind was that it should be kept to the vttermost, and that if any man transgressed it, he should be cut off; inso much that if it were a whole people that had done it; they should be delt withall after the same maner. Now then we see yet better, howe carefulle wee ought to be for the preseruation of religion in his purenes. True it is that we ought to be alwayes mindfull of y<sup>e</sup> which we haue sayd already; namely that it serueth not to excuse ydolaters wh<sup>e</sup> they be so enraged with zeale without discretion. For we must be sure a forehande, that the religion which we holde is holy, & that God alloweth of it, so as it is not a doctrine forged at the pleasure of men, but Gods owne will vttered vnto vs of his owne free fauour, whereof we haue good and infallible record, that if any set himselfe against it, he must be cutte off: yea though it were a whole Citie. So litle ought any priuate person to be forborne, that euen a whole citie ought to be destroyed for it.

But to the intent this doctrine may be y<sup>e</sup> better vnderstoode; let vs marke the order which God commandeth here to be kept. If it be sayde, that is to say, if the report go, that some wicked persons are gone from among you, and haue led away the inhabitants of a Citie: make good inquisition of the matter, & search it out diligently and vnfaignedly to the vttermost: and if it be found to be so: let that Citie be utterly destroyed with the edge of the sword, and so forth. Now first our Lordes will is, that when any brute goeth of an euill deede, we should first inquire how y<sup>e</sup> case standeth. And hereby he sheweth that such as haue authority of the sword, & sit in the seate of iustice, must not be retchlesse, in suffering things to passe before their eyes, without making any countenance to see them. Is there then any brute of a thing? Inquisition must be made of it. For if it be let passe, we shew that our intent is to nourishe the euill: and the parties that haue so concealed it, must in y<sup>e</sup> ende abide their payment, which is that it must light wholly vpon their owne heads, as we see it cometh to passe. And it is a iust punishment of God, that when such as are in office to remedie & redresse euill, doe beare with it, they themselves should abide the paine of it. And when they suffer it, it happeneth not by haphazard, but God yeeldeth them the iust wages which they haue deserued. Therefore we must marke this text, that God will haue vs to be doing a forehand as soone as the brute is reported or giuen forth, & not to tary till the thing be appaunt, without setting hand to it or without making inquisition of it: but he will haue the Iustice to inquire of it betimes, specially when there goeth any brute of it. And by the way, to the intent there be not a slight inquirie made of it as it were but for fashions sake; he vseth here three wordes: and afterwards he addeth that it must be done thoroughly, so as there be an exquisite care vsed in the matter. For diuers times, informations are taken when some complaint is made, and that the euill is known, yea and y<sup>e</sup> in suchwise as they be ashamed to cloke it altogether, and so witness be called. But they will not seeke to vnderstand the pith of the matter, they doe but vse a kinde of forme for fashions sake, as who should say y<sup>e</sup> matter is not buried, because there hath bin some seeking to knowe the truth of it. But what? This is no prooffe: that is to say, we will not search how the case stands in deede. For the witnesses are dispatched ere they haue tolde halfe their tales: and that which they haue spoken is let slip, so as wee see not the thing that is as appaunt as the nooneday.

Now to the end that men should not daly after that sort with God; it is sayd expressly that inquisition should be made, that the matter should be examined, and information dewly taken. And therefore let Iustices vnderstand, that they shall not goe quit, but that God will hold them guiltie, for neglecting their ducie, if they do not what they can to bring matters to light, when they heare any complaint or any brute of them. Neuertheless our Lords meaning is not that me should iudge at aladuenture, but that the crime should be duly proued whether it be so of a truth in deede. He vseth two wordes to shew that a Iudge ought not to be led by bare suspition to conclude what hee listeth. For wee must be faine to beare with the euill when it is not known, because God hath not yet brought it to light. As for example, there be some sinnes (sayth S. Paul) which make hast to come to their condemnation; and we see that God doth so thrust and driue some wicked men forward, that they runne a head into mischief.

For sometimes it is Gods will to humble vs by making our offences known, that we may feele them and be sorie at the heart for them. Yea & [ sometimes againe ] a man knowes not at what end to begin, but is letted that he cannot punish, because he findeth no mean how to do it. Therefore a Iudge must be discrete and milde, that he giue not sentence vpo bare coniectures, but that he first of all do see the matter substantially proued. Now then, here are two notable things: the one is that we must not be rechelesse, but diligent in searching out of things, that y<sup>e</sup> euil may be discouered & not nourished. The other is, that we should not iudge rashly, but that the matter should be well known and thoroughly brought to light, before me come to giue definitive sentence of it, so as our iudgement may be ripe & settled.

Now this being so, it is sayde, thou shalt destroy the inhabitants of that Citie with the edge of the sword. Whereby God threateth (as I haue declared already) what affliction wee ought to beare vnto his seruice. For if we consider what a thing his glory is, it ought to be more deere to vs thā all y<sup>e</sup> whole world. What see we either in heauen or on earth but litle sparks of y<sup>e</sup> power, righteou'nes, goodnes & wisdome which are infinite in God? They be not to be measured: we haue but only some litle signes and tokens of them in heauen and earth. Therefore it were better that the worlde should perish ten thousand times, than that Gods glory should be defaced. But it falleth out that his glory is conueyed our vnto ydols, yea & bestowed vpon Satan, when his seruice is corrupted. And therefore it is not for vs to fall asleepe or to coeke ourselues in this case, as we haue bin wont to doe, making sale of Gods honour, and letting it passe as though we seemed to count it as a thing of nothing. But contrariwise we see here how he putteth all citie to destruction, if they haue defaced his honor. So then let vs vnderstand that it is not for vs to rowe any more betweene two streames as we haue bin wont to, if we intend to keepe our religion vnappayred: but we must see that all Churchtreasons, that is to say all outrages that are doone to the maiestie of God, may be punished. Seeing we know and nature teacheth vs that robberies, murtherers, theftes, and all manner of pilfries ought not to be borne with; what shal we do when gods name is blasphemed, all religion turned vpside downe, and the pure doctrine falsified, to thrust folke out of the way and to breake the vnion of faith? Such things are not to be winked at: for they be too heynous crimes.

Yea and it behoueth vs to marke how it is said heere, that if any wicked men be risen up, and haue seduced the inhabitants of a Citie. For it may seme that this circumstance should somewhat abate the fault, foras much as the whole citie went not away of their own accord, but were carried away by certain wicked persons, as in deed a few such firebrandes of hell are ynough to set all things out of order. Yea, but yet are not they to be born with, which haue giuen care to such deceiuers; they must be punished for it neuertheless: yea and y<sup>e</sup> not with stripes of rodde onely, but euen with death. And in deede, how trifling an excuse is it for a man to say, I was vndermined, I would neuer haue done amisse if I had not bin inticed to it, ye may see what ill counsell is. Yea, but yet notwithstanding thou haddest bin taught by the voyce of thy God, thou knewest his will, & wast ascertained of it. Beholde, a man whome thou knewest to be wicked came to seduce thee, and thou gauest more credit to his laudnesse and to thine owne wir, than to y<sup>e</sup> infallible truth of thy God. Thou knowest y<sup>e</sup> thy God speaketh for thy benefite, and thou leauest him, thou giuest him deafe eare, thou art loth to giue him any hearing, thou refusest all that he telleth thee; and is that to be excused? Nay rather, should we not spit in the faces of such men as will needes make a shield of other mens inticementes? Yes: and for that cause doth not God hold a whole Citie excused, when the people of it haue bin deluded by wicked persons. Both great and small (say I) must be punishable: and God is not cruell in punishing them all, as wee see hee hath ordained heere.

Furthermore, let vs marke well y<sup>e</sup> God ment to do vs to vnderstand what it is to haue wicked persons in a citie. For (as saith S. Paul) a litle leuc<sup>1. Cor. 5. 6</sup> foureth a whole lump of dow. Nowe then, where- <sup>& Gal. 5. 9.</sup> fouer deceiuers be, there are the people by & by infected. God speaketh so thereof plainly, to the intent we should not suffer euill to harbor amōg vs. If there be any poysoninges, we are all afraid of them, and it troubleth vs to prouide howe to saue out selues fro them. Or (say we) such a plague must not abide among vs. Now it is certain that there is not a worse nor a more deadly plague, than the stepping vp of vnruely persons, despisers of God, and wicked men, which seeke to turne all things vpside downe, and to bring all to confusion, corrupting all things to the intent to haue the more libertie to doe euill. When such foke rise vp, & be borne withall, it is good reason that all should be gilty of their fault. And we see also that God punisheth those y<sup>e</sup> beare with euill doings when they both should and could correct them: insomuch that the common prouerbe is verified in them, that when a man is saued from the gallous, he could finde in his heart to see the hanged y<sup>e</sup> deliuered him from it. And good reason it is that they should haue such reward, for their corrupting of Iustice, and for their impeaching of right. Therefore when we see men goe about to turne all things vpside downe, we must reprehesse them aforehande: and not tarie till y<sup>e</sup> end, for that is a cursed patience. True it is (as I said afore) that if God giue vs not the meane to rid away euill so soone as we would; then must wee be sory for it & haue patience. But when things are euident, & there is none other let than lacke of courage: then if we be cold and lasie, and shut our eyes because wee be loth to susteine displeasure; [ as if a man shoulde say, ] I will not be too forwarde, least I be left in the byrers, for feare least I pay for the shot when I haue entered into such a quarell, for I see that such fellows are full of reuendge and may easily be euen with mee: when we vse such cowardlyncsse, then must wee abide abide the penaltie of it. And surely it is a great grace of God to haue power to redresse a mischief that hath bin knowne of long afore: and therefore it must not be let slip without prouiding for it in time conuenient.

Moreouer we must heare what a simple thift it is to alledge pite, when men marre all things by giuing cause of offence. For what kinde of pite is it to spare two or three to cut y<sup>e</sup> throtes of a whole nation: On the contrarie part, if they that be so wickedly bent, be repressed that they may no more haue their own swinge, but rather be virely roored out: it is a purging of the whole nation, it is a healing of a common sore. So then if wee loose the welfare of all men, lette vs not giue head after that sort to such as intice men to forsake the right way. But wee must goe backe againe to the matter which I haue spoken of already, and which Moses goeth forward withall still in this text: to wit, that the worst corruption which can befall a nation, is to haue despisers of God that falsifie the true religion, or to haue vpholders of Satan that leade men into superstition and ydolatrie, to abolishe the pure doctrine and the truth which they hadde receiued. True it is that if there bee gluttons, drunkardes, whooremongers, and such other like folke, it is an infection that is wel worthy to be feared, & meet to be redressed out of hande, least the mischief growe too strong: But as for those that put all things out of order, shewing themselves to be bent to spite God, and to make men to yeelde no more reuerence to his maiestie: it is as a gathering of all sinnes together into one heape, and a packing of them vp in one bundle. For there can be nothing pure when Gods seruice is taken away, and when men walke not in his feare, all other things must needs be out of order. For the knowing of God and the worshipping of him as he deserueth, is the verie brydle that holdeth men in all holinesse and honestie. But if men turne their backs vpon him, they must needs play the bestes, and their life must needs become so loose and lothsome, that a man shal see as it were a gulfe of hell among them. And therefore not without cause are we so straitly commaunded in no wise to beare with men, when they become wicked and goe about to inuegle folke to doe seruice to ydolles. Let vs marke then, that if we be desirous to liue as wee ought and in good concord; we must about all things haue Gods seruice in estimation, as the thing wherein it behoueth vs to vse seueritie and rigor, or els all will go to wrecke and confusion. That is the thing which we haue to gather vpon this place: and would to God that it were better in vre now adayes. For as I haue touched heretofore, men are moued at the things that concerne and touch themselves. Inso much that if we perceiue that the suffering of an offence will turne to our harme or losse, euerie of vs cryeth out to haue it punished. And why? Because wee haue no regarde but of our selues. But if GOD his honour bee impeached, that is let slippe, and we say it is not so great an euill. And why? For our purses are not pinched by it: and therefore it seemeth to make no skill at all. Nowe see heere on the contrarie parte, howe GOD punisheth vs as we deserue. For things become so farre out of order among vs, that wee wote not which way to turne vs. And good reason it is that it shoulde come so to passe, euen because we haue forsaken GOD, and become more mindefull of ourselues than of his maiestie, so as we haue not yeelded him his dewe honour whereof hee is worthy, and which hee requirith at our handes. Thus much concerning this text.

And it is sayde, that all that euer is in the Citie must be brought together on a heape, and set on fire, & be taken as a cursed thing, and be made a sacrifice vnto God. Heere Moses sheweth howe hateful a thing ydolatrie is, and consequently what loquer ouerthroweth the true seruice of God and the pure religion: and that is done to moue men so much the more. But if you will say, that when such a fault is committed, the Citie it selfe, the cattell, and the houses are not to be blamed for it. And why then will GOD haue all to be destroyed? It is to the ende that folke shoulde learne to abhorre ydolatrie the more, that we might vnderstand that the wicked folkes whom Satan dryueth to giue themselves to ydolatrie are so little to be boue with, that we must euen abhorre the verie place where they haue dwelled, yea and the verie sight of them, and thinke with ourselues, beholde, this is a place wherein Gods wrath hath bene prouoked, and that was ynough to haue soonke vs all to hell. Wee see then whereat God aimed. For hee knewe that we see nowe with our eyes; namely that we haue not such zeale to maintaine his glorie, as wee ought to haue, we passe not for it, euerie man is occupied about his owne gaine, and about the things that concerne himselfe. Nowe because we be so colde, God on the other side quickneth vs vp, and telleth vs that the corrupting of his seruice is a great misdeede, yea and so horrible a thing, as might make the hayres to stand stiffe vpon our heades. That is one point which wee ought to marke.

And herewithall we haue to marke also, that the rigour of this Lawe, is not to be obserued from point to point as it is commaunded heere to the people of Israell. But yet the substance thereof abideth still in force, as I haue declared heretofore intreating of ydolatrie, where I told you that wee were commaunded to put away all places that haue serued to superstition. Nowe then, we in these dayes be not in such thralldom, but that we may vse a Church that hath bene one of Satans brothelhouses. Ydolles haue bin worshipped heere, and GOD hath bene blasphemed heere: and yet for all that wee be nowe come heere together in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ. This place then is newe dedicated, according to the saying of Saint Paul, that all things are sanctified vnto vs by faith and by calling vpon the name of God. And therefore if a place be put to such vse, that God is honoured there, it is a kinde of hallowing of that place. But vnder the Lawe God helde the people in greater and more flauishe bondage, commanding them to make cleane riddaunce, and vtter dispatch of all things that had bene vsed in the seruice of ydolles. So is it in this text, where G O D commandeth that the whole Citie shall bee rased, and neuer inhabited anie more. And the straintesse of this bonde serued for the time wherein the fathers were gouerned like litle children. But yet doeth the substance thereof abide with vs still: and wee haue to gather of this text, that our Lorde abhorreth ydolatrie about all things; and that if other offences bee to be punished, this is not to be indured in any wife, but that we ought to abhorre it. And because wee be too colde in that behalfe, we be warned to quicken vp our selues, and to take the meanes which wee knowe to be fit for it, to the ende wee may bee the forwarder in cusing God to bee serued purely among vs, and open no gap to deceiuers, ne make any way for superstitions and ydolatrie, that might be reauce vs of the pure trueth and drawe vs vnto lyces. Thus yee see what we haue to remember vpon this text.

But heere a man might aske a question, howe Moses may say that all the things which shalbe soude in such a Citie shalbe accursed; and yet they must bee put ouer vnto God as an offering or sacrifice? Yet doeth G O D speake after that fashion in manie places, and not without cause. For it is an offering of sacrifice vnto him, when we protest that onely he ought to be worshipped, and when we make as it were a solemne homage vnto him. And againe when other appurtenances come in place: as when men sacrificed vnder the Lawe, they protested that they were worthis of death, and yet notwithstanding they had a warrant of their reconciliation vnto God, by the sacrifice that was to be offered. Allo men offered of their goods vnto G O D, as who should say, Lorde, all that I haue commeth of thee, and it is alwayes at thy commaundement. Yee see then that sacrifices were blessed: and yet neuertheless there was a kinde of cursednesse in the sacrifices that were offered for sinne. In the Firstlings, Tenthes, and such other like things, there was nothing but the praising of God and giuing of thanks vnto him: but as for the sacrifice that was offered for sinne, it behoueth Gods curse to be thereupon, as who should say, Loe this is hee that shall aunswere for all. To the ende that men may bee acquit and deliuered from death, this sacrifice must answer for them. And therefore those sacrifices were called sinnes: and the same name is attributed to our Lorde Iesus Christ, because he bare our curse in his person. But heere is an other kinde of cursednesse; namely that G O D is honoured, and homage is doone vnto him by rooting out the things that hadde defaced his honour before. Therefore when a Citie is destroyed that had erst bene a denne of ydolatrie, and all the spoyle thereof is fet on fre: it is a sacrifice that God liketh verie well of. And why so? Because it is a protesting that wee be not willing to suffer any thing that impeacheth the honoring of him at all mens handes, and that all men shoulde submit themselves to him, and his maiestie be knowne as it ought to be. Nowe then we see howe it is not without cause that Moses commanded sacrifice to be done vnto G O D with the vtter destruction of all things that had bene infected and defiled with ydolatrie.

And hee sayeth expressly, to the ende that the wrath of God bee not vpon thee. Whereby he confirmeth the matter that I haue touched already, which is that; we must beware that wee wrap not ourselues in other mens sinnes. For they that correct not euill dooings when they may, and when their office requireth it; are gilty of it themselves. As for example, if a preacher winke at the vices that reigne; surely he is a traitour and vnfaithfull: for he shoulde keepe good watch, and waken such as are in danger of vndoing. Then if I beare with the cull wittingly or through negligence: I am the first that shalbe condemned. Likewise if they that holde the sworde of Iustice, execute not the rigor which they ought to redresse mens misbehaviours: surely the wrath of God is vpon them continually, yea and vpon y whole country, because no man is found, that complaineth of this, that the mischief was so borne withall. One good zealous man is ynough to turne away the wrath of God; for hee will inforce others that were negligent. But when no man beginnes the daunce, but all men drawe backe, and euery man sayes, What nowe? If all the rest pur not to their handes, what can I alone doe? Surely none of them all can exempt themselves from condemnation before God; when euerie one of them speaketh so. Not without cause then doeth Moses heere wrap vp a whole Countrey vnder condemnation, if a wicked deede bee borne with, or not punished when it commeth to knowledge. And hereby we be put in minde, to be more diligent than we are wont to be, in ridding away of all filth and vnclannesse from among vs. For it is all one as if we shoulde lay wood vpon the fire that is kindled ynough [and too much] already, so as we shall all of vs be consumed with it in the end; and yet wee doe so euen wittingly and wilfully. Why then doe wee not open our eyes, sith our Lorde sheweth vs the daunger so euidently, and warneth vs to prouide for it aforehande? Why doe wee not thinke vpon it? Nay, wee be well worthy to perish, and to be vtterly confounded, because wee haue not vouchsafed to receiue the counsell that God hath giuen vs.

After that Moses hath thus threatned vs; now he addeth a promise that God will blesse his people, if they obey his voyce, & doe the things that are right before him. Our Lord inducouring after his manner, to winne vs to him alwayes by gentlenesse and friendly dealing: when hee hath doone threatening of vs in this text, doeth also attempt the contrarie way saying: If ye finde the meanes to haue my seruice purely mainteyned, I will be with you; yee shall finde that my seeking is but to increafe the benefites which I haue begonne already to bestowe vpon you, yee shall inioy the Lande

Land that I haue giuen you to inherite; ye shall perceiue that my promising of my fauour and mercie to your fathers is not in vaine. And let vs marke, that heere it is our Lordes intent to drawe vs to a willing seruing of him. True it is that yet for all this, wee must not forgette his threatenings, seeing we be so slowe in resorting vnto him. Then lette vs be stayde of them, and consider that wee shall not scape his vengeance except we maintaine his seruice. But yet howsoeuer the worlde goe with vs, lette vs not doe it by constant, but let vs goe to worke with a free courage. And howe may that bee doone? Euen by beeing drawn by the gentleness that Moses sheweth heere vnto vs: as if he should say, goe to, happie will our state bee if we serue our G O D, and euery man endeavour to drawe his neighbours with him, and suffer not any man (as ferre as lyeth in vs) to pervert or trouble our state when it is well settled. If we doe so, our Lorde telleth vs that hee will be among vs, blessing vs in such sorte as wee shall prosper more and more, and that he will stablish vs in the possession of all the benefites which he hath giuen vs. Seeing the case standeth so; too too leaue were wee if we would not submitte ourselves to him, seeing that his desiring to haue vs, is altogether for our benefite and welfare. Let vs learne then on the one side to quicken vp our selues with Gods threatenings; but yet on the other side let vs be moued and allured to serue him with a free and pure affection, voyde of inforcement or constraint. Let vs goe to worke of our owne goodwill, assuring our selues that wee be benefite and dispossessed of all good things, if wee serue not our G O D. And why? Because wee can not prosper but by his fauour. And let vs not delude ourselves: if we see that he make vs to prosper this present time, lette vs not fall asleepe, but let vs consider that wee haue neede of the continuance of his benefites and free fauour towards vs. And this is a very needefull warning: for we see howe men take libertie, as soone as they haue any respite. So long as G O D sheweth vs his toddes, or as wee feele his stripes; wee make countenance still to serue him. Yea, but that is but hypocrisie, according to this complaint which the Lord maketh by his prophete. As long as I afflicted them, they turned vnto me; but either the same day or the next morrow they became like themselves againe. Therefore let not vs doe so; but although G O D let vs alone in rest, and wee perceiue no harme at hande; yet let vs looke for it afarre off, and forecast that there will come a suddaine tempest which wee looked not for, if we swaue aside from his seruice. Wee see howe that in summer the wether chaungeth in a minute of an houre: euen to may it fall out in respect of Gods wrath: and therefore let vs not wether in our delights. When God prospereth vs, let vs not fall to frisking as abusers of his goodnesse and patience: but let vs remember howe Moses sayeth, that when he hath giuen vs a Lande to inhabit, he must be faine to maintaine vs in it, and to stablish vs in the posses-

son thereof. For I haue tolde you heere tofore that vnder this worde The Lande of Chanaan, all the benefites that G O D bestowed vpon his people, were comprehended, as all in one particular. Now then, let vs looke to our selues, and if we purpose to continue in the perpetuall inioying of the benefites belonging both to our bodies and to our soules which G O D hath bestowed vpon vs: let vs looke that wee continue stedfastly in the seruing of him, without swaruing one way or other. And moreover lette vs labour that there may be one common accord among vs, and that euery of vs hearten vp his neighbour to doe well, so as we may doe as hath bene declared already, and as we haue seene heere tofore; that is to wit, that it is not for vs to demeane ourselves after our owne imagination and fancie as wee see men doe in beating with themselves, not onely when they doe as ill as may be, but also when they doe their duetic by halues, and yet they beare themselves in hande that they haue doone ynough, and that there is no fault to bee founde in them, G O D can require no more at their hande. And though a man point them to a thing with his finger, as if he should say, This is a generall tute, and wee must not goe to it by halues; but God must haue all that belongeth vnto him, or else hee will accept none of all the things that can be doone: they shut their eyes at it. O, say they) it makes no matter, wee must haue a respect of our infirmirie, we must be well aduised by wisdome and discretion. Yea, but for all that, shall we swaue from that which G O D hath ordeined? Lette men vse as much discretion and gentlenesse as can be: but yet howsoeuer the case stande, let him look wel to it, y Gods honour be not troden vnder foote, and that finnes sinnes be not so bolstered, that any body come to aduance himselfe against the sacred maiestie of him that made vs and fashioned vs, which also maintaineth vs, by whose power wee bee vphelde, and without whose grace we could not continue one minute of an houre. Let this be well considered, and let men doe the things that are right in the eyes of the Lord: for hee will not frame himselfe to our dyer. Imagine our selues to doo things neuer so well, to the contentation of men, yet wil not G O D be contented with them, because hee measureth not himselfe by our weyghtes and balance. He will haue vs to harken to his worde, and to haue an eye to the things y he liketh, so as we may say, Lord, thou shalt haue the governing of vs. Thus yee see what we haue to remember vpon this text, if we entende to eschewe the curse which G O D denouneeth against all such as haue suffered the peruerting of the true Religion and the corrupting of his seruice, and to haue him not onely to blesse vs, but also to increase y benefites which we haue receiued at his hande, and also to continue them towards vs to the ende.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feele the y better, so as we may be able to shewe that his instructing of vs in his worde hath not beene in vaine, but that we may yeelde him such reuerence, as our whole seeking may bee to haue him purely worshipped among vs, and y<sup>e</sup> the same may be done with one accorde, and all stumblingblockes be cutt off frō among vs, so as we suffer not ourselues to be deluded wittingly, nor the ignoraunt to be led to destruction, but that we may looke to the drawing of them backe: and that hauing such zeale to amende other folkes misdeedes, euerie of vs may beginne at himselfe, and not giue our owne flesh such libertie, as that it should turne vs aside and alienate vs from our God, but reine our selues short, fearing his threatens and also in respect of his blessings and promises which hee maketh vs for that it is his will to maintaine vs in his house as his children. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth. &c.

YE be the children of the Lorde your God; Therefore you shal not cut your selues, nor make any shauinges betweene your eyes for the dead.

2 For thou art a holy people to the Lorde thy God. And the Lorde God hath chosē thee from all people that are vpon the face of the earth, to be a peculiar people to himselfe.

3 Thou shalt not eat any manner of lothsome thing.

4 These are the beastes that ye shall eat of: namely, the Oxe, the sheepe, and the Goate:

5 The Red deere, the fallow deere, the Bugle, the wilde Goate, the Vnicorne, the wilde Oxe, the Chamoyse,

6 And all maner of beastes that deuide the hoofe and cliue the hoofe into two clawes and chaweth the eudde also: among the beastes them shall ye eat.

7 But as for these, yee shall not eat: among those that chawe eudde or doe but onely diuide their clawes, that is to wit, the Camell, the Hare and the Cunnie. For inasmuch as they chewe eudde and yet diuide not the hoofe, they shalbe vn-cleane to you.

8 Also the Swine, (because he cliueth the hoofe, and yet cheweth not eudde,) shal be vn-cleane to you. Yee shall not eat of their fleshe, nor touch their dead car-kesses.

9 These are they that you shall eat of all that are in the waters: namely, what-foeuer haue finnes and scales.

10 And whatfoeuer hath not finnes and scales, yee shall not eat thereof, but it shalbe vn-cleane to you.

11 Of all cleane birdes yee shall eat.

12 But these are they of which yee shall not eat: namely the Eagle, the Of-pray, and the Fawcon:

13 The Gleade, the Kite, the Vultur after their kinde:

14 All manner of Rauens after their kinde:

15 The Estrich, the nightcrowe, the Cuckowe, and the Sparehauke after their kinde:

16 The Skritchowe, the great Owle, the Swanne,

17 The Cormorant, the Pellicane, the Dopehicken, 18 The Storke, and the Heronfewe in his kinde, and the Lapwing, and the Backe.

19 And all creeping foules shall be vn-cleane vnto you, and yee shall not eat of them.

20 But of all cleane foules yee may eat.

E haue here two coman dements to expoude, which God gaue vnto his people: The one is that when anie man died among them, they should make no ex-cefiue mourning and lamentation for them in disfigureing their bodies, after the ceremonies and fashions of y<sup>e</sup> heathen. The other concerneth meates: for it was not lawfull for the Iewes to eate of all meates indifferently: there was a difference set them betweene cleane beastes and vnclene beastes. Nowe as touching the first, Moses telleth them; that they be a people chosen of God to bee separated from al other Nations of the world. Wherevpon hee concludeth, that they must not then disfigure themselves: for inasmuch as God had set his marke vpon them; they ought not to do anie wrong or violence to their owne bodies. And therewithall this commaundement is so moderated, that if a man haue forgone any kinsman or friende of his, hee must not lament for him out of measure as wee see men doe, who are wont to be too excefliue in their passions. When a body is deade, we see what forrowng is made for him, yea euen with grudging aganist God, so all is out of order and there is no reason at all in their dealnges. Moses therefore commaundeth the Iewes to be patient, when it pleaseth God to bereaue them of their kinsfolke or friendes. And therewithall he telleth them it is a shame for them to disfigure themselves after the manner of the heathen, for asmuch as it was a defacing of Gods image which was in them because they were made holy from among all the people of the worlde. Nowe as touching the first point, for as much as this in-conuenience reigneth as well nowadayes, as it did at anie time heretofore; that is to wit, that men are too excefliuely giuen to making of sorrow: this is not superfluous for vs. In deede this cerenionie of rending folkes hayre, and offeratching their faces to disfigure themselves is no more vsed: but yet wee see howe God is grudged at in y<sup>e</sup> greefe that men take for y<sup>e</sup> death of their friendes, inasmuch as they martyr them selues without regard of submitting themselves to God. There is no dealing with them to comfort them, they bee caryed with such rage, as God cannot bee hearde, whatsoeuer yee say to them they bee deafe. Nowe then, seeing that this misdealing continueth still at this day, we must vnderstande that this doctrine concerneth vs also.

And here we haue to marke first of all that if the heathen and the vnbeleueers, and the poore ignorant soules which haue not bene trayned in the worde of God were not excused for this vice: wee on our side offende God much more greuously and without all excuse. For he hath separated vs from all the worlde. Yet notwithstanding men may well sooth themselves: for there is not any thing where God tryeth our obedience more, than by the liuing and dying at his pleasure, so as wee knowe that our lues be not in our owne hands, but that it belongeth to him to dispose of them: and euerie of vs is readie to departe out of this worlde, whensoever it pleaseth him to call vs: Or if hee take away our kinsfolke or friendes from vs, we be well contented with it. And indeede, why pray wee daily that his will should be doone, but to protect that we be willing to holde all our afflictions in captiuite, and to keepe them in awe? Such it is for: surely they that vex themselves with immoderate lamenting for the decease of their friendes, are sufficiently conuicted by the onely order of nature, that they strue with God and rebell aganist him. Neuerthelesse, (as I saide afore) if the fillic ignorant soules torment themselves after that fashion, they bee to be pitied. For they knowe not that our dayes are determined, and that God referued the authoritie and priuledge of calling vs vnto him, when hee sent vs into the worlde. They knowe none of all this: and therefore it is no wonder though they vse such excefle in their mourning. Moreouer, they haue not wherewith to comfort themselves: for none of them hath euet had any vnderstanding of the cuerlasting life. To their seeming, if a man be once deade, all is lost, hee is vtterly forlorne, hee is quite and cleane come to nought. And that is the cause why they conceiue so excefliue and vnmeasurab greefe. Other some goe at aduventure: and although they haue some imagination of the endlesse lite, yet are they not assured of the saluation of the parties, and therefore they cannot comfort themselves with the fauour of God. But as for vs, we knowe that death is but a parting of the soule and bodie asunder, to the ende that God may shewe his inestimable power in raising vs againe. And we knowe also that hee is a faithfull keeper of our soules when hee hath receiued them: and therefore that wee may well put them into his hands, assuring our selues that our Lorde Iesus Christ dyed not for vs in vaine.

Seeing wee haue such comfort, is it not too great an vnthankfulnesse to torment our selues after the maner of the heathen and the infidels, when God taketh any man away from vs? Yes: And therefore when Saint Paul exhortheth the faithfull to haue patience in the departure of their friendes, he saith expressly, Sorrow not as the vnbeleueers doe. In deede Saint Paul sawe well that we can not bee senslesse: for in verie deede it were no patience if wee felte no greefe. If wee were starke blockes, it were no vertue at all if a man should laugh at the death of his wife or of his father, it were a beastly brutishnesse. Therefore it behoueth vs to feele the inconuenience and to be touched with it, so as it pinch vs and grieue vs: But yet must God assuage it againe, because we know that he hath all superiouritie ouer our liues, and wee must suffer him to dispose of vs as hee thinkes good. A-gaine we must goe boldly vnto him, being well assured of his goodnes and mercie, and we must not doubt but that death shall bee to our saluation, and that whether we liue or die, al shal without fayle turne to our benefite and welfare so we be in Christ Iesus. Thus yee see what we haue to beare in mind.

To be shorte, that we may benefite ourselues by this lesson of Moses; let vs vnderstand, first of all, that vntill God brydle vs, our affection will euer be inordinate whether it be in mirth or in mourning. If wee haue prosperitie, by and by it makes vs to forget our selues what we be, so as we thinke not our selues to be mortall men. And wee see howe all men fall to flinging as it were in despite of God when they haue their ease and delights. Likewise on the contrarie part, if our Lorde afflict vs whether it be by the death of some kinsman or friende of ours, or by some other aduersitie: we be piteously forlorne, wee cannot measure our grieefe, wee be so ouerwhelmed with sorrowe as is pitifull to beholde, and finally our heart is full of bitterness and poison. Wee see howe a number doe spewe out blasphemies against God. Let vs consider all these vices in our selues, and seeke the remedie of them as it is set vs downe here. Let vs beare in minde (I say) that our Lorde commaundeth all of vs to holde our selues as in captiuitie, that if our nature be faultie in that behalfe, we shoulde not nourishe the euill, but withstand it as much as is possible. This cannot be doone except we vse force in subduing our selues to the obeying of God, and euen streyne our selues to the vertermost. And one of the chiefest sacrifices that

Gal. 5, 21.

God requireth of vs and whereof he liketh best, is that wee consider that wee must not sorrowe out of measure, when we be afflicted, but flie vnto God praying him to giue vs the grace to submitte ourselues wholly to his will: so as if the husbande be bereft of his wife, he may beare it patiently. And why? Because he knoweth it is Gods will to trie his obedience in that behalfe. Let the wife doe the like by her husbande, and let euery body submit themselves to this order of Gods, that wee may be able to say, that like as he hath set vs in the world, so also it is good reason that hee shoulde take vs hence againe, not at our pleasure but at his. For it is not without cause that he hath limited the race of our life, & that it pleaseth him to take away one rather than another. We be mortall before we come vnto this worlde. for a yong babe may die as well in his mothers wombe as after hee is borne. Sith it is so; as soone as God giueth vs discretion, let vs apply our endeouour to vnderstande that death beseegeth vs euerie minute of an houre, and that we must not promise our selues life till the nexte morrowe, nor set any terme to God: for his daylie prolonging of our life is but so much respiting of vs. But howe soeuer we fare, let vs be mindfull of our owne frailtie,

and let the same leade vs to consider that if GOD take vs out of this worlde, sooner than wee looked for, it is meete that he shoulde haue vs at commaundement, and that euerie of vs shoulde offer vp our owne bodies to him in that manner of sacrifice, in suffering GOD to separate vs afunder; that what friendship or bende of kinred soeuer there haue beene betwixt vs, yet wee may not faile to glorifie God when he taketh away our kinsfolke and friends, nor vse this beastly impatience, in pulling our selues by the hayre of our heades, and in scratching and disfiguring of our faces, as though wee knewe not what it were, to liue in the obedience of God, and to die in the same likewise.

And moreouer as well in this as in all other things, let vs take heede to that which is tolde here to the Iewes by Moses: namely that when God is so gracious as to dedicate vs to him selfe, and to gather vs together to bee his people, we must giue our selues so much the more earnestly vnto him. True it is that in respect of nature we differ nothing at all from the fillic ignorant & vnbeleuers. For our being of Christs Church befallerth vs not by the right of inheritance. Indeede the promise extendeth to a thousande generations; but yet for all that, it is of his free goodnesse, that we haue the prerogative to bee of his house. Sith it is so, let vs acknowledge the honour that he doeth vs, in separating vs from the heathen and vnbeleuers though we were forlorne and damned as well as they; and let vs benefite ourselues by that grace, that it perishe not through our owne wickednesse. Thus yee see for what purpose Moses said, Thou art a people schooled out to thy God; haue a care to maintaine thy selfe in thy calling: acknowledge the good that is doone vnto thee, & goe not about to bereaue thy selfe wilfully of such fauour. Let vs thinke vpon it (I say I.) and that in such sort as God may be glorified in vs, according as hee hath vouchsafed to call vs.

And Moses speaking here expressly of God his election or choyce whereby hee had chosen the Iewes, addeth That they must bee a holy people. For God gathereth not the ofskowringes of the worlde to keepe them in his Church; his intent is not to haue his Church to bee as it were a Swine stie, so as there shoulde bee nothing but filth and infection; but hee purgeth vs from all vncleanesse. Nowe then whereas God calleth vs vnto him, it is with condition that we should worshippe and serue him in all purenesse. True it is that hee findeth vs as it were drowned in the depth of all leawdnesse, so as by nature we haue nothing but vtter vncleanesse, and we be altogether so desiled that we be euen loothsome to him: but yet doeth hee purge vs and make vs cleane by his holy spirit, and it behooueth vs to lead a holy conuersation all the time of our life. And so yee see howe hee woulde that men shoulde ratifie their free election, as Saint Peter speaketh of it. And that is a thing which wee haue to make in this saying of Moses: wherevpon wee haue to conclude that it is not lawfull for vs to take example at the vnbele-

uers and such as haue not bene brought vp in Gods school, And it is a verie necessarie doctrine for vs, considering howe we euer shroude ourselues vnder the causes of offence which we see: & if any body giue vs an euil example, we beare our selues in hande that we be excused before G O D, and that such a person is a shelter to vs. But contrariwise Moses telleth vs here, that we must bee a people sanctified vnto G O D, so as if the wretched vnbeleeuers doe play the vnchristies, we must not maruell at it. When we see a fillie blinde soule stumble or stray out of his way, we pitie him because he is in darkenes, but we thinke it no straunge thing. Euen so is it with those that neuer knewe the truth of G O D: they be fillie blinde soules that goe in darkenesse. But G O D enlighteneth vs, and sheweth vs the way of saluation. If we rushe against things, or if we wander out of the way; whence commeth the fault? Are not we our selues to be blamed for it? Yes, and therefore let vs euer beare in minde the greatnesse of the grace which we haue receiued of G O D, that it perseuere not through our owne leawdncie and negligence. And aboute all things, let vs take heede to that which is spoken here concerning the moderating of our sorrow & heauines. And this shall be doone, if wee bee not troubled and grieved out of measure for the death of any of our kinsfolke or friends, or for any other affliction that befallerh vs, but that we suffer God to vse our liues as hee listeth, to dispose of them according to his good will. Thus yee see in effect what we haue to remember vpon the first point that is contained heere.

Nowe as touching the second, Moses saith, that the Iewes must not eate of all manner of meates, but that they must haue a care to discern betweene the cleane beasts and the vnclane. And afterward benameth the beasts, whereof it was lawful for them to eat: & also the feuerall kinds which it was not lawful for them to touch. And to be short, he saith that the beasts which chaw Cud, (that is to say; which keepe in their mouthes y last of their meat, to chaw it againe) are cleane, so as they might eat of them, conditionally that those beasts do also clyue the hoofs. Now, to seeke here for nice points, as what this should meane, that y hooves should be clouen, or that they should chawe the cud; were no matter to be greatly stooode vpon. And as for them that haue pried into the matter to fetch the new & the old Testament out of y beausts cleauing of their hooues, & haue told vs y we must needs put a difference betwixt them; & moreover, that we must chew our cud, y is to say seeke vpon the doctrine againe and againe, that we may the better digest it, because it is y foode of our soules: it is too too curious. For if it bee so, what do the scales of the fishes betoken? There will be occasion of seeking euerywhere, and we shall fall into many fond speculations. And therefore let vs be aduised to vse modestie in this case. Some hold opinion that God had no further respect but to the health of mens bodies, when he forbode the eating of such beasts as he tearmeth vnclane, & they thinke that God plaide y part of a Phisition. But that is too colde & too barren stuffe, & the scripture sheweth vs the contrarie. In deed a man may wel thinke that our Lord had regard what was good and euonient for mens bodies: but to thinke that he had a further consideration, than to spy out what meates were best for mans health; that is too childish a matter. And (as I said afore) it is no matter for vs to feare vpon, seeing the holy Ghost hath told vs plainly, that god aimed at a far other end. Let vs mark wel then, that this commaundement is no such order as is wont to be prescribed by a phisition for the preseruacion of a mans health: but a ceremoniall lawe that serued for Gods people in the time of the lawe, to holde them in obedience and to leade them vp higher and higher to the cleanness of the munde: for it was Gods will that the Iewes shoulde alwayes haue as it were lookingglasses before their eyes, to make them see that they ought not haue to doe with the defilements of the world, but to apply their whole indeuour to keepe themselves in such wise as god might be glorified in th. That is the first point, which we haue to marke. For when the Apostles treated of meates, they alleadge not that G O D meant to do the office of a Phisition. And that is a very short solution. When S. Paul declareth y the false Apostles and coueners troubled the Church, going about to holde men in bondage to the o'de lawe; he sheweth that this difference of meates was a part of that childish doctrine, vnder the which G O D led the people of olde time, because there was more rudenesse, and infirmite at that time than there is now: dayes. Not that we be better, or stronger in faith, or that we be any perfecter in our selues than they were: but because that God hath set vs further forward, by giuing vs the doctrine of the gospel. For the lawe was as an Aspie in comparison of y doctrine that is preached vnto vs at this day. It is not to be maruelled then though there were many Ceremonies for that people, and that we haue not those Ceremonies in vse nowdaies, which serued but onely for that time. If a man replie then and say, that the preaching of th vnto vs is more than needeth: wee see the contrarie. For although the figures be past & vtterly abolished by the coming of our Lorde Iesus Christ: Yet doeth the substance of them continue still with vs, so as it behouerh vs to knowe still for what purpose God would haue y Iewes forbear the meates that are forbidden th here. Seeing then that the same reason and force remaineth common to vs which serued for them, it is not vnprofitable for vs to haue y same things shewed vnto vs. Moreover although the Sunne doe driue away all darkenesse with his light; yet is it not vnexpedient for vs to thinke vpon the night in the daytime, and vpon that wonderfull order which God hath established, fish that in winter we thinke vpon sommer, and in sommer thinke vpon winter. For we see how God setteth forth his wisdom therein. And if there were no such varietie, we shoulde haue no such occasion to wonder thereat and to glorifie our God. Again, on the other side, wee be assured of the grace that is brought vs by our Lord Iesus Christ for we be preferred before the holy fathers and Patriarkes which were worthy to haue bene preferred than wee, and yet notwithstanding God kept them vnder like litle children, whereas nowadayes hee dealeth with vs as with perfect men of full age and growth. Seeing then that God vsesh such goodnesse and liberalitie towards vs: haue we not the more cause to honour him?

But nowe let vs come backe againe to the matter which I was in hand with afore, and shew yet further howe all the saide things may redounde to the benefiting and profiting of vs, as well in faith as in the feare of God. I haue tolde you already, that whereas God did put a difference betwene beasts, declaring some to be cleane and some vnclane, it was to accustometh the Iewes vnto the spirituall cleanness, euen in eating and drinking. True it is that God inioyned them sobernesse and temperance therein: but he had yet a further respect, which was that in all things they shoulde haue a care to be vn-defiled, and to haue such a stay of themselves, as they might not bee steyned with the vnclannesse of the worlde. Gods intent then was to giue them as it were a kinde of exercise, to keepe them the better in vre. We knowe howe men do take too large scope in eating and drinking. For whereas the rest of their life doth put them in minde to pray vnto God, and to take paines, and to discharge themselves of their dutie: when they take their repast, they giue them selves to mirth and reioycing. And it is lawfull for them so to doe, so they keepe measure. But what? They so overshoot themselves in the turning of a hande as a man might wonder to see their excess of mirth. This was the cause y God woulde haue his people put in mind of the sobernesse which we ought to vse in our eating and drinking all our life long, that it might be as a bridle to restrain vs, for after as our diseases bee, to doeth God giue vs medicines for them. Now (as I saide afore) there is more disorder in eating and drinking, than in all our life besides. And therefore it was requisite that our Lorde shoulde exercise his people in that behalfe. And for the same cause did he deliuer them instructions, to warne them that they ought to behaue themselves purely in all things, and to put them alwayes in minde thereof. Ye see then that the first point which wee haue to remember vpon this text, is that God telleth the Iewes that forasmuch as hee had chosen them to be his owne inheritance, they ought to dedicate themselves to him: euen in things that concerne the outward conuersation, and to abstine from worldly corruptions, not intermedling themselves with the vices of the heathen after our common maner which we knowe to bee alwayes tending vnto euill. Gods will was to holde them in that awe. And nowe wee see howe it is no more than needeth. For why? True it is that the ceremonie continueth not nowadaies: for our lord Iesus Christ hath set vs in greater libertie than the fathers were vnder the law: but yet is not the pitch of it put away, that is to wit, that we shoulde liue soberly vnder the feare of our God, cutting off all corruptions, and abridging our selves of all libertie of hauing to doe with the lustes of the worlde. What though the vnbeleueers doe beare with themselves too much? should we doe so too? Seeing that our Lord telleth vs that wee be his temples, so as he dwelleth in vs by his holy spirit, and that he woulde haue vs to be as sacrifices vnto him, so as wee shoulde offer vp both our soules and bodies vnto him dayly: is it lawfull for vs to cast our selves into the vnclannesse of the worlde, without any regard how to repress it? Then let vs mark well that although the ceremonie be no longer in vre, yet the lawe in it selfe is not doone away, but that God inioyneth vs the same sobrietie at this day, whereto hee meant to leade the people of olde time by the means that were agreeable to that time. Againe sith wee see what priuledge God giueth vs; let the same moue vs the more to yeelde our selves freely vnto him. If we compare our selves with the fathers of olde time, we shall finde that God led them but as yong babes and yet were they as Angels among mortall me. If we look vpon the life of Abraham, what a perfection of holmesse shall we finde there? As much is to be saide of the rest of the Patriarkes and Prophetes: and yet: surthelesse, yee see howe God held them in darknesse, giuing them but a small tast of his grace, inso much that his shewing of Iesus Christ vnto them, was but a far off. But we in these dayes haue much further preheminnence: for God sheweth himselfe fully vnto vs, and we haue the spirit of adoption, whereby we may erie with full mouth, that God is our father, euen wee that come of the heathen, and had no acquaintance with God, but were vtterly vnclane, and ( to be short ) were by nature cursed, & had none other heritage than death and damnation. Nowe then is it not an inestimable priuledge, that God hath brought vs so neere to himselfe: What is to be doone then? Seeing that God allureth vs more freely than hee did y fathers, let vs be the more earnestly minded to serue him. Hee dischargeth vs of the burthen as concerning the shadowes and figures: what is to be doone therefore? We must haue this willingness of giuing our selves to y spiritual sobrietie which he requireth continually now stil as well as he required it then. Therefore let euery man bethinke himselfe, and inasmuch as God giueth vs leaue to eate of all manner of meates freely without exception, (that is to say, of all such as may serue for our sustenance: ) let vs haue this consideration with our selves, Alas my God, yett must I not abuse thy goodnes. How manie waies doest thou shewe thy selfe liberall to me? Therefore doeth it become me to bidle my selfe of mine owne accorde and to cut off all the wicked affectiones that reigne in me.

And first of all let vs put the doctrine in vre which Saint Paul fetreth downe in the thirteenth to the Romanes, which is, that wee bee not carefull for our fleshe, at leastwise to fulfill the lustes thereof ( for that is a gulf that can neuer neuer be filled) but onely looke to the sustenting of our bodies, so farre fourth as they may be maintained in good plight, & so vse Gods creatures, as wee defile them not. For although Gods creatures are permitted vnto vs; yet doe we not cease to defile them by our vnbeleefe, intemperance, gluttonie, or other abuses which we commit. G O D sheweth that as now we may eat both of the Hare and of the Connie, as well as of the sheepe or of the Goate. Yet notwithstanding if wee glut our selues with them, the meate that is cleane of it selfe becommeth vn-cleane vnto vs, because we be vnthankedfull to G O D, in that we consider not to what end he giueth vs sustenance. One man russeth fourth into all excesse, and yet is neuer the more mainreined in strength of bodie by it: for he is ready to burst, and maketh himselfe altogether vnweeldie. A drunkarde playeth the Swine or some other brute beaste, and the wine so our-commeth him, that he hath neither wit nor reason. And although wine be a creature that God hath blessed, and haue no vnclannesse at all in it selfe: yet is it defiled by such misusing of it. Other some neuer remember to giue G O D thanks, nor to call vpon his name. And that is another kind of defiling our foode. Againe other some abuse it to vaineglorie and deliciou-nesse, and growe so farre out of order, that they can no skill to serue G O D. Other some are so giuen to dancie fare, that it maketh them to put their consciences in ieperdie, in so much that they will not stick to make them bondslaves to all leawdnesse and wickednesse, so they may haue good cheere. Other some are afraid of want, and fall to snatching, to filching, to catching, and to all that can be deuised, to get some-what by hooke or by crooke. And thus doe all of vs defile Gods creatures, which of themselves are cleane. And that is the cause why I saide, that sith our Lorde hath giuen vs greater priu-ledge, and set vs more at libertie, to the end that the bondage of the lawe shoulde not haue dominion ouer vs; therefore wee ought to be the willinger to restraine ourselues in abstaining from all vnclannesse, and to consider that the cause why God hath giuen vs the free vse of all kinde of meates, is that wee shoulde vse them purely, and not be defiled on our side, so as we might not be blamed for defiling of the things which haue no manner of vnclannesse in them selues, in respect of God and in respect of the order that hee hath set among vs. And we must haue this regarde not onely in respect of meate and drinke, but also in respect of our whole life in general. Considering then that God nurtured the people of old time, by forbidding cer-taine meates, to the end that they shoulde thinke thus with themselves; well then, seeing that our God hath forbidden vs the things that are lawfull for the heathen, and which they take leaue to doe; let vs vnderstande that it behooueth vs to liue in all manner of purenesse, and that seeing God will haue vs to be pure in smal things, hee will much rather haue vs to be so in great things. Let vs nowadayes consider to what purpose this ceremonie of the lawe may serue vs, to the end that euerie of vs may enter into himselfe. As for exam-ple, if a man be led with ambition, so as hee wil needes aduance himselfe and clymbe too high: or if he be caried away with couctouynesse, so as he burne therewith; or if hee be an vnchrit and leade a lawlesse life: or if hee be a whorehunter and giuen to beastly lust: let vs bethinke our-selues thus: howe nowe? Our Lorde abhorreth euerie little vnclannesse euen in eating and drinking: and what will come of it then if our soules be defiled, sith they be the things where-in he will haue his glorie to shine most cheefely? True it is that our bodies also are the Tem-ples of the holy Ghost: but yet hath God set his owne image in our soules: and what a thing were it then to defile them after that sort with all diu-elishe and worldly vnclannesse? Thus ye see whereunto it behooueth vs to applie this do-ctrine to vse it well.

And by the way let vs marke, that Gods will was to holde the people of olde time in obedi-ence that they might knowe howe it is not for men to take such libertie and licence as they list, but that they must receiue it at his hande. To bee short, let vs not attempte any thing in al our whole life, except wee knowe it to be ac-ceptable to our God. When wee haue leaue of him, then may we well goe forward: but if hee say it not, then let vs be still. And indeede al-though this prohibition were not put in writing; yet had God put a difference afore betweene cleane beastes and vnclane beastes, as we may easily perceiue by that which is written of Noe. God commaunded him to make sacrifice after the fludde. And whereof? Was it of all beastes ingeneral? No: Neither had hee referred vs to great a number of the vnclane beastes as of the cleane, and that was by reason of sacrificing. Then was there a difference alreadie euen at that time. And whereof proceeded that? Had men deuised it of their owne braine? No. And therefore let vs marke howe God referred to himselfe the prerogative of putting difference betweene the beastes that were cleane and the beastes that were vnclane, to the intent that men shoulde know that it is not for them to liue as they list, & to haue y<sup>e</sup> bridle loose in all things; but that it behooueth them to looke vpwarde to harken what God giueth them leaue to do. And when he giueth them leaue; then let them vse their libertie, or else let them keepe themselves still. Ye see here a doctrine that is as profitable as that which we haue touched alreadie: for wee see howe men burst fourth into such disorder, & with so great headinesse, that they haue no mind at all to vse Gods benefites according to his meaning. Ye shall not finde one among a thou-sande that will consider with him selfe whether God giueth him leaue to doe a thing or no. But men rushe out into all disorder, as though they had leaue to doe what they list. Nowe then see-ing wee be so leawde and vnkinde that wee fall to thrusting our groynes into things like swine, and consider not from whence the benefites come good cause haue we to remember this doctrine, wherein it is shewed vs that euen from y<sup>e</sup> beginning of the worlde, G O D did put a difference betweene the cleane beastes and the vncleane. And let vs vnderstande, that although the ceremonie continue not any longer nowadayes; Yet notwithstanding the same ought to serue vs for a warning, to lift vp our mindes on high in our eating and drinking and in our vsing of all the rest of Gods creatures, that wee may know howe farre God hath giuen vs leaue, and simply submit our selues thereunto.

1, Cor. 6, 19.
& Eph. 3, 23

Gen. 8, 10.

Again, if he giue vs libertie, let it alwayes prouoke vs to glorifie his name & to giue him thanks: for it is one of the sacrifices which he requireth of vs, that wee shoulde doe him homage for all his benefites as holding them from him. But that cannot be done, except wee bee first put in minde that we cannot so much as cate one bit of breade, without it be giuen vs from aboue, not onely for that he hath created all things, but also for that it behoueth vs to receiue all things as at his hande. Therefore whensoever we eat or drinke, we must not onely call to minde that God hath created all things for mans vse; but also that hee feedeth vs, as a father that cutteth our meate to his little children, fo as our hauing of things is as it were by his deliuerance, as if he should say to vs, I doe the office of a father, I haue a care to nourish you. If wee knowe not this, it is vnpossible for vs to thanke God hartily and vnfaignedly. True it is that euen they that haue no such thought will say grace; but that is but for fashion sake and in way of hypocrisie. Will wee then magnifie Gods goodnesse truly: then must we bee tully resolued, not onely that God hath created all things for mans vse: but also that he stil sheweth himselfe a father, and giueth vs assurance that he will susteyne our bodies, and maintaine vs in this transitorie life. Sith it is so, is it not an encouragement vnto vs to yeeld him the thanks as he deserueth? Yes: For it is not without cause that hee listeth to put a difference betweene the ceremonies of the Lawe, and the things that we haue at this day. But although this prohibition was done away by the coming of our Lorde Iesus Christ; yet cease wee not to come backe still to this point, that forasmuch as our Lord Iesus Christ giueth vs leaue to vse all his creatures indifferently, we must vse them in such wise as he may be glorified by them, fo as wee referre all to him, and take all as at his hande.

And herewithall we see what priuiledge wee haue, in that we may quietly and with safe conscience cate the things that God giueth vs. For as for the wretched papists, which behaue themselves after the maner of the worlde, in forbearing certaine meates that are forbidden them, whereas they think themselves to serue God in making but small meales vpon some certayne dayes, and absteyning from egges and whytmeates on some other dayes; and beare themselves in hand that their fo doing is great deuotion, and that God is greatly bound to them for it, and yet in y<sup>e</sup> meane while suffer themselves to be led like filie beastes by the tyrannic of men: in what case are they before God? They can not eat one bitte of breade without doubting, because they knowe not who it is that giueth it to them. But sith we see that our Lorde hath set vs at libertie, so as we may vse all manner of meates with thanksgiving: let vs consider that it is such a priuiledge as cannot be esteemed sufficiently: and therefore let vs acknowldege it in our eating and drinking. Sith we perceiue y<sup>e</sup> God hath such a care of vs, as to stoope so lowe, as to be chary of our food: [let vs assure our selues y<sup>e</sup>] although our bodies be but carions; yet notwithstanding God wil giue them sustenance to maintaine them. Seeing wee haue such a certieintie & knowledge (which cannot be without faith,) that is to wit that we be sure what God hath graunted vnto vs: we ought greatly to magnifie his grace, and therewithall to vse all his creatures with such sobrietie, as we may yeeld him good account of them at the last day, & glorifie him in al pointes as long as he kepeth vs in this world.

Now let vs kneele downe before y<sup>e</sup> maiestie of our good god wth acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feeble them better than we haue done, by touching vs to the quicke, so as we acknowledging him to bee the authour of all good things, may learne to seeke him in all our life, and cleaue wholly to his will: and that for the bringing thereof to passe, it may please him to graunt vs the grace to forsake all our corruptions, and to fence vs so from the wiles and subtleties of satan and the world, as nothing may keepe vs from being truly vnited to him that is the fountaine both of life, of ioye, and of all happinesse. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

On Wednesday the xxiiij. of October. 1555.

21 Ye shal not eat of anie dead bodie, but thou shalt giue it to the Straunger that is within thy gates, that he may eat it: or else thou shalt sell it to a straunger: For thou art a holy people to the Lord thy God. Thou shalt not seech a kidde in his dammes milke.

22 Thou shalt giue the tenth of all the increase of thy feede which groweth yeerely on thy Land:

23 And in the place which the Lorde thy GOD will choose to put his name in, thou shalt eate before him the tythe of thy grayne, and of thy wine, and of thine oyle, and the first borne of thy kine, and of thy sheepe, that thou maist learne to feare the Lord thy God alwayes.

Yesterday I told you the cause why God forbade the people of olde time to eate of some certayne kindes of meats. For in as much as we be fed & sustained by his hand, it is good reason we should vse his creatures purely, and that we should haue leaue of him, so as euery man take not leaue to doe what he listeth, but what Gods word permittech vs to doe. Therewall I shewed also, y<sup>e</sup> although the ceremonie be no more vsed nowadays, nor we any more bound thereto as the fathers of old time were which lued vnder the law: yet notwithstanding the doctrine thereof ceaseth not to be profitable for vs. And hereby we be doone to vnderstand, that it is not lawfull for vs to eate or drinke without faith, (as S.

Rom. 14. 23.)

Paul speaketh of it in the xiiiij. to the Romanes) that is to say, vnlesse we be sure that God giueth vs the things which we receiue for our sustenance, as if a father should feede his children. On the other side, wee haue farre greater libertie nowadays, than was vnder the Lawe. Wee see how liberall GOD is towards vs: and wee haue the more cause to yeeld him thanks. Morcouer the thing that was set downe in figures to the Iewes in olde tyme, is vttered as nowe vnto vs without figure: that is to say, that in all cases & all respects we must bridle our selues, so as we medle not wth the defilements of y<sup>e</sup> vnbeleeuers, but separate our selues from them, seeing y<sup>e</sup> Lord hath gathered vs into his flock and sheepfold. And this figure of the olde time, is a warning for vs nowadays. For although we be no more bound to the keeping of it; yet notwithstanding it ought to moue vs y<sup>e</sup> more to serue our god purely, sith we see he hath giuen vs a greater priuiledge than he gaue to y<sup>e</sup> Patriarkes & Prophets. After y<sup>e</sup> self same manner it is wth the things y<sup>e</sup> Moses addeth here. For yesterday he treated of the meats y<sup>e</sup> were foule and vnleane in those dayes. And hee sorted them into their severall kindes. You shal care of such beastes, sayd he: but in any wise beware y<sup>e</sup> ye touch no swine, nor any such like things. Nowe he treateth of strangled meats, as of flesh y<sup>e</sup> dieth alone w<sup>out</sup> killing, and w<sup>out</sup> letting of it blood. And no doubt but y<sup>e</sup> his setting downe of this, is to shew that in so doing there is a double abhominacion according to y<sup>e</sup> lawe. For first & foremost when a beast died so alone of it self, it was vnholly aforehand, & the very only touching of it was able to make a man vnleane. And y<sup>e</sup> was the cause why God did so forbid his people to eate thereof. Again, the blood of it was letled in it, & we haue scened already how it was not lawfull for y<sup>e</sup> Iewes to eate blood, & that was because y<sup>e</sup> in the blood wee haue as it were a liuely image of y<sup>e</sup> soule & of the life: & Gods meaning was to teach his people to abstaine frō all crueltie. And hereof we haue y<sup>e</sup> reason expressed in Genesis, at such time as Noe and his offspring

Gen. 9. 4. 6.

were forbidden to eate blood; where it is added y<sup>e</sup> we must spare men, because a man is image of God, & whosoever doeth any outrage vnto him, shal not scape unpunished. Now then, Gods care was not for the beastes when he forbade y<sup>e</sup> Iewes y<sup>e</sup> eating of their blood: but his intent was to teach them by y<sup>e</sup> meanes to abstaine from all crueltie, so as they should be loth to do any outrage, and specially any murder. But as for vs in these days we be not in such bondage. For our Lord Iesus

Col. 2. 14.

Christ hath freed vs by his death and passion. Neuertheless, howsoever we fare, y<sup>e</sup> groundwork abideth still, so as a man may forbid a little child to handle a knife, lest he should hurt himselfe wth it: and yet an elder body also is to be forefended from hurting of himselfe, whereas yet notwithstanding, the handling of a knife were not lawful for a child but in respect aforesaid. And therefore God who took y<sup>e</sup> Iewes as little children, forbade the streightly the things y<sup>e</sup> are permitted vs at this day. Howbeit, the final end is all one both to them & vs: inso much that we must consider, that if Gods wil was to haue the Iewes kindharted, & to know y<sup>e</sup> the shedding of blood is a detestable thing: the same ought also to be regarded of vs at this day, although the figure thereof be abolished. True it is (as we read in y<sup>e</sup> xv. of the Actes) y<sup>e</sup> the Apostles forbade y<sup>e</sup> Gentils to eate blood or any thing that is strangled: but y<sup>e</sup> was not for any sin y<sup>e</sup> was in so doing. It was to auoide occasion of offence, because (as it is there alleaged) Moses was read openly, & the law was published abroad in all Cities, so as they heard it there forbidden. The Iewes could not abide at y<sup>e</sup> first, to see them eate blood, which named themselves Christians: for y<sup>e</sup> was a lothsome thing to them. Therefore men were faine for a time to forbear y<sup>e</sup> libertie that

Gal. 4. 11

Act. 15. 20.

1 Cor. 6. 1 a

God giueth nowadays to all the faithful, accordingly as S. Paul speaketh thereof, saying that the things which are lawfull for vs are not alwayes expedient: for they edifie not. We haue in dede our consciences free before God: but yet if I see my brother offended, it behoueth me to beare wth him, if his so doing be through infirmite, and in any wise I must haue a consideration, whether a man be already thoroughly instructed in the faith or no. The intent of the Apostles then was not to make a grounded law wherewith to tie mens consciences, & to hold the in bondage: but only to auoide al occasion of causing folk to stumble. But this hath bin ill marked of a great sort of ignorant persons. For they haue thought it to bee deadly sinne to eate y<sup>e</sup> blood of any beast, as wee see it maintained still at this day: and that was a foolish & beastly superstition. For (as I said afore) our Lord Iesus Christ hath cancelled the obligation of the Lawe of Moses, so as we be no more bound vnto it. But yet for all that, it behooueth vs to liue in concord one with another, and to haue a regarde what our neighbours are able to beare. There is not the like reason for vs noweadayes for forbear the eating of fleshe vpon frydayes: for it is a meere deuotion, and it was forged and inuented without any likelyhoode of reason, yea and it was matched with a kinde of Idolatrie, for as much as the Papiſtes haue furnished themselves to serue God by that meanes in forbearing to eat fleshe vpon certaine daies, which was too grosse a folly. Neuerthelesse, if a christenman should come among the Papiſtes, and goe about to teache them that are yet altogether blinded, the point y he should begin at, must not bee the eating of flesh vpon frydayes, for that would feare them quite away; bicause they neuer heard that it is lawfull to do it, and therfore could neuer conceiue the truth of it, and besides that they should see him goe about to breake a law which they take to be most holy, without informing them of the true meaning of the whole. Such dealing therefore should be contrary to Gods meaning, and to Christen liberty. And therefore order and measure are to be obserued in those cases. But by the way, let vs remember that wee haue cause to giue thanks to our God, for exempting vs from y bondage that our fathers were subiect vnder the law: & that we must also benefite our selues by those figures, by learning to liue friendly with our neighbors, abhorring all murders and outrages, not onely actual murders but also hatred, which is likewise condemned for murder before God, though it be neuer so secret and close kept, as saith S. Iohn. That is the thing which we haue to note when it is layd vnto vs that God vtrereth his will without any shadow, and not in darke speecies as he did to the fathers, but as one that speaketh with open mouth: and therefore let vs hold our selues contented therewith.

Now after this commaundement, Moses addeth that we must not seeth a Kidde in his dammes Milke: but woordes for woordes, it is but in Milke. It hath bene commonly vnderstoode, that a man should not seeth a Kid in his dammes milke, or make sawce with Goates milke to eate Kidde fleshe withall. And therupon, the Iewes (who will needes bee alwayes adding of somewhat to the pure worde of God) haue made a Lawe that it shoulde not bee lawfull for a man to eate cheefe made of Goates milke after he had eaten kidde fleshe, vntill he had first well scoured and washed his teeth, for to their seeming, that would haue bin a defiling of the man. But when all things are wel considered, the meaning of this text is y men should not rost a kid as soone as he were new yeaned, but y they should let it sicke for a time, y it might be flesh meete to bee eaten. And this was doone to the ende that folke should not inure themselves so much to the following of their owne appetites, as to fall into any beastly cruelitie: for from the one, men come to the other. Let vs alwayes beare in minde howe it was declared yesterday, that GOD was well willing to giue his people leaue to eate of all maner of good & convenient meates, saying that he meant to holde them in awe for the trial of their obedience, and yet notwithstanding ment not onely to let them downe some order of diet or fare like a Phisition. For it were too grosse an imagination to thinke that God prouided but onely for the diseases of his people, as though all his Ceremonies had tended but to the feeding of their bodies. For the putting hereof among the olde figures and shadowes was not for nought. Then let vs conclude that God had a further regate when he forbad the eating of a kidde in his dammes milke. And in deede we see how in another place hee forbiddeth men to catch an olde birde sitting vpon her yong ones, for it is a kind of cruelitie. If a man finde a nest of Partridges or other birdes, and catch the dam sitting vpon the yong; God condemneth it, that is to say, he condemneth it in olde tyme in the Lawe among the Ceremonies. And why so? Bicause it is against nature, For wee see howe the seely birdes are so carefull for their yong, that the damme will rather starue than forsake them. Whereby wee bee put in minde to doe the like. Seeing then that the seelic birds, to discharge their naturall duetie, doe forget themselves so farre that they passe not what miserie they indure, nor what care they take for the cheering of their yong ones, in so much as they suffer themselves to bee taken with hand, and yeld themselves as it were into bondage for them: were it not an acte of extreme cruelitie for a man to goe kill them? Good cause therefore had God to forbid it, to shewe that men ought not to passe their bounds, and take leaue to doe what they list, but to restraine themselves to some kind of humanitie. And so whereas in this text God forbiddeth men to eate a kid in his dammes milke: it is as much to say, as men ought not to deuour a yong beast as soone as it is come into y world, vntill it haue sucked a time: neither can the flesh of it be kindly and good to eate. Nay, moreover it imposeth a kind of barbarous ouerfiercenes, when me are so greedie y they will needes take the beasties at the first fal of them, and not tarie till they may come to their full season to be eaten, as some haue bin seene to be so beastly, y they haue ripped y dammes bellies to take out the yong ones. It hath bene seene that a glutton hath not bin contented with the creatures which God hath brought forth into the world, but he must also goe rip vp a Hinde to haue the Calf for the satisfying of his appetite. It is sayd that the earth is full of infinite riches, and y god hath powred out such treasures as are able to amase vs: & yet for al y we see howe some man will play the detestable monster. Whē he hath pāpered his belly with ordinarie foode, he falls to deuising I wote not what: in so much y if it were possible he would create a new world, to feede his paunch wal. And although he be not able to make a flie, yet fallett he to imagining, I will wil go slit a Hinde or a Doe, and take out y vntimely fruit out of her belly to feed vpon. And is not y too great a wickednesse? No doubt but that such desires haue beene in all ages; but behold, God telleth vs that we must vse such temperance and sobernesse in our dyet, as wee may alwayes haue a regard to the mainteining of humanitie. Wee must prescribe a rule our selues, and our eating and drinking must not bee so barbarous, that it should be a meane to harden our hartes & make vs to forgoe all humanitie, which is a thing diuers times quite forgotten; but that we should liue together in good quietnes, & abstaine from all iniurie and euill dealing.

And as touching the Ceremony wherof I am to speake, which the Iewes obserue and wherof they haue made a very sollemne law: we see thereby how the world will needes pay God alwayes with petie trifles. And y is it from whence such superstition is come. It is all one with that which we haue seene heretofore, where God forbid his people to disgrace themselves at the death of any of their friends. But the Iewes considering not to what end such prohibition was set downe; obserued it according to the letter. Well then, they must not disgrace themselves: but yet they had not an eye to gods meaning, which is y men overshoot themselves too far in making too much sorrowe at y deceasse of their friends, tormenting themselves wout measure, blaspheming the name of God, and fretting inwardly. And therefore God intended to repress such corruption. Yea and as though mens sins prouoked not Gods wrath sufficiently of themselves: they thinke it not ynough to be impatient, but they do also prouoke themselves to it still more & more. For we see there is no measure in mens sorrowing, but they inforce themselves to weepe, and doe many other things to increase their greefe and ieiounesse, kindling the fire still more and more, which is great ynough already of it selfe. After the same maner deale they in all other things. But what doe the Iewes still in this behalfe? They may not disgrace themselves: but in the meane while they rend their garmentes. And so the meaning of the Lawmaker, which was simple, is defeated. For to their seeming, when a friend of theirs is dead, they must not be without sorrowe for him, for that were a dishonouring of him, and therefore they must rend their garmentes for him. And besides that, they must make such Countenances, and such Ceremonies, so as they must not eate that day in their owne houses, but spend that day abroad in mourning, and in doinge this and that. When they haue finished a hundred pelting toys, they beare the nicelues in hand that they haue well pacified God; and yet notwithstanding that they may dispute him all their life long. And heerein we see as in a looking glasse, how greatly our nature is inclined to superstition; and secondly that alwayes we will needes haue ceremonies to content God withall, and to discharge our dewties towards him. Our nature (I say) is so bent to superstition, that if God forbid a thing, in deede we dare not doe it with intent to resist him, but wee seeke some other byway, so as GOD shall bee disappointed, and neuer haue the thing that hee demaundeth. As for example, the Christians which beare that name, take not vpon them the very superstitions of y Idolaters as they terme them; but yet they followe the selfe same in deede with a little disguising of them, and so they beare themselves in hande that god spies them not at all. The Idolaters carryed bread and drinke to the graues of the dead, bearing themselves in hand that the soules were fed therewith; and they carryed thither lightes to the intent to glad them. Nowe the Papistes haue thought this to be too great an absurditie. But what for that? They offer vp bread, & wine, and candles, and monie at their Masses; and the soules departed (say they) shall finde releefe by it. Verily if it bee replyed that the superstition of the Papistes is not all one with the superstition of the heathen: in deede there is some difference betwixt them. But to what ende do they so, but to content GOD with some newe exchange? For (as I sayde) it is a thing rooted in mans nature. And wee ought to marke it well: for we woulde soone fall into it, if we were not restrayned by Gods woorde, as by a short and rough bydle. And all commeth from out of this spring, that we will not serue GOD as he requireth, but by a sorte of Ceremonies I wote not what. And when we haue once made some shewe of deuotion; we beare our selues in hand that he is well appeased, and that he ought not to prouide vs any further. And thus ye see that the cause why men in all ages haue toyled themselves to much in the seruing of God, and haue inuened so many trifling things: is that they will needes paye him in such coyne, bicause they were loath to deale vprightly and faithfully with him. God requireth our hearts: & if he possesse not them, 1. Sam. 16. 7 al the rest is nothing worth. Now we bee full of hypocritise, and wee bee not willing to discouer our backnookes which are full of dissimulation, malice, and rebellion, but would alwayes keepe them still to our selues. And yet in the meane season wee pretend a maruelous holyntesse: with our eyes, our feete, and our hands. Therefore let vs learne that this mischeefe hath reigned in all ages, to the intent we may rid our selues of it; and let vs assure our selues that God will not be serued at our handes by outward Ceremonies. True it is that all our whole life ought to beare witness that the feare of him is well rooted in our hartes. Faith is a dead thing if it vtter nocht James 2. 17 selfe by good fruites. Moreouer if we intend to haue our seruice accepted of God, let vs assure our selues that we must begin at the foundnesse of hart, and that all Ceremonies are to no purpose, except they shewe y our hart is right, pure, and vnfeined. Thus much concerning the superstition and abuse y reigned among the Iewes and still reigneth at this present.

We must alwayes come backe to this saying of our Lorde, that the things which goe into a mans mouth defile him not, but the things that come out at his mouth, as all manner of wicked wicked affections. One is full of ambition and pride, another burneth in couetousnesse, and a third practiseth spitefullnesse and treason. Eue-ry man hath his vice himselſe, ſo as one is a glutton and another is a whoremonger. Theſe are the things that infect the man, yea and they infect the whole world. Therefore let vs learne to cleaſe our ſelues from all ſuch filthineſſe: and as for Ceremonies, let vs knowe that wee ought to vſe them ſo farre forth as God requireth them for the vttering of our faith: but yet muſt we vſe them ſimply, and not bee wedded too much to them. For wee ſee that the deuill will by and by haue a towll ready to blindfold our eyes withall, ſo as wee ſhall no more conſider the principall, but forget it vtterly and abuſe our ſelues to things of nothing. To the intent then that we may not haue our eyes ſo beared; let vs follow God that way which hee calleth vs: that is, to ſerue him in all pureneſſe.

And now as touching the principall point of this ſentence, where it is ſaid that a kid muſt bee eaten in his dammes milke: let vs vnderſtand that God will haue vs to vſe honeſtie and ſoberneſſe in our eating and drinking: that is the thing in effect, which wee haue to remember in that text. Truly as touching the figure, we be no more tyed to it, as I haue ſaid afore: but as for Gods meaning, that is durable. When men doe giue themſelues to their leawde and outrageous appetites, it is all one as though they ment to ouerthrow the order of nature. Yee ſee how drunkards (when they bee ſo full that they be ready to burſt) doe inuent ſuch ſhamefull things, that an honeſt man would bee ready to caſt vp his ſtomacke to heare the things ſpoken of which thoſe ſwine doe. When they be as full as their ſkinnes can holde, they whet their ſtomacks, & take ſhooinghornes (as they term the) to drawe on a cup of wine, and ſuch other like things, ſo as wee may ſee that men cannot content themſelues with any meaſure; but although God ſhewe himſelſe liberall towards them, yet notwithstanding they will needs follow their inordinate luſts ſtill, declaring y their deſires are vnſatiable, & neuer at reſt, till they haue brought themſelues to ſhamefull diſorder, without regard of any modeſtie. Sith we ſee ſuch things, we may well perceyue howe it is not without cauſe that God hath warned the Iewes to vſe a kind of honeſtie in their liuing and feeding: which thing belögether much more to vs at this day. Although we haue not the Ceremonie any more; yet will God haue vs to liue honeſtly, & to vſe a ſobrietye in our eating & drinking, ſo as we may alway liſt vp our eyes & ſay, Lord, we haue receued ſoode at thy hand, & we know y thou ſhewſt thy ſelſe a father towards vs. But if we make a hotchpotch of all things wout diſcretion, ſurely it is no raking of them as at Gods hand, but wee ſhall finde at the laſt, that we rauened them vp like beaſtes. And therefore let vs learne to reſtraine our ſelues. Thus wee ſee howe the doctrine that is coneyned here, is not vnneceſſarie at this day, ſo wee can applie it duely, and with diſcretion of the holy Ghoſt to our inſtruction,

Now after this, he ſayth concerning beaſts that are ſtrangled, and are dead in their bloods; that they ſhoulde giue them to ſtrangers or eſſe ſell them. It ſeemeth here at the firſt ſight, that God ſhould as well condemne thoſe beaſtes for the ſtraungers as for the Iewes. For if it be not lawfull for me my ſelſe to doe a thing; why ſhould I bee an occaſion to my neighbour to doe it? Am I not gilty of ſinne in ſo doing? Here we haue to conſider the reaſon that Moſes addeth: Thou art a People holy vnto thy God. Heere he ſheweth that God had ſhooled out y Iewes from all other nations of the earth, and therefore hee would not haue them to deſile themſelues with any kind of meate. Now if it be demanded, and why then had they leaue to ſel or giue the things to ſtrangers, which were abominable as in reſpect of themſelues? The reaſon is this: That god hauing named the beaſts which he would haue his people to eate of, did leaue all beaſtes without difference for all other men to feede on which were not inſtructed in his Law. True it is that he had forbidden al mankind to eate the blood of any thing, and conſequently to eate of any beaſt that was ſtrangled or died alone. But the moſt part of the world was already gone aſtray, ſo as they knew not the law any more, & we ſee how y euen in the life of Noe, his poſteritie intangled themſelues in a number of ſuperſtitious & Idolatries, Gen. 11. 2 & had forgotten god who had preferred them ſo wonderfully; ſo as there was no more but the lineage of Sem, which was but a very ſmall portion, that held themſelues to any pureneſſe in the ſeruing of God. By reaſon whereof y whole world grew into ſuch a licentious liberty, that all was mar. God therefore referueth a people to himſelſe, & bringeth them backe to the firſt law, ſaying, Seeing I tel you that I haue choſen you to be my houſhold: I ſet you downe a ſpeciall order, y you may haue my badge whereby to be knowne from al y vnbeleeuers of the earth. A ſtray maner doth god deale. But men runne gadding on their own head, & follow alwaies their own affections, & canot find in their hearts to ſubmit themſelues ſimply to Gods law as he requireth. Truly the thing of it ſelſe were not euill, if there had bin no law againſt it. And this law was giuen to y Iewes, for the two reaſons which I haue alleaged afore. The firſt was for the tryall of their obedience, y they ſhould ſhew themſelues to be ſubiect vnto God. And the ſecond was, y thereby they might be quickned vp to keepe themſelues from al corruption. But as for the heathen, they might haue eaten of all meates, ſo they had acknowledged the giuer of them and the creator that had made all things to their vſe, worſhipping him purely and abſtaining from al cruelty & outrage: but they liued in y world like beaſtes. They had in deede a kinde of Imagination that there was one God; & they forged a great number of gods: and yet for all that while euery man had an Idoll by himſelſe, the liuing God was forſaken of all men. For as much then as the heathen had not the Law appointed vnto them: the Iewes might well leaue thoſe kind of meates vnto them.

And vcrily therby they were done to vnderſtand, stand, y<sup>e</sup> the thing of it selfe was not euill. Seeing y<sup>e</sup> God gaue them leaue to sel or giue vnto y<sup>e</sup> heathen the flesh of such things as were not ordinarily flaine; thereby they might perceiue how it behoued them to looke yet further. And why so?

 As touching murder, because it is forbidden of it selfe, it is not lawfull for me to kill a man, u-ther is it lawfull for mee to lend a sword to kill him withall, nor to vse any manner of treacherie.
 Now then, in things y<sup>e</sup> God condemneth of the felues, & which are euill of the felues: it is certame y<sup>e</sup> all men ought not onely to abstaine frō them, but also to beware y<sup>e</sup> he giue not any occasion to any other body to do the. And so it is to be concluded, y<sup>e</sup> sith the Iewes might without offending God giue or sel the flesh of strangled beasts: God shewed thereby, that y<sup>e</sup> thing of it selfe was not eu-ill; & that his forbidding of it was but to hold the vnder awe, & thereby to leade them yet further, intending to make the vnderstand, y<sup>e</sup> they ought to lue in al manner of purenes, because they were a holy people. This is y<sup>e</sup> which we haue to reme-ber vpon this place. Nowe, whereas he speaketh here of straungers, he meaneth all the heathen which were not of y<sup>e</sup> line of Abraham, as if we in these dayes should speake of y<sup>e</sup> Turkes & Sarazins, wee might say they haue no fellowship wth vs because they weare not y<sup>e</sup> badge of Baptisme, and despise y<sup>e</sup> God whom we worship. For Gods lawe speaketh to all men alike, at leastwise the morall lawe as they terme it, that is to say, the lawe y<sup>e</sup> ruleth our life: but the lawe y<sup>e</sup> belongeth to y<sup>e</sup> Gospel, speaketh to none but to y<sup>e</sup> Church of Gods. As for example y<sup>e</sup> Turkes and the Sarazins haue not to do with the supper of our Lorde Iesus Christ, neither can they any skill of Baptisme. True it is that they haue washings, and they wash themselues oft ynough: but al y<sup>e</sup> euer they haue is no better than y<sup>e</sup> holy water of the Papiests. As for y<sup>e</sup> things y<sup>e</sup> are peculiar to vs, & which God hath giuen to vs as to his children and householdfolke, those belong not to such as are altogether estraunged from y<sup>e</sup> Church, & the holy scripture.
 And therefore let vs marke well, y<sup>e</sup> whereas God doth here giue the heathen leaue to eate al manner of meats: it is because he was not so gracious to them, as to giue them the instruction that was peculiar to y<sup>e</sup> children of Abraham, & to the holy lineage which he had chosen from y<sup>e</sup> whole world.
 Nowe notwithstanding all this, if the Iewes had complained y<sup>e</sup> God held them in more subiection than he did the heathen, and y<sup>e</sup> their owne estate was worse than theirs, might we not say y<sup>e</sup> it were too great an vnthankfulness: If a Iewe should say, How now? Seeing y<sup>e</sup> God hath chosen vs for his children, why doth he not giue vs as great libertie at the least, as he hath giuen to those that belong not vnto him? Is it mee te y<sup>e</sup> we should be inferiour to them? If a Iew should speake after that manner, we would be his iudges, and euery of vs would say, see on him wretch, he sheweth himself tooo vnhoneit & churlish. For seeing y<sup>e</sup> god hath chosen them for his people, & instructed them in his pure doctrine: should they finde fault with him for his holding of the vnder y<sup>e</sup> obedience of his law? But nowe let vs apply this to our selues.

For in as much as God hath gathered vs togither into his house, he wil haue vs to walk more carefully and warely, than the sillie ignoraunt soules that are strayed from the way of Saluation. If wee say that that were too rough and seuerer a dealing; wee our selues are too vn-thankfull. It is said that we must lue as childre of the light: & no maruaile it is though such as haue not learned Gods word do stur and stumble, & go astray; for they be like blinde wretches in the darke. But wee haue Gods worde, which is as a lampe to giue vs lyght, and again we haue bene enlightened by the holy Ghost, so as wee knowe the will of God. And shall wee nowe runne astray as though wee had neuer known any good doctrine? Nowe then whereas God hath tyed vs shorter than he hath tyed the ignorant; if we thereupon wil needes shake off his yoke and fall to checking at him, as though wee had leuer to haue the licentious libertie of the vnbelecuers, than to bee held vnder the obedience of God our father: we were worthie to bee rooted out of the world. For it were too great a defacing of Gods gracious goodnesse, to do so, when G O D hath chosen vs to himselfe and giuen vs his badge, as if hee should say, I wil raigne among you, let it appeare that yee haue bene in my schoole, let not my shewing of my selfe to haue bene your father and Sautour bee in vaine. So then, let vs marke well, that whereas God calleth vs vnto him, it is with this condition; that wee shoulde not lue any more after the manner of the ignorant wretches which woote not howe to order their conuerfation: for they doe followe their owne beastly lustes. It is ynough (saith Saint Peter speaking to the heathen that had bene conuerted to the beleefe of the Gospell,) it is ynough (saith hee) that yee haue done heere tofore, ye haue giuen too much heed to your wicked affections already, see that none of you take such licentious libertie any more, but submit your selues to Gods yoke; and sith it is gods will to haue the gouernment of you, suffer your selues to be guided by his hand, and obey his worde in all things, vterly forsaking your owne wicked lustes.

Nowe then, whereas in these dayes we see the worlde to bee altogether corrupted: let vs not alledge other mens grosse dealmes in defence of our owne, neither let vs make a shield of them to say, why shoulde wee bee held more in awe than other men? Alas, is it to bee marualed at that those shoulde goe astray, which haue no lyght? But seeing that G O D hath sent vs the Sonne of right conuinesse, let vs assure our selues that it will bee no excuse for vs, though the ignorant wretches doe goe astray after their owne imaginations. Surely this is yll put in practise. For our whole seeking nowadays, is nothing else but to heape together all the offences in the worlde, to make a confused horchpotch of them. If it bee sayde that there bee a number of men which are giuen to fraude and guyle, and are full of surdetic and deceite: wee rest vpon that and are contented to counterfet their vices, & to all eage them in sport.

1. Pet. 4. 3

As for mens vertues, wee let them alone, and make none accounte of them: but as for their vices, wee make a barre of them against God. O say wee, ye see howe such a man doth so, another doeth after that fashion: this is a common custome euerywhere: and wil ye haue vs to be holier than al other men? Besides this, it is alledged thus also. What I pray you, doe not the Papisites so before vs? Yes: but the Papisites haue shaken off the yoke of our Lord Iesus Christ, they haue withdrawn themselves from him and from his Church. True it is y they haue bapisme which is y signe of Christianitie: but they haue vterly abolished the true vse of bapisme, and we see how they haue no skil at al either of God or of his word. As for our part, forasmuch as we haue the Gospell, and that wee are thereby conuicted y it is Gods trueth, and we be preferred before those that were at leastwise as good as we in respect of the world, & seeing he hath chosen vs after that fashion, are we not too much to blame, if we come not to offer our selues wholly vnto him, saying, Lorde gouerne thou vs, and let vs not looke at other mens doings to be caryed away by their misexample; but let vs alwayes bee gathered together as it were vnder the shadowe of thy winges? Thus ye see what we haue to make vpon this admonition of Moses, Knowe ye (saith he) that the Lord your God hath separated you out from all other nations of the earth.

After this, he cometh to the tythes wherof he had spoken afore, & saith, Ye shall tythe the first of all your frutes which ye shall haue gathered, as well of Corne, Wine, and Oyle, as also of the first borne of all your Cattel. The repetition which our Lord vlieth here is not more than needeth. For (as we haue seene heretofore) men are so wedded to their owne profit, y their duetie cannot be had at their hands, but by force, and they must bee faine to haue their eares beaten dayly, or else (if it bee possible) they will doe what they can to exempt themselves from dooing their duetie, specially when it commeth to the Lawe of God and to the things that he requirith at our hand: for we wil be ashamed if wee yeeld not our duetie vnto men. Whē a man hath misbehaued himselfe towards me, ye shal see him ashamed to lift vp his head. True it is y faults shal not faile to be committed, & that there wilbe a thousand deuises to defraude men by theft, robbery, extortion, and other wicked practises: but yet wil men alwayes looke the warielyer to themselves, because they be restrained by shame. But as for to Godward, men are quite past shame, and set all at randon as though they would pul out his tongue, or forbid him to speake, when they haue taken from him y which belonged vnto him. And so ye see what is the cause that God hath spoken so oft of tythes which he would haue offered vnto him, & likewise of y first frutes. I haue tolde you already y the tythes were allotted to the Leuites, because God referued them to do him seruice: & it behoued them to lue vpon y Alcar, because they were dedicated therunto. The same reason is in force at this day towards vs. Not that we be bound to the same maner of tything that the Iewes were, furtherforth than ciuill order requireth: but that wee must alwayes come backe to this saying of Saint Paul, that lyke as the Leuites lued vpon tythes because they were dedicated to the seruice of GOD: so nowadayes they that haue the charge of teaching in the Church, ought to be maintained with liuing likewise, & God hath made an euerlasting law thereof.

But yet moreover, we haue to note, that the tythes were allotted to the Leuites as in recompence of their inheritance wherof they were deprived. For God had promised the Land of Canaan to all the lineage of Abraham, by reason wherof the children of Leuie ought not to haue bene bereft of their portion. Yet notwithstanding, God bereft them of it. And why did he so? To the intent they should not toyle themselves in tilling the ground as other men do, but giue themselves wholly to his seruice as became the. In respect wherof it was good reason that they should bee recompensed after another manner. Truly this matter cannot be discoursed at large as now, and therefore wee will delay the going through with it till to morrowe, taking this breefe summe of it for a conclusion, that our Lorges meaning in this place, was to let downe a Lawe for the maintenance of his seruice. And for that cause it was his minde that the Leuites should haue wherēon to lue: for they were the partes that had the charge to maintaine the pure religion: and for that purpose were they disperfed throughout the whole land of Canaan to the end they should keepe the people in the purencesse of Gods seruice, as we see the prophet Malachy speaketh of them, saying y they ought to be expounders of gods law, as at whose mouth men ought to seeke what is good and lawefull. The cause then why GOD hath not onely set downe this lawe but also repeated it, is for that he will haue his seruice mainteined. And because men are negligent in yeelding him his dewe, he hath vouchsafed to repete the law againe which he had set downe before; and besides that, his intent was also to put vs in minde to honour him with all the goods which he bestoweth vpon vs in this life. For surely if men eate and drinke without yeelding any honor vnto God, they defile y things which they receiue. For y true meane to sanctify meates, is by faith & prayer saith S. Paul. Without faith and prayer, all things become vnclean to vs. And now ye see heere how god commaundeth men to offer vnto him their first frutes and tenthes. And why is y? Because that by y meanes folke were prouoked to say, True it is y the earth bringeth forth her frutes, we haue a good harvest and vintage, we haue store of Oyle and vittelles; & who is he that giueth vs all these things? Hath the earth a soule to determine with it selfe to nourish vs? No, it is God our father that doth it: and therefore it is good reason that we should haue regard of him, & consider how much we be bound vnto him. Thus ye see how y in the tythes and first frutes, there was a solemn protestation y whatsoever we haue we receiue it at gods hā, & therefore we ought to do him homage & sacrifice hee therewith . Which thing is then done , when we pray vnto him to blesse them all . and when wee see effectually by our almesdeedes and such other like things , that we be willing to offer all things vnto him which hee hath put into our handes , and to vse them in such sort , as wee may haue a care to follow measure , and to frame our selues to the sobrietie which hee hath commaunded vs .

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our faultes , praying him to vouchsafe to behold vs with pitie , and not to impute vnto vs the great number of offences whereof wee bee guiltie before him , but that it may please him to rid vs cleane from them , euen by forgiuing them : and moreouer to drawe vs fo vnto him by his holy spirite , as our whole seeking may bee to dedicate our selues thoroughly vnto him , continuing throughout in his holy calling , to the end . And so let vs all say , Almighty God heauenly father &c .

The XCij. Sermon, which is the third upon the foureteenth Chapter.

24 And if the way be too long, so as thou canst not bring them, because the place which the Lord thy God shall haue chosen to set his name in, is too far from thee: and that the Lord thy God haue blessed thee:

25 Then shalt thou make it into monie, and take the monie in thy hande, and repayre to the place which the Lorde thy G O D shall haue chosen for himselfe.

26 And thou shalt giue the monie for whatsoeuer thy heart desireth; whether it be oxen or sheepe, wine, or straunge drinke, or any other thing which thy heart liketh of. And there feede thou on it in the presence of the Lord thy God, and bee merrie both thou and thy householde.

27 And thou shalt not forsake the Leuite that is within thy gates: for he hath no portion nor inheritance with thee.

28 At the three yeres end thou shalt gather together all the tythes of thine increase of that yeare, and lay it vp within thy gates.

29 And then the Leuite which hath no part nor inheritance with thee, and likewise the straunger, the fatherlesse, and the widowe which are within thy gates, shall come and eate, and be refreshed, that the Lord thy God may blesse thee in all the workes of thy handes which thou doest.

Deut. 12. 5 6

As much as Moses, in speaking heretofore of first fruites and offerings, and freewill oblations; had commaunded that they should be offered in Ierusalem, or else in the place which God was then to choosẽ now hee addeth, that if a man dwelt too farre off from that place, hee might make mony of the things that were to bee giuen for an offering vnto God, and after the sale thereof, buy the like things againe, which should be wholly dedicated to God whatsoeuer they were. Now I haue tolde you already, how it was not for naught that God would haue one certeine place, wherein to offer solemne sacrifices vnto him and to worship him: for it serued to mainteine the vnitie of faith. In so much that if euery trybe, or at leastwise euery citie had had an Altar by themselves; it had bin enough to haue made hauock of all, and men could not haue continued in concord and brotherly loue. Therefore it behoued the Temple to bee a meeting place for Gods people, to the intent they should altogether acknowledge themselves to be but one bodie, and vnderstand that they were bound all to one rule, which is the lawe, and all of them obey the same, without any diuersitie of opinions, or straunge maner of dealings, or ceremonies among them. And in the same respect also were they commaunded to offer in the Temple, to the end that euery man shoulde not behaue himselfe after his owne deuotion as they terme it. For when men will needes seue God after their owne fancie, there will be nothing but corruption. Wee must alwayes beare this saying in minde, that obedience is better than all the sacrifices in the worlde. And therefore they were forbidden to offer sacrifice in any other place than onely one which was appointed for that purpose, to the intent they should not euery man muse vpon foolish superstitions, but hold them selfes to the order that was set down, without attempting any thing rashly and fondly vpon their owne heades as I sayd. And this is spoken expressly vnto vs. For although wee haue not the selfesame order of religion which was among the auncient fathers vnder the Law: yet doth this ground stand still, that God will not be worshipped after our opinion, but according to his owne will. Therefore let vs bee well ware that we inuent not superstitions (as the Papistes haue done) vpon surmise that they will be accepted of God; for they will doe nothing else but prouoke his wrath, in so much that when men turne away from Gods trueth, the more they inforce themselves forward, the further off doe they still stray from it. Will wee then keepe the right way? Gods word must ouermaster vs. And this thing is yet the better confirmed to vs, by Gods referring of the place to himselfe wherein he would be serued. For he could well haue sayd by Moses; Choose what place you your selues like best, and when yee haue done, God will giue you leaue to come euerie man thither, and there to doe him seruice. Al this might wel haue bin sayd. But God sayth, it belongeth to mee to choose, I will not giue the choyce to men. Herein wee see how hee referueth the right of souerainty to himselfe, to the end that the faithfull shoulde the better knowe, that it is not for them to enterprise aught at aadventure, but that it behoueth them to haue warrant from aboue, so as they may say, God accepteth all that euer wee doe; for we doe nothing but what he commaundeth vs, none of vs dealeth vpon his owne head in this behalfe. Wherefore let vs marke well, that God hath here done vs to vnderstand, that he wil not haue his seruice mingled with our inuentions, but that wee should simply followe the things that are contained in his worde. And so yee see that as concerning the things which I haue sayd already, God was to bee worshipped solemnly no where else than in the Temple of Ierusalem after it was declared: and that vntill that time, it behoued the Iewes to resort to the Arke and to the Sanctuarie. But now let vs come backe againe to that which is set downe here in writing.

If the place (sayth Moses) bee too farre from thee, thou shalt sell the things which thou wast minded to offer, or the things which thou oughtest to offer. For it behoued them to offer the first borne of all their cattell. Nowe they that dwell in the vttermost coastes of Iewry should haue had much ado to drine thither their Lambs, Sheepe, Goates, and Calues. Therefore they were to be borne withall: and God being no oppresser of his people, giueth them here a remedie, to the intent they should not be greued too much. As for those that dwell neere to Ierusalem sayth hee, let them bring thither as well the first borne of their cattell, as also all their freewill offerings, and whatsoever other things they haue dedicated vnto God. For otherwise the Citie of Ierusalem might bee famished. If all that had come thither should haue bought their sacrifices there: what a thing had that bin? Therefore it was Gods will that men should bring the thither from all the countries, vnlesse the places were ouersfare off. And in that case hee saith it should bee Lawfull for them to sell the things that they had dedicated, namely such as were due by commandement of the Lawe: as the first borne things, in remembrance that God had smitten the first borne of Egypt, and spared the first borne of Israel, whereof he would haue the memoriall to continue for euer. Thou shalt sell it (sayth hee,) & put vp the mony, or folde it vp (for so doth the word signify which he vseth.) Folde vp the mony in thy hand (sayth hee:) that is to say, consider with your selues that that mony is none of your owne, but that it must bee put vp alone by it selfe as a holy thing. And when thou comest to Ierusalem, thou shalt lay thine offerings after thine owne liking, and after that the same hath bin offered in the Temple, the Priests shall take their dues thereof. & then shall you eat and drink thereof before the Lord as soon as you haue made your oblation thereof, and you shall be merry in eating of your sacrifices, as farre as euerie mans portion will extend. That is the thing in effect which wee haue to remember in this text.

And here wee see (as I haue sayd afore,) that although God held his people vnder very strait bondage, yet notwithstanding hee layde no more vpon them than they were able to beare, but so mitigated the rigor of the Lawe, as no man could say it was vpossible to doe the things that hee had inioyned. Sith wee see it is so; Let vs assure our selues, that if our good G O D doe in these dayes lay any burthen vpon our shoulders, that may bee too heauie for vs; hee doth also giue vs abilitie to beare it, so as wee bee not borne downe by it, at leastwise if wee commit our selues to him; so as we haue no cause to complayn of him as though he did vtterly ouerwhelme vs. True it is, that the righteousnesse which God requireth of vs in his Lawe, dooth farre surmount all our abilitie, yea and we come so farre shorte of the performing of all that hee hath commaunded vs, so as wee bee not able to thirre one finger towards it; nay, wee cannot so much as thinke one good thought towards it: G O D must be faine to giue vs euery whit. But when he assisteth vs with his holy spirit, then wee finde his yoke sweete and easie, specially, when hee layes it vpon our neckes by the hand of our Lord Iesus Christ. And that is the cause why Iesus Christ protesteth that his burthen is not too heauie, nor his yoke too hard. But how cometh that to passe? It is because God giueth vs both the will to serue him, and also the abilitie to put the same in execution. And therewithall hee addeth a second grace, which is that hee beareth with vs when wee haue done amisse. For wee of our selues are ouerfraile, wee cannot thoroughly performe the things that hee commaundeth vs, & therefore he pardoneth our infirmities & forgetteth them. But howsoever the case stand, yet naue wee good cause to serue him freely & with a francke hart, forasmuch as wee see that hee on his side desireth no more but to giue vs as the father dooth his children, as hee auoweth by his Prophet Hoseah.

But now let vs marke, that whereas Moses sayth, Let them buy whatsoever they haue a minde vnto: his meaning therein is not to giue men leaue to play the gluttons at their pleasure, as though there were no measure nor modestie to be observed. A certaine sect of Heretikes called the Manichees, which scorned Gods Law & the Prophets, alledged this presēt text & such other lyke, to shew that the God of the olde testamēt as they blasphemously termed him, was a God of disorder, and such a one as kept no good rule. For why, sayd they; hee layd the bridle vpon his peoples necke, and bad them eate whatsoever they lyked, and so his meaning was to make them drunkardes and gluttons, by incouraging them to eate and drinke after that fashion. But the true God (sayd they) will haue folke to bee sober, whereby a man may see that the Lawe was not giuen from heauen. But we see how this text was corrupted by their malice, yea euen by their shamefull malice, in blaspheming without any colour of truth, seeing that the lustes of men were restrained afore by the same Lawe. I tolde you yesterday how it was Gods will to bridle his people, by reitaining thē from the eating of all sortes of meates without exception, wherein hee meant to haue a tryall of their sobrietie. Sith it is so: it is a fowle shame to alledge this text as a placarde, for the setting of all lustes at libertie. The worde Lyking, Longing, or Lusting, ought rather to bee restreyned to the things that were Lawfull, and which God had giuen them leaue to deale with. As if it had bin sayd, Those that haue a minde to eate of any kinde of meate which is Lawfull for them to eate, let them buy it and make an offering thereof vnto God. And when the Priestes haue taken their rightes thereof, let them eate the residue themselves.

So then let vs marke that here are two things contayned. The one is, that our Lorde sheweth himselfe libterall towards his people in that hee sayth, Go too, although I coulde withhold my blessing from you; yet notwithstanding I giue you leaue to make your owne choyce of your meate and drinke, howbeit with this exception, that yee take heede that you touch not any meate that is not pure and cleane to you: for it behooueth you to be exercised for a time in the induour of dedicating your selues vnto mee, that yee bee not tangled in the defilementes of the infidels. Therefore let that prouiso stand for euer, so as yee alwayes take good heede to vse your libertie in such sorte, as yee may haue no cause to blame mee as though I helde you too streit. For I leaue you to your owne likings, so they be well ruled. Now then let vs vnderstande, that heere our Lorde beareth with vs, in that hee vouchsafeth to giue vs the vse of his creatures, not onely for our neede without other desire to them, but also euen for our pleasure: and yet notwithstanding, that wee must alwayes take good heede, that our mirth be not excessive, but rather well moderated. And for that cause is it sayd, Thou shalt eate there in the presence of thy God, which saying hath bin set downe already heretofore. Neuerthelesse it is not for naught that Moses repeateth it here againe. For wee see how men are wedded to their owne sensualitytie, and how they forget themselves in their eating and drinking, so that it is very hard to keepe such measure as God bee not offended, yea euen ere wee thinke of it. I say that euen such as are not giuen to gluttonie and drunkenesse, and which haue a care not onely to the health of their bodies, but also the sober vsing of the things which God giueth them for their repaste; euen they (I say) shal not to commit some fault or other. So then, let vs heare well in minde what is sayd here, where God commaundeth men to eate and drinke in his presence, specially at their soleme feastes when they came to Ierusalem: namely how that thereby he did warne all the faithfull to haue an eye to him in their eating and drinking when they were at home in their owne houses.

Therefore when men sit downe to the table, they must in any wise beware that they take not their repaste without minding of God. For why? First it is a desiling of all our meates and drinks when wee begin not at the calling vpon his name. Of whom shall we receive our foode, if we seeke it not at Gods hand? Then must wee beginne at prayer and that is as; it were a dedication, to the ende that our meates may become cleane and holy vnto vs, as Saint Paul speaketh of them. But yet besides this, we must come againe to the thing that is sayd here; namely that we must come eate as in the presence of our God. Were it wel printed in our mindes that our God is present at the table w vs: surely wee would vse another maner of modestie than wee doe. And out of doubt, the putting of this lesson in yre, that God is among vs, is a true prooue of our Christianitie. But it is a wonder to see what an insensibleness there is in these dayes among Christians. For it was Gods wil that euen among the Infidels there should remaine stil some consecuted tokens of that which is sayd here. Because the heathen were of opinion that their Gods were alwayes attendant at their meales; they termed their Tables holy. And why so: it is certeine that they vnderstoode not the reason of it for all things were become vnholly among them, by their misusing of all things against their kinde. Yet notwithstanding, God to make them vnexcusable, did leaue this marke still among them, as if he should say, whensoever men doe eate and drinke, I am present at it, so as all things done there must needs come to account before me. Now then, it wee knowe lesse hereof than those blind wretches, what a thing is it: So much y more therefore ought we to marke wel this lesson, where God commaundeth the people of olde time to eate and drinke in his presence, to the intent that the same might holde them in awe, and make them to consider that whensoever they did eate or drinke, God gouerned them and beheld their doings. And now although we haue not the ceremonie that was vnder the law; yet let the truth thereof haue his force among vs: which is that we neuer come to the table, without considering that God is present there, and that as hee vouchsafeth to haue a care to feed vs, fo wil he also haue vs to take our foode with al reuerence & honest behauiour, like as if a childe be at the table with his father, and his father sitting at the vpper end doe looke vpon him, surely he wil not vse such boldnesse as if hee were in a corner by himselfe. For there perchance hee would play the wag, and throw his trechor vnder foote, and play other wanton pranks: but if hee bee at his fathers table, either hee must behaue himselfe soberly, or else be rebuked for his labor. Let euery man bethinke him of this, and let it be a meane to holde vs in such awe, as the meates which God giueth vs may haue their pure and lawfull vse. That is the thing which we haue in effect to remember vpon this text.

And now he speaketh lykewise of mens householdes, shewing that if we intend to be merry before God, we must also haue a care to instruct those that are committed to our charge. Marke that for one point, it is not enough for a man to liue in the feare of God himselfe; but the father that hath children, and the maister that hath menseruantes and maideferuantes must leade them with him, and there must be one consent in euery household, so as both great and smal doe serue God. For it is an vntollerable leawdnesse, when a man letteth his household play the beasts, so as God is not known among them. And what a thing is it that men should looke to be serued of their folke, & in the meane while forget God? There is none of vs all but hee will looke to be known for maister in his owne house: & in the meane while what a pride is it if God should be thrust out of doores? What a thing is it, that we which are but wretched earthwormes should looke to haue our dutie yielded to vs, and that God should be defrauded of his? That is the cause why it is sayd expressly, that men should make merry with their householdes before God.

Neuertheless, hereby God meant also to inure his people to humanitie. For we see a number of men that can finde in their hartes to cram themselves til they burst, & in the meane while passe not though others starue: & it shold seeme if a whole world were little enough to finde one of them. But our Lordes will is that there should be courtesie among men, that whē the maisters haue sufficed themselves with meate and drinke, they shold not be nigardly in giuing foode & sustentance to such as take pains in their seruice, but haue a care of the. That is a second thing which our Lord ment in this text. But now let vs passe on.

After the Moses hath spoken of firstfruits and offerings, he returneth againe to Tythes, and treateth more fully of them. Thou shalt not forget the Lewite (saith he) which is within thy gates. Every third yeere shalt thou lay aside the tenth of al thy fruits, and the Lewites shall come and gather them, and likewise the widowes, the fatherlesse, and the straungers, that thy God may blisse them all the workes of thy hands. Yesterday I began to tell you that in old time the Tythes were appointed to the Lewites, because they serued at the altar: & that God would not haue the occupied about any such labor, as might hinder them either from teaching the law, or fro doing of sacrifice & such other like things.

For inasmuch as God had reserued the to the purpose, his wil was that they should giue themselves wholly thereunto. That was the cause why he exempted them from tilling of the ground, and from such other labors. Besides this, there was also another reason, which was, that they should haue had a portion in the land which was promised to the lineage of Abraham, for there was a whole tribe of them; but God had excluded them fro it, & put in two tribes in stead of the one, so as Ephraim and Manasses the sonnes of Ioseph made two heads. And so were there twelue portions of the Land. But yet in stead of the Lewites ye see the Ephraim succeeded: for Manasses was the firstborne of Ioseph, & yet was he put after his brother & set in the second place, & made inferior to him. And so were the Lewites excluded. But yet behoud it them to haue their right. And therefore God recompenced them, & lyke as if a man should giue his childe a recompence some other way when he would not haue him to come to the parting of the inheritance with his brethren, eten so stode the case with the Lewites. Those were the two chiefe reasons for the tythes. Neuertheless it was Gods will that the ouerplus should be deuided among the poore & needie. For the Lewites had not so large a portion giuen the to make them gluttons & to enrich the aboute other men: but to the ende they should be as deacons to haue a care of Gods poore folke, and to distribute his almes to his people. Now we see what was the cause of the tythes.

But it is cleane contrariwise in the Popedome, where it is sayd that by Gods Lawe the tythes are due to the Priestes. Although (say I) that their Priestes were such as they ought to be, so as they were not the priests of Moloch and of other idols, but that they serued God purely: yet were it a grosse ignorance to imagin that tithing were an euerlasting order set downe for all nations to obserue. Againe it was a flat fraud, in that the Priestes being ouerruled by couetousnesse, did beare men in hand that the tythes belonged to them by Gods lawe. For the contrary is well known. And their chalending of that, was at such time as the whole world was corrupted, and men were vterly ignorant of the meaning of the holy scripture. For since the time that Christianitie hath begunne to flourish, and that there hath bin greater soundnesse of iudgement than was before, it hath neuer bin said that Tythes are due to the Shepherds, nor to those which haue the spiritual gouernment of the Church: but it hath bin alwayes orderly obserued, that Princes & Lords haue taken the Tenthes: yea & in some places and countries which are lesse fruitfull, they haue taken but the Thirtiethes or at leastwise but the Twentiethes: whereas in other places where the landes are more fruitfull, & where there is greater abundance than is ordinarily in other countries, they haue taken the tenthes. Hereupon the priestes and Cleargymen of the Popedome, haue taken occasion to finger all things, & to vsurp vpon all mens most wickedly. For they haue thidered out their excoḿunications against such as would not graunt the their robbrie, so as mens were driue to let them them haue their owne willes. And then sell they together by the eares among themselves lyke a sort of cutredogges about a bone. The Monkes sayd, they bee ours: the Priestes sayd they were theirs: and to bee shorte, there was nothing but vtter disorder among them.

Yet notwithstanding, wee must returne againe to that which was touched yesterday, and which I am about to rehearse againe now presently: which is, that inasmuch as the sacrificing Priestes were found at the common charges of the people, in the time of the olde Lawe, it is good reason that the preachers of the Gospell should bee mainteyned lykewise at this day, as Saint Paul speaketh thereof, howbeit not for his owne aduantage sake, but to the intent there should not bee so great vnthankfulness among those which name themselves Christians, as to defraud those of their bodily liuing, which preach to them the word of lyfe, & bring them the spirituall foode of their soules. The thing it selfe then remaineth still: but that it should be taken vp in this kinde or in that kinde, that is not so: it is not so sayd by Gods Lawe, and therefore what shall become of Tythes? Let the possession continue still, and let the vse of them be amended. That is to say, because we see evidently that Tythes haue bin wrongfully vsurped, and that the parties which holde them in their handes haue wrested them by superstition: let vs now consider the right vse of them, And to say the truth, looke how many Priestes there are in the Popedome, so many theetes are there. I say not this according to the holy scripture, but according to their own Canons, whereby they bee all excommunicated for theetes & robbers. For their Canons commaund them to part their Church goods in such sorte, as the poore haue one fourth parte of them, and strangers another fourth part. To be short, the one halfe of the Church goods ought to be bestowed in almes vpon the poore and vpon straungers. Who sayes this? Nor Gods word, for the Papists make none account of that; but their owne Canons haue so decreed. Ye see then how all the Bishops, Chanons, Pryors, and Abbots in the Popedome are excommunicated euerychone from the highest to the lowest, euen by their owne Canons: so as there is euery where most horrible confusion among them, I meane euen according to their owne orders. But it is not enough for vs to condemne them: wee must also haue an eye to our selues, and see that the right vse of the things which haue bin dedicated to God, bee set vp againe: And that where any abuse hath bene, the same bee redressed. And how may that bee? Wee see it was Gods will that the poore should bee found and mainteyned by a part of the tythes, that is to say of the offerings which were made in those dayes. After the same maner must wee come to the vse of Gods Lawe at this day: and forasmuch as Tenthes or Twentiethes were left euen in old time to Princes and chiefe Lordes, and that the same order was set downe for the benefice bee employed to the benefice of the Church at this day. It is not meant that such as beare the name of Prelates and Pastors should glutte themselves with them: nor that when they haue sorted themselves in their pleasures and delights and spent more than needeth in prodigalitie and ydle expenses, they should haue wherewith to maintaine whoredome and other stumblingblockes, as wee see that the Churchgoods are commonly wasted in such things. For we knowe that such doings are against the order of nature, and therefore can in no wise be iustified by Gods word. What is to be done then? Let the possession remaine quietly, and in the meane while let men returne them to their right vse. Let the be mainteyned whome God hath commaunded to be maintayned. And let the things be continued which are requisite for the well ordering of the Church. Moreover, Let the poore and needy be pityed; Let men knowe them to be the takers vp of Gods rents; and that it is an acceptable kinde of sacrifice vnto him when such are releued as ought to be succored. After that maner wee may iustly condemne the Papistes at this day, yea and take them for Churchrobbers and theetes, by reason of their wrongfull chalending of the things to themselves which belong not to the. And wee on our side shall not bee condemned for the lyke, if wee runne backe to Gods will, and dispose the Church goods in such wise, as the poore bee not defrauded of them, but that such almesdeedes be done with them, as the necessitie of those bee relieued whome God commaundeth vs to succour, and whom he offereth vs as in his owne stead, according to this saying of his; that looke whatsoeuer wee doe to the poore, hee taketh it as done to himselfe. Sith it is so, let vs follow that rule. For we see how this lesson is greatly to our behoof nowadayes, and how we may put the same in vre.

Let vs marke well then, that it is not onely sayd by the Leuites that haue come and gather vp their right; but also it is added, by the widowes, the fatherlesse & the strangers shall be sustained lykewise. Yea verily: Albeit that the strangers were not some times of the body of y Israelites, nor of their religion: yet was it Gods will they should be pityed. Not to nourish any filth & vncleane there by; (for if folke might haue resorted thither from all nations, and haue dwelled there, it had bin the next way to haue turned the people away vnto wickednesse): but it serued for travellers, & for such as had intercourse of merchandise with them, whome Gods will was to haue succored when they fel into any aduersitie. Now seeing that the Israelites were to relieue those that were not so neere neighbors vnto them: what ought wee to doe to our brethren, and to such as are all of one selfesame faith and Religion with vs? If we shake the off & suffer them to pine away for pouertie, how greatly shall wee bee to blame, seeing that God commendeth vnto vs y poore strangers, yea eue which haue no acquaintance w vs in the serving of the true God?

But howsoeuer y case stand, let vs remember in general, that of the goods which were consecrated in those dayes vnto God, part was to be employed not onely vpon the Priestes and Leuites, but also vpon the reliefe of the poore, so as it behoued them to haue a part with the priestes so farre fourth as the tenthes woulde yeelde. What is to be done then nowadays: Forasmuch as the Ceremonie of bringing of our Freewill offeringes to a place chosen for that purpose is done away, if wee intend to offer such sacrifices as may bee acceptable to GOD, euery of vs must doe almesdeedes according to his abilitie, and thinke thus with himselfe: Go too, my God hath giuen mee change of meates, I eate one kinde of porridge to day and another kinde to morrowe, and yet might I content my selfe all my lyfe long with bread and water. But God of his bounteousnesse giueth mee moreouer what meates fouer llyke of best, yea and change of them also; so as if I bee weary of one meate, I may take another according to my abilitie. Seeing then that he dealeth so with me, what an vnthankfulnesse is it for mee to despise him that sheweth himselfe so liberal towards mee: True it is that our so dooing is neither here nor there (as they say,) in respect of God: the seruice that wee doe him doth neither amend him nor appaie him: but he giueth vs the poore among vs, to be succored at our handes, to the ende that none of vs should lo glutte himselfe by examining his owne bellie, as to despise others that are in necessitie, but that wee should bee well aduised to make an offering vnto God of the thinges that he hath put into our handes, and that the same might become holy by that meates. Not that wee should pay it as a raunsome to God: but that the acknowledgement which we make vnto him in hauing compassion vpon our poore needy brethren, is as though our Lord should allow of our eating and drinking, saying thus: Now is all lawfull for you, I lyke well of it, I giue it vnto you; and that is because yee honor mee in dooing almesdeedes to such as are in pouertie. Thus yee see what euery man hath to beare in minde as in his owne peculiyar and priuate behalfe.

Howbeit, for common orders sake, because there are renewens appointed to the Church, as I haue touched afore: let vs beware that they bee not abused by being deuoured I wote not how, or that they be not misuised about worldly matters. For men are alwayes giuen to cante on the poore folkes morrels as thort as can be, and it seemeth to them that whatsoeuer is bestowed in hospitalitie, is lost. O (say they) we must locke vp, we must spare, we must play the good husbandes; but cursed bee that good husbandrie which regardeth not the welbestowing of a mans goods. Therefore let vs haue an eye to the disposing of the thinges which GOD offereth vnto vs, and whereas there haue bin abuse and superstition, let vs vnderstand that all ought to bee brought backe again to their right vse: and that although the ceremonies continue not still; yet notwithstanding GOD will not be mocked: but that this principle must alwayes stand in force, namely, that whatsoeuer hath bin dedicated to GOD, must bee distributed accordingly. Now there was also a tything of the tythes, whereof I cannot but say some what. For after that the generall tythes were taken vp, the high priestes tooke their tenthes thereof, and afterward layd out a tenth part for the poore. Forasmuch as this thurd tything was not intended by God; but proceeded of the couetousnesse of the Leuites who could haue found in their heartes to haue raked all to themselves: it was meete that they should bee restrained. And after the same maner, the Popes Canons that I spake of, were made of purpose because men sawe the Church goods deuoured by the Priestes, by reason whereof it behoued them to be bridled. The tythes therefore were parted in such sorte, as the poore might haue their portion, and not be defrauded of the right that was assigned vnto them. But (as I sayd) wee neede not as now to stand sitting of these thinges by percelmeale: it is enough for vs that wee haue the meaning of the Lawe, and that wee knowe wherein the abuse rested, to the ende wee may reiteine the right vse of them still.

Now it is sayd consequently, That the Lord thy God may blesse thee in all the workes of thy handes.

In this text wee haue two things to marke. The one is that all our Labour woulde bee to no purpose, if God of his meere grace did not prosper it. Let that serue for one poynt. Another is, that if wee will haue God to further vs, wee must honor him with the goods which hee giueth vs, by vsing them in such wise as he commaundeth vs. For if hee be defrauded of his right, hee can soone bereaue vs of his blessing, so as wee shall bee disprised and stript out of all thinges; and when wee thinke our selues to haue abundance of all thinges at will, hee will make it to vanish away to lesse than nothing. Those bee the two thinges which wee haue to beare in minde. As touching the first, let vs beare in minde that men are commaunded to trauell for their liuing, and that such as doe take paynes shall be maintained by their labor. But yet must not men say, It is mine owne policie, it is the labor of mine owne handes that hath gotten me this or that, as wee haue seene in the eight chapter, where God fed his people fortie yeeres with Manna, to make them to knowe that when they were come into y<sup>e</sup> land of Chanaan, albeit that they tilled the ground, gathered the grapes, and reaped downe the corne; yet they should not imagin that their liuing proceeded from elsewhere than from Gods meere goodnesse who blessed them. And that is the cause why it is sayd in the psalme, that wee may well reife early and goe to bed late, and eate our bread with sorrow; & yet notwithstanding all shall goe to decay, and God shall holde vs vnder foot, vntill wee be sure of his blessing.

True it is that God doth oftentimes multiply the goods of the wicked, & of such as liue altogether by extortion, deceit & theeuery: we see y<sup>e</sup> such kinde of men may well enrich themselves, and God beareth with such thinges to blinde their eyes the more with their riches, that they may bee as a poyson to them, and as a baite to choke them withall. For inasmuch as they imagine that they can enrich themselves whether God will or no: he letteth them doe so, yea and he giueth them riches as if hee should say, Gallier till yee burst: yet shall it not turne to your seruice, but it shall be as a poyson to kill you, as I said afore. For when men enrich themselves after that fashion by wicked practises, wee see what comes of it in the ende. Gods wrath lightheth vpon them, and they be tormented all their life long: and when they looke to inioy the goods that they haue gathered together, Gods curse doth so vter it selfe vpon them, that they cannot do themselves any good with them: inasmuch that although they haue their garners & storehouses full fraught, and their bagges full of mony; yet doth God sende them diseases or such other afflictions, by which he holdeth them as it were vpon  $\bar{y}$  torture or rackes: as if he should say: What hast thou done thou wretched creature? Thou hast offended mee all the time of thy life, and yet hast thou borne thy selfe in hande that all shoulde goe well with thee if thou mightest heape vp riches ynowe. But thou must now be made to knowe, that all thy raking vp of the riches which thou canst not inioy, will stand thee in no steede. Thus yee see what reward they haue which will needes enrich themselves as it were in despite of God: inasmuch that all their scrappings to themselves on all hands by vnlawfull means, are but as cordes to snare their children withall, as experience sheweth. And therefore let vs be thoroughly perswaded in our selues, that if we will prosper, the onely blessing of God must suffice: vs though wee haue not all things at wil. When we haue taken neuer so much paines, yet must we not trust in the strength of our owne hands, nor bee so blinded with sonde presumption as to say, I am an able man, I am politike & can take paines. But let euerie man referre himselfe to God, knowing that it is he which giueth him sustentance. And although I take neuer so much paines to get my living: yet must I haue it at his hand, and when I haue asked my ordinarie breade to day, I must doe the like to morrow too, and yeeld my selfe to the wil of him that giueth it mee. Thus much concerning the first point, where mentio is made of Gods blessing of the workes of mens hands. And therewithall let vs call to minde what hath bene declared therof more at large heretofore, where our Lorde willett men to consider how it is onely hee that beareth the sway in making our labours to prosper. Let that serue for one point.

And now let vs come to the seconde point: which is, that if wee desire to bee partakers of Gods blessing, we must first yeeld him his right: for if he be defrauded of it, he wil reuenge it vpon vs. And that is the cause why hee saith by his Prophet, Do ye complain that ye be afflicted? Consider the cause, saith hee. Yee haue defrauded mee. Wh. reof? Of my Tythes, Firstfruites, and all other thinges. Yee beare your selues in hande that yee increase your selues greatly by robbing of mee, and that ye game much by defrauding mee of my right. The people of Israel were so witlelle, that they stole the tythes; or if they tythed, they did it but by halues: and likewise of their firstfruits, in steede of making good fullsome sheaues and bundels vnto God, they gelded them and made them verie thinne and lanke: and yet these miserable wretches bare themselves in hande that they benefited themselves greatly by laying vp some little quantitie more than they ought to haue done. Contrariwise our Lorde saith vnto them: Goe to firsts, shoulde yee haue either riches, or firstfruites, or any croppes at all, but by my blessing? And think ye that your filching away of any of thinges that belong to me, shall boote you? No no: ye must needes be wasted and dye for hunger by reason of your vnthankfulness. Therefore let vs learne to yeelde God the things which he receiuethe to himselfe: and then will hee bleesse vs. As howe? When we bee to be sustained, the situations that God requireth of vs, are that we should waite vpon him, and sue to his meere gracious goodnesse for all things requisite to the maintenance of this flightfull life. And afterward when he hath giuen vs whereon to lue, we must vse the same soberly, that our life being ruled after that fashion, may be as another sacrifice to him, and consequently that we giue our neighbours part with vs. Let such as haue wherewith imparte to the poore that want: and let euerie man beware that hee filch away none other mens goods, and let vs be contented with our competent foode and raiment as God listeth to bestowe vpon vs: and in so doing we shall be blest at his hand. But what? Our distrustfulness, our excess, and our vn-satiablenesse cause God to withdrawe his blessing from vs, and that we are, as it were divided vp. Also it is seene that in steade of going forwarde we goe backward: and what doe wee therupon? Such as haue plenty can no skil to vse it according to Gods ordinance, and to bee thankfull to him for the abundance which hee sendeth them, but they woulde still haue more & more. O say they, this is not ynough for me, & though it be ynough for me, yet it is not ynough for my children. And so wee fall to gathering of more & more. But to consider how we come by it, and whether it bee lawfull before God or no, we neuer hearken after it: we goe to it by hooke and by crooke, and we neuer thinke that wee shall come to a reckening for it before God. To this point (I say) are we come nowadays. And therefore it is no wonder though wee seele no blessing of God, but that wee bee faine to be set besides it. Again we may see hereby howe colde and faint our prayers are: for our asking of our daily breade at Gods hand is but from the teeth outward: and therefore it is good reason that wee shoulde receiue as skant and slender frute as appeareth that we do. Wherefore let vs mark, that if wee intende to seele Gods blessing, and that hee should continue the same towards vs; wee must offer vp our selues in sacrifice, and all that euier hee giueth vs, so as all may be wholly dedicated vnto him. And when wee see the vfe that he alloweth of, let euery of vs behaue himselfe thereafter, that God may be glorified by vs as his intent is to be.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to graunt vs the grace to come to him with humilitie, forie for prouoking him so many wayes as wee doe without ceasings and to vouchsafe so to burie our offences, as wee preace into the presence of his maiestie by meanes of our Lorde Iesus Christ, to bee guided by his holy spirit, and to be confirmed more and more in this; that hee holdeth and auoweth vs for his children. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth &c.

The XCij. Sermon which is the first vpon the fifteenth Chapter.

AT the terme of seuen yeares thou shalt make a yeare of Freedome.
 2 And the maner of the freedome shal be after this sort. Euerie creditor shall release the debt of his hande which he hath lent vnto his neighbour, and he shall not constraene his neighbour nor his brother: for it is called the yeare of the Lords release.

3 Thou maist compell a straunger, but as for thy brother, forgive him.

4 In any wise let there bee no poore bodie among you: for the Lorde will blesse thee in the Lande which the Lorde thy God giueth thee for an heritage to possesse,

5 Yea if thou obey the voice of the Lord thy God in keeping and performing all his commaundements which I commaunde thee this day.

6 For the Lord thy God will blesse thee, as he hath promised, so as thou shalt lende vnto manie folke, and not borrow of any. Thou shalt reigne ouer many Nations, and they shall not reigne ouer thee.

E hauchere a Lawe for the releasing of such as were indetted. Now wee knowe
 that GOD governed y lewes according to their owne rudenes, insomuch that he graunted them a tolleration in many thinges because they were a people harde to be ruled. Yet notwithstanding hee ceased not by all manner of meanes to allure them to gentleness, to the ende that no man shoulde greue his neighbour beyonde measure, nor vse too extreme rigour, nor deale cruelly one with another. That is the marke which the Lawe shootheth at which I haue read heere presently; so as yee must vnderstande that it was not Lawfull for them to presse any man with his debts in the seuenth yeare. And it hath bene thought that in this place Moses commaunded the cleere forgiuing of all debtes the seuenth yeare. But in that supposal is no reason at all. For if debtes had bene quite and cleane released: much more reason had it bene that such persons as had yielded themselues into bondage for the discharge of their debtes, shoulde haue bene released: for we knowe that the freedome of mens persons is much more acceptable, than the releasing of a debte of money. Must a poore man bee helde as a slaue and make it good with his bodie because hee hath not wherewith to paye that hee oweth; and shall hee bee released which keepeth the money still in his purse, or else vseth some odde byshift, so as hee abydeh freely at home in his owne house? That were no vpriht dealing. But the case stooode so among the lewes, that such as yielded themselues into bondage for the discharge of their debtes, were not set at libertie againe till the yeare of Iubilie which was the fiftith yeare. Therefore it fol-loweth that here is not meant the cleare release of all debtes. For that had bene the way to haue procured more disorder, rather than to haue let downe a rule of courtesie and gentle-nesse. For no man woulde euer haue lent any mony the sixth yeare. Againe, men woulde haue

of all debtes the seuenth yeare. But in that supposal is no reason at all. For if debtes had bene quite and cleane released: much more reason had it bene that such persons as had
 yielded themselues into bondage for the discharge of their debtes, shoulde haue bene re-

 the lewes, that such as yielded themselues into

 not set at libertie againe till the yeare of Iubilie
 which was the fiftith yeare. Therefore it fol-loweth that here is not meant the cleare release
 of all debtes. For that had bene the way to haue procured more disorder, rather than to haue let downe a rule of courtesie and gentle-nesse. For no man woulde euer haue lent any mony the sixth yeare. Againe, men woulde
 haue

haue bene the more hastic in calling for their dettes, so as their detters shoulde haue bene much lesse priuiledged than if there had bene no release at all. Also there are other reasons which are verie sufficient; in so much that euer man shoulde haue bene drinen to sell his owne house and lande. To bee short, it is not to be doubted but that Gods intent here, was to com-mande no more but that the seventh year shoulde be priuiledged. And hereby it appeareth that such as haue interpreted the seventh yeares compassse to be the seventh yeares ende, haue bene too grossly ouer seene. For the making of this law was in respect that the seventh year shoulde be a yeare of solemne rest. Like as God had respected one day in euerie weeke to bee holy to himselfe: so also was it his will that euerie seuenth year shoulde be a high solemnitie, so as the grounde shoulde not bee tilled that yeare.
 The Lande of Iurie was batling ynough to haue borne all yeares, that is to say, men might haue tilled and sowed the grounde euerie yeare sauing the seventh year. And that yeare was spared, not for feare least men shoulde haue worne away the heart of the soyle too neere: but to the ende that the people shoulde inure themselves continually to the day of rest, because it conteyned the chiefe point of the Law, that is to wit, that men ought to gather their wittes to them, to giue themselves wholly to the minding of Gods benefices, whereby it is shewed them that they shoulde renounce themselves, and referre themselves wholly to his holy spirite, to bee so gouerned by him, as that their affections and thoughts may no more ou-uermaister them. And indeede, because the Iewes did breake the day of rest, and the Prophetes coulde not winne them to ycelde to that which was commaunded them: our Lorde saith that hee woulde punish them in such sorte, that sith they woulde not, the Lande should take rest for them. Forasmuch as you (saith he) will not keepe the Saboth dayes accordingly as I haue ordeyned in my Lawe: I will shortly finde out one that shall obserue my Lawe, and that shall be the Lande it selfe. For ye shalbe driuen out of it, and none shall be left in it to manure it; all the Sabothes that haue bene broken must be put into a reckening, that they may be recompensed againe. Thre score and tenne yeares were the people banished out of it. And looke howe many commaundementes there are, so many tokens were there continually of the solemne resting times. What resting times? Not euerie seventh day, or euerie seventh yeare only: but for the space of seuentie yeares together was the Lande to take rest. Yee see then that this seventh yeare was a confirmation of the fourth commaundement of the lawe, that is to wit, of keeping holy the seventh day. For in that yeare (as I said) men tilled not the ground.
 And why? To the ende that folke shoulde haue the better leisure to giue themselves to the ser-uing of God, and be not so much letted by their busines, as indeede they had the more libertie to minde this lesson, and to bee well instructed in Leuit. 26. 34

 38. & Jer.
 17. 27. &
 Ezecc. 20. 13

the doctrine of God. And for the same cause also was it commaunded, that the booke of the Lawe shoulde bee read openly euerie seventh yeare at the feast of Tabernacles, as wee shall see hereater in the one and thirtieth Chapter.

Nowe that we haue Gods meaning, which is that his ordeining of the seventh yeare was to the end that the people should haue some easement: let vs assure our selues that the saboth day was not inoynd without cause. Not only to giue men to vnderstand that our Lorde had for-bidden that any man should be sued for his detts that yeare (for that was likewise done euerie weeke): but also to auoid the thing which wee objected in the eight and fiftith of Esay, against such as through hypocrisie obserued the ieast, but yet cealed not any whit the more to sue for their dettes. Verily I am much beholden to you, saith the Lorde: for yee say yee haue fasted, and obserued my Ceremonies. But yet is all that euer yee haue done, nothing worth: for the verie substance of it wanteth; whereas yee should be pitifull to your neighbours, yee do nothing elie but fleece them and persecute them to the vttermost. And surely that is a goodly observing of the Saboth. Therefore doe I renounce you, and I disauow all your doings, saith the Lord.

Esa. 58. 3

So then, we haue here the end of the Law that is set downe here, and also the thing which the same commaundeth. For like as God ment not that men shoulde pleade the seventh day, to the end they might be the better drawn to obserue that feast, which was to gather men to God, and to cause them to rest in him: so ment he also co-nerning the seventh year: namely that the Iewes shoulde giue themselves to vpright dealing: in so much that if it were not lawfull to gar-ther the fruites of the earth, and that the fruites which grewe without tilth were common, so as the poore which had no possessions were parta-kers of them: it was much more reason that if a man were ouerpinched, he should not be pursued with rigour of Lawe. But in the yeare of Iubyle, which was euerie fiftith yeare; there was a greater freedom, and such a one as extended much further. For if a man were in bondage, hee was then made free, vnlesse it were that hee liked so well of his master, that he bound himselfe to bee his slaue for euer as long as he liued. Afterward, all possessions returned home againe. True it is that the houses in Cities could not reuert again, vnlesse y<sup>e</sup> sellers of them redeemed them within a yeare. But as for Farmes, and other possessions in the countrie; the purchaser was to conuey them backe againe at the fiftith yeare, so as they returned home againe to their former owners. And according to the neerenes or farnesse of the yeate of Iubyle, men sold their possessions the dearer or the cheaper: in so much that the lands so purchased were released againe within thirtie, twentie, or ten yeares after the purchasing of the. And of this dealing there was one special reason; which was y<sup>e</sup> God hauing diuided y<sup>e</sup> Land of Canaan by lot, inteded to haue it continue in that order for euer, to the ende that mens possessions should not be intermingled together.
 that

And hee saith expressly, Other Nations possesse their landes in fee simple: but I holde you as my farmours. I will not haue you to be as owners, so as yee might say this is mine: neither shall yee bee as purchasers of the Lande at my hande; yee shall haue as it were but a sojourning place in it for a time, and yee shall bee but as a Farmer vnder a master. Loe heere the cause why our Lordes will was that the possessions shoulde returne to the first owners againe. But as for that which is spoken heere, concerneth but the seventh year, at which time euery man ought to bee released, and no man ought to seue his detters, yet euery man ought to reteyne his owne right neuerthelesse still. For Gods meaning was not that hee which had lent money should lose it, so as hee shoulde haue no meanes to recouer his dette againe: (for so shoulde one man haue robbed another of his substance; and the vntrusting merchant that had wasted his goods in riot and excessse at his ease without care, shoulde haue laughed his creditor to scorn as scone as the seventh year were come, which had bene a greate disorder, and woulde haue caused vnthrifts to haue become the worse); but Gods intent was onely that there shoulde a kinde of respite bee giuen, that the poorer sort might not be pinched out of measure.

But nowe let vs returne to that which is set downe in the texte. In the seventh year there shall bee a Forgiuing, that is to say, a forbearing or a giuing of further respite. Hee meaneth not that there shoulde bee a cleare acquittall or releasing for euer: but onely that hee which had lent money, shoulde not challenge his dette out of hande, nor bee so greedie and hastie as to seeke it by lute of Lawe that yeare. And hee speaketh expressly of the ende of the year, to shewe that this forbearing or respitting shoulde not onely bee at the beginning of the year, but euen throughout to the seventh yeares ende. And here God meant to bounde his Lawe according to the circumstance: that is to saye, because the seventh year was a kinde of resting time as well as the seventh day was; therefore our Lordes will was that the same shoulde bee obserued. Therefore saith hee, as the terme: howbeit not to signifie the ende of the year, but to betoken the continuance of the time appointed by the Lawe. You shall giue a respite saith hee, and the manner thereof shall bee thus: If any man owe thee aught, thou shalt not constraîne him, at leastwise for the dette of thy hande. As if hee had saide, thou shalt not take the thing by force, but shalt rather forbear the dette. And why so? For this forbearing commeth specially of God: that is to saye, God referueth that yeare specially to himselfe, and hee will haue it openly proclaimed as it was indeede, and hee will haue the order thereof to be kept.

Hee addeth, In any wise let there bee no poore bodie among you. This speech is somewhat darke, because the first worde that Moses vseth, signifieth Nothing, or it is not as all: and sometimes when it is ioyned with another worde, (as it is in this place,) it betokeneth except that, or saving that. And for that cause some men vnderstande that our Lorde setteth downe an exception heere, namely so there were no poore folkes. For if the detters were riche; they might alwayes bee well contented to pay. But the poorer fort were to bee borne with, and to haue some easement; the vexing of who after y<sup>e</sup> sort, was a kind of sucking of their blood, and a drawing of the marrowe out of their bones. Againe the seventh yeares respite was as a meane for them to gather somewhat towards their discharge.

Moreouer there was the more cause why the poore shoulde bee borne withal the seventh yeare, the ground was not tilled that yeare, and therefore Corne might become the dearer by reason that there was no gathering of any thing that yeare. For it was not with them in those dayes as it is with vs in these dayes, that when one peece of ground lay fallowe, as they say, another peece was with corne, so as they might haue a croppes euery yeare one after another wherewith to finde themselves. In the Lande of Iewrie they gathered not so much as one kernell of wheate, Otes, or other kinde of graine in the seventh year, neither was it lawfull for them to till the grounde that yeare: by reason whereof the poorer sort had much adoe to get their liuing by their labour and trauell. That was the cause why some haue taken it to bee as an exception when our Lorde saide, if peradventure you haue no poore among you. Well may we demaunde your detts of such as are welthie and well able to pay; but beware that ye pinch not your neighbours that are behinde hande. Other some take it thus: So as there bee no poore among you; that is to say, deale in such wise as no man bee brought vnder foote by you, but that the poore and meaner sort may liue with the rich: and let no man bee so greedily minded as to put things out of order by his excessse, like the great fishes that eat vp the smaller fishes: Take heede that yee vie no such cruellnesse towards your neighbours. Also a man might take the said word as betokening Nothing; as though our Lorde had spoken after our common manner and saide, No, no, there must bee no poore among you. But as for the meaning of the Lawe, it is certaine ynough to vs, which thing ought to suffice vs, and it is all that wee shoulde looke for.

Therefore let vs vnderstand that our Lordes intent was to say here in fewe wordes, that men ought to behaue themselves so friendly, as no man were oppressed, and that although it lie not in men to let that there should not bee both poore and rich among them: yet they should to deale as the poorer fort were not troden vnder foote. For wee see that such as are welthie do lay their snares, and catch whatsoeuer they can come by, so as the poorer fort eare not come neere the:

and if they get but the value of a pinne at their hands, they fleece them of it by and by againe. Therefore it was our Lordes intent to prouide a remedie for that mischiefe among his people. Nowe remaineth that wee apply this matter to our owne behoofe. True it is that this order belonged peculiarly to the Iewes; but yet doth it concerne vs also; namely that we shoulde not vexe them out of measure, which are indetted vnto vs. And it may well bee among those that beare the name of Christians, that they wil not goe to lawe vpon the Sabbath day; and the reason is, that vpon that day every man ought to haue leasure to withdrawe himselfe to Godwarde, to minde his workes, that wee may all of vs be prouoked to serue and honour him. For, all our life long wee ought to giue our selues to praying and supplication. Neuerthelesse comon meetings are made that men may heare the comon doctrine of saluation, and it is good reason that on the Sabbath day all other cares and thoughts should be laide aside. Notwithstanding let vs take good heede that wee keepe not the single Ceremony onely, but also the intent of God therewithall, which is, that our neighbours be not so vexed by vs, as they may haue occasion to despise God, and to be cast into despaire. For our Lorde will haue vs giue such respite as the poore may not bee ouer grieued. Wee see howe he saith in other places, that wee must not take a poore mans mattres, from vnder him: As for example, when a man hath broken payment, if hee bring his bedde to lay to gage, our Lorde forbiddeth the taking thereof, and likewise the taking of a poore mans tyme which hee hath neede of to weare. For if he be a cold (saith he) and thou keepest his bed from him, although hee speake neuer a worde, yet shall his sides curse thee, because thou beest so hardhearted that thou hast no pitie of him when thou seest him afflicted in his bodie. And albeit that the poore man be patient in his aduersitie, yet doeth God in heauen consider thy crueltie, and in the ende he will reuenge it. Contrariwise he that giueth his poore neighbour his gage againe, and is spitefull towards him that he cannot find in his heart to see him indure necessitie: although the partie so releued do play the Churl, and regarde not the good that hath bin done vnto him: yet shall hee haue his good deede to answere for him before me, saith the Lord.

Yee see then that we must be kindhearted both generally and particularly as time requireth. As how? If there come a yeare of dearth, many men will seeke to enrich themselves by it, and they beare themselves in hande, that it is a time euen for their owne tooth; and it is a thing too much vsed nowadayes, as it hath bin at all times heretofore; and woulde God we coulde forget it. But we shall see a number that lye in waite like skouts or spies, and if there come a deare yeare, O say they, this serues well to make me rich; when as in verie deede it is the time wherein they should open their bowels to haue compassion of such as are in necessitie. Wee see that poore folke haue much ado to maintaine themselves though they be succoured: yea and such as heretofore haue bene able to lue in their owne houses without being pinched ouer nere, are nowe driuen to borrow. And why is that? They haue their ordinarie earnings as before: but corne and wine are at such excessive prices, that they be not able to buy them; every man thinks away and holdes himselfe short. And as for the rich man that hath wherewith to lue, his minde is vpon nothing else but howe he may enrich himselfe. O (saith he) this is a fatte yeare for mee, for it is a leane yeare for all others. Alas, heere is a wretched regarde. So then let vs learne that our Lordes meaning by this Lawe is not that we shoulde forbear to relecue such as are (as yee woulde say) vnder shiken already; but that if wee fee a man that hath much ado to maintaine himselfe, we shoulde not ruine vpon him to ouertrowe him altogether. As howe? If I see a man a little behinde hand, and I haue a mind to some corne grounde or vnyyard of his; loe hee is in fite case for my purpose; and if I take him at the vantage, hee is vndone by it, & it is vnpossible for him to scape vter ruine. And when a man hauing that regard to selfe profite, indeuoureth to catch away the poore mans possessions; surely although there were no Lawe of God at all: yet doeth euen naturall equitie condemne it. But heere our Lorde sheweth vs his will, which is, that whensoever wee see any man distressed, wee shoulde spare him so much the more, vntill hee haue some meanes to recouer himselfe againe; and that wee shoulde not lye in waite to catch from him at euerie occasion that is offered to further the matter: but rather that wee shoulde vse such vprightnesse as to saye, If I care with him hee will pay mee one time or other, I see hee is willing ynough, I see hee woulde paye mee mine owne and doe as much for mee if hee were not ouerpressed otherwise; and seeing I knowe him to bee such a one, shall I nowe set vpon him with rigour? That were euen as much as though I woulde curte asunder his hamstrings that hee might bee able to goe no further. I see he is scarce able to drawe his legges asier him, and therefore if I should fall to cutting of his sinewes asunder, and so sell him downe altogether; if hee bee vterly ouertrowen for want of lending him my helping hand at his neede, am not I the cause thereof? Shall not his pouer be Erie out for vengeance against mee vnto God?

Nowe wee see howe this Lawe serues as a policie among the Iewes, and yet neuerthelesse that it sheweth vs Gods will at this day, because it teacheth vs to beare with the poore and needie. To be short, let vs marke that our sparing of the poore after that fashion, is an acceptable sacrifice to God, and that after the same manner, he will accept all other seruices that we do vnto him; where as if wee performe neuer so manie Ceremonies, and in the meane while haue no equitie nor vpright meaning in vs, we do but prouoke Gods wrath according to the saying of the Prophet Esay which I haue alledged already. If wee resort to sermons, and shewe our selues to haue neuer so great zeale and good will to Gods wordes; and yet for all that, euerie of vs do practise wicked deuises to ouerthrowe our neighbours, so as we seeke to deuout one another like dogges and cattes: our Lorde shalbe much beholding to vs for giuing care to his sayings, when in the meane while wee make none account of the keeping of them. Nay contrariwise, let vs consider that our comming hither is to bee indued to brotherly loue, so as the rich may beare with the poore, and that where any pouertie is among vs, they may be so prouided for as they may still come forward, and bee so comforted as they may eate the breade which God giueth them, with thanksgiuing, and not be driuen to despair, nor the name of God bee thereby blasphemed. And wee must not tarie till the time of forbearing be proclaimed by the sounde of a trumpet: but wee must holde our selues contented with Gods lowde crying our vnto vs from day to day. And this worde must sounde into our hearts: By which God requirerth that wee should so partake with our neighbours that they should no manner of way be grieved by vs: Againe wee must not looke for a seuenth yere, because wee must haue at this present a continuall rest: Seeing that God hath ridde vs from the olde bondage of the lawe; and therefore hee will haue vs to rest our selues all our life long in him: let vs therefore giue rest to our neighbours, so as they may bee releued and not haue any occasion of heartburning against vs for our despising and reiecting of them; but that the fatherly loue which God sheweth towards vs, may be as a bande to tie vs together in brotherly good will as members of one bodie, so as no man doe misse his brother any more than y hand would misse the foote, because it woulde turne to the hurt of it selfe. And therefore let vs haue the same consideration of our selues one towards another. Now let vs proceede to that which God addeth.

He saith that his blessing shalbe vpon the people, so as they shall all prosper, and haue wherewith to lend, & not be driuen to borrow: and that they shall reigne ouer many Nations, and no Nation shall reigne ouer them.

The cause why our Lord addeth this promise, is to confirme the lawe. And at a word (as I haue said heretofore) albeit that our Lord might command after a precise manner: yet doth he apply himselfe to vs, in deuouring to win vs to him, that we should obey him with a free heart, and not goe to worke by compulsion and constraint. Yee see then that y thing which he requirerth of vs, is y wee should offer him freewill offerings as they terme them. But let vs marke that the vpright dealing which wee haue treated of, serued but onely for the Iewes. And therefore this promise, I will blesse you, answereth thereunto. For it was lawfull for the Iewes to pursue strangers, such as were not circumcised. After that maner ment Moses. But if any strangers receiued the lawe of Moses, they were priuiledged, as being of the bodie of the Iewish people. But as for them that worshiped not the God of Israel, & were among them but onely in way of traffike or for some other affaires: they ioyed not the benefite of this law whereby the sewing of men for det was forbidden. And the reason thereof was that they kept not the Sabbath for any deuotions sake. True it is that they were faine to rest themselves whether they woulde or no; it was not lawfull for them in any wise to worke; they were driuen to submit themselves to Gods ordinance: but yet in the meane while they had no desire to serue the God of Israel. And therefore they were not to be spared as in respect of common policy. But nowe that Gods grace is shed forth euery where, we must not make any more difference between Iewe and Gentile. For (as saith Saint Paul) our Lorde Iesus Christ hath broken downe the partition wall, to the end that being adopted of God for his children, wee should maintaine brotherly vnite among our selues, and euerie of vs acknowledge his neighbour to bee as his brother.

And as touching this promise, it was restrained for that time to y people of Israel. But nowadayes, forasmuch as Gods promises are common to all men because hee hath shewed himselfe to be the father indifferently of all men: let vs vnderstand that our Lorde declarerth here in general, that if we feare him and keepe his commandements, hee will blesse vs and make vs to prosper: And this promise must bee referred to the circumstance of the place. For wee see howe couetousnesse prouoketh vs to catch what wee can from our neighbours, because we be euer afraid of want. O (say we) If I may not haue mine owne, what a thing were it? True it is that our Lotde doeth indeede permit euery man to haue his right: but yet must not euery man bee so giuen ouer to himselfe and to his own profite, that he should haue no regarde to spare those whom he holdeth as his vnderlings. For whosoever hath no regard of him: that standeth at his mercie; surely he can finde in his heart, not onely to lue vpon the parties labour, but also euen to sucke his blood. If I becaue a man of the meane whereby hee should followe his little trade, so as he is brought vtterly vnder foote: it is all one as if I maimed him in his body, so as I made him to pine away all his life after. So then let vs marke well, that as touching this promise, our Lord had an eye to the egeritnesse which euery of vs hath to draw to himselfe. And why do wee so? Because we be astraide least we should want. And therefore our Lord saith, No, make more account of my blessing than of all that euer ye can gather. When ye haue vied at the craft and force ye can deuise to fish to your selues by hook & by crooke, and when yee haue gathered neuer so howge a heape of goods together: al that shal not boote you so much as my blessing, that I multiplye you and giue you so much as shall suffice to maintaine you withall. And although yee haue not so greate store of things at once, as you coulde finde in your heartes to wish: yet will I make the things available which yee haue in your handes. And if it bee but little, yet shall it be so enlarged, that yee shall lue at your ease. Now we see what Gods meaning is.

And therefore whensoever wee be tempted by

by vnbeliefe to catche other mens goods; Let vs bethinke our selues thus : howenowe? Shall we become rich in despite of God? At whose hande haue we our liuing : Haue wee it not of his meere liberalitie? Nowe hee hath not promoted his blessing to any other than to such as walke in integritie, and do so beare with their neighbours, that they trample them not vnder their feete through ouergreat rigour. But if I will needes enrich my selfe by hooke and by crooke; then doe I spite God and prouoke his wrath against mee; and what hope is there then that God will blesse mee? Nay rather his horrible curse must needes light vpon mee. Therefore let vs thinke aduisedly vpon these things.
And that wee may so doe, Let vs consider howe it is he that giueth wherewith to finde and feede vs, and that hee must bee faine to preferue the things that hee hath giuen vs, and to make them available for our vse; or otherwise we may well doe what wee can, and trot vp and downe; but all shall bee but lost labour. God (say I) must bee faine to open his hande to giue vs wherewith to liue. And when he hath once gi-uen it, hee must also maintaine it. For it might slippe away from vs euery minute of an houre, if hee should not make vs to inioy still the things that he hath giuen vs. Thirdly hee must also bee faine to giue vs the meane to it, and to turne the things to our benefite which hee hath put into our handes. For if wee put them to any other vse, wee shall woonder to see howe they shall come to naught. And why? Because Gods blessing faileth vs. Yee see then howe the thing which we haue to consider when our flesh is so forwarde as to prouoke vs to greue our neighbours; is that wee must thinke thus with our selues; yea, but what shall I gaine in the end when God is against me? Sure I am that I ought to thinke my selfe beholden to him for all thinge;
and though I had all the worlde vnder my winge; yet were it nothing worth vnlesse God blessed me. Sith it is so, I must haue an eye to him, and bethinke mee well howe I may obtaine his blef-sing by inlarging my heart towards my neighbours after his example, who sheweth himselfe so liberal towards me.

And Saint Paul giueth the selfesame admo-nition, not onely to cause vs to spare those that are in our dette: but also to induce vs to doe almeedeedes, and to succour the needie: for hee fendeth vs to him that giueth vs seede to sowe.
Come on sirres (saith he): thinke yee that yee haue lost your labour when ye haue compassion vpon the poore, and bestow almes vpon them?
No no: no more than the husbandman that lay-eth his seede into the ground; for he looketh to reape his crop againe at Haruesttime. Therefore when ye doe almeedeedes, ye sowe: and your God auoweth that hee receiueth with his owne hande, whatsoeuer yee giue to the poore, yea and that hee will make it to returne euerie whit of it to your owne benefite, so as yee shall reape fruit of it, not onely at that great haruest time which shall be at the last day; but also euen in this transitorie life; your God will make you to per-ceiue that your almeedeedes are acceptable to him, and you shall be so much the more increased by them. And for prooffe thereof (saith he) is it not hee that giueth the Corne euery yeare to sowe? When the husbandman hath sowed his grounde, howe could hee lose it againe the next yeare, vnlesse God gaue it a heade againe?

Consider then that when God giueth you wherwith to doe Almeedeedes, it is to the intent to make it fruitful to you. It is al one as if he should giue you seede in your hande and say, that if yee intende to gather fruit of it, yee must first cast it into the grounde. Will the husbandman keepe his corne still in his Garner? Wil he leaue his Lande vnplowen for feare of bestowing some quantitie of graine vpon it? Euen so when yee see an vnplowen grounde, that is to say a poore neighbour whom God offereth vnto you, leaue him not vnplowen still, but bee freeliehearted towards him, and God will not suffer the seede to be lost which yee haue bestowed vpon him, but will make it to yeelede yee fruite out of hande.
And so yee see whereunto the promise that is set downe heere tendeth, namely Your God will multiplie you in the Lande which hee hath promised you.

Heere Moses did put the people expressly in mind that their hauing of the Land of Chanaan was of Gods gifte. As if he should say, whence come the goods that yee haue, but out of the earth? And is that Lande yours? No verily, nor as in seemple. Ye haue it but as baylyfes, Your God will be known continually to bee the Lorde and master of it. Seeing then that he betaketh the Lande vnto you, may hee not at least-wise require some of the fruite thereof at your handes? And that is done when you be pitifull towards the poore. That is the thing which Moses had respect vnto, when he saide, This lande hath bene promised you, and your God will giue it you in possession. True it is that at this day wee haue not the Land of Chanaan as the Iewes had: but yet wherefoeuer wee liue, we be harboured there as it were by the hand of God, and it is he that findeth vs. Seeing then that we haue our life and all things else of him, let vs know that it is good reason that we should comfort our neighbours, and that wee should vse compassion towards the in bearing with them, at leastwise if wee will haue God to continue his welding towards vs. To be short whensoever wee be not sufficiently stirred vp to referte our selues to the blessing of God; let vs repaire to things which wee knowe by experience. Men cannot finde in their heartes to trust vnto God, but rather are caried away and inflamed with their owne wicked lustes, deceites, and leawd practises, so as they passe not howe they come by things so they haue them. But when wee behaue our selues after that leawd fashion, and passe not for the blessing of God as we ought to doe: Let vs come to the exhortation that Moses maketh in this place to vs; namely, that if I haue nothing of myne owne, I hold all things of my God. And seeing it is so that hee hath fed me and maintained me vnto this day: should

Matt. 6. 4.

I nor put my selfe still into his hande? Though I had a thousand times more thā I haue, yet would it soone be swallowed vp: but if I haue very little yea and yet lesse, my God who hath not failed mee vnto this houre, will continue his blessing still, and that ought to suffice mee. Seeing then that experience (which is the schoolemistres of fooles as they say) sheweth vs howe strong Gods blessing is: are we not too leawd if we folow not y thing that is tolde vs in this text, that is to wit, if we haue not pitie vpon our poore brethren, seeing wee haue his promise, the performance whereof wee haue had accomplished by effect? That is the point wherein God will haue a triall of the loue that we beare to him. Now he saith that mercie is more worth than all the sacrifices in the world: and therefore hee will haue vs to honour him y way, that is to say by pitying of our poore brethren, by succouring them, and by bearing with them when it lyeth in our power to trouble them: assuring our selues that God accepteth the things that are so done to our neighbours for his sake. And he will not onely shewe himselfe liberall towards vs by making vs to feele the fruite of our Almesdeeds; but he will also continually increase his benefits vpon vs, in such sort that by means thereof wee shall haue continuall cause to blesse him and to glorifie his holy name.

And now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgment of our faults, praying him to vouchsafe to wipe the out, so as they may not hinder vs from being receiued at his hand: and that if he make vs to feele his fauour euen in this corruptible life, wee may much more bee inuironed rounde about with all his spirituall benefites, that we may fo grow in them more and more, as wee may not bee helde backe by the brittle things of this world, but rather so vse them as wee may keepe on our way still, and communicate together after such a sort, as it may be to the exercising of the faith which wee haue in God, and in his pure doctrine, and for the confirming of vs in the hope which we haue of the heritage of heauen, so as wee may tende euer thitherwarde, as wee bee daily called thither by the preaching of his worde. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth &c.

On Saturday the xxvj. of October. 1555.

The XCiiij. Sermon which is the second vpon the fiftenth Chapter.

7 If a brother of thine become poore within any of the gates in the Lande which the Lord thy God giueth thee, thou shalt not harden thy heart nor shut thy hand from thy brother that is poore.

8 But thou shalt open thy hand bountifully, and lend him sufficiently for his neede wherewith he is pinched.

9 Beware that there be no point of pcutifnes in thy heart, that thou say not, the seventh year which is the year of respiting is at hande, and thereupon thou haue a wicked eye against thy poore brother, so as thou giue him nothing; and then hee crieth against thee to the Lorde thy G O D, so as it become sinne vnto thee.

10 Thou shalt giue him freely, and let not thy heart repine at thy giuing vnto him: for because of this the Lorde thy God will blesse thee in all thy woorkes, and in all that euer thou puttest thy hande vnto.

Ere Moses goeth on with y same matter that was ripped vp yesterday, that is to wit, that in the seventh year dettes should be respited, to the intent that the poore shoulde not bee sued nor molested. And I told you that the meaning thereof was not that they shoulde be quite and cleane forgiven, but that the poore shoulde be so much eased. Now Moses addeth a larger declaration, That the same ought not to hinder men from lending liberally when any bodie had neede. And this is added because men doe alwayes goe about to defraude the Law. Although equitie be shewed vs ricuer so plainly, and that the Lawes bee set neuer so well together: yet are men so surde in naughtinesse, that they finde alwayes some starting hole, to beare the worlde in hand that they haue not offended the Lawe, and yet the intent of the Lawe maker is defrauded. This is a thing too much accustomed; and woulde God there were not too many examples of it in experience. But what? When men thinke themselves to haue set things in a good order as can be, a thousand means are deuised to scape from them, and thereof commeth so much brabbling in Law. For the end of good Lawes is to stop the way to all prateres. that there might bee no debate bate not quarelling among men, but that euery man might haue his owne right . And inasmuch as Lawes doe shewe that whoſoever offendeth muſt be puniſhed; is it not a mean to hold euery man in awe? But as I ſaide afore , the Law ſerues vs but to deuife wicked ſhifts how to do hurt and harme vntill our hearts be reformed. Neuertheleſſe, our Lords meaning in this text, was to provide that the Law which he had ſet downe ſhould be kept, and that men ſhould not take occaſion thereat to withholde themſelues from ſuccouring ſuch as are in neceſſitie. And yet notwithstanding, that which is ſpoken here was not onely wreſted to the defrauding of the Law; but alſo applied much worſe. For ſuch as were too much wedded to their owne profite, tooke occaſion at Gods law to do leſſe good and to ſhew leſſe mercie to their neighbours than otherwiſe they woulde haue done. For why? Had it bene lawfull for them to haue ſued men at all times, ſo as they might haue required their right at all times without exception: they woulde haue lent money in the ſixth yeare as well as in the firſt, and they woulde haue made no bones at all at it. But nowe that a Lawe was ſet forth, that there ſhoulde bee a forbearing of it in the ſeuenth yeare, if a poore man required ſuccour, euery man thought thus with himſelfe: if I lende him money nowe , it is layde a water, I looſe a whole yeare occupying of it, and what a thing is that? It were better that this good fellowe ſhoulde goe prouide himſelfe where hee can: for I intende not to hazarde my ſelfe in this wiſe: for what can I tell what will befall within a yeare and a halfe? There needeth but a little hinderance, and beſide, hee may fall into further pouertie, and then am I cut ſhort of my money. Thus ye ſee how euery man woulde ſhrinke away, and vnder colour that God had commaunded men to vſe gentleneſſe towards their neighbours in the ſeuenth yeare; the poore were diſappointed of help and reliefe, and their throates were cut, ſo as there was no way for them to eaſe themſelues of their want.

And hereby wee ſee yet better, that men not onely be ſtulle in deuſing new ſhiftes from time to time, to couer their miſdoings; but alſo y<sup>e</sup> whē they haue neuer ſo good and iuſt Lawes, they turne them to the cleane contrarie. And this commeth to paſſe not onely in worldly government, but alſo euen in matter concerning God: wherein we ſee y<sup>e</sup> horrible corruption of our nature. And this is one point well worthy to be noted. When ſuch as are in authoritie ouer vs, as Princes, Magiſtrates, and Judges make Lawes & ſtatutes: if wee breake them, that diſobedience of ours (as Saint Paul ſheweth) toucheth God, and therefore is not to be excuſed. But when as God commeth as it were in his owne perſon, and telleth vs his will as it were with his own mouth: if we then dally with him, and ſtroud ourſelues by ſhifts and ſittleries as though hee were not able to ſee vs: is not that a diuiliſh malapeartnes? But there is yet a farre greater and more outrageous extremity, as I ſaid afore. God goeth about to rule our life aright, he ſeerh vs pitifully wandering in our own affections: he ſetteth vs down an order what to doe: and his will ought to bee as a definitiue ſentence for vs to ſtande vnto, ſo as wee ought to inquire no further: for we know that whatſoever God alloweth, is perfect righteousneſſe. Nowe when hee hath bene ſo gracious to vs as to teach vs, What doe we? Wee not onely fall to diſſemble in his Lawe, but alſo turne al order vpside downe, and tranſgreſſe the verie Lawes themſelues which hee giueth vs to direct vs by: Sith wee ſee ſuch frowardneſſe, wee haue good cauſe to miſlike of our ſelues, and to condemne our ſelues vtterly. And therefore ſeeing wee be of malicious and froward nature, let vs learne to ſuſpect our ſelues, and to yeeld to Gods good will, that when he hath giuen vs his Lawe, he may alſo giue vs the grace to receiue it with all ſingleneſſe of heart, ſo as it may bee to our benefite, and that we may not turne liſe into death, nor light into darkeneſſe. Thus ye ſee what we haue to remember in the firſt place.

Secondly it behoueth vs to marke here, that the keeping of the outward forme of the Lawe is not all that we haue to doe: but that wee muſt ſpecially obſerue the ſubſtance of the Lawe. Will wee proue our obedience towards God? The way to do it is not by Ceremonies, but to ſeeke out the certaintie of his meaning, and to ſubmit our ſelues thereunto. For men will take good heede to the worldewarde, that they offend not in ſuch wiſe, as they may be puniſhed: and if a man can finde ſome pretie ſhift to excuſe himſelfe withall when hee commeth before the iudge; hee thinkes all his doings to be iuſtifiable ynough. A man then will make no conſcience to offend, ſo he haue wherewith to hide himſelfe when he is reprov'd, and that hee can ſay, as for mee, I vnderſtoode it not ſo: the Law ſaith not ſo. Hee findeth out ſome little worde that carieth a ſhewe of contrarietie to the true meaning of the Lawe, and ſetteth a counterfait conſtruction vpon it, and ſo beares himſelfe in hande that hee hath well ridded his handes of the matter, and that by that meanes he is cleare of it. And therefore let vs learn that it is nothing worth to haue obſerued the Lawe as in reſpect of the outward forme of it, that is to ſay, in ſuch wiſe as men can finde no fault with vs; but that the chiefe point is to lue ſoundly & roundly, accordingly as we ſee here that it was Gods will that in the ſeuenth yeare there ſhould bee a reſpit, that is to wit that men ſhoulde not ſue for their dettes, but ſuffer it to be a reſting-time, as I declared yeſterday.

True it is that the lewes woulde not vtterly tranſgreſſe this order: but yet they thought it ynough for them to diſcharge themſelues of the Ceremonie, and they bare themſelues in hand that God might well holde himſelfe contented with ſuch diſguiſings, when in the meane while the chiefe thing was left vndone. For the poore were not pitied to their reliefe, but rather men tooke occaſion to leaue them vtterly deſtitute. Inſomuch that howe great ſo euer their neede was, they were neuer the more releued, and all vnder colour that men could not recover that which they had lent. Wee see then how men would always appeare God with ceremonies. But let vs beare in minde howe hee saith by his Prophet, that he hath an eye to the soundnesse of the heart. Therefore let vs deale faithfully with our neighbours, if wee will haue God to accept the seruice which we yeeld vnto him.

And nowe let vs come to that which is set downe here. If any of thy brethren (saith hee) bee 10 of fauine behinde hand, as leastwise of such as dwell within thy gates: looke that thou harden not thy heart, neither shew thy hande against him. His speaking peculiarly of the Israelites themselves, was not to giue the Iewes leaue to deuour the goods of the heathen, nor to deale cruelly with them: but his meaning was that there shoulde bee the more friendlinesse vsed among themselves, because that besides the kintred that was among them, there was also an vnion of faith. For GOD 20 had shouled out the lynage of Abraham from the rest of the worlde, and had knitte them together into one bodie, whereof hee himselfe vouchsafed to bee the head: and therefore it was good reason that they shoulde maintaine one another, and be the more inclined one to succor another. But hereof the Iewes tooke occasion, to holde fast all that euer they coulde catch; for they contstrewed all the promises of the holy 30 scripture to their owne aduantage, as though God had laide the bridle on their necks, and had no more care of the Gentyles than of brute beastes. As for example; whereas it is said, Yee shall reigne ouer many Nations; therupon they concluded, Then is it lawfull for vs to execute all manner of Tyrannie vpon the Gentyles, and to eate them vp: for they be vncircumcised and vnclane, and belong not vnto God at all; therefore let vs sucke what wee can possible out of them, and not spare them. Yea and they 40 stretched the worde Lende verie farre: for they stiked not a whit to ouerlode the straungers with vsurie to the vttermost that they coulde beare, without any regarde of vprightnesse. Thus yee see howe the Iewes did alwayes restraine the right of Gods promises, bearing themselves in hande that it behoued them to be a little friendlyer to their neighbours, that is to say to those that were of their owne kintred: And yet euen in y<sup>e</sup> behalfe also they were counted 50 as rauening Wolves, as the Prophet Ieremie vpbraideth them, and as shalbe declared in due place.

But let vs nowe come backe againe to that which is saide here, to applie it to our instruction. If the Iewes vsed this hypocrisie of couering their couetousnesse with a pretence that they might well pill and poll the heathen and Infidels: let vs see if wee our selues doe not the like at this day. True it is that our Lord commendeth vnto vs the housholde folke of faith 60 aboute all others: and yet is it not ment that he giueth vs leaue to fleece such as haue not the knowledge of his worde. For hee hath knitte vs generallye altogether in that hee hath saide by his Prophet Esay, Thou shalt not despise thine owne flesh, in which saying hee comprehendeth all men without exception. Therefore must we behaue our selues vprightly and indifferentlye towards all men; and likewise we must haue pitie and compassion vpon al: For in them we behold our owne nature; but yet for all that, the housholde folke of faith are linked to vs with a much neerer bonde: in respect whereof it is good reason that we shoulde loue them more specially as our brethren. Thus yee see after what maner this text is to be vnderstoode, where God saith If any of thy brethren, that is to say of thine owne countreim. And hee doeth it for that they were linked together in a holie bande, had the true Religion, and were adopted to be the children of God: in consideration whereof it behoued them to bebinke themselves to bee kinde hearted and pitifull one 20 towards another, and yet ought they not to haue despised the rest of the worlde as they did.

And whereas it is saide within thy Gates: it is to shew that the exercising of our charity ought to bee according to our knowledge of mens necessities. For wee bee not able to iudge of all mens needs. True it is that euen without seeing the extremities that are euery where, we ought to be touched with compassion. When we heare of warres, that one Countreie hath bene 30 burned, another spoyled, and all things haue bene turned vpside downe; it is not for vs to go to the place to see what hath bene done. For if we be not too too blockish, we may wel thinke that those things cannot bee doone without horrible confusion. Therefore must we pray for those whome wee neuer sawe: for they touch vs, they bee men as well as wee, they bee reasonable creatures shaped after the 40 image of GOD. And in that respect wee ought to pitie those that are nothing neere vnto vs. But as in respect of succouring, euerie man must straine himselfe according to the neede that hee seeth, for I cannot iudge of those that are farre off from me. But if I see a bodie in present necessitie; then must I be moued to pitie, and I must consider that God prouoketh and calleth me to the succoring of him that is in neede.

Thus yee see why Moses hath set it downe 50 exprefly, that men shoulde haue a regarde of those that are within their gates. The heathen coulde well skill to saye; that although all mankind bee alyed together; yet notwithstanding, the neighbours that are acquainted one with another, ought to vse a speciall friendlinesse in succouring one another. And in deede, euen without anye reading of the holie scripture, euerie man can well skill to saye in his owne behalfe when his neighbour faileth 60 him, Howe nowe? what neybourhood is this? And who teacheth them y<sup>e</sup> lesson? Nature. Here therefore our Lord telleth vs that if we perceiue any of our neighbors to be in necessitie, it ought to stirre vs vp, so as if wee bee not too vnnatural, wee must needs be touched with it wout any further putting of vs in mind thereof. For the thing it selfe speaketh when we see our neighbor so distressed.

Nowe he addeth further, Thou shalt not harden thy heart, nor shut thy hande. Hee might well haue begunne at this point, Thy hand shall not bee shut, for that is the matter which hee tendeth to in effect. But it is not for nought that he saith, Thou shalt not shut vp thy heart. For why, his intent is to prevent the thing that hindereth our welldoing & our succoring of our neighbours that are in distresse: namely, the hardnesse of our hearts. For where pite is, that is to say if we be pitifull, we will inuention to venter it if we haue wherewith. In deede a man shall see a number that can well skill to weep; but al that they can find in their hearts to do, is but to shedde a fewe teares: they cast forth such sighes that a man would thinke their heartes should burst; but to spare one penny out of their purse, that is no part of their thought. Many such hypocrites are to be seene. But let vs haue the true kindeheartednesse in vs, and let vs not be hardhearted, but let our hande euert followe our heart. And that is the cause why our Lorde beganne at this point, That men should not harden their heartes. As if hee should say, will ye be good Almesmen: Will ye be well disposed to succour such as haue neede of your helpe? Then let your heartes bee softened, and not locked vp to holde fast to your selues, but to thinke rather with your selues thus: Behold God offereth mee here a man, he is my neighbour, and although hee bee neither kith nor kin to mee, yet is hee a creature shaped after the image of God, and therefore must I open my heart towards him, and haue some pite vpon him. As oft then as wee bee colde and negligent in succouring our neighbours, let vs learne to enter into this consideration that is set downe heere, and to say to our selues: How now? Wretched man, if thou warr as hee is, wouldest thou not be gladd that others should succour thee? Yes: and if they should let thee alone, thou couldest skill well ynough to say for thy selfe, Alas, men make no more account of a creature fashioned after the image of God, than of a dog. Thou couldest well skill to say so; and yet for all that wilt thou thy selfe harden thy heart after the same fashion? Thus yeer see what wee haue in the first place to marke vpon this text.

And nowe for the seconde part, let vs marke how our Lordes intent here, is to shewe vs that almesdeedes please him not, vnlesse they come from a willing and freedisposed heart. And therefore let vs learne to order our succouring of our neighbours needs in such sort, as we doe it not reyningly and vnwillingly, so as when our hand is stretched out, there be a wicked affection in vs which may hinder vs from offering vp vnto God that succour which we owe vnto our neighbours when we see them in necessitie. And would God that this lesson were well put in vre, and that euery one of vs did beare it better in minde than we do. For although we doe some Almesdeedes, yet may the world see that our hartes are strait-ned, and that wee cannot come to this doctrine of Saint Paules, that God loueth the liberall giuer, and that hee will not haue men go to worke as it were, by constraint and inforcement, but of a free goodwill. Howe many be there that put this lesson in vre? Nay, the giuer hath alwayes some hartgrudging in him selfe, and would faine drawe his heade out of the collet if hee coulde, and his doing of it is as if he were put to his task as they terme it, or as though hee payed some tribute. But our Lord calleth Almesdeedes Sacrifices, to the ende wee should do them cheerfully. And I pray you, if we will offer any thing vnto God, should it bee as the paying of a tribute, or of some tallage or impost, that is extorted? Should it bee as it were a ranfome giuen to theeues or enemies? Should our honouring of our God by doing him homage for the goods that wee haue receiued at his hande, bee by such force and constraint? Nowe wee see in effect, what is imported in these two speeches; namely that wee must not haue our hearts locked vp to hinder vs from well doing; but that not onely our handes but also our heartes must bee open towards such as are distressed, to haue pite vpon them, and to vie kindeesse to them. Where this is not, there must needs bee all manner of exactie, as wee commonly see that such as haue most to spare, doe fall to reynying if a bodie go about to win an almes from them and they make a grudging at it like a dog when one would take away a bone out of his mouth. And if they happe to giue any thing, bee it for shame or for any other cause, it is a death to the to part from it. And surely it were better that such rakehellies were rooted out of the worlde, than that they should liue among men. For they bee monsters against kinde, they bee foule churlies, that coulde finde in their hearts to deuour and swallowe downe all the worlde into their mawes. Or rather they bee men full of vnbeliefe, which haue no more trust in God than duels, bearing themselves in hande that the earth is not able to finde them. By reason whereof if it come to the point that they must giue any thing, it stricketh them to the heart, it killeth them, insomuch that the asking of an Almes at their hande, is as the drawing of a sword to cut their throates. Therefore let vs looke to our selues, and when we heare our Lord speake of the not hardening of our hearts, let vs beginne at this point of kindeesse in hauing pite and compassion vpon such as are in distresse. And therewithall let our hande bee at libertie afterwarde, in such sort as wee may protest that wee offer G O D a sacrifice with a free heart.

And nowe Moses addeth, Beware that thy wicked thoughts come not in thy heart to say, Behold the Seventh yeare is at hande, and if I lende, my money must lie dead for the time. He calleth it a wicked thought when we be held backe by it too much to our owne profite, and in the meane while forsake the partie that is in neede. For were our thoughts well ruled, they would not shuld not bee so greatly wedded to our owne profite, but that we would also thinke vpon those whom God commendeth vnto vs. It is saide that loue seeketh not his owne. True it is that it cannot bee but that euery man will bee mindfull of himselfe. But Saint Pauls meaning in saying so, is that men must not bee caried away with the loue of their owne profite, as who should say they would haue no fellowshipp with their neighbours, nor streine themselves to doe any thing for them. Therefore as for those which say, I must haue regarde of my selfe, and therewithall doe despise others, and passe not what they endure: those seeke their owne gaine, and in so doing shewe themselves to be vterly voide of charite. Contrariwise, if wee bee kindhearted, although wee be mindfull of our felues, yet are we not so caried away with it; but that wee beare an euen hand and proceede to the louing of our neighbours as our felues. Whereas our nature wholly draweth vs to our owne priuate profite, let vs bethinke our felues thus: V, hat? I cannot separate my selfe from those to whom God hath knit me; for that were a wicked diuorce. If I should holde my selfe alone, and haue no regard but of mine owne aduantage; it were a cutting of my selfe off from mankind, & I were worthis to be cut from the rest of the world, for it is against kinde. So then, it is not without cause that Moses saith, that when a man is so mindfull of his owne profite, and seeketh it in such sort that he taketh it as an occasion to refuse to help his neighbors at all: it is a wicked thought, for thereby wee be done to vnderstand, that we must not iustifie our felues because that although men be not able to accuse vs so as we may be condemned by mans Lawe; yet doth it not followe therefore that wee be quit before God. If a man come to borrowe money of mee, and I thinke thus with my selfe, I cannot tell whether this man be able to pay me againe or no, he is a poore man, and when I haue taried a long time, hee may chauce to growe poorer and poorer, and then is my money losse. Nowe then if this poore man that was to be succoured abide still in distresse, and in the end perissh: the other that would not lend him, shall not be accused for it nor brought to answer for it before men. And if men cast him in the teeth with it. O (will hee say) It was for mee to seeke mine owne profite, I listed not to hazarde my selfe after that fashion. Well this excuse may serue afore men: but in the meane while what saith the heavenly Iudge to it? It is a wicked thought, saith hee: and let men flatter themselves neuer so much, they shall winne nothing by it. Therefore let vs marke that wee must not wey our workes in our owne scales, as who should say wee shall goe scotfree because wee haue some startinghole. For our Lorde telleth vs that the thing which beares a shewe to be excusable of it selfe, is cursed in his sight; that is to wit if wee succour not the partie that hath neede, at leastwise according to our abilitie. And it is the selfesame thing that our Lorde Iesus Christ putteth vs in minde of, where hee saith that we must doe good to such as are not able to requite vs with the like, and that wee must lende without looking for any gaine. For neither in lending nor in giuing, commonly is there any liberalitie among men, but euery man hath an eye to his owne gaine. If a man giue, it is to the end to receiue giftes againe: and if a man lende, alwayes his respect is, that such a one may doe him pleasure and recompence him with the like good turne againe. It is no Liberalitie when wee doe good in hope to be recompensed for it againe. But if wee do good to a poore man, at whose hande wee cannot by any means reape any profite; that is a point of freegoodnesse, and God alloweth of it, for it is an acceptable sacrifice vnto him. And that is the cause why hee saith that we should not giue to such as are able to requite vs, but to such as are vterly vnable, and of whom wee haue no hope to recouer the principall: for it is no Almesdeede, that is to say, no deede of mercie, vnlesse there be neede: and where is neede, but among such as are not able to recompence? Yea and euen where our money may seeme to be cast into the water, inso much that wee haue succoured such a man as it may be saide, Verily this is quite lost for aught that I can see? Yea verily, as to the worldwarde. But our Lorde saith, I receiue it: yee thinke yee put your almes into a mortall mans hande, but it is I that become detter for it. Although all things bee his, yet bindeth he himselfe in the person of the poore; and should then any negligentlye stay vs from succoring those whom God offereth vnto vs, seeing he setteth them as in his owne steede, and auoweth all to be done to himselfe which is done to them?

Matt. 6. 44

Moreouer let vs marke that Moses speaketh here, of such as are in neede. For God ment not to maintaine wicked folke in ydlenes & naughtinesse. The man that seeketh to wast away other mens goods, and to defraude his Creditors, is not commended vnto vs heere of God: but hee speaketh directly of mercie. And that is the cause why he saith, Thou shalt not harden thy heart. For if wee haue not that discretion: doe what Almesdeedes we will, and yet shall none of them be acceptable. Wherefore let vs marke, that here God speaketh not in fauour of all men, but onely setteth before vs such as are in neede & wote not what to doe, and should persish in distresse if they were not relieved. Those are they which are to be helped according to our abilitie. True it is, that to make a Lawe of it, it is not possible. God hath set this order among his people, that the poore should be succoured. But he hath not tolde with what summe, nor how oftentimes: hee hath not made a tax of it, to say that euery man should beare thus much; Only we must resort to this which S. Paul saith, Let euery man doe that which he doth with a free hart, and not lay a tribute vpon me as though they should pay as much as they were sessed at: but let euery man sesse himselfe of his own good will, & thinke thus, although I streined my selfe a hundred times more, yet could I not discharge my selfe to my godward. Howbeit forasmuch as he sheweth me this fauor to accept it as an offering of my hand, although I do not so much much as I ought to doe nothing neere, yet doth it please him to receive y<sup>e</sup> which I giue him, so it be done wth a free hart. Such we know this, albeit that we cannot make a grounded Lawe of it, to say how farte we shall go in succoring our neighbors, yet let euery of vs streine himselfe, and alwayes be doing, with the foresayd free heart.

And it is sayd, Thou shalt not thinke with thy self, they were of respis is at hand, and therefore I will not lend. Hereby it is shewed vs, (as I haue touched afore) that if a poore man require help, although he be not able to pay the thing againe out of hand which he borroweth, yet must not wee be cold for all that. For we must thinke, if I helpe this poore man at this time, he is a faithfull man, and my succoring and relieuing of him shall fet him halfe vp againe, but howsoeuer the worlde go, he may be able to mainteine his trade, and at length he may pay mee all that hee borroweth. But if I vtterly faile him at this time, he is quite sunck, he is brought vnder foote for euer, and hee hath no meanes to get vp againe: and I am too blame if I see him perissh fo. Had we this consideration with vs, we should not haue the nigardlines that Moses mentioneth and condemneth here. And how so? Let vs knowe that where need requireth, we must not haue such respect to our owne profite, as to let the poore perissh in their distresse without lending them our helping had.

Againe, Let vs wey wel this saying which Moses setteth downe here: namely that wee must open our handes. Hee repeateth it twise or thrice: and that is to shewe vs that there is nothing but hypocritic in vs, when we pretend to haue compassion, & yet our hand is alwayes shut, and nothing can be wrong out of vs. I haue told you already y<sup>e</sup> a number of folke wil not passe greatly to say; Alas, when they see poore people: but they beare themselves in hand y<sup>e</sup> it is enough to haue pretended a countenance. But here God reprocueth mens dissimulation, if they haue not their handes open: for it is a tokē that their hart is hardened, so as there is nothing but beastly churlithnesse in them, and when their handes be not opened, it must needs bee a record of it. Againe he setteth downe that the poore is to be succored according to his neede, and that a gage is to be taken of him, if there be a gage to be had: for it may also fullwell be vnderstood of the taking of gages. And hereby we see yet better, that our Lordes meaning was not to haue dettes vtterly releasid by the respit that was giuen in the seuenth yeere: but onely to haue a time of rest giuen for the respectes and considerations which I haue treated of before.

Furthermore it is tolde vs here, that we must relieue our neighbors wants: for our Lord speaketh here of the lendings that are doone of almes. And in deede, it is oftentimes a greater almes deede to lend some cōpetēt sūme, than to giue a very little. For it may be y<sup>e</sup> the giuing of a little will doe a man no ease at all: but the lending of as much as neede requireth, releueth him very wel, & he may in time content his creditor againe. That then is the thing wherunto our Lord appointeth vs. And therefore let vs marke the thing which I haue touched already;

that is to wit, that although a man cannot see downe a Lawe certeine in this behalfe; yet must euery man be a rule to himselfe, to doe according to his own abilitie and according to y<sup>e</sup> need that hee seeth in his neighbors.

Now here is added yet further, That God will blesse such as doe so, according as hee had begun yesterday to promise his blessing to all such as were so liberally minded towards the succoring of the poore. And this serueth still to correct the cursed vnbeleefe y<sup>e</sup> holdeth our hartes locked vp so as no man mindeth aught else than himselfe and his own profite. For it seemeth to vs y<sup>e</sup> if we forgo neuer so little of y<sup>e</sup> which we haue, we be in y<sup>e</sup> way to be vndone by it. That is y<sup>e</sup> cause why euery man holdes fast, & neuer thinkes hee hath enough. O (say we) it is true y<sup>e</sup> we may doe so and so: but thereby I should be impaired, & I cannot tell what may befall to my selfe. We cast fo many doubtēs, y<sup>e</sup> we can neuer finde occasion to giue any thing. And why so? For sooth because I might want it my selfe. But y<sup>e</sup> is a cursed distrust, & such a one as prouoketh Gods wrath. For we ought rather to hope well at his hand, y<sup>e</sup> as he hath not failed vs heretofore, so he will continue to doe vs good stil. And yet we go to seek these doubts afar off, which we be afraid of: inso much y<sup>e</sup> it grieveth vs euen to heare theſe spoken of. If a man should say to vs, such a thing may befall the if thy house should be burned, & all thy goods be consumed in it, & thou be driuen to sell thy landes & possessions, in what case wart thou the? None of these sōges would please vs, but we would chafe and storme at him y<sup>e</sup> should speake so. And why? For a rich man would faine sleepe in his riches, hee hopeth y<sup>e</sup> he shal stand alwayes at one stay, & hee foadeth himselfe in his delights. But in y<sup>e</sup> meane while, if he be to doe any good; he by & by forcasteth, O such a thing might befall me; famine & warre & I wote not what else must be feared. We heape together all y<sup>e</sup> mischances y<sup>e</sup> can be deuised, And to what end? Euen to shut vp our hartes & our handes; y<sup>e</sup> we might do no mā good. Now our Lord minding to correct such distrust, bringeth vs backe to his blessing, & sayth, Know ye y<sup>e</sup> it belōgeth to me to multiply you. And therefore may we wel hope y<sup>e</sup> when ye seeme to be impaired to y<sup>e</sup> worldward, yete shall haue a greater treasure thā if ye had kept all y<sup>e</sup> euere could haue come to your handes, and had neuer done any good to your neighbors to succor theſe withal. For I am rich enough to fill you againe, euen when you be vtterly destitute of al things. Seeing y<sup>e</sup> our Lord speaketh after y<sup>e</sup> maner, must we not needs be worlde than infidels if wee bee not mouued thereat to doe good? Yea and though we go not to worke with so earnest mindes as we should doe, yet if wee be not mouued at leastwise to doe somewhat; may it not bee sayd that wee stop our eares against God and giue him no audience at all, yea and that we giue no credit nor trust at all to any of his promises? Therefore let vs learne to wey better y<sup>e</sup> valew of this lesſon concerning Gods blessing, & let no man rest vpon y<sup>e</sup> things y<sup>e</sup> he hath in his own possession, ne put such trust in theſe as to say; This is my stay, this is trust in them as to say; This is my stay, this is the staffe that I must leane vpon. Let vs beware of such trust, for it is duelsish. Nay rather, let vs think thus; Seeing y<sup>e</sup> God hath giuen me wheron to lue, I am contented with y<sup>e</sup> which I haue, and I hope y<sup>e</sup> he wil also prouide for me still hereafter; and in y<sup>e</sup> mean time I wil vs<sup>e</sup> y<sup>e</sup> which he giueth me, as I may succour those that haue neede. And therewithal I wil put from me al things that may draw me from y<sup>e</sup> obeying of my God, and from y<sup>e</sup> trust which I ought to repose in his goodnesse. Thus ye see how we ought to benefite ourselues by y<sup>e</sup> promises of Gods blessing, so as they may quicken vs vp. not onely to haue recourse vnto him, but also to vs<sup>e</sup> liberalitie towards those that haue neede of vs, to the end y<sup>e</sup> our Lord may be prayed both of great & small, poore & rich, and al of vs haue our contentment in him alone, according to y<sup>e</sup> grace y<sup>e</sup> he shal haue bestowed vpon vs.

acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs perceiue them better, & to touch vs to the quicke, to the end that knowing his infallible truth, & what his will towards vs, wee may be moued thereby to followe y<sup>e</sup> same, & to fastho our selues to his ex<sup>amp</sup>le, by imparting ourselues in such wise to our neighbors, & by disposing the good in such sorte which hee hath put into your hands, as we may one day yeeld him a good and faithful account of them. y<sup>e</sup> we haue not bin too much addicted to our selues: but y<sup>e</sup> when we shall haue induoured to doe good according to his meaning, our whole seeking may be to lue & die in his obedience, drawing others with vs to the selfesame sayth, so as we may all call vpon him as our father truely and vnfeinedly, because wee mainteine a right brotherhoode with all such as are knitte vnto vs. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Wednesday the xxx. of October. 1555.

The XCv. Sermon, which is the thirde vpon the fifteenth Chapter.

11 For there shall euer be some needie folke in the Lande. And therefore I commaund thee, saying, that thou open thy hand to thy brother, to thy needie and to thy poore in the Lande.

12 When thy brother an Hebrew, or [thy sister] an Hebrewesse shall haue sold himselfe vnto thee, and serued thee sixe yeress; in the seuenth yeere thou shalt let him goe free from thee.

13 And when thou lettest him goe free from thee, thou shalt not let him goe emptie.

14 But thou shalt lode him vpon his necke with somewhat of thy flocke, of thy vineyard, and of thy winepresse. Thou shalt giue him of the things wherewith the Lord hath blessed thee.

15 Remember how thou thy selfe wast a bondseruant in the Land of Egypt, & that the Lord thy God deliuered thee: and therefore doe I commaund thee this thing this day.

It is sayd in the common proverb, that Lawes are not made for things that are not wont to come to passe, but for things that are in vce, and which it becometh vs to practise daily. And that is the cause why our Lord in this text sayth, that his speaking of y<sup>e</sup> succoring of the poore is not without cause, for that as long as this mortal lyfe indureth, we shall euer finde whereon to execute our duetie, by relieuing the necessities of our neighbors, because there shall alwayes be poore folke among vs in the world. Thus we see in effect, y<sup>e</sup> Gods intent was to make the Lewes to take the better heede to his Lawe, forasmuch as it was a very requisite yea and necessary thing, that they should be put in minde of their duetie in y<sup>e</sup> behalfe. And thereupon we haue to gather, that the more available doctrine is to the well ordering of our lyfe, y<sup>e</sup> better ought we to set our mindes vpon it. We see a number of folk which are fond and curious in forecasting for things that happen not once in a hundred yeress: they imagine things y<sup>e</sup> are vnterly vnprossible: & if this should come to pass, (say they) what should wee doe then? They beat their braines about things that haue no profit in them, and in the meane while they see not the things y<sup>e</sup> are before their feete. And for prooffe herof, how many are to be seene now adayes, which grossly shroote themselues in things that ought to be thoroughly known, shutting their eyes at them so as they see not one whit: And yet for all that, they toyle themselues exceedingly in searching out I wote not what: and if a man aske them why they doe so, they cannot tel, but that they be driuen thereto by a foolish curiositie. Therefore let vs beare in minde that our Lordes intent is to keepe vs occupied so farre forth as is for our behoofe. And that is the cause why that in the holy scripture, we see that God hath not voutfaced to feed our humors with things which hee knoweth to be

be of no edification, but restraineth vs to y things which are for our behoofe to put in vre. Let vs consider then that euery of vs ought to looke diligently to his owne dutie: and that is the warning that is giuen vs in this text, where God telleth vs that he maketh not Lawes of things that concerne vs not, but that hee hath an eye to the things which we ought to put in practise daily:

But now let vs come to this saying of his, That these shalbe poore folke continually. This was spoken expressly, to doe vs to vnderstand that God will try our charitie. For he is rich enough to supply all mens wants, and it cometh not of any niggardship, that he powrth not out his treasures vpon vs. What is the cause then that God suffereth men to be poore in this world, but onely to giue vs occasion to doe good? Therefore when we see one man poore & another rich, let vs not attribute it to fortune: but let vs vnderstand how it is God y disposing things so, and that it is not without reason. True it is y our eyes shal not alwayes see why God enricheth one & impouersisheth another, we cannot discern y cause thereof certainly. And by that meanes God will haue vs to cast downe our eyes oftentimes, to the end we should yeelde him the honour of governing men at his will, and according to his owne denice which is incōprensible. Yet notwithstanding we haue to remember in generally, the thing that I haue touched already which is, y Gods distributing of these worldly goods so vnegally, is to bewray what is in mens hearts, by making a tryall of the y way. So y if a man be rich, he may be the better discerned what a one he is. For thereby hee is enabled to doe hurr, and can the better indamage his enemies. But if he abstaine fro dooing euil, if he extēd no crueltie towards his neighbors, if he hold himselfe win his owne boundes wout coueting more thā God giueth vnto him: it is a signe of honesty, which had not bin knowne if such occasiōs had not bin ministred vnto him. Again, if a man of wealth be liberal so as he endeavour to doe good to such as haue neede of his helpe, and aduaūce not himselfe through pride & statelynesse; but alwayes behaue himself mildly: y is a very good proofe. If another mā being poore take patiently whatsoever it pleaseth God to send him, & moreover be not led to any deceit or naughtinesse how much soeuer he suffer, or how hard soeuer his state be: that also is a good & behoouefull tryall. Now the let vs mark y whereas there are both rich and poore in this world, God hath so ordained it, & it cometh of his prouidence: & therefore we must hold it for a sure ground, y there shal neuer want poore folke.

And now by the way let vs come to that which I spake of, namely that Gods commanding of weakie folke to haue their hands open to succor the poore and needy that are in the land, is not without cause. For it is as it were a setting downe before our eyes, wherein and after what manner he will be serued at our hands: namely in doing him homage with the goods which hee hath bestowed abundantly vpon vs: Yea verily, for he sendeth vs poore folkes to be as his receivers. And although y almesdeed be done to mortal creatures; yet doth God wel accept and well lyke thereof, & putteth it into his accounts, as though y things which we bestow vpon y poore were deliuered into his owne hands. Truth it is y as in respect of God y deede y wee doe is no almesdeede, but an homage of y goods that hee hath giuen vs, & for the which we bee beholden to him. Yet neuertheles there is this motouer, y besides his accepting of the acknowledgement which we yeeld vnto him for y good y he dooth vs, it is all one as if y mercie which we shew to our brethren, extended it selfe vnto him. And y is the cause why it is sayd, that he which shutteth his eares at the crying of the poore, shall cry himselfe vnto G O D and not bee heard.

On the contrary parte, if wee bee pitifull, and be moued to pitie the poore when we heare of their wants; God also will vse pitie & compassion towards vs to succour vs againe at our neede. And in the same respect Moses sayth expressly in this text, that God cōmandeth vs to haue our hands open to the poore that dwel in the land among vs. For God offereth them to vs, to the intent wee should haue no excuse to say, I wist not to whome I should doe good. Seeing then that our Lord ministreth the meanes vnto vs, we must not seeke for staringholes: for we shall bee still gultie, because we haue not vsed the occasion that was offered vs. Our Lorde Iesus Christ goeth yet further and saith, that he himselfe will not be alwayes with vs, but that y poore shall cuer be with vs. For in cōmending y deede that was done to his honour, because y precious oyntment seemed superfluous, whē his head was annointed therewith, he sayd, let it be so for this once: but from thenceforth he sendeth his disciples to the poore. And why? for it was all one as if he had sayd, that it was no ordinarie seruice that he required, nor for his own person, nor for the person of God his father, that men shoulde present him with the precious things of this world: for he had no need of thet; but his will was y looke whatsoever men were willing to bestowe vpon him they shold bestow it vpon y poore. And here let vs mark wel, y as I haue touched afore, y almesdeedes which we do to y poore, are accepted of God as sacrifices done vnto him. Therefore let vs not deceiue ourselues in our offering vnto him, as though he receiued anything at our hands: for he doth send vs backe agayne, to doe good to such as stand in neede of our helpe.

Had this lesſon bin well borne in minde, the wretched world had not so mispent their labor and mony in foolish poms, as we see they haue done in the Popedome, where they vse a greate sorte of lightes, & a number of other petie trifles. And why is that? O they thinke that G O D taketh pleasure in paintinges, in imagerie, and in such other gewgawes. That is the thing wherein the world is wholly occupied: and in the meane while the poore are let alone and forgotten. Contrariwise, our Lorde Iesus telleth vs that y is the thing whereby God will try whether we be willing to honor him or no. For (as I haue declared already) hee coulde well make all men rich; but he sendeth vs poore folke, to giue vs occasion to keepe our selues occupied, if we haue any desire to shewe to whom we thinke

Mat. 25. 17

our selues beholden for our goods, & be minded to apply them to such vse as he may well like of. Therefore if we haue any such desire, the occasion to shewe it is offered vs & there neuer wanteth any. That is the thing in effect, which we haue to consider vpon this place.

It should seeme at y first bluth, y this agreeth not with y which we haue seene already, namely y there should be no poore beggers in y land. But y solutiō is very easie, because it may well fall out y there should be poore folkes, & yet that all begging be taken away. And soothely it must needes be a great shame for a people y professe God, that there should be beggers among thē, because it is euen against common order & honestie. Although we had not the cōmaundemēt of our God; yet let vs consider according to nature what may insue of suffering beggers to be. First it is a token y the richer sort do deuour all, & that they haue no regard of succoring such as be in neede & penury. Againe, when the bridle is layd loose; we see it followeth y the moe doe giue themselves to roging. For men knowe not to whom they giue; insomuch that when those kinde of people go crying vp & downe y streetes from gate to gate; it cannot be discerned whether they haue neede or no: and impunctatest creatures doe commonly beare away that wherwith the poore should be fed and maintained. Moreouer the rewarding of such as goe about begging after that fashion, is a maintenance of false harlots. For there is none so great deceit to be found, as is in these Roges that go begging about. And he that is once nouled in roging, becommeth a theefe in the end. Finally although there were none other inconuenience; yet wee see that those which are once inured so with begging, can neuer fall to any labor afterward, nor learne to doe any good, but are idle bodies and loyterers euer after. Thus ye see how begging is euen by y order of nature to be alwayes condēned. For it bringeth nothing w it but sinne and corruption, and all thinges must at length neede come to confusion, where begging is suffered & borne w. But wee haue Gods commaundement which is a far higher thing, which saith y we must not haue any beggers among vs, but y the inconuenience therof ought to be prevented aforesaid, by relecuting such as want, accordingly as men can discern of thē, & be of abilitie to succor thē. Ye see then that these two places are not contrary one to another. For wher as he saith y there shal alwayes be poore folke; it is to the end (as I haue sayd afore) that y rich should haue occasiō to offer such sacrifice to God as he requireth, by succouring the needy with such thinges as they haue in their hands, and by doing it with discretion, by searching out as much as is possible who they bee that haue neede. But that men should giue without discretion, or that it should be lawfull for men to goe begging vp and downe the streetes, or to stand begging at the gates or at mens doores: it is a shamefull thing & against all good order, and bringeth nothing but confusion, as a nourishment of euil in all those to whom such libertie is giuen, as I haue shewed already.

Now remaineth to put this doctrine in practise. First of all we must vnderstand, that according to the greatnesse of mens necessities, God stirreth vs vp euer to doe them the more good, & it is then chiefe time to streine our selues, whē there is any famine or dearth. For then men ought rather to cut their owne morsels shorte, than to suffer others to want, the miselues liuing so in excessē. And whereas many men take occasion to pinche when they see a deere yeere, bearing themselves in hand that it serueth their tyme well to make their hand the better: Let vs vnderstand that our Lord doth then cite vs, and declare vnto vs that if euer we be minded to doe him homage with the goods that hee hath put into our handes, hee will haue vs to vtter it at that time. Let that serue for one point. And whereas we see many poore folke in necessitie; let vs assure our selues that our Lord warneth vs that it is as a waking of vs from sleepe; and that because wee haue not bin sufficiently mindefull of our duetic, our Lord commeth to put vs in remembrance of that which he had commaunded vs: and that if we be not too lazie, we must needes inforce our selues, to consider euery of vs the measure that is giuen him & the abilitie of his power, & thereafter employ himself. This is y thing that wee haue to marke in the first place.

And as touching the second point, let vs looke to keepe order and pollicie, so as this shame and dishonestic of begging be not among vs. For why, it is nothing else but a nourishment of wicked rascals, and they will neuer be brought to any good, which are so maintained, but they become roges and idle persons as I haue tolde you before. And in the end they take a pleasure in their begging, and lyke so well of their scrippe or wallet, that they would not chaunge it for a yeerely rent: Which thing experience shewes too much. To be shorte, of Roges, they become robbers, & in the end what must become of that? Therefore let all this be takē away, vnlesse we purpose to prouoke Gods wrath wilfully, & to cause thinges to grow euery day worse than other. But yet howsoeuer y case stand, let vs see that y poore be maintained. For if a man forbid begging, & therewithall doe no almes at al: it is as much as if he did cut y throtes of those that are in necessitie. Nay, wee must so prouide for the poore, & redresse their want, that such as are stout beggers and apparantly seeme not to be pitied, may be reformed. For they doe but eate vp y others bread, & rob y needy of that which should be giuen vnto thē. That (say I) in effect, is the thing that we haue to marke here. But how may y be done? First y Hospitals shoulde prouide wel for such needs. For what a shame is it, that y goods which are dedicated to God and y poore, shold neuertheless be applied to other vses? That is not simple robbery, but a robbing of God. Therefore let thē be employed according to his cōmaundement; & let not mē play y good husbands in hording vp y thinges that ought to be bestowed vpon God & vpon those whom he offreth vnto vs. Also according as euery man knoweth y particular needes of his neighbors, fo let him indeuour to succour the, and consider where wante or neede is, & helpe to remedie it. If this be done, then shal beggerie be taken away as it ought to be, and they shall not neede to make a simple forbidding of it: saying; let not men beg any more: & in the meane season y poore be left destitute, to die for hūger & thirst.

And truly it is not for nought y our Lord saith here, thy poore & thy neede which are in thy Lād. He could welnough haue said, the poore & neede: but he vseth another manner of phrase saying, thy poore and thy neede. As if he should say, if a man bee poore, every body disdaynes him and turnes his backe to him: and why is that? Because the rich doe beare themselves in hand, that the poore are not worthie to come ny them, & they could finde in their heartes to haue a world alone by themselves. Were it not that they be contented to haire the poore folkes seruice, they could find in their hearts neuer to see the. But on y contrary part, to pull downe such pride & presumption, our Lord sayth, who art thou that despisest fo thy brother? He is thy poore, he is thy needy. He speaketh as to our owne flesh. Therefore let vs wey well the wordes which the holy Ghost hath vied, that no pride may hinder vs to haue compassion vpon those that are so vnited vnto vs. And let vs marke that they bee our owne poore folkes, y is to say, y the persons which are so in neede, are offered vnto vs of the Lord, as if hee should say, it is my will to make such an intercoure, as the rich may be mingled w the poore, & either of them may meete w other, to the intent they should communicate together, y poore to receiue & the rich to giue, so as I may be honored at the handes of them both, as well for y rich man hath wherw to do good, as for that y poore man acknowledgeth himselfe to be sustained & maintained for my names sake, & so both of the bleffe me. That is y cause why Moses speaketh of y poore & needy after such a sorte, y he sheweth y rich how it is they themselves whom he speaketh to, & that there ought to be a kinde of intercoure between the & the poore, not to make the fellowlike, but to relieue y neede of those whom God offreth vnto the after y maner.

After this, Moses addeth a law y serued but for y common weale of y Iewes, y substance whereof continueth neuertheless vnto vs at this day. If thy brother an Hebrew (sayth he) or thy sister an Hebrewesse be solde vnto thee, let him serue thee the space of fixe yeeres. At the end of shat terme thou shalt release him. And at thy releasing of him, thou shalt not sende him away empty, but thou shalt giue him some Corne or some Casell according to thy abilitie, shat hee may feele of the blessing which the Lord thy God hath giuen thee, and shat the same may be as a hyre vnto him. Now we must marke, y in those dayes there were no such seruantes as are nowadayes which take certain wages by y yeere: but they were in bōdage after y maner of those whom we call bondslaves in Barbarie & in other countries in these dayes. So then they were al slaves at y time, & among the heathen y bondage was endless: in so much y if a man had liued a hundred liues, yet should hee neuer haue bin released, vnlesse his maister had pitied him. Moreover, the man y had such slaves might mary them, & forasmuch as the wretched soules were not free theslaves, their children also were in bondage lyke y beastes y we haue. If a man haue Horses, Kine, Cattel, or Sheepe, hee reapeth y fruite of the: & so did they w their bōd seruants at y time. And surely y state of bondage as it was then through y whole world, was very hard. For it was Lawfull enen among Chritians. It is not cōmanded to be abolished: We seee y whēas S. Paul speaketh of maisters y had such bondseruants & were faithfull, he biddeth them not to let the quite at libertie, but to deale gently by all kinde of meanes. Know ye (saith he) y you haue one cōmon Maister in heauē, & that your seruantes be Gods children as well as you: and therefore deale gently w them, & hold them not in such thraldonic as y vnbeleeuers doe. S. Paul, y is to say y holy Ghost speaking by my mouth, thinketh y to be enough. Howbeit forasmuch as the Iewes were priuiledged, & God had chofen them for his owne inheritance: it behoued some moderation or mitigation to be among them, so as they should not vie so extreme rigor as was among the Heathen. Neuertheless it is a good thing, y this slavish bondage is abolished in time among y faithfull; howbeit y there continue still some remnantes of it in some places, but yet is y same much more tollerable thā so rough a law could haue bin. For wheras there are some persons which are still taxable (as they terme it) at this day, whether it be in their goods or in their persons: it is of y olde slavery, & they be of y race of such as were very slaves in old time, & of such as might haue bin handled as bondslaves by rigor of Law. But as I sayd, this may wel be borne w: and it was a vertue worthe of cōmendation; that the parties which had such bondslaves, released them vpon a certaine qualification.

But now let vs come againe to y Law y is giue here to y Iewes. It is sayd that such as were solde should serue by the space of fixe yeeres: and the seuenth yeere is priuiledged here in honor of y Saboth day, y is to say of y rest, wherby our Lord ment alwayes to reduce he Iewes to gentleness, by bringing them backe to himselfe. As if hee should say, assure your selues y your vsing of such mercie towards your neighbors, is an acceptable seruice vnto me. For y day of rest was y very marke of Gods spiritual seruice, as is declared vnto vs in many plices of y scripture, both in Exodus & Ezechiel where our Lorde speaketh precisely of y day of rest, & also in y xvii. Chapter of Ieremie. Yea & he speaketh in such wise of it, as though all his seruice consisted therein. And why is that? Because y on the day of rest, hee called y people to himselfe, as if hee should say, know me, let me be worshipped, let euery man giue his munde to consider my goodnesse, my Iustice, my wisdome, & my power. And therewithall rest your selues in me, and let euery of you forebare his owne will, and his owne ykinges, that yee may be, as it were subiected vnder my yoke, and I gouerne you. We see then y the day of rest was as y principal seruice of God. Now forasmuch as me cānot acquaint theslaves w the dooming of good to their neighbors, nor wil willingly giue ouer their right whē they haue the at a vantage, & can hardly be be drawn to doe so much as they ought to do. Therefore doth our Lord set this before them here, and say, such as release their bondseruantes doe me acceptable seruice, whereof I giue them the day of rest for a signe & sure token. Seeing then that I set betwene you and me, this token & warrant, know ye y your giuing of release to your bondseruantes is by mine authoritie, so as I am among you & ouerrule you in that act, and your dooming of it is for my sake. Though yee haue no regard of men, because yee thinke yee should not owe them so much seruice, at leastwise yet consider how much you be bound to me. Thus ye see now to what end the seventh yeere was assigned. Sixe yeeres (sayth hee) shall they serue you, & the seventh yeere you shall lett them goe. And he contenteth not himselfe with the onely releasing of the bondseruantes, but he will also haue men to giue them somewhat wherewith to set vp their trade. And not without cause: For euen the heathen themselves at y same rime in which I tolde you, y that bondage was most rife, could skil to say that they were not to be vsed as bondseruants but as hirelings, y is to say, after y maner of our seruants y take wages by y yeere at this day. Is it not a great shame y the heathen both Greekes and Latins could speake after this fashion, we haue bondslaues, we may vse the as Oxen & Asses: but that is vilanous, it is out of all order: & therefore albeit that it be lawful for vs by the ciuill Lawes; yet is it against all humanitie, & we ought to haue another regard. As how? Surely we must vse the as though they were freemen whom we hyred for wages. If y blind wretches spake so; & perceiued that this kinde of vpright dealing was requisite: what shall become of vs? Verily God hath punished such as haue dealt roughly with them. For it was lawfull for a Maister in olde time to kill his bondseruant, & he needed not to aske leaue of y Magistrate to put his seruant to torture, but he might teare him in peeces one meber from another, yea euen at home in his own priuate house: & when his Maister had so murdered him, no man sought iustice or reformation of it. True it is y in the ende men were forbidden to kill the wout examination of their case: but yet had y Maisters alwayes y authoritie stil. And because they abused it, God payed the home with the lyke againe, so as they had a common proverbe among the, That looke how many bondseruantes a man had at home, so many enemies had he. Also they could well skil to cōdemne the selfes, saying: they bee not enemies borne, but we make them our enemies by our crueltie. Seeing then y the heathen knew thus much; it was requisite y there shold be some greater mildnesse & humanitie among gods people y were chosen of a singular priuiledge. That is y cause why God sayd expressly y they should be helped at their departing from their houses in y seventh yeere. For if a poore man be sent away stark naked, now & then he had leuer to continue a slaue stil, ths to goe seeke what shal betide him he wor not where. A poore man that hath not much to take to, can finde in his hart to take paynes; & so he may haue meat & drinke, hee is at a poynt. Thereupon he taketh paines in his Maisters house: for if his Maister driue him out of his doores & say get thee hence: He may cry alas, what shal become of me! I haue not a bit of bread to eat, I haue no lodging, I wote not where to become. This sending away of their seruants naked, was an indirect means to hold the in bondage still. For this cause our Lord sayth, whē ye haue bin serued by y space of six yeeres by those y are your brethren, giue the somewhat in recompence of their seruice, according to your abilitie.

Again, to y end y men shold be y willinger to such liberalitie, Look into your stables (sayth he,) & into storehouses, & into your garners. Because men are alwayes repining; here God falleth to making of an Inuentorie. O (sayes one) I haue not so much to giue: & what wote I whether I my selfe shall want or no? Our Lorde therefore maketh an Inuentorie to discusse y matter, saying, What Cannot he which hath Corne in his garner giue to him y hath serued him, whose bloud he hath drawn in making him to labor for him? Ought he not at leastwise to haue an eye to the corne y is in his garner? He hath husbanded his ground, he hath tilled it, he hath toyled himselfe about it: & is it not reason y he should feele some sweetnesse & fruite of it? Besides this, he goeth to his winepresse & to his stalles; as if he shoulde say, let euery man see what hee hath; for according to your abilitie you be bound to recompence them y haue trauelled for you, & haue bin y instruments of such blessings. For if we thanke God w our mouthes, confessing y it is he which hath blessed vs, & in y meane while make none account of such as he hath sent to doe vs seruice in y increase of our liuing, by taking paynes and toyle for vs: all our thanking of him is but liplabor & vtter hypocrisie. Thus ye see in effect what we haue to marke vpon this text.

This law is set down lykwise in y xxi. Chapter of Exodus. Norwithstanding, although God had spoken of it after y fashion; yet was y thing ill obserued which he commaundeth here. And hereby we see how malicious, hardhearted, yea and wilfull stubborn y Iewes were. For at such times as God punished them, & they were driue to resort vnto him whether they would or no, they pretended a willingness to submit the selfes to him, & to take some good way of amendment, [though they meant it not:] which thing among others he easter in their teeth, saying: what? I haue commaunded you concerning your brethren y are your seruants; y ye shoulde let the goe frank & free in y seventh yeere: but ye haue not done it. Now the seeing y my lawe is set in state againe, Let it be kept. In deed when men be pinched & constrained by necessitie; then they can make some faire countenance & shew well enough. Go to then, let seruantes be released; but immediately after they haue shutes to bring the vnder coram againe, as if a man shoulde make a theefe to creepe vnder his arme, as who would say he shold make restitution of his theft, & whereas he pretended to take it from him with the one hand he shoulde conuey it to him again with the other. After the same maner was God mocked with his own law, yea euen notwithstanding that the Iewes were punished extremely at that time, and sawe w that God persecuted them & did set himselfe against them because of their disobedience. As touching the bondseruants that would not vse  $\bar{y}$  freedome that was graunted them, wee shall see more in the next sermon. But as touching the common law; the Iewes were full of malice,  $\bar{y}$  they refused to giue freedome to their bondlet-uants.

And here the first thing that wee haue to gather, is the substance of the lawe, which concerneth euen vs at this day. There is no more any such bondage among vs as was then among the Iewes and all the heathen. In decde in some countries the same bondage remaineth still, as in the East countries, in Greece, and in Barbarie, but yet for all that it is the better that the vse of it is abolished, as it is an ong vs; and that is a very commendable thing. Yet notwithstanding, it behooueth vs to consider, how our Lord admonisheth vs by his lawe, to deale gently with such as do vs seruiue, so as wee beare with them and defraud them not of their hire, ne stand vpon rigor towards them to take the vttermost of them that we may, but that we deale vprightly with them, & rule our selues, as those that haue a stay of the selues, & looke not to be compelled by lawe, but eury m in rightly to rule himselfe. That is the thing in effect which we haue to note in this text. As how? A master that hath a seruant wringeth al $\bar{y}$  euer he can out of him without any regard to him: then he shewes himselfe to be cruel. If he say, I find him meat & drink, & I pay him his wages: that is true, but he must also haue respect what he is able to do, & what seruiue he may receiue at his hand. About all things we must haue an eye to this natural vprightnes; that we do not any thing to another body, which we would not haue done to our selues. If a man haue seruants, he ought to think with himself, how would I desire to be delt with, if I were in their stead: I would desire to be borne with. Truth it is that we must not be at that point when a seruant woulde lue ydly & do nothing, but wold be kept like a cockney, neuer to put his hande to the doing of any thing. For it is not ment of such as lue disorderly, but only of such as we know to be reasonable. As how? I thinke with my selfe, if I were in this fellows place, what ought I to do? I speake not here of wishing, but of  $\bar{y}$  reasonablenes which eury of vs knoweth. For when the case concerneth our own profit or disprofit, we can very well skill to iudge of it: but when the case concerneth other men, then are we blind. But such as haue seruants ought to consider thus with themselves: If I were in their roome, what would I reasonably desire to be done to mee? Then must I not take more vpon mee than my conscience warranteth mee. For although there were no Iudge to condempne mee, nor lawe to accuse mee, yet doeth mine owne conscience suffice in that it findeth fault with mee. Thus wee see, that although this lawe belonged peculiarly to  $\bar{y}$  state of the Iewish common weale, where this kind of bondage was vsed: yet notwithstanding it containeth a lesson beneficial to vs at this day: that is to wit, that it behooueth vs to vse our seruants in such wise, as they be not oppressed beyonde measure, nor cruelly handled; and secondly that wee be kindhearted towards eury of them, to do them good, and to shewe in very decde that wee be willing to agree to his good will. For it is not enough for the mouth to speake: vntill the hande be answerable to the same. That is the thing in effect, which wee haue to marke vpon this text.

10 Therewithall let vs wey well the words wherin our Lord maketh an inquisition of eury mans goods, & let vs consider howe it serueth to shewe vs that in the ende wee must come to account, so as wee may not thinke to slip the collar and to shift our handes by saying, Do what I can, I shall not be well reported of for my labour: after which sort some folkes continually repine when they be spoken to concerning almeedees, to whome it seemeth to bee as good as halving of them to the galowes, if ye do but speake to them of the opening of their purses. To the end therefore that wee shoulde not imagine that such shifts can goe for paiement before God: let vs marke well howe hee telleth vs here, that he forgetteth not what hee hath giuen vs, but can very well cast vs in the teeth with it. And seeing he casteth vs in the teeth with it alreadie in this world; what will he do when all things shall be brought to light, & when the bookes of account shall be layd open? Wil there be any excuse then? No: for then euen the secretest things shall be layde open; and what will become then of the things that are apparently knowent? Shal a man escape the iudgement of God, when he is found to bee aniggard and a churle euen before men? So then let vs beware that we behaue our selues well in this behalfe: and for the better doing thereof, let eury of vs mark the forme of speech which the holy Ghost vsith in this text, forasmuch as it serueth to search vs to the bottom, to the intent  $\bar{y}$  whereas eury of vs hides himselfe away when he should do any good, no man should shrinke backe, but eury man put forth himselfe according to his abilitie & state.

Now for a conclusion our Lord addeth here, that the Iewes had bene in bondage in the lande of Egypt, and therefore he commandeth them to be kindhearted & pitifull towards those that are in their seruiue. And hereby it is shewed vs, that if our Lord haue giuen vs experience of aduersity, we must be the readier to succour the distressed, & not play the proud fooles which cannot abide to heare their former state spoken of, when they haue bene in poutries, but are more scornfull and disdainfull than such as haue lued continually at their ease. Nay, if our Lorde haue suffered vs to bee pinched, and to stande in neede of other folks seruiue; let vs print it thoroughly in our mindes, & let it bee as a spurte to quicken vs vp, that whensoever we see any folke in neede, it may alwayes runne in our mindes, Alas, when I was in their case, what desired I? I could haue founde in my heart that all men should haue opened their hartes and their bowels towards mee; and shall I nowe shut vp mine? Lo what the declaration that is set down here importeth.

And it is not in this place onely that Moses vfeth to say so. For there is not any thing more rise in all his bookes: insomuch that euer after the peoples deliuerance out of the lande of Egypt, Remember (sayeth hee) from time to time, that thou thy selfe hast bene in bondage.
 Therefore let vs marke, that looke what experience euery of vs hath had in his life, Gods will is that the same shoulde serue vs for an instruction, and that wee shoulde beare it continually in minde. As for example, when a man hath bene a traueler of countryes, he ought to consider into what distresse a man might fall:
 and hee shalbe the more inclined to succour others whome he seeth in like daunger. Againe, when a man hath bene pinched for a time with pouertie, and afterwarde commeth to wealth, his former pouertie ought to be a teacher to him for euer after, to be the forwarder to put forth himselfe where neede requireth. True it is that although a man had lued all the dayes of his life in ease, and neuer wist what neede or want meant: yet shal hee not therefore be helde excused before God. But yet forasmuch as wee be so slacke and slowe to doe good: wee had neede to take to vs the helps that may serue to quicken vs vp withall. And so let euery of vs for his owne parte cheere vp himselfe to do good.
 As for the riche which neuer haue tasted any want of the goods of this worlde, if they looke into them selues, they shall finde that God hath visited them some way or other, so as they haue had neede of other folkes helpe. And if they be not starke churles, the same must needes bee as a stroke with a spurre, to thrust them forward to welldoing.

To conclude in fewe wordes, the principall purpose of this place, is that besides the v-rightnesse which is of nature, our Lord wil haue euery man to be inclined to mercie, to do good to such as haue neede. But put the case there were none other respect why wee shoulde succour our neighbours but onely this, that wee be men: is not that respect great ynough? Yes, for vnder this worde Man, wee comprehend many miserias. When I see a man in distresse, I finde in my selfe that I shoulde be subiect to the like thinges, if God had not a speciall regard of mee.

 There is neither sicknesse, pouertie, nor any other like thing in any body, but that wee our selues are subiect to the same miseries. And what is the cause that wee be cleare from them?
 The goodnesse of our God. And the cause why hee spareth vs and beareth with vs, is to the ende that wee shoulde be mindfull of such as haue need. For it is a very great proofe of Gods goodnesse rowardes mee, that hee not onely exempteth mee from the aduersities which I see in my neyghbours, but also giueth mee wherewith to remedie theirs. And therefore it ought to be a sufficient prouocation for mee, that they be of mine owne flesh, and of mine owne nature, so as there is no difference betwixt vs but that God hath aduanced the one of vs, and put the other backe. For wee be all of one lump, and it is not for any man to glorie, as though hee had his riches of him selfe. If a man bee not so miserable as a number of others are, hee ought not to be proude of it, but rather to consider that he is so much the more bounde vnto God. Accordingly therefore as God bestoweth his benefices vpon vs, let vs beware that wee acknowledge it towardes him, by doing good to our neighbors whome he offereth vnto vs, so as wee neither exempt our selues from their want, nor seclude them from our abundance, but gently make them partakers with vs, as folke that are linked together in an vnseparable bond.

And now let vs fall down in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him to make vs so to feele them, as we may returne to him with true repentance, and milking our former life, craue forgiveness and mercie at his hande, and bee alwayes ready hereafter to yeeld our selues to his obedience, so as our whole seeking may be to glorifie him in all cases, after such a sort as our whole life may shewe that wee haue well profited in his holy worde. And so let vs all say, Almightye God heauenly father, &c.

On Munday the iiij. of Nouember. 1555.

The XCvj Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the fiftieenth Chapter.

16 And if hee happen to say to thee, I will not depart from thee because I loue thee and thy house, by reason that he findeth himselfe well with thee:

17 Then shalt thou take an Aule, and bore him through the eare to the doore, and hee shalbe thy bondman for euer. And likewise shalt thou do to thy woman seruauant.

18 Let it not grieue thee to let him go free from thee: for he hath serued thee fixe yeares as a hyreling of double wages. And the Lorde thy God will blesse thee in all thy doings.

19 All the first borne males that breede of thy cattell and of thy flockes, thou shalt sanctifie to the Lord thy God. Thou shalt not labour with the first borne of thy kyne, nor there the first borne of thy sheepe.

20 But thou shalt eat them, thou and thy household from yere to yere in the presence of the Lord thy God, in the place which the Lorde will choofe.

21 But if there be any blemish in it, so as it be lame or blinde, or haue any euill fault in it: thou shalt not offer it to the Lorde thy God:

22 But shalt eat it within thy gates, as well the vncleane as the cleane, both alike, as the fallow deere and the Red deere.

23 Only thou shalt not eat the bloud of it, but shalt powre it vpon the ground as water.

Ye haue seene already the law which God placed among the Iewes, whereby bondage was not to continue for euer, but y<sup>e</sup> the person which had bin solde should serue sixe yerres, and afterward be set at libertie. And I told you that although the like law be not among vs nowadays; yet notwithstanding we may gather a very profitable lesson of that which is therein contained, y<sup>e</sup> is to wit, that he which hath any superiouritie o<sup>o</sup>ther others, ought to forbear all tyranny, & to be kyndharted towards those whom God hath put in subiection to him, so as he reigne not ouer them with crueltie, ne intorce them to all that euer he may, but deale gently with them as with his brethren. And although wee be not nowadays, all of one lineage as the Iewes were: yet must it suffice vs that wee haue all one father & one master in heauen, as is declared vnto vs. For by means of our Lord Iesus Christ, wee be so vnited together, that there is such a brotherhood betwixt vs, as cannot be broken without forsaking the adoption which God hath made of vs. And therefore as many as intend to be taken for Gods children, must louingly beate with all those who they may commaund. Againe, we must come to account, so as if wee will obtaine mercie at the hand of God, & be borne withall by his gracious fauour; wee must looke to doe the like to such as are in subiection to vs.

But nowe Moses addeth an exception to the law, whereby he had commanded to set seruants at libertie after sixe yerres seruice; and he sayeth that if any seruant be so well contented with his state, that when his master is ready to sende him away & to giue him reward, he will say vnto his master, My sir, I had leuer to tary still in thy house because I finde my selfe well at ease. then shall his master take an Aule, & boare through his seruants eare in token that hee is his for euer. Yet was not this done without consideration of the case, as is written in the xxi. of Exodus. For there it is sayde expressly that the master shall call to the Iudges, that the matter may be inquired of by them. For otherwise, euery master might haue made the worlde beleeue, that his seruant was desirous to bee his for euer. Therefore it behoued the thing to bee proued; and then was his eare boared through at the doore, to the ende that the matter might be done openly to the sight of all men. For in such cases there might haue bene much collusion, yea, and also compulsion, and a man might haue bene so vrged by constraint of much beating, that hee woulde haue consented to haue bene in perpetual bondage. But when the thing was done in open sight, so as the Iudges were called to the matter: then was there no deceite, neither coulde they be begyled which did so yeelde themselves into bondage.

And as touching the marking of them, it was a common thing in the East countreys. And it is seene in other Countreys also, that such as were marked, were of worse state and condition than other bondseruauntes were: but in this place there is no meaning of any harder bondage than the rest. And because God had granted that priuiledge among his people; he addeed that if any man woulde needes be a bondslawe of his own wil, then he should beare some marke thereof. But yet was this marke made without any wounding, as if the tip of a mans eare should be boared with a pinne or with an awle that were sharpe, it coulde put him to no payne, and it was no more but to make the matter known. And whereas God sayth that he should be so for euer, we must vnderstand that the yeere of Iubile was excepted, as we may see in other places. And in very deepe, the compasse of fiftie yerres was called a worlde, and the worde that Moses vseth is taken sometimes for the age of a man. His meaning then is, that he which consenteth to be a bondslawe, shall abide in that state for euer; that is to say euen vntill the state of the countrie be renewed, as well concerning mens Landes as their persons: at which time euery man entered againe into his owne heritage, that God might alwayes be knowne to be both soueraigne Lord and as it were the onely Lorde of the soile, & that the inhabitants were not owners and freeholders, but onely as tennauntes at will, or farmers, for those are the verie termes that our Lorde vseth. Therefore his will was that the parting of the Lande which was made by his commaundement should be kept: the meane whereof was that euery man should retorne to his owne inheritance & possession at the fiftith yeere, at which time the whole state of the Realme was chaunged in all other things. Thus see we now what was the effect of this Lawe.

And heere wee haue an example that masters ought to behaue themselves gently, for

Eph. 6. 9. &
Col. 3. 10.

Exod. 21. 6.

wee ought alwayes to beare in minde what hath bene treated of, namely that this law was farre other than y<sup>e</sup> law of seruicelhip that is among vs. For as now we hyre seruants for wages, whereas in these dayes they were bought and solde, and men vsed them much more hardly than they do nowdayes. If a seruant had bene misintreated at his masters hande, he coulde not depart from him, nor haue any law against him: but hee was faine to obey his master in all that euer he would put him to. If his master would sende him to the fields, or vse him as a doyle in his house to doe whatsoeuer he had to be done; it was not for the seruant to hang the groyne at it, or to say I cannot do it: for his master would vse him as he listed; in so much as hee would marrie him euen spyte of his heart, & take his children from him. And though the seruant were set at libertie at y<sup>e</sup> seuenth yere, yet his children were faine to abyde in bondage still. That is one thing which we haue to note. Now then, seeing that the state of seruants was so grieuous; it may wel be sayde, that there were masters of singular humane among the people of Israel, seeing that a seruant could find in his heart to say, I am contented to dwell with you still. Freedom (as the Heathen themselves haue saide) is an inestimable benefit: & when lawes speake thereof, it is preferred in fauour before all other things. And sith it is so, what a thing was it that a man should greeue our his freedom, which ought to be as deere to him as his life? Needs must it be said that he was greatly delt with. And this ought to make vs greatly ashamed. For seeing a man might safely at that time by the lawes of man, vse his bondseruant as he listed: must not those whom Moses speaks of here, needes condemne the person y<sup>e</sup> vseth crueltye towards his householdfolke, now when we be brydled by the ciuil lawes? Yes: for they had not iesus Christ as yet reueiled vnto them, who hath gathered vs together into the spiritual kindred, as hath bin touched heretofore. It was not declared vnto them y<sup>e</sup> God would haue vs to be members of his only sonne, yea euen bondslaves & such as are of the worst state that is. Sith it is so; let vs haue an eye to our selues: & let not the example that Moses setteth downe here, bee a witness before God to condemne our excessive crueltye against those whom God hath made our vnderlings. Marke that for one point.

Moreover let vs marke, y<sup>e</sup> boring of y<sup>e</sup> seruants eare y<sup>e</sup> is spoken of here, is to auoide y<sup>e</sup> blurring of mens ees, & that the matter should come to open triall. For although there were courteous masters to be found among the Iewes: yet notwithstanding the most part of them were after y<sup>e</sup> cōmon trade of y<sup>e</sup> world, as alwayes we see, full of mallice, full of fraud, & full of outrage. For there were of them y<sup>e</sup> would haue drawn their seruants by naughty meanes to say, thou thinkest thy selfe now escaped my handes, but I will make thee come againe after another fashion. Or else peraduenture he would haue flattered his seruant for a time: & vnder pretence of dealing wel with him for a month or fixe weekes, hee would haue drawn him into his nettes & snares to bynd himself to this perpetual bondage. For this cause it was our Lords wil that it should passe by order of law, & y<sup>e</sup> the magistrates should haue knowledge thereof. And hereby we see how men had alwayes need to be brydled, & to haue their naughtines prevented: for it were pitie else. And although this seeme somewhat hard, yet was it ordeined in fauour of y<sup>e</sup> seruants rather than of y<sup>e</sup> masters. If there were any such mark here: cōmō vs nowadayes: very wel, it were a kind of reproche. And why so? for such a one should shew himselfe to haue had no heart: for he should rather haue liued of his hāde: labor, & to haue scratched his liuing out of the earth, rather than to haue for-gone his libertie whē hee was to be set free. Therefore y<sup>e</sup> world sees y<sup>e</sup> such a one is but an ydelbelly, & a very blockhead. Thus it should seeme at y<sup>e</sup> first blush, that God here doth punish the guiltlesse. For if a man be in good state, and therefore is cōtented to yeeld himself into perpetual bondage; should he be put to shame for his labour? Nay, our Lords meaning was to waken vp those that were to enter into such bondage, as if hee should say; Beware what ye do: For they come to naye you to the doore, to shew you that ye should be tyed to this place, to bee his bondseruantes for euer to whome ye binde your selues, and so you do after a sort renounce that priuiledge which I had giuen you: and therefore looke well about you what you do. We see then that this lawe was not made for the masters sakes but for the seruantes sakes, to the intent they should bethinke themselves throughly whē they went about to be bound: and y<sup>e</sup> euen when they came to the deed doing, they might bee at choice still to say, I will depart free, & I am mine own man, I wil vse the libertie y<sup>e</sup> God giueth me. Thus wee see in fewe wordes, howe Gods intent was not onely to shewe to the maisters that they themselves also were vnder cōmmandement: but also to warne such as had bin misaduised, to beware howe they dyd cast themselves into perpetual bondage. And so let vs marke in fewe wordes vpon this text, that the gentleness which we owe to our neighbours, is precious in the sight of God. For seeing he hath such a care of it, and hath inioyned it so by his wordē: it is a token that it is an acceptable sacrifice to him. Will wee then please God? Let vs vse such gentleness towards our neighbours, that euen they themselves which are in subiection to vs, may haue cause to esteeme of themselves and to reioyce and prayse God, y<sup>e</sup> we behaue ourselues as brethren towards them. And let such as are maisters thinke alwayes with themselves, This doth not take away nor abolish the spiritual kindred which God hath planted and established betwene the great and the small. But seeing hee vouchsafeth them the honour to be their father: it is good reason y<sup>e</sup> we also should take them for our brethren, forasmuch as he hath chosn in them as well as vs. That is the thing in effect which we haue to gather vpon this text.

And Dauid seemeth to haue had an eie to this Ceremonie in the fortieth Psalm where he sayth, Sacrifice and oblation for sinne are not y<sup>e</sup> things that that thou Lorde requirest: but thou hast boord mine care. As if hee should say that God desireth not sacrifices at our handes, but would haue vs to be wholly his, and to bee wholly giuen vnto him, accordingly also as y<sup>e</sup> scripture exhortheth vs not only to offer this thing or that thing to god, but also to offer him our bodiēs and soules, that he may possesse & enjoy vs. When S. Paul sheweth vs the seruice which he calleth reasonable, he sayth not, offer of your goods vnto God: but mortifie your selues as true sacrifices. And therupon hauing mortified our humane reason, and all our thoughts and lustes, let vs offer vp our selues (saith hee) as liuing sacrifices to God. Neuertheless Gods meaning is not to haue vs offer vp our selues as temporall sacrifices, so as wee should be willing to honour him to day, & forget him quite and cleane to morrow: but he will haue vs to be his both in life and death, accordingly as it is saide in the xiiij. to the Romanes, that our Lorde Iesus dyed & rose again, to the ende that wee should liue and dye to him. It seemeth then that Dauid's speaking of the boaring of his care, was to shewe that our giuing of our selues to our God must not bee for a time, & then at the ende thereof to take our leaue of him: but that as wee haue liued in his obedience already, so wee be readie to dye in the same, following his call vnto the ende, without ceassing or altering our purpose. We knowe then y<sup>e</sup> God requireth not sacrifice, for y<sup>e</sup> chiefe thing ought to go before, and that is, to be wholly his.

Again, when a man dedicateth himself vnto God, it is certaine that all that euer he hath doth followe him. But yet the offering vp of our selues must be all wholly, so as hee enjoy both our bodiēs and our soules, and be glorified throughout by vs. And as touching this matter which wee treat of now presently, it is to be noted that god is not contented with our seruing of him for a time, as a number doe that make faire shewes at fittes, who thinke themselves well discharged when they haue done a thing or twaine in y<sup>e</sup> honour of God, and therefore would exempt them selues from euer putting to their hand any more as long as they liue. Let vs beware wee deale not so: but rather as I haue tolde you already, let euerie of vs make his account, that in as much as God calleth vs to him, we must not shrink from him in the middes of our way: for this life is as a race wherein God intēdeth to exercise vs. Therefore let vs keepe on our way, and indeouour to go forward to the ende. Let vs straine our selues to continue, and let vs liue and dye in the obediēce of him that hath purchased vs so deereley: & let vs holde out in his seruice vntill hee haue taken vs out of this worlde. After that sort is it Gods meaning y<sup>e</sup> we should haue our eares boord, y<sup>e</sup> we might be marked to be his seruants for euer, & not for a time. True it is also that God vseth not any Aule to marke our eares withall: but he boareth vs inwardly. For y<sup>e</sup> bondage that Moses speakes of here was earthly, and serued for the state of this worlde. But God will haue vs to serue him after another fashion, namely by reducing all our thoughts & affections to the obeying of him. And how may that be done? For when hee speaketh to vs, hee speaketh to deafe folke, so that the holy Ghost must be faine to boare our eares: & vntill we be touched after y<sup>e</sup> maner, & that god haue wrought in vs, we neuer wote what the seruing of him doth meane. Then let vs marke wel, y<sup>e</sup> God vseth not such a maner of marking as was vsed among the Iewes: but he will haue vs to bee in subiectiō to him. He taketh no Aule to boare vs through the eare, that y<sup>e</sup> mark might be seene to the worldward: but it behooueth vs to be framed by his holy spirit to gioue our selues wholly vnto him, and we must feele his power within vs. That is the thing in effect which we haue to remember vpon this place.

Now let vs come to that which Moses addeth; That the wages of a Seruaunt is double the wages of an hyreling. This sentence is not vnderstood of many men as it should be. For they haue taken it, that the reward which was to be giuen to a bond man at his infraunchising, ought to be double y<sup>e</sup> wages of an hyreling, as though the seruant that tooke wages, had taken but three yeares wages. But that was nothing to the purpose. And the Iewes after their manner, haue inuented yet a more foolish glose, and vterly corrupted the holy scripture, by mingling their own fancies therewith. For they saye, that a man ought not to esteeme of his life aboute three yeares, and that if he attaine to fixe yeares, it is as it were a double pay. This is much to the purpose, as who should say I could warrant my selfe life til to morrow, or as though I had my life in mine owne hand, to say, thou shalt liue til such a time. Thus yee may see their beastlinesse, howe there was neither feare of God, nor any right vnderstanding in those blinde wretches. And good reason is it that they which haue so forsaken the light of the worlde, should become brutish after that fashion, so that for all their reading and for all their hauing of the holy Scripture, yet doe they nothing elsē but bewray their own ignorance. And it is Gods iust punishment for their despising of our Lorde Iesus Christ, whereby they haue cut themselves off from him which is the very soule and guyde of the lawe. But the meaning of Moses is large: namely, that it must not grieue a mā to giue liberally to his bondseruaunt, when hee hath dwelt with him the space of fixe yeares. For why? It is double the wages of a hyreling: as if hee should say, hee deserveth double wages in comparison of a hyreling. Wee haue seene already howe our Lorde hath forbidden men to sende away their seruantes emptic when they were set at libertie. Thou shalt rewarde him (sayeth hee) according as the Lorde shall haue blessed thee. Looke into thy presses, looke into thy garners, looke into thy stalles: and according to thine abilitie giue thy seruant somewhat, that hee may fall to some trade, and not bee put quite and cleane out of heart. This wee haue seene already. Now here against a man might reply: I had leauer then to entertaine a hyred seruaunt for wages. For if I take one for wages, hee shall serue mee but from day to day; and if hee serue mee well, I can keep him still:

or if hee serue mee amisse, I can send him away, and that were more for my profite. And therefore it seemeth preiudiciall to my right to giue rewarde nowe to a slaue. A man might alleage after that fashion, as men are alwayes fittle in seeking of starting holes. If the case concerne eyther their profite or their losse, they can bee brought to no vprightnesse or reason. For this cause our Lorde saith here, Howe nowe? Thinke yee not that a slaue doeth, yea double the seruice of an hyred seruaunt? Yes: for if a man hyre a seruaunt for wages, if hee finde him nor meate and drinke, hee must giue him so much the more money, that hee may finde himselfe after his owne liking. And againe, if a man find him, hee will looke for a large pittance; and yet he will grudge at it and say, this is no fare mee for a man that takes wages. The man then that is hyred for wages, must bee maintained after a more courteous and liberal fashion, than a slaue. Moreouer, when the hyred man hath done his dayes worke, hee is dispatched, and he goes his way to bed till the next morning that hee come againe to his worke. But the slaue is in a harder case. For the similitude which our Lord Iesus maketh in Saint Luke, is taken of the comon fashion that reigned in those dayes. True it is that hee treateth of a farre greater matter, to shewe howe wee bee bounde vnto God. But yet doeth hee alleage this similitude, saying: Behold, if one of you haue a bondseruaunt, whome you sende to labour in your vyneyarde or in your feelde, when this seruaunt cometh home at night starke wearie of his labouring to doe you seruice; I aske you whether his master will saye to him, Come sit thou downe thy turne, & take here my place, and I will serue thee. Nay, his master will say further to him, Sirrah, go fetch mee such a thing, and goe doe such a thing. And the seruaunt dares not bee so bolde as to replye, why so? I haue laboured in the feelde all day, and must I nowe take paynes stil when I am come home at night? Yee see then to what purpose it is sayde nowe that the rewarde of a slaue is double.

Again, the seruaunt that is hyred by the day hath more ease and priuledge: in somuch that if hee bee ill dele with, hee may goe his way. But the poore bondslaue is tyed, so as hee must bee faine to serue his master day and night, & there is no regarde had of giuing him any thing for his labour, but so hee be founde neuer so meanly it is welyough. To bee short it is shewed vs heere, that wee ought alwaies to haue consideration of the profite that redoundeth to vs by such as haue doone vs seruice. And although there were no Lawe to compell vs to the discharging of our duties, yet ought it to bee printed in our heartes, and euery man ought to haue a conscience for the lawes sake, which telleth vs that wee ought not to deale churlishly with our seruants. For if a man flatter himselfe, he is neuer the more discharged before God, but he must be faine to come to account. And those which as now do vaunt themselves because they haue gotten some superioritie about others, that in the end finde that Gods will was there should haue bin some equalitie betwixt them, as S. Paul speaketh therof. For he vseth the selfsame term when he comandeth masters to beare with their seruants, & to spare them. Let there be an equalitie betwixt you saith he. As how is it ment that the seruaunt should be chekmate with his master? No, but S. Paul would there should be an answerable vprightnes, so that as the master can well skill to take the labour & trauell of his seruaunt vnder pretence that he may say, He is mine vnderling, I may commaund him what I list. so must he also consider the mutuall bonde that ought to be betwene one & another of vs, that he on his own side do answere & acknowledge, Go to, I am his master, but not to vse tyranny; I am his master, howbeit in such sort as I am also his brother; I am his master, but yet is there one comon master in heauen, which hath authoritie both ouer mee & ouer them that are vnder mee: & in that behalfe we be all but one household. And seeing that God hath called vs all into his house, it behoueth both great & small to acknowledge one another for their brethren, for as much as God hath done vs honor to adopt vs to be his children; let not the great ones which haue superioritie vse any lordlines in reigning after their own will, but let them gouerne their subiectes as their household with all gentlenes & curtesie, in such sort as God who is the father of all, may haue highest preheminance, & be honored as he deserueth. Thus yee see in effect, the thing which we haue to marke in this sentence, is that euery of vs should look to himselfe, & yeeld them right which are not able to demaund it, but are after such a sort in our subiection, as they cannot open their mouthes to complaine of vs. Let vs not tarrie til their complaint & crye mount vp to heauen; but let vs prevent that, & let vs of our selues be inclined to pitie & gentlenes. That is y thing which our Lord aimed at in this sentence.

Now he addeth a promise vnto it, to the ende we shoulde bee the better prouoked to doe that which hee biddeth vs. For although wee seele our slacknesse in doing our dutie to bee such, as our owne conscience findeth fault with it: yet doeth selfe profite vs blinde vs and besot vs, that wee cannot bee wunne to open our purses, and to giue liberally of the things which seeme to belong vnto vs. Now then, God perceiuing vs to be so wedded to our owne profit, that a man can not wring any thing from vs, but by maine force: addeh here, that if wee vse liberalitie towards those y are vnder vs, he on his side will blesse vs, & increase vs the more for it. Surely, if there were any faith or right beleefe in y world, shoulde not this promise inflame vs, & moue vs to pitie and compassion towards those that are in distresse, to succour them and to helpe them? And although that mention bee made here peculiarly of bondseruautes; and that God commaund some rewarde to bee giuen vnto them: Yet is it a generall lawe of courteous liberalitie. Seeing it is so, let vs marke, that if wee straine our selues to doe good to such as are in neede, wee ought to hope for Gods blessing, and that the more liberrall men bee in succouring their neighbours, the more will God shewe himselfe liberrall towards them againe. And so farre off are they from diminishing themselves by their giuing to the needy; that it is as the opening of a windowe for Gods grace to raine in at, to the greater increase of their wealth. That is the cause why I sayd, that if there were but one drop of fayth among vs, wee would be inflamed after another fashion to do good. But wee be locked vp, and euery man withholder that which hee hath, inso much y when we should giue, we thinke the earth must needs faile vs. Wherby we shew ourselves to haue no trust in God. So then, let vs marke well this text, wherin our Lord to soften our hard hearts and to induce vs to compassion, sayth that according to our pitying of the poore and needie, by releuening their necessities: he also on his side will haue regard thereof, & multiply vs a hunderd fold more by his blessing, than euer we could haue increased ourselves by our owne couetousnes and nigardship. Inso much y we shall set open a windowe (as I sayd afore) for Gods grace y is offered vs, if we succour those y haue neede of our helpe. That is y thing which wee haue to consider as in respect of the promise which God addeth heere.

Nowe afterwarde followeth the Lawe of the first borne, wherein it is sayd, That all the first borne Males shalbe offered vnto God, and that they shalbe offered euerie yeere, in the place which the Lorde shall haue chosen, so they be not faulty, nor in any wise blemished. As for example, if a beast were goggle eyed, or blinde, or lame, or had any other illsaourednes or blemish in it: it might not be offered; but the beasts y were founde, were to be offered in y temple, as God had commanded to bring them to the place y he had chosen, according to that which hath bin tolde you heretofore. We know where of this Lawe of offering vp the first borne things sprang, namely of Gods sleaing of al y first borne of the land of Egypt, as well of men as of beastes at such time as he was about to deliuer his people out of the bondage of Egypt, & of his sparing of the children of Israel; for the blood of the pascall Lamb was dipped vpō their doores, & y was done for their preseruacion. Now our Lords will was y the first borne should be offered vp to him in acknowledgement of y great benefite. For seeing y so great a miracle had bin wrought for the, it be hould them to honor God for it, & to be alwaies the more moued to magnifie his grace. But wee see how forgetfull we are in y behalfe: inso much that if God haue done vs any good turn, in deed we can speake of it & tell it forth with voyce loud ynough for a litle while: but by & by it slippeth frō vs, & we thinke no more of it. But gods pouring out of his gracious goodnes towards vs, is to the end y we should mind it continually & beare it in remembrance euer after. Therefore is it requisite y we should be warned & put in mind of y things which we would else forget. Euen so tooode y case as in respect of the offering of the first borne. For Gods will was y it should be a memoriall of the sayd benefite, so as it might neuer bee forgotten. And heereby let vs marke, that although wee haue not the like ceremonies among vs; yet doth God still exhorte vs to bee mindfull of the benefites that we haue receiued at his hande. And the excellenter that his gracious dooings are, the more ought we to be moued by them to exalt them, yea and to deale in such wise that euen when wee be dead and gone, our children may continue in doing the like. Thus ye see what we haue to remeber concerning the order that was set feruē for the offering vp of the first borne things.

It had bin ynough to haue spoken of it once; and why then doth God repeat it againe, bur by reason of mens vnthankfulness? And thus concerneth not the Iewes onely, but also vs. Wherefore let vs consider, that whereas God telleth vs that we ought to be mindfull of y benefites which we haue receiued at his hand, yet we cease not to turne our backs, and to shut our eyes y we might not see; and if we be driuē to remeber them whether we will or no, yet are we too too lasie in doing it. Considering then the naughtinesse y is in vs, inso much that God hath no sooner turned his hande, but that we haue by & by forgotten what he hath done for vs; or at leastwise whereas hee woulde that the remembrance of his benefites should be printed in our heartes, we thinke it ynough to haue borne them in minde a day or twayn: Let vs acustome our selues to the mindfulnessse of them, and consider that wee must not only blame the Iewes for their vnthankfulnessse, but also remember that we ourselves are of nature like vnto them.

Moreouer whereas it is sayde that the first borne things which are to be offered, must bee founde and without blemish: hereby we see how men wold faine beguyle God with their bythifs. For they woulde haue picked the faultiest of their first borne things to haue offered vnto God, and they would haue thought with themselves, well; this shall be set out to doe seruice withall in the Temple; for it will doe mee no seruice: yonder beast doth but pine away, well, he must serue for sacrifice. This were a playne mocking of God: and yet was it a common thing among the Iewes. But let vs come to our selues: there is none of vs all but he findeth himselfe so ill minded, as to defraude God continually of somewhat that belongeth vnto him. For, (to let passe the ceremonie of offering the first borne things) God requireth that euerie of vs should offer vpe our selues vnto him; and it is good reason that wee shoulde doe so: for he hath redeemed vs from the bondage of death. Wee were by nature the bondslaues of Sathan, and beholde, G O D hath made vs his owne children: therefore is it verie meete, that wee shoulde doe him homage with our persons. And as touching our soules, wee knowe that the sonne of G O D spared nor himselfe for the redeeming of them. And as for our bodies wee hope that they shall bee rayed againe to his heauenly glorie. Is it not meete then that G O D shoulde haue the whole possession of vs? But when it cometh to the offering vp of ourselves to him, the world seeth y wee goe to it like cripples and purblind folke

Who is he that commeth freely vnto God, and that suffereth himselfe to be vterly cast down & to be stripped out of his sinful nature? Nay, if we goe towards God with the sight of one eye, with the sight of the other we are tied to the vanities of the worlde. If we lende him our cares a little while, by and by wee be listning to some other thing. If we haue any good thought tending towards him, we be corrupted a thousand waies. Such are the sacrifices y<sup>e</sup> we offer vnto God, that is to wit sinful sacrifices & full of corruption. To be short, howsoeuer the world go, God can haue no right at our handes. Cal he neuer so much vpon vs, & be he neuer so importunate with vs, yet are we so hardhearted, y<sup>e</sup> we will neuer yeeld him his due. Thus we see that although the ceremony of offering y<sup>e</sup> first borne as wel of cattell as of men, is taken away: yet this Law is not superfluous among Christians; but vnder the shadowes of Moseses lawe, God sheweth vs after what sort we should come vnto him nowadayes: that is to wit, not limping, nor as purblind folke ranging here and there: but y<sup>e</sup> we should looke to the purging of the wicked affections that are in vs, so as wee may come to him sounde both in bodie & soule. True it is that doe what we can, it is not possible for vs to be without a great number of vices in vs: but yet must not those vices be nourished, neither must we flatter our selues. If any of vs feele anie imperfections in himselfe, he must mislike of it, and being sorie for it, wee must desire GOD to purge and cleanse vs from our sinnes, that we may be ridde from all the corruptions that hinder vs to become acceptable sacrifices vnto him. When we go that way to worke, that is to say, when euerie of vs fighteth against his owne sinnes by true repentance; although there be many things amisse in vs, yet will our Lorde receiue vs, and not shake vs off. For we knowe that the bloud of our Lorde Iesus Christ serueth to scoure out all our spottes. And that is the cause why it is sayd that our sacrifices are offered to God the father in his name. Seeing then that Iesus Christe is there answering for vs, although there be spots in vs, yet are they not imputed to vs. But yet must we on our side endeouer to amende them, and by that meane acknowledge the thing that is sayde heere, that is to wit; wee must not offer faultie sacrifices vnto God, nor resemble the hypocrites, which come to him for fashions sake, but in deede make none account of him: so as we should make a faire face of it to the worlde-ward, and in the meane while foster some secret poysen within, but that we come right fourth to our God as he commaundeth vs. Thus ye see in effect what we haue to remember vpon this sentence of Moseses, where hee speaketh of the firstborne.

Besides this, our Lords meaning was that the first borne should be valued at a summe of money as well of the cattell as of other things: so as the thing that was alwayes aimed at, was the mindfulness of Gods benefites. But as concerning these things we will not enter into them as now; for this text requireth it not, neither doth y<sup>e</sup> time serue for it. It sufficeth vs in fewe words to know that our Lordes meaning heere, is that when we haue receiued any gracious good turne, or that he hath bestowed any benefite vpon vs, the remembrance thereof should continue with vs, not for a day or two, but for euer: and that the fathers should tell their children the same, to the ende that he may be honored among vs for euermore. Finally let vs not offer beastes vnto him in sacrifice, as they did vnder the Lawe as appeareth by this figure: but let vs assure our selues that y<sup>e</sup> acceptable sacrifice which God requireth, is the offering of our selues vnto him both in bodie and soule, so as our whole seeking may be to be guided and gouerned altogether by his holy spirit, and that all that euer wee haue be dedicated to his seruice, and applyed to the vse which he hath shewed vs, that he may be glorified in all points.

Nowe let vs fall downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele the m better, and that seeing there is nothing in vs but all manner of frowardnesse & leaudnes, we may seeke to be renewed in such sort, that as long as we liue in this mortal life, our whole seeking may be to be guided to the happie ende which we looke for in heaue; and y<sup>e</sup> in the meane time we may liue after such a sorte in this worlde, as he may be glorified in vs, and that whē it shall please him to take vs hence, wee may yeelde our selues obediently into his handes, assuring our selues y<sup>e</sup> sith he sheweth him selfe so gracious and liberal towards vs, as to gouerne vs in this transitorie life, & of his goodnes giueth vs al things behoouefull & necessary, wee neede not to doubt but that he will make vs to attaine to the perfection of the thinges which are now hidden, & which shall not be opened vnto vs, vntill the coming of our Lorde Iesus Christ. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

THou shalt keepe the moneth of new fruites, that thou maiest keepe Passeouer to the Lorde thy God. For in the moneth of new fruites the Lorde thy God brought thee out of the Lande of Egypt.

2 And thou shalt sacrifice the Passeouer to the Lorde thy GOD, euen thee &c

Sheepe and Oxen, in the place which the Lorde thy GOD will choofe to put his name therein.

3 Thou shalt eate no leauen breade in that feast : Seuen dayes shalt thou eate vnleauened bread, euen the bread, of sorowe . For thou camest in hatte out of the Lande of Egypt: to the ende thou be mindefull of the day of thy departing out of the Lande of Egypt all the dayes of thy life.

4 And there shal no leauen be seene in thy house, during the seuen daies in all thy coastes . Also ye shall not leaue of the fleshe that is sacrificed from the euening of the former day till the next morning .

His present chapter treateth of the three feasts which God ordeined among the Iewes : that is to wit, the feast of Easter or Passouer, & feast of Pentecost or Whitsontide, & the feast of Tabernacles or Tentes. First hee treateth of the Passouer, & God ordeineth that it should be diligently obserued : for it was a memorial of great importance, whereby the people were put in mind, how they had bene redeemed, & put in possession of the inheritance that had bin promised vnto them. It was behoouefull that y<sup>e</sup> same should be knowne: for it was the fundation of all the benefits which the Iewes had receiued at Gods hande, & which they looked for afterwarde . Without that, they had bin no people separated & dedicated to god, neither had they had any hope of saluation : for the covenā<sup>t</sup> made with their fathers had bin dissolved. Therefore is it not without cause, that God would haue that day kept holy, & with such ceremonie . In like case was it with the feast of Tabernacles, as wee shall see hereafter. For it serued to put the Iewes in minde of their going out of Egypt, and that whereas they had dwelt long time in the wilderness, without house or home, and yet God had euer preferred them : it behooued them likewise to acknowledge y<sup>e</sup> same benefite. But we will treat of euery feast in his dewe order .

Presently we haue to speake of the passouer. But before I go any further, we must inake also that God respected not only what he had done already, but also ment therewithall there should be a figure of things to come , whereof we haue now the truth & substance , since the time y<sup>e</sup> our lord Iesus Christ hath bin discovered to y<sup>e</sup> world. That is the cause why S. Paul telleth y<sup>e</sup> Colossians, y<sup>e</sup> these things were but shadowes, y<sup>e</sup> body where of is in Christ Iesus. True it is y<sup>e</sup> he speakeeth not there expressly of Easterday by name: but yet vnder the name of Sabbath, he comprehendeth all the feastes, & likewise all the Ceremonies that depended vpon the. To be short, God had a double respect in ordeining the day of the Passouer. The one was to do the people of Israel to vnder-stand, y<sup>e</sup> they came not into possession of y<sup>e</sup> Land of Chanaan by their own power: but y<sup>e</sup> they had bin led in thither by the hande of God. And because they had bin deliuered by miracle out of y<sup>e</sup> land of Egypt, Gods wil was y<sup>e</sup> the same should be declared. Againe, forasmuch as the same deliuerance was a figure of the deliuerance y<sup>e</sup> was to be hoped for by our Lorde Iesus Christ : this feast of Passouer extended yet further, y<sup>e</sup> is to wit, y<sup>e</sup> whē the people ate of the paschal Lamb (as they called it) they should thinke thus with themselves: This is a shadow & figure of the Sacrifice which shal be once offered vp, whereby the world shal be reconciled & fer free . And although the thing were not yet apparant to the eye. Yet behoueth it the faithful to imue themselves to the hope of the redeemer whō God had promised them. And in that respect sayth S. Paul in the first to y<sup>e</sup> Corinthians, y<sup>e</sup> Iesus Christ is our Passouer or Paschall Lambe, and y<sup>e</sup> he is sacrificed for vs , and that we must now eate of that sacrifice: howbeit not with the leauen of malice and deceitefulness, but with righteounesse and foundnesse . That is the one point which we haue to remember.

And that the Paschall Lamb was not a bare ceremonie without doctrine , it appeareth by that which is written in y<sup>e</sup> twelfth of Exodus; where it is said, y<sup>e</sup> when the Lamb is sacrificed as it is a eating, if their childre aske what it meaneth: their fathers shall answere, The Lorde brought vs out of the land of Egypt where we were in bondage, & therefore he wil haue this thing done yeerely in remembrance thereof: not y<sup>e</sup> the doing thereof one only day may discharge vs: but y<sup>e</sup> the same should continue printed in our hearts , so as in inioying the land of Chanaan, we may vnderstand y<sup>e</sup> wee cōquered it not by our own strength, but through his good pleasure, because it was his will to harbour vs here, according to y<sup>e</sup> promise which hee had made to our forefathers . We see then howe the feast of Passouer, was not a ceremonie without instruction: but y<sup>e</sup> it contained doctrine in it. And it is an article of great importance. For the world would alwaies haue a great number of ceremonies to no purpose: & in the meane while it seemes ynough to haue store of gay shoves. But on y<sup>e</sup> contrary part, God telleth vs, y<sup>e</sup> ceremonies are but toyes & trifles, vnlesse they leade vs further, & behight vs things concerning our saluation, so as we be taught & cōfirmed in the faith by meanes of them. If y<sup>e</sup> be not in the, they be starke baggage, & nothing worth. Nay, they be nothing els than a corrupting of y<sup>e</sup> seruice of God, and the high way to lead vs to superstition and y<sup>e</sup> dolatry.

As for example, wee see howe they make a great number of disguisings in the Popedome: but in the meane while they wote not what any of those things meane. If ye come to their Masse, there they play an enterlude, where there are as many sonde toyes as can be. In deede the wretched worlde is rauished at them: but that is because they knowe nothing, but are vityerly sotted, and yet they beare themselves in hande that they haue done a dowtie deede, and y<sup>e</sup> God ought to like very well of it, when they haue so bestrid themselves. But (as I tolde you afore) they be but vaine & sonde Apath toyes. And why so? For God neuer ment to ordeine any ceremonie among his people, which contened not some good instruction, and serued not to some good end. And therefore lette vs marke well, that whereas the Iewes had y<sup>e</sup> feast of Pascheouer, they had Gods worde also, whereby they were warranted y<sup>e</sup> it was not inuented at the pleasure of men. For God not onely gaue a prefixed commandement as saying: You shall obserue such a day: but also a doctrine with it, & willed y<sup>e</sup> fathers should teach it their children, & put the in remembrance of the deliuerance y<sup>e</sup> had bin made, as in deede it was as excellent a deede as might be. That then was of his appointment.

And solet vs beare in minde, that if we nowadays haue ceremonies without instruction, they shall be all condemned of God, who vityerly mistaketh them, and we can not alleadge them to be his seruice. For he declareth and auoweth it to be but foolish superstition, when men turne away from that marke, and that it is the next way to put vs quite besides our saluation. And herein we may desie all the houghe heape of pompes wherewith the Papistes will needes serue GOD: for there is nothing in them that God auoweth. Altho wee be warned to mingle nothing with the pure simplicitie of the Sacramentes and Ceremonies which GOD woulde haue to be obserued nowadays. Let vs holde vs contented with that which is shewed vs: for if wee adde neuer so little to it, surely wee shall make such a minglemangle as will be nothing worth, after the manner of the Papistes, who (as wee see) haue inuented many things of their own head. Wee must haue this and that, say they, Why so? To what purpose? O (say they) it will serue for such a thing: but in the meane while there is no instruction to Godwarde. Is it their part to cause a doctrine to be brought in? It were meete that God should speake. And when men heare him, then euery one shall be edified. But when men thrust themselves in, and fall to forging of sonde deuotions without authoritie from GOD: all must needes be cast downe. The worlde sees how the Papists haue corrupted the true Sacramentes. In Baptisme, the water had bene esteemed as nothing in the Popedome: for it is no matter if the infantes pisse in it. But as for the holy creame that is in it, O, it is not for any man to touch that: for that is too heauenly a thing. And yet notwithstanding the water is the substance of that Sacramēt, and the whole perfection thereof. But as for the creame, who deuised it? It is a stinking greace that men haue charmed, and blowed vpon, like forcerers. And should that be had in such reuerence, that the Sacrament which proceedeth from the sonne of God, should be had in no estimation for it? Moreouer, the water (by their reckening) is not good, vnlesse it haue bene coniuured, and that a number of charmes haue bene made ouer it, to amaze the ignorant. And therefore so much the better ought we to beare this lesson in minde, that wee may be fenced against all Satans inuentions; which is, that sith wee see our mindes so ticklish, that wee woulde faine still inuent some newe thing, and wee beare ourselves in hande that wee haue spunne a faire threede, when some newe Ceremonie is come forth by our meanes: it standeth vs in hande to thinke thus, yea but GOD dispiseth all this geere, yea and he sheweth vs that we do but peruert his seruice, when wee adde any thing after that fashion, of our owne. Then is it an infallible doctrine that no Ceremonies are behoofeful or to be made account of among the faithful, vnlesse they carry instruction with them. And that instruction must come of GOD: for it is his office to teach vs, hee restructh that authoritie to himselfe. And therefore it is to be concluded, that the ceremonies which are set forth by men, are but trifles & eguagawes, howe great a show of wisdomer fouer there seeme to be in them.

And hereby wee see also that it was superstitiously done of such as beare the name of Christians, to bring in a feast of Pascheouer vnder pretence that the Iewes had it: for the respectes are farre diuers. I meane not that we may not haue one day in the yeere, whereon to celebrate the remembrance of the resurrection of our Lorde Iesus Christ: for we must not runne so rigorously into extremities, as that our infirmities might not haue some helpe, to quicken it vppeth withall, that we might the better bethinke vs all the time of our life, what benefit the ryng againe of our Lorde Iesus Christ hath brought vnto vs. Well then may we haue a day appointed to that purpose for orders sake: but to make a seruice of God thereof, or to thinke that we ought to fashion ourselves after the example of the Iewes; that as they had their pascheouers, so ought we too: it were an abuse that tendeth to the turning of all things vpside downe, and a putting of a veyle before the face of Iesus Christ, y<sup>e</sup> men might not know the light of the Gospell. These things (as I saide) were but shadows, whereof wee haue as now the body and substance: and therefore it is a hiding of Iesus Christ, whē men bring in feasts after the manner of the Iewes.

But nowe let vs come to that which is commanded here concerning the Easterday of the Iewes: Ye shall eate vneleauened breade or cakes (sayth he) by the space of six dayes, and there shall no leauened bread be founde in your houses. This was done because the Iewes departed in hast out of the Land of Egypt. And it ought to haue made them to thinke that they went not out with banners displayed, as though their enemies had stood so in feare of the y<sup>e</sup> they durst not quetch against the: for they went a way like a sort of poore fugitiues. The women carried their children vpon their shoulders, the men tooke vp their stufte in their neckes, and fled away priuily, and their enemies would faine haue pursued them, & they were of strength & power enough to haue done it. The Iewes on the other side were a people y<sup>e</sup> could no skill to handle a sworde: for they had bin helde in such flauerie, y<sup>e</sup> they durst not once looke vpon a sworde or any weapon of warre. They had bin vsed like Asses and Oxen. Their state had bin as slaush as could bee. Well then, when the time came that they should depart, it was sayde vnto them, Exod. 11. 9 Get ye hence. And what bread shal wee haue to eat? What prouision shal there be by the way? Grinde your corne, and trusse it vp quickly in meale vpon your shoulders, and as the time will serue ye shal bake it by the way and eate it. Now when the people had this solemnitie yeerely, wherein they ate cakes without leauen: it serued to put the in minde, that when their fathers departed out of Egypt, they were a poore fugitiue people, that ranne away like a Lambe that is pursued by wolues. Ye see in what plight they were. Needs therefore must it bee concluded, that God had preferred them after a wonderfull fashion. For what were the Egyptians? A nation full of pride and crueltie. A mightie nation, a nation y<sup>e</sup> trusted to their owne force & power; & moreover a nation y<sup>e</sup> bare deadly hatred to the poore Iewes, an vtter enemy to the c<sup>e</sup>, & such a one as desired nothing so much as to roote out y<sup>e</sup> remembrance of them, as the tyranny of Pharao had well shewed. Now then the Iewes were put in minde y<sup>e</sup> God had made them to scape out of their enemies handes, so as they coulde not but knowe y<sup>e</sup> they had bin helped by him, & that the praye of their life was to bee yeilded vnto him. As if they should say, Thou Lord hast deliuered vs, not only from y<sup>e</sup> state of bondage but also as it were by fetching vs out of our graues. For we were as it were itarke dead, and had bin past all hope of recouery, if thou haddest not reached vs thy mightie arme. That was the thing whereof the Iewes were put in minde, when God commanded them to eate vneleuened bread. And it was his wil y<sup>e</sup> this should be done, not only y<sup>e</sup> same night y<sup>e</sup> they ate the pascall Lambe: but also that the same Ceremony should be continued by the space of six dayes together. And why? God shewed therein, y<sup>e</sup> men be not thoroughly framed at y<sup>e</sup> first brunt to the doctrine y<sup>e</sup> he setteth downe vnto them, though y<sup>e</sup> same be cleere ynough. Doth God speake? There is no darknesse in his speech. But yet howsoeuer the case stande, wee can not fasten vpon it. For we be so slowe minded, y<sup>e</sup> wee can neuer attaine to his meaning, vntill he haue repeated our lesion to vs diuers times. That is the cause why hee commanded expressly that they should eate vneleuened bread by the space of sixe dayes together. As if hee should say, truly the very one nightes eating of the pascall Lambe with vneleuened breade, ought to bee a sufficient instruction to you what is ment by the same. But what? I see well yee be shorrtwited, insomuch that if yee haue hearde any thing at

Gods mouth, yee forget it out of hande. And therefore when I intende to teach you, I must deale wth you as it were by measure and compasse. And therefore if ye haue a good long time afore hande to bethinke ye of the eating of the pascall Lambe, yee will be the better prepared vnto it. Therefore shall yee haue a whole week, wherein ye shall eate no leauened breade; by means whereof yee shal be quickened vp to thinke vpon the great and measurable benefit which God bestowed vpon your fathers in deliuering them out of the Lande of Egypt, so as you may beare well in minde that his deliuering of them was after a straunge manner, and that hee was faine to worke after a heauenly fashion, because ye were in so wretched plight, that yee might seeme to haue bene already swallowed vp of death, and to haue bene already buried in your graues. Nowe we see why the Iewes were expressly commanded to abstaine from the eating of leauened bread.

There were other Ceremonies also; that is to wit, the girding vp of their garmentes, the putting on of their shoes, and the taking of their walking staves in their handes. For in those East countryes they ware long garmentes after the same manner that the Turkes doe at this day. And when they traueiled by the way, they trusted vp their garmentes about their loynes, as the gray Fryers & Iacobines or white Fryers do, and such other that are so greatly combered with clothes. Nowe God did the Iewes to vnderstande that they should bee as wayfarers when they ate the pascall Lambe, and that they should eate it in haste, to put them in remembrance of the sayde departure out of Egypt. And our Lord did set downe this figure as a lookinglasse for the Iewes to beholde howe their forefathers ate the pascall Lambe, euen when they were halled to their wayes, that they might acknowledge so great a benefit. And herein we see how God had a respect to the rudenesse of his people as in deede all the Ceremonies which wee haue serue but for our infirmitie. What doth Baptisme or the Lodes Supper bring vs? Doe they make the death & passion of our Lorde Iesus Christ of more value than it is of it selfe? What helpe find we in the bread, or in the wine, or in the water, to that purpose? Gods meaning then was not to ad any thing to y<sup>e</sup> which we haue receiued in our Lord Iesus Christ: but to beare with our rudenesse because he sees vs to be vnable to comprehend the things that are gotten for vs by our Lorde Iesus Christ. For inasmuch as they bee too high for vs, God helpeth vs vp to the outward & visible signes which we haue in y<sup>e</sup> Sacraments. But it behoued the Iewes to haue no such helps than we. For they had not so plaine a doctrine as is now contened in y<sup>e</sup> Gospel. Again, Iesus Christ was not yet come, in whom we see all y<sup>e</sup> cuer can be wished for our saluation. The heauens were then opened vnto vs, when his side was opened to walke vs cleane, and his body offered vp for a sufficient sacrifice to reconcile vs vnto God his father, and to doe away all our offences and transgressions. When these things were done, then then had we a full warrant of our saluatiō. Therefore wee in these dayes neede not to be helped with so hounge a heape of Ceremonies as the ancient fathers vnder the Lawe were. It is ynough that we be ledde to our Lord Iesus Christ, wherunto fewe signes suffice, that is to wit Baptisme and the Lorde his Supper. For seeing that the sonne of God is contented with those two: we also ought to rest there. Neuerthelesse, wee see heere howe God vouchsafed to stoope to the infirmite of his people, by giuing them a luely representation of their departing out of the Land of Egypt, and by setting them downe as it were in a lookingglasse or painted table, for them to beholde howe he had deliuered them: that is to wit, like a sort of poore people, that were taking their iourney to flee away priurly, and were so distressed as it was not for them to turne heade against so mightie enemies, who were able to haue swallowed the vp at the first chop without any resistance. Seeing then that the Iewes had such instruction; they shoulde haue considered thus with themselues: How cometh it to passe that we be alue at this day, but because our God hath preferred vs? And how shold our state stand but onely by his meere mercy? For we had perished if he had not reached out his arme to bring vs out of the Land of Egypt. Thus much concerning this point.

Col. 1. 12

Nowe it was commanded further, that the pascall Lamb should be eaten with bitter herbes. And our Lorde himselfe speaketh here expressly of the bread of sorrow: as if he had said, although ye eate th: pascall Lambe in rest, and when ye be come to the inioyning of the inheritance which I haue promised you: yet must you haue a memoriall of the anguish wherein your forefathers were, and you must thinke y without my fauour you should haue had neither pascall Lambe nor bit of bread to eat at this day: for ye should haue beene vtterly rooted out of the worlde. Consider it therefore, and that ye may be the better moued thereunto, take bitter herbes, that is to say, abstaine from all deintinesse in your eating of the pascall Lambe. For the Iewes were not restrained from taking their repast after their eating of the pascall Lambe, as wee see that our Lorde Iesus Christ in eating of the Pascall Lamb with his disciples, inasmuch as they did not only sit downe at a table, but also lye downe after the manner of olde time, which was to eate their meales lying halfe a tone side. Certaine it is that he kept the Lawe to the vttermost: for hee submitted himselfe to it to set vs free from it. Then must we note that our Lord ate the pascall Lamb after the same maner that was ordained by Moses, that is to wit, standing vpon his feete, with his staffe in his hande, and his shoes on his feete, and hauing his loynes girded vp like a wayfarer. And after this was done hee tooke his accustomed repast, for this was a solemne sacrifice, and therefore wee must not wonder that it was separated from the common meates: for it behoued all the folke of one house to eate thereof, so as if there were thirtie or fortie persons in a house, e-uery man hadde his portion of it. And if the household were not great ynough, two or three householdes were called together and they mettē in one place, that the sacrifice might be eaten vp hastily. A Lambe was roasted in haft and eaten vp with a morsell of a sweete cake: yea and they were forbidden to seeth it, to shewe that they could haue no leasure to tarric till it were halfe boyled, but they were faine to deuour it hastily, like folke that were to go their waies out of hand. But howfoeuer the case stood, it behoued them to eat it with bitter herbs. Wherby we be done to vnderstande, that deinties doe keepe vs from the dewe consideration of Gods benefites, to be rauished by them. For although it bee sayde, Thou shalt be merrie before thy God: yet are we continually helde backe in this worlde, when we haue some allurements to withdrawe vs frō God. For if our fleshe haue her likings, then are wee ouertaken in such sorte, that we flye not vp aloft to beholde well the spirital grace of God. Thus yee see that the cause why the bitter herbes were put to the sacrifice, was to make men to consider the better after what manner the people hadde bene deliuered, being erst in so extreme anguish as they were not able to endure any more.

Besides this, they were also forbidden to admit any heathen man to it, valesse hee were circumcised. True it is that God commanded that the bondmen being strangers borne should eate thereof. Yea, but that was not before they were first incorporated into his Church by receiuing the signe of circumcision. Hereby it is done vs to vnderstande, that it was a peculiar token giuen of God to his owne people. For Sacraments are peculiar to the Church. They be no things for men to put to vnholly vses, nor to leaue at aduerture. For our Lorde will haue vs to be gathered together vnder his name. When we vie the Sacramentes, let vs thinke thus with our selues, Beholde here is a treasure that God hath kept and layde vp for vs as for his children. And in decede, if a man should nowe adayes admitte as many to the Lordes Supper as would offer to come to it: were it not a defiling of the Sacrament? And yet there are a number to be seene, which would haue al men indifferently both tag and ragge to be admitted to it: but such folkes neuer wilt yet howe to vse the Sacramentes aright. For (as shall be declared hereafter) the Supper of our Lorde Iesus Christ is to vs at this day the same that the Pascall Lambe was, to the people of the Iewes. Wherefore let vs marke in fewe wordes, howe our Lorde hath shewed that this Sacrament was a warrant giuen of him to his people, that he took thē to be his Church, and therefore that it ought not to be set forth at aduerture to all commers. True it is that Circumcision likewise was a Sacrament: but there was diuersitie of respectes betwene the one and the other. For by circumcision, folke were receiued into the number of Gods people, so as it was an enterace into the Church as Baptisme is at this day: by meanes whereof such as by nature are not nōbered in y cōpany of Gods children, are receiued and incorporated into thē by Baptisme. And so stood the case with y Iewes for circumcision: But as for the Pascall Lambe, that was to be kept to the Iewes theauesclues.

Now it is also sayde, that it was not to bee eaten throughout the whole Countrey; but that it was to bee done in the place which the Lorde had chosen to put his name in. And truly this was not thewed them at the first day, insonuch that they had bene a long time in the land of Chanaan, eare the Arke had any certaine resting place, there was no such place assigned to it. But yet it behoued them allwaies to be obedient to the ceremonye of resorting to y<sup>e</sup> place where the Arke

was, vntill mount Sion was marked out. And then were all men bound to repaire thither, euen from the vttermoost borders of the Countrey: all men were to come to Ierusalem, except they were lected by sicknesse or old age. And why? it was not to giue a president for the Pilgrimages which y<sup>e</sup> Papists inuented afterward: For in so doing they shewed themselves to differ nothing at all from the Iewes. Againe, it is not for them to excuse themselves by the example of the Iewes: for y<sup>e</sup> Iewes had a commaundement of God, but the Papistes made their vagaries for their own pleasure: wherin they vtterly renounced Iesus Christ & ouerthrew that which is sayd in the fourth of S. Iohn, namely that y<sup>e</sup> time was come y<sup>e</sup> god would no more be worshipped in any place certain, but would haue his name called vpon euery where throughout y<sup>e</sup> whole world. Besides this, we must

note that there was a speciall reason why God would haue the Iewes to resort to Ierusalem to sacrifice the pascall Lamb: there: namely to the end y<sup>e</sup> no man should attempt to alter any thing in y<sup>e</sup> order which he had set by the Law. And (as I haue said) this ancient ceremonye was a thing of great importance, as wherby the people were intomed of their Redeemer, euen that he had brought them out of the land of Egypt, & that he would send the yet another redeemer, by whom the whole world should be redeemed. Loc heere a ceremonye that imported a wonderfull secret, & therefore it was meete y<sup>e</sup> it should be kept purely. For the doing wherof god called all the Iewes into one body y<sup>e</sup> hauing y<sup>e</sup> Sanctuary & the temple there before their eyes, they might be the better put in mind y<sup>e</sup> it was not lawfull for them to adde any thing at their owne pleasure, but that it behoued them to follow y<sup>e</sup> commō doctrine, to vnderstand y<sup>e</sup> God represented himselfe there, and dwelt among the by means of the Arke. Seeing then that the people were so gathered together, they could not but be restrained frō starting out into foolish inuentions: and needes must the doctrine be retained therewithal, as I haue said afore: for y<sup>e</sup> ceremonye was nothing of it selfe, it had bin but as a Maygame or a mockerie. That was y<sup>e</sup> cause why y<sup>e</sup> people were drawē to Ierusalem, as to y<sup>e</sup> place which God had appointed. And so we see now why it was said y<sup>e</sup> they should not do sacrifice in any of their cities or townes, but assemble all together in the Citie of Ierusalem.

Exod. 12. 16

It is inoynd further, that they should not breake a bone of the Pascall Lamb. And why? As if it were said y<sup>e</sup> it was a meate to bee eaten in haste, (as I haue said afore), so as they were forbidde to boile any part of it. And hereby God meant to shew yet better y<sup>e</sup> haste which the people made in departing out of y<sup>e</sup> land of Egypt, for so much as it was not for them to set the pot vpon y<sup>e</sup> fire to boile it: for they could neuer haue had time to do it. Therefore were they faine to make haste, & to eate this Lamb halfe roasted as people pressed vpon by their enemies, & as if they looked to haue bin ouertaken euery minute of an houre: by reason wherof they had no leasure to stand gnawing of y<sup>e</sup> bones, or to breake them to get out y<sup>e</sup> marrow, as folk do when they haue time at wil. None of this could they do: but were faine to eate y<sup>e</sup> sacrifice in haste, & to cast away y<sup>e</sup> rest. We see then as now, y<sup>e</sup> as concerning y<sup>e</sup> deliuerance y<sup>e</sup> had bin wrought alreadie, things were as it were pointed out with y<sup>e</sup> finger in the Pascall Lamb: & for this cause y<sup>e</sup> very terme it selfe is expressed here, for y<sup>e</sup> Hebrew word: Passah is the same y<sup>e</sup> we call Passing in English. And by y<sup>e</sup> word our Lord confirmed y<sup>e</sup> thing which we haue spoken of before, namely y<sup>e</sup> this Ceremonye was not a fond deuise to busie mens heads withal as though they were little babes: but y<sup>e</sup> it importeth instruction to edifie folk withal, to the end they should think thus: This day must we do homage to our God for our life, because he preserued vs of his owne mere infinite goodnes, by bringing vs out of y<sup>e</sup> land of Egypt. So then God spake not simply of y<sup>e</sup> thing: y<sup>e</sup> were to be obserued: but his meaning was to shew the end in such wise which he intended, as y<sup>e</sup> people might consider, we haue made a Passage: & what manner of Passage? Euen such a one as we had no lgs to go it withal, but God did lift vs vp by his power, and made vs to passe ouer it as a gulf of death, not onely in passing y<sup>e</sup> red sea, but also whē we were yet in Egypt. For before we came at the red sea, there was another strait to passe, which we shoulde neuer haue escaped ouer at, if God had not opened vs y<sup>e</sup> way with his owne hand. Yea & his will was that that day should be obserued, to the intent that the remembrance therof should be y<sup>e</sup> certainer.

And for the same cause he poynted out the moneth y<sup>e</sup> answereth to March or April. Howbeit not to eyther of them, but because we cannot make a certaine report of y<sup>e</sup> monethes of the Iewes to compare them w<sup>o</sup> ours. The reason wherof is, for y<sup>e</sup> they had their moneths intermingled one with another, because they tooke them according to y<sup>e</sup> Moone, so as they were interlaced together. This moneth therefore was sometime sooner and sometime later, & was named in Hebrew Abib, which signifieth an eare of corne, when it becometh to shoote forth at the first. Nor when the eares of Corne are full ripe: but when the corne becometh newly to spindle. In dedde the time of it selfe importeth nothing: but yet did it serue greatly to the instructing of the people, because the setting of it down made them to behold the matter the more presently. Gods putting of the in remembrance of it was such as they could not but know y<sup>e</sup> meane wherby their fathers were brought out of the land of Egypt. And the very night it selfe was marked, to y<sup>e</sup> end they shoulde consider how god had deliuered them from the thraldom of Pharao. On the other side, had the moneth been marked at the pleasure of men: they wold haue thought it might haue beene changed for the commoditie of the people. But God commaunded it to be kept, to the end they should know he would haue no part of his ordinance changed, nor any man attempt to alter it in any wise.

And nowe we haue to make in effect, that by the ordering of y<sup>e</sup> Pascheouer day, God ment to set downe a memorial of his doings among his people, that they might acknowledge his grace, in deliuering them out of the Land of Egypt after that fashion, and that their children myght know that that was the means whereby they were come into the inheritance that had beene promised them. Neuerthelesse, it was not Gods intent to be honoured and setued with a trifling Ceremonie: but his mind was that there should be teaching, that men might be edified by it, and that the Iewes might know that Gods calling of them to him, was to be serued by them as their redeemer and father. And therefore he would not haue the Pascall Lamb eaten by vnholly and vnbeleuing folke: but that it should bee giuen alonly to such as were circumcised, and were already of the body of the Church. And seeing it is so, Let vs remember that in all signes which God giueth vs, we must haue instructiō annexed to lead vs vnto him. And for as much as we haue the true pascheouer in our Lord Iesus Christ, as shall bee declared to morrow: wee must nowadayes step further. And although we haue not the old Ceremonie; yet let vs hold fast the truth therof, which is brought vs by the sonne of God, as it is declared vnto vs in these dayes by his Gospell.

Now let vs fall downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgmet of our sins, praying him to make vs to perceiue in what state we were, when he vouchsafed to call vs to him, so as he hath plucked vs out of the gulfe of death, in such sort as we haue now cause to glorifie him, and to giue our selues ouer to his seruice all the time of our life. And for as much as he not only sheweth himselfe to be our father and sauour in this transitory life, but also calleth vs to the euerlasting inheritance of heauen; according as hee had chosen vs thereto before the creation of the world: let vs tend alwayes thitherward, and bee the more prouoked to labour to that end, seeing we haue the helpes and Remedies which he giueth vs, and that the badge is kept among vs, as he hath commaunded vs by his word. That it may please him to graunt this grace not only to vs, but also to all people & nations of y<sup>e</sup> earth, &c.

On Wednesday the vj. of Nouember. 1555.

The XCviij. Sermon which is the second vpon the sixteenth Chapter.

2,3,4 And thou shalt sacrifice &c.

5 Thou maist not sacrifice the Pascheouer within any of y<sup>e</sup> gates which the Lord thy God giueth thee:

6 But in the place which the Lord thy God wil choose to set his name in, there shalt thou offer the Pascheouer at euen, about the going downe of the Sunne, iust at the time that thou wentest out of Egypt.

7 And thou shalt roast it, and eate it in the place which the Lord thy God shall haue chosen for himselfe. And the next morning thou shalt returne from thence and goe home to thy Tentes.

8 Six dayes shalt thou eate vnleauened breade: and on the seuenth day which is the solemne feast of the Lord thy God, thou shalt doe no manner of worke.

IT was declared yesterday, how y<sup>e</sup> by keeping y<sup>e</sup> feast of the pascheouer, the Iewes were put in minde of the deliuerance of their forefathers made by God.

And I toulde you howe it was to double ende. For GODS will was to put his people in remembrance of the fauour which he had shewed to them alreadie: and againe, he ment to leade them to the hope of our Lorde Iesus Christ. It was then but a temporall deliuerance, which God had made of them out of the Land of Egypt: but when he sent his onely sonne, the deliuered he his people out of a farre worse bondage than that which we haue spoken of. And therefore let vs mark y<sup>e</sup> the Pascall Lamb was a figure of our Lorde Iesus Christ: which thing S. Paule witnesseth in expresse words, saying: Christ our Pascheouer is offered vp. All we knowe the sentence that is alleaged out of the twelfth of Exodus by S. Iohn, where it is said; Ye shal not breake a bone of him. For there he declareth how they came to our Lord Iesus Christ to haue broken his bones after the accustomed manner, and found him alreadie dead. And that came to passe by the wonderfull prouidence of God, whose will it was that the thing which had beene figured in the Pascall Lambe, should bee layde open to mens eyes in Iesus Christ. And so Saint Iohn applyeth this sentence to the

1. Cor. 5-7<sup>e</sup>

Iohn 19-36
& Exod. 12-46

the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ, in saying, it is written, Yee shall not breake a bone of him. Yea, but God speaketh but onely of the Pascall Lambe which was offered in those dayes. Yet notwithstanding his intent was to shew, y there was an agreement betwene Christ & the Passeeouer, and that in that visible sacrament he ment to foreshewe the redemption that was not yet seene, and that all this was fully accomplished in our Lord Iesus Christ. True it is that the Jewes haue not profited by this admonition: for they were the more in hardened by it. But let vs on our side learne to referre the things that were done by our Lord Iesus Christ, to the things that were forefigured in the lawe, & wee shall profit greatly by that meane. For it is not yuough for vs to knowe the storie of the death and Passion of our Lord Iesus Christ; but the chiefe point is to resort to the vse and fruite of it. And that is much the better attayned vnto, by considering the ancient figures. Now it is sayd, y the Pascall Lambe was offered vp, to the end that the houses which were marked with the blood thereof, should bee spared of God. For an Angel passed swiftly through the land of Egypt, and slew al the first borne both of man and beast. There was but one reservation, namely the sacrificing of the Lamb, & looke what doore of a house was dipped with the blood thereof, that house did the Lords Angel passe ouer. The onely safetie then which we haue, when God vtereth his wrath and vengeance through the whole world, is to beare the mark of our Lord Iesus Christ. For inasmuch as he was sacrificed for vs, & wee bee besprinkled w his blood, God acknowledgeth vs for his own, & ypon speciall priuiledge withdraweth his hand from vs, so as wee be not comprised nor inclosd vnder the common curse of y whole world. For y laod of Egypt was at that time as an image of all mankind. And in deede, we be al accursed by nature, & good reason it is that God as a iust Iudge should execute his vengeance ypon vs. But here the faithfull are dispersed and mingled with the faithlesse. And how then are they discerned a sunder, seeing they dwell together? God can well ynough skill to discern the marke of his sonne. True it is y the state of our life may well be like y state of the faithlesse and the despisers of God. But yet howsoeuer we fare, our Lord gathereth vs continually to himselfe. In lo much that if we be of his flock, he wilbe mercifull to vs euē to y end, conditionally also y wee beare the blood of our Lord Iesus Christ for our badge. At y time the doores of their houses were sprinkled w a branch of Hyssop: but as now our besprinkling must bee spiritual, as S. Peter telleth vs. Would we then y God should take vs to mercie, when his hand is stretched out to punish all the world? Let vs vnderstand y there is no other meane for vs to bee marked by our Lord Iesus christ, than onely y holy Ghost. For his blood is not now a shedding, that we might make an outward and visible sprinkling of our ielues with it: but hee hath shead it for vs in spirite (as the Apostle speaketh of it in the Epistle to the Hebrewes.) That is to say, it was not the only paine that he suffred in his body, but al so the matching of the heavenly power with it, that made the blood of him to bee our washing and cleansing. And when we haue once beene watred with the holy Ghost, then will that blood be euē fresh and neuer drye. For it is not corruptible, in as much as wee be washed and cleansed with it before God. Therefore let vs fo put the thing in vre which is spoken of by Saint Peter, as it may besprinkle our soules. Ashow Euen by taking holde by fayth, of the inestimable benefite which is brought vs by our Lorde Iesus Christ. And although wee bee full of filth and vnclannesse: yet doth not God faile to take vs into his fauour, because the blood that was once shedde for our saluation, is sufficient to wash out all our spots at this day. Thus much

1. John 1. 7.

And therefore let vs rest ypon this point, that although we seeme in this world to bee wrapped vp in the curse of God with the vnbeleeuers; yet notwithstanding we shall bee preferred from aboue: and that if the Angell could skill to discern the Jewes which had marked their houses with the corruptible blood of a brute beast; it is much more likely that God will at this day know the blood of his own sonne, so as we may be discerned by it, and not haue his wrath to fall ypon vs. True it is y we may well suffer some chastisement, for it is good for our soules health. But the end thereof will alwaies be good, and God will neuer cease to be still mercifull to vs. That is the first matter which we haue to mark as in respect of the former saying, that our Lord Iesus Christ is the fulfilling of the things that were figured in the law, by the offering of the Pascall Lambe.

But let vs nowe come backe againe to Saint Pauls exhortation. Hee sayth that because our Easter lambe is offered vp, wee must nowe keepe the feast in eating it, howbeit not with the Leauen of naughtinesse or deceite, but in simplicitie and vprightnesse. Whereas he sayth that our passouer is offered vp, he doth vs to vnderstand that if we wilbe reconciled to God, we must resort to the death and passion of his Sonne, and not surmise any other Sacrifice than that, which is the euerlasting, because the vertue thereof can neuer fayle. And it is a point well worth the noting: For it serueth to condemne the abomination of the Masse which is brought into the Popedome. They be not contented with y offering vp of Iesus Christ vnto GOD his Father, and with the one satisfaction which hee hath made to indure for euē: but they beare men in hande that hee is yet sacrificed dayly; whereas Saint Paule telleth vs that wee must holde vs to the Redemption that was purchased once for all.

1. Cor. 5. 8.

Hebr. 7. 14;

Nowe remayneth that wee care of this Sacrifice, that is to say, that wee become partakers thereof. As if hee had sayde, there are two things in the pascall Lambe: the one was the sprinkling of the Lambes blood, and the other was the eating of his fleshe roasted. Now in deede it is the sonne of God that hath offered this sacrifice, and that office belongeth to him alone. The sprinkling of his blood is made in our hearts by the holy Ghost: for that cannot be attributed to  $\bar{y}$  cunning of men. We must now become partakers of his Sacrifice: not by eating Iesus christ after a fleshly maner; but S. Paul had an eye to this partaking that is given vs by the Gospell. For we be members of his body, and he knit-reth vs fo vnto him,  $\bar{y}$  looke whatsoever he hath, he cōmunicateth  $\bar{y}$  same vnto vs; so as we liue in him & he also in vs. And for as much as there is no feuerallie between  $\bar{y}$  sonne of God &  $\bar{y}$  faithful: therefore is he our meate. For we be no lesse fed wth his power & his very substance as in respect of our soules, than our bodies are fed and nourished with bread. Againc, to the intent we should vnderstand that we haue nor our sustenance by haules in Iesus Christ: he addeth wine also, to shew that hee is our drinke as well as our meate. That is  $\bar{y}$  thing which S. Paule ment to betoken, in saying  $\bar{y}$  we must now eat of this Easter lamb: that is to wit, that as now we should fo cōmunicate with the sonne of God, as we might be knit vnto him by the secret and matuclous working of his holy spirit, and he become our foode and nourishment, & we be susteined by the same, because we must else needs decay through our own feblenes. And this eating is not for once a yeere; but continually during all the time of our life.

Then let vs learne, that as long as we be in this world, we must dayly frame our selues to the spirituall fellowship which we haue with our Lorde Iesus Christ, and to the confirming of the vnion more and more: for without that, the crucifying of our Lord Iesus Christ will boore vs nothing at al. He is the redeemer of all the whole world: & yet notwithstanding, what a number is there, which reape nothing else by his death but the greater condemnation? And that is because they refuse to excellēt a benefite, wherby they make themselves vnworthy of it, and exclude themselves quite and cleane from it. But when we communicate with him by faith, then doe we ratifie the grace that was purchased for vs. And therefore let vs marke, that to bee partakers of the fruite and operation of the death and passion of our Lord Iesus Christ, we must be linked vnto him from day to day by faith, profiting and growing still in that holy vnion, vntill wee haue the thing wholly and perfectly, which wee haue as yet but in part. After that maner ought we to eare  $\bar{y}$  sacrifice, to keepe the passeouer wel. And for as much as our faith increaseth according to our profiting in the holy scripture: if we intend to communicate wel wth the sonne of God; eury one of vs must exercise our selues in the doctrine of the Gospell, and match the same wth prayer, beseeching God  $\bar{y}$  seeing he hath vouchsafed to call vs once into his sonnes company, he will maintaine vs therein, & neuer suffer vs to be separated or wdrawn from it any more. Therefore must we seeke all  $\bar{y}$  means which our Lord hath ordeined, to stablish the communion which we ought to haue in our Lord Iesus Christ.

Now S. Paule addeth, that we cannot be partakers of  $\bar{y}$  sonne of God, nor haue any acquaintance with him, if we bee dubble minded  $\bar{y}$  there be any fraude or malice in vs. Then must we be changed if we wil haue Iesus Christ for our sustenance, that is to say, if we will haue him to feede vs with his substance. Certaine it is  $\bar{y}$  malice and hypocrisie are so rooted in vs,  $\bar{y}$  we must be faine to fight much wth them, before we can be rid of the. S. Paul then sheweth  $\bar{y}$  faithful there,  $\bar{y}$  they must be reformed, or else Iesus Christ will cut the off frō his body. And so although  $\bar{y}$  hypocrits pretend to seeke Iesus Christ & to sticke throughly to him; yet notwithstanding they haue none acquaintance at al wth him. For why? They be things vterly vnpossible,  $\bar{y}$  Iesus Christ should dwell in vs, & yet neuertheless that all maner of deceite & naughtinesse should raigne in vs. And therefore in stead of abstaining from leaueind bread as the fathers of old time did in eating of  $\bar{y}$  pascal lamb vnder the law: let vs marke  $\bar{y}$  nowadaies God will haue vs to discharge our selues of all naughtinesse & guile. And how may  $\bar{y}$  be? It will not be doone wth our great enforcement: for we of our selues are not steady: but the spirit of our Lord Iesus Christ must be faine to worke after such a torre wth vs, as we may be conformable to him in simplicitie & vprightnes. Thus ye see what we haue to gather of this exhortation which S. Paule maketh in  $\bar{y}$  first epistle to the Corinthians.

Now afterwarde heere followeth the thing that was treated of yester day, namely the eating of  $\bar{y}$  pascall lamb wth their staves in their hands, their shoes on their feete, & their loynes girded vp. For we cannot haue the companie of Iesus christ vnlesse we be as wayfarers in this world, to go on forward to seeke our inheritance elsewhere. And S. Paul in the Epistle to  $\bar{y}$  Colossians saith plainly that our life is hidden wth Christ, and  $\bar{y}$  we must be as dead men, if we wilbe vnted to the sonne of God. And why? For he is in heauen, & therefore it followeth  $\bar{y}$  our life ought not to be tyed heere to  $\bar{y}$  earth. What is to be doone then? If we will haue Iesus Christ to auow vs to bee members of his body, & to quicken vs by his spirit: we must get vs out of this world; not  $\bar{y}$  we should not dwell in it, but  $\bar{y}$  we should not be wedded to it. For these two things agree very well,  $\bar{y}$  gods children should be cōuersant in this earthly life, & yet neuertheless be heires & citizens of  $\bar{y}$  kingdom of heauē, accordingly as  $\bar{y}$  Apostle saith to  $\bar{y}$  Hebrewes,  $\bar{y}$  God can wellshin in his hart to take vs for his children, if we be not tyed to this world, but passe on beyond it. Wherefore let vs marke,  $\bar{y}$  to haue fellowship wth our lord Iesus christ, we must depart out of this world;  $\bar{y}$  is to say, our earthly affectiōs must not raigne in vs, we must not be mortized here, we must not be snarled here: but we must consider  $\bar{y}$  seeing God hath set vs here to make a iourney, yea & short iourney, eury of vs ought to hie himselfe a pace, & to looke well to the ridding of our selues of  $\bar{y}$  things  $\bar{y}$  may hinder vs frō attaining to  $\bar{y}$  heauenly life. And we must vnderstand  $\bar{y}$  if we do so, Iesus Christ wil come vnto vs & reach vs his hand to strengthē vs,  $\bar{y}$  we may be able to ouercome all impediments. For it were impossible  $\bar{y}$  euer we should compasse  $\bar{y}$  matter, vnlesse we were aided frō aboue. So then, we seee now  $\bar{y}$  a man cannot be partaker of the Pascall Lamb, except he haue his loynes gurded and his

And for the same cause also doth our Lord Iesus Christ warne all his Disciples to haue lampes in their hands, & their garments trusted vp, & to be alwaies in a readinesse til he come, & to stand waiting continually for his comming. And as he comandeth vs to haue our loynes girded vp,  $\bar{y}$  euē so willett he vs to haue lampes in our hands, to shew  $\bar{y}$  there is neither night nor day for  $\bar{y}$  faithfull to make tarience, & therefore  $\bar{y}$  euē in the middes of darknes we must haue light, euen the spirituall light to guide vs; & that we must haue the one foote alwaies lifted vp, to  $\bar{y}$  intent we be not taken vnawares when he commeth, but  $\bar{y}$  we haue minded our way aforehand, to go ftl forward to meete wth him. Ye see then  $\bar{y}$  the way to communicate a right wth our Lord Iesus Christ,  $\bar{y}$  we may bee partakers of the sacrifice which he hath offered: is to make none account of  $\bar{y}$  world, nor to haue any loue vnto it, but to seeke  $\bar{y}$  inhrance  $\bar{y}$  is about, & to communicate so one with another here beneath, as it may bee a meane to make vs draw the neerer vnto God. And so we see  $\bar{y}$  although  $\bar{y}$  figures of  $\bar{y}$  law continue not any longer, et the truth of them abideth with vs, and it behoueth vs to put the same in vre.

And hereby we be yet better informed of the thing  $\bar{y}$  I haue touched already: which is that the profit which redoundeth to vs by  $\bar{y}$  death & passion of our Lorde Iesus Christ, is much better knowne & beautifuller teene of vs, by laying it to the ancient figure, & by considering how  $\bar{y}$  things  $\bar{y}$  were set forth darkly at  $\bar{y}$  tyme, are nowe fulfilled to  $\bar{y}$  sight of the eye. And like as it behoueth vs to communicate with our Lorde Iesus Christ, so let vs mark also  $\bar{y}$  God giueth vs a help euen at this day in  $\bar{y}$  Sacrament of  $\bar{y}$  Lordes supper, bicause of our rudenes & infirmitie. True it is (as I haue touched already)  $\bar{y}$  our communicating with our Lord Iesus Christ must not bee only a thrife or foure times a yeere, but continually all our life long. Yet notwithstanding we haue neede to be quickened vp, bicause we come not to it with such strength as were requisite. Therefore like as  $\bar{y}$  fathers of old time had the Pascall Lamb: so hath  $\bar{y}$  sonne of God left vs his supper to be a helpe to vs to guide vs vnto him. Will we then be partakers of  $\bar{y}$  supper of our Lorde Iesus Christ? Let vs vnderstand  $\bar{y}$  according as I haue auouched before, we must rid our selues of all malice & guile, & forsake the world. True it is  $\bar{y}$  the Hypocrits do thrust themselves in among  $\bar{y}$  faithfull, & come to defile the table of  $\bar{y}$  sonne of God: but what carie they thence but vtter cursednes? Therefore let vs keepe our selues fro being guilte of such a treacherie, & consider that if it behoued a man to be circumcised in olde time ere he might cate of the Pascall Lamb: it behoueth vs also at this day to be separated to the seruice of our God, & to be first made holy. And we know  $\bar{y}$  we ought to be circumcised euen at this day: howbeit not by mans hand, but by inward reformation of minde, accordingly as S. Paule saith thereof in the second Chapter to  $\bar{y}$  Colossians,  $\bar{y}$  whatsoeuer is of our flesh must bee cut off:

Exod. 12. 44

Col. 2. 11.

for there is nothing in it but sinne & corruption. Now the  $\bar{y}$  we may come to  $\bar{y}$  holy supper of our Lord Iesus Christ, & haue there  $\bar{y}$  warrant which he giueth vs  $\bar{y}$  we be members of his body: let vs looke  $\bar{y}$  we circumsise our hearts. For the figure is abolished: but yet haue we the accomplishment of all things in our Lord Iesus Christ.

Moreouer, let vs come to  $\bar{y}$  chief point: which is  $\bar{y}$  our Lord Iesus Christ is named our Passouer, 10 For by him must we be deliuered, not out of the land of Egypt, but out of the dungeons of death; and we must passe a passage that were vnpossible for vs, if God drew vs not with his owne hand, & by his owne wonderfull power. For we be al borne the children of wrath, and we should rot in our miserie, if god pitied vs not, & reached vs not his hand. And that man beguileth himselfe which thinketh himselfe able to scape out of the myre wherin he is plunged. It is the office of our Lord Iesus Christ to draw vs out frō thence, according 20 to this saying of S. Iohns in his viiii. chapter, If  $\bar{y}$  sonne of god make you free, the shall you be free. Wherby he sheweth vs, that euen from our very comming out of our mothers wombes, we be in  $\bar{y}$  cursed thraldom of sin & death, & shold continue therein vnto the end, if we were not set free from it by him which not without cause hath taken vpon him the title of passouer, to shew  $\bar{y}$  it is his office to set vs free, as I said afore. And heereby 30 we must learn to presume nothing of our selues, but to consider that we must think our selues beholden to the sonne of god for all things, that he may bee magnified, & all those diuelish opinions of freewill & of power & ability to prepare our selues to doe good, beaten downe: so as we may know  $\bar{y}$  as long as God suffereth vs to follow our owne swindge, we shall alwaies abide fast tyed in the chaines of the diuel & of death. And therefore let vs yeeld our lord Iesus Christ his dew hon- 40 our, which is  $\bar{y}$  we acknowledge him to bee the partie which hath let vs free.

Iohn 8. 36;

Rom. 6. 5, 6;

And herewill let vs make further,  $\bar{y}$  when we be grafted into his body, it is not for vs to serue sin. For, to be grafted into the body of our Lord Iesus Christ, & yet notwithstanding to serue Sa- 50 than, are two things as contrary as fire and water. Nowe then if we intend not to disicate the power of the sonne of God, & to bereaue him of his office: we must be in liberty to serue god. And let vs not think  $\bar{y}$  he ment to beguile vs, in telling vs that that office belōgeth vnto him. But it becommeth vs on our part to offer our selues vnto him, & not to maintain willingly the cursed bondage wherin we be. For the very cause why men perish therein, is that they sooth themselves and fall asleepe in it, and come not frankly to Iesus Christ. Now then let vs note  $\bar{y}$  true mark of our Christendoms;  $\bar{y}$  we be in freedom to do good, & 60  $\bar{y}$  we haue a pure & free wil to dedicate our selues to god. Not that we can do it perfectly so long as we be in this world, (for we see how S. Paul, who had profited far about a number of other men, mourneth and confesseth that he is stil held as a captiue in part;) but for  $\bar{y}$  the grace of our Lord Iesus Christ must neuerthelesse worke so farre in vs, as wee may not bee held quite backe by these worlly things. But let vs marke also y our Lord Iesus Christ hath not only drawe vs out of y gulfe of death, but also will haue vs dayly to passe further. And forasmuch as we be not quite & cleane rid of this bondage of sinne, this passing on must continue still. What is al our life then? It is a continuall holding on to attaine to y full and perfect freedome which God hath promised to his children. And y is y cause why I sayd y it behoued vs to cate the Pasceall Lamb euery day. For Iesus Christ is not our euerlasting Passouer, for y he is sacrificed euery day: but for y we doe daily take benefit by him, & for that he maketh y vertue of his sacrifice continually available by his holy spirit. Notwithstanding, howsoeuer y case go, yet must we still keepe on forward, vntill we bee taken out of this world.

Rom 7. 14;

This doctrine ought to be very common, yea and when it is preached, euery man will thinke he knowes it well ynough; but in the meane while where is y praise thereof? Where is the sayd frecheartednes to shewe by our deedes that our Lord hath broken the bondes of Satan, so as we serue not sinne any more? Where is y earnestnes of minde to proceede more & more vntill we be gone quite & cleane out of the world? And yet must we exercise this doctrine, & put it in vre, if we will be acknowledged for members of our Lord Iesus Christ. But we cannot haue him to be our Redeemer, except he haue alwayes y saide title of Passouer. And that is in respect of vs: for he hath made his passage, by coming downe into the world & by reconciling men to God his father, & by being receiued vp againe into his glorie and Maiestie. Therefore there must not be any more change in Iesus Christ. But we on our side must be made perfect in him: and as soone as he collect vs to be of his body, we must begin to depart out of y dungeons of sin, from whence we must withdraw our selues euer more & more, and full traucell to attaine to the heavenly righteousness. To be short, let vs note that a Christian may well perceiue whether hee haue profited in the Gospell or no, by examining whether hee be withdrawn from the worlde or no, and whether he be ready and well disposed to depart from it as oft as it shall please God to pull him away from it, so as his heart be not tyed to it as long as he is heere beneath (For looke where our treasure is, there is also our heart with it) but that seeing Iesus Christ is our full life and felicitie, we alwayes tend to himward, & euer haue our mindes lifted vp on high.

And let vs marke further, that to keepe the passouer aright at this day, it behoueth vs to be vnited together, accordingly as we see how God hath giuen a strait commandement thereof in this place, where he saith it is not Lawfull to cate the pasceall Lambe in any other of the Cities or towne of the contry, but y they ought to assemble together to the Temple. Which thing I haue told you heere tofore, & was doone to preferue the religion in his purenes. Will we then nowadaies be partakers of our Lord Iesus Christ? Let vs agree together that there may be a true brotherhood among vs. For if we bee at odds among our selues like dogs & cats, Iesus Christ must needs disclaime & disaou vs. And therefore let vs not imagine our selues to be vnited to Iesus Christ, except there be good agreement and brotherly loue among vs. And wherein must that be? We may not conspire together as the wicked doe; for they make confederacies and ioyned hands together to make warre against God. Cursed be such vnion: it behoueth vs to be farre off from such dealing. Nay, we must resort to the temple of God. And although we haue not now a material temple as the Iewes had then in Ierusalem; (for our meeting together is for common orders sake, and not after the manner of the Iewes, who had a place certaine appointed out to the;) although (say I) we haue not the like figure; yet must we walke as in the presence of our God, we must be ruled by his word, we must haue one melody of faith to praise God as it were with one mouth, & we must shew our selues truly to beal one in him. Thus ye see how we must be gathered together to Gods Church, if we will be partakers of our Lord Iesus Christ.

And herein we see, y these scornors which turn away from y order of y church, exclude the selues from al hope of the heavenly life. They can say wel ynough y their intent is to be Christians; but yet for al y, inasmuch as they forsake y vnitie of faith, yea & euen fight againt it by despising all orders: it not to be concluded, y they cannot be partakers of the Pasceall Lambe, at leastwise after y true maner thereof which we haue nowadaies? Let vs marke well then, y to be partakers of our Lord Iesus Christ, we must not be only vnited in y doctrine of y gospel; but we must also make confession of our faith, in assembling al together as though God were present with vs. And truly we know how it is promised vs y where two or three are gathered together in y name of Iesus Christ, he will beare rule there, & be present among the.

And therefore let vs haue a diligent regard of resorting vnto Sermons. And therewithal, let vs vse y Sacrament of the Lords supper, y we may aske one another what it is ment by it. For in the xii. of Exodus our Lord sheweth vs full well, y wee must profit in his schoole, to be partakers of y Pasceall Lambe. If thy sonne aske thee what this act of ours betokeneth: Thou shalt answer, we were bondslaves in y land of Egypt, & God pitied vs. Thus ye see what we haue to doe at this day, nor for y eating of a roasted Lambe: but to be made partakers of our Lorde Iesus Christ in spirit and truth. Wee must inquire diligently to know y benefits which our Lord Iesus Christ hath brought vs. And herein is our negligence bewrayed. For it is ynough for vs to heare Iesus Christ spoken of: yea & there are a great sort which haue not the skil to discern the father from the sonne: They know not whether Iesus Christ were sent by God his father or no: in somuch y now & then a man shall finde more beatlines in those y haue their cares dayly beaten w the Gospell, than among y Papists. Nay it is to be openely seene, Why then come we to Sermons, but to be taught? Nay, there are a nuber which fulfill y prouerb y faith, a foole doubteth of nothing. And they y haue most need to learne, think themselves to know most, & that they need not to open their mouths to ask which is Gods truth. But as for vs, let vs inquire. And for doing thereof let vs marke, y<sup>t</sup> it behoueth vs to l<sup>ie</sup> soberly, for if we go to worke proudly & presumptuously as a nouer do which think themselves great clerks (as I haue said) y<sup>t</sup> no man can teach them any more than they know alreadye: we shall be full enough, yea cuc till we burst; but it shall be but with wind, & we shall be voyde of all light of life. But if we can finde in our hartes to be taught of God: we must be learners, that is to say, lowly minded; and we must vnderstand that we haue neede to proceede further. And truly the vertue v<sup>se</sup> of the Lordes supper ought to put vs in minde, that our coming thither ought not to be without instruction. For (as I declared yesterday) a sacrament without teaching & instruction, is a dead thing, and a mocking of God, and a defiling of the thing it selfe. Therefore as oft as we come to the supper, let it be a wakening of vs, to make vs inquire of y<sup>e</sup> things that we know not sufficiently before though we haue had some tast of them. And truly if it be not lawful to admit young children to the Lords supper, vntill they knowe what is meant by that Sacrament, and wherefore it was ordyned: shoulde such as haue liued a fortie and threescore yeares come to it like dogges or swine? And yet we see they doe so: and woe be to them for it. So then let the visible signe which our Lord hath ordyned be a meane to purre vs forwarde the more, that we may seeke to profite more and more in the knowing of Iesus Christ, specially seeing we be no more troubled nowadays with restoring to a place which God hath appointed. For we haue Iesus Christ who is Gods temple, and hee is not shut vp within any certaine place, but sitteth both heauen and earth, with his power. True it is that in the nature of man wherewith he clothed himselfe, he is gone vp into heauen: and yet for all that, hee cealeth not to dwell here in vs. So then we must go to Ierusalem, we neede not to goe on pilgrimage, but only to make our repaire to the son of God, and we shall finde in him the whole fullnesse and perfection of the Godhead. Neuertheless we must marke well also, that forasmuch as the fathers of olde time had not the things that are giuen vs at this time, it shall be to our forer condemnation, if they haue bene diligenter than we in exercising y<sup>e</sup> figures & shadowes, and that we nowadays be lasie and colde, so as the substance be put into our handes, and yet we make no reckening of it. The Iewes were faine to resort to the Temple of Ierusalem, leauing their houses and householdes. And their wiues and children were faine to come trotting thither, with great trauell and not without charges. And why? Must all resort to the place which the Lordes shall haue chosen to set his name in. He saith not to dwell there throughout, but to shewe his presence in such wise, as it may be known that we be vntied to our God, not onely by figures and shadowes, but also by his dwelling among vs. As nowe there is not any one place which God hath chosen to put his name in, that hee might be called vpon alonely there: but we haue God manifested in the flesh. For what is Iesus Christ? Euen so is he intituled by Saint Paul. Seeing then that he calleth vs to himselfe, and that we neede not to make any long circuits to finde him, but rather that he preuenteth vs, and that all his desire is to drawe vs to God his father: shoulde we now be lasie and colde? What excuse will there be for vs, when the Iewes toke such paine hauing but y<sup>e</sup> first principles like yong childrens Apfies, and y<sup>e</sup> we nowadays being brought to the full perfection, doe fare neuer the better by it, or at leastwise it standeth vs not in so much steade, as the ancient figures stood the Iewes vnder the law. Thus ye see what we haue to remember vpon this text, where it is saide that they resorted to the place which the Lord had chosen.

Now finally for a conclusion, Moses telleth them that there should be no Leavened breade in all their borders during these dayes: and secondly that on the day of the passouer, they should keep a great solemnitie as on the Sabbath day. And hereby he sheweth that it is not enough for vs to absteyne from fraude and malice, but that we must labour to the vttermost we can, to put away all filth fro among vs. For if I alledge, that as for my selfe I will be no hypocrite, and in the meane time doe suffer stumbling blockes in the Church, yea or mainteyne them: I must not thinke my selfe therefore discharged. It is saide, There shall no leauen be seene in thy coastes. As if he had said, Euerie man must haue an eye to himselfe and to his house, y<sup>e</sup> ye be not defiled in any thing that may hinder you to eat of the paschall Lambe in all purenesse. Therefore beginne at your selues, and at your owne householdes. But yet therewithall bee so watchfull also, as there may be no corruptio in al y<sup>e</sup> rest of the people. Wherfore let vs haue an eye nowadays to the wel practising of this doctrine, and let euerie man looke narrowly to himselfe. And afterwarde let such as haue householdes to gouerne, looke to the purging away of all filth and vncleanesse. And then generally, if there be any stumbling blockes among vs, which may put things out of order: let vs all looke to the reproofing of them out of hande. And about all things let vs assure our selues, that to be partakers of Iesus Christ in true purenesse, we must begin at the cleansing of our selues, y<sup>e</sup> God may gouerne vs, and that our passour may be kept in spirit and truth, by casting our selues vnterly downe, and by yeelding to forbear all our owne thoughtes and affections, so as we may keepe a spirituall Sabbath, not for one day onely (as I said afore,) but y<sup>e</sup> we may continue therein during all the time of our life.

Now let vs kneele downe before the Maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs to seele the better than we haue done, that they may so mislike vs from day to day, as euery of vs may inforce himselfe to repaire vnto him, and to frame ourselues in such sort to his righteoufnes, as all our whole life may be ordered, &c. And so let vs all say, Almightye God heavenly father, &c.

On Thursday the vij. of Nouember. 1555.

The XCix. Sermon, which is the thrd upon the sixteenth Chapter.

9 Thou shalt reckon seuen weekes from the time that thou beginnest to put the fickle into thy haruest: thou shalt begin to reckon seuen weekes :

10 Afterward thou shalt keepe the feast of weekes to the Lord thy God , with a freewill offering of thy handes, which thou shalt giue as the Lord thy God shall haue blessed thee.

11 And thou shalt reioyce before the face of the Lorde thy God, both thou and thy sonne, and thy daughter, thy Manseruauant and thy Maidseruauant, and the Leuite which is within thy gates, and the straunger, the fatherlesse, and the widowe which are among you, in the place which the Lord thy God will choose to set his name in.

12 And thou shalt remember that thou wast a bondseruant in Egypt : and thou shalt keepe and do these ordinances.

Moses teacheth heere of the seconde great solemnitie which was keppe yearly among the Iewes : and that was to giue God thanks after the gathering of their haruest. And this day was named Pentecost, [ that is to say fiftie 30 dayes, ] because there were seuen weekes betweene Easter and that, so as there were nine and fortie dayes betweene those feastes, whereunto one being added for the feastday it selfe, made fiftie. And the Greeke worde signifieth the same thing: but the Hebrewes called it the feast of weekes, and all commeth to one thing.
Thus then we see now that this feast was wher-of Moses speaketh here, that is to wit a meane to put them in minde to honor God for sending his benefites to the sustenance of man. And this concerned all manner of fruires of the earth: Howbeit vnder one kinde, all the rest were cō-prehended, as if God had exhorted his people to confesse that all good things come of him.
The summe then is, that we must acknowledge not onely that God hath set vs in this worlde, but also that he sheweth himselfe continually to be a fosterfather, and that he mainteyneth vs, and that he maketh the earth to yeelde fruite 50 to finde vs withall, and at a worde, that we liue by his meere liberalitie. True it is that this ought to be done at all times of our life; howbeit by reason of mens grollenesse, it was requisite that there shoulde bee yearly a feast keppe vpon some one certaine day of the yeare. Moreo-uer (as I haue tolde you alreadie ) the feastes of the Iewes serued not only for the benefites that God had bestowed vpon them alreadie, but also for a seruice. And so, to be short, Gods wil was 60 that the Iewes should giue him thanks one day in the yeare, y<sup>e</sup> therby they might be prouoked to acknowledge all their life after, that they were susteyned at his hande, so as they should neuer take anie repast, but that they shoulde thinke thus with themselves, wee haue offered sacrifice to God after haruest : whereby wee were put in minde that it is hee which hath sent vs our sustenance. Therefore are we hypocrites, if we thinke not vpon his goodnesse dayly, or if wee turne not to him as often as we eate or drinke, to acknowledge him to bee the author of al welfare. So then, this solemn procuration made once a yere was not a discharge for men to forget God all the rest of the time: but rather a meane to make them thinke, Goe too, we haue kept here a solemn feast for one day, that it might be a schooling to vs all the yeare after, that if wee haue any thing wherewith to susteyne our selues, it is Gods doeing who hath had pitie on vs.

But nowe the ceremonie of this feast is no longer in vse, and yet the truth thereof abideth with vs still. And so wee receive good and profitable instructiō by y<sup>e</sup> doctrine thereof, by reason wherof it cannot be thought to be needlesse and y<sup>e</sup> it was written alonely for the Iewes. For it was Gods will that men shoulde bee taught by it euen to the worldes end, and that they shoulde be put in minde not to swallowe vp Gods be-nifites into our paunches without thinking vpon him, but rather that wee shoulde bee ledde to giue him thanks, as oft as we either eate or drink; so that whensoever we take any repast, we may consider howe it is hee that giueth it vs, first opening the heauen to giue moysture and foyzon to the earth, and afterward giuing power to the earth to beare fruite, and finally blesseth the Corne when it is sprung vp, that it may profer to yeeld foode vnto vs. Seeing then that we perceiue al these things, let vs haue regard to benefite our selues by them. True it is (as I haue 60 touched afore) that we must not haue anie one day certaine in the yeare, as the Iewes had, neither ought wee also to be as young children.
If a man alleadge for his excuse, that if hee doe not his dutie, let him not vse his reward giuen him as a little childe hath: it will not serue to excuse

excuse him. Folke doe not vse to giue a young child his breakfast till hee haue prayed vnto God, because hee hath not the wit and discretion to doe it, vnlesse he be compelled to it by some certaine order. Nowe then if an olde fellowe of the age of thirtie or fortie yeares eate his meate without praying to God, he deserueth not to bee beaten with a rodde, but to bee driuen away and to bee abhorred as a swine. And if hee alleadge, I haue no rule as is giuen to young children: what is that to the matter? Hast thou not discretion enough to do so much of thy selfe? Hast thou liued so long in the world and doest thou not yet know that thou oughtest to yeelde God thanks for the good which hee doeth vnto thee? Therefore it is saide that the Iewes were young children in comparison of the Christians: for God had giuen them rules according to their infirmities. As now although those things be past away in respect of vs; yet are wee the more bounde to acknowledge Gods grace in his feeding & maintaining of vs. And why? The perfecter y<sup>e</sup> the doctrine is which is imparted to vs in the Gospel, the more plainly ought wee to acknowledge the benefites of our God towards vs. That is the thing which wee haue first to remember out of this text.

Nowe it is saide, That the people shall resort to Ierusalem to offer freewill offerings. God poureth out these things more particularly in the three and twentieth of Leuiticus, where he sheweth what offerings were to bee made on the behalfe of the people. Howbeit, hee speaketh there but of euery particular person, and hee saith, Yee shall bring offerings according to your deuotion. For although there was alawe certaine; yet behoued it their offerings to bee made with a free will, and not as by compulsion, accordingly as it is saide, that God loueth such as offer vnto him willingly and not as of necessity. Yee shall see manie that will be liberall to Godwarde; howbeit, it is but a thing of constraint, which kinde of dealing God vtterlie misliketh. A man may spoyle himselfe of all his goods, and yet doe God no such seruice as hee shall like well of, if it bee not matched with his free will, as I saide afore. Besides this, GOD left it to euery mans owne choyce to offer what hee thought best, but yet he addeth according as the Lord thy God shall haue blessed thee. To the intent that men should not withhold through niggardshippe, as they be commonly wont to doe: God putteth them here in minde of his blessing: as it hee had saide, be well aduised, true it is that in this case I lay the bridle on your neckes, offer what you your selues thinke good, I meane not to inforce you to any thing, I would haue the offerings which you bring vnto mee, to be of a free will. But yet for all that, ye must come to account for it. Who is hee that blesteth you? If yee haue had a good and plentiful harvest, to whome are you beholden for it? Ought yee not to consider howe it is I y<sup>e</sup> haue opened my hand wide, to the end that your hearts also shoulde open themselues wide on their parte? Know ye therefore that I haue allured you, by multiplying you; wherefore when yee haue a good crosse, looke that yee employe your selues so much the freelier in doing my seruice.

And hereby wee bee warned to looke neererly to our selues, that euery of vs may put forth the good things which God hath committed vnto him. Here is mention made but onely of Corne, Wine, and such other things. Then if God haue enriched a man, hee must see that hee suppresseth not Gods blessing, by keeping it close. For wee see there are Cormorantes which haue no care of otherfolkes pouertie: they thinke they may scrape all that they can come by, and that no man ought to haue any parte of their goods. On the contrarye part it is declared here, that accordingly as euerye man hath receiued abundance at Gods hande, so must hee impart vnto his neighbours: for that is the ende which God ameth at. And if wee thinke not of it, we must come to account for it: and wee shall finde at length, that God will impute it to vs for their, when wee shall haue dcoured his goods after y<sup>e</sup> fashion, without hauing anie pitie vpon the needie to succour them. In like case is it with spirituall giftes. For according as euerye manis of abilitie and skill to succour his neighbours, so is hee bounde to discharge himselfe and to put himselfe forward. Otherwise GOD will shewe vs to what purpose hee had bestowed his benefites vpon vs, and that wee haue sayled in our ductie. That is the thing which wee haue to beare away in that Moses alleadgeth Gods blessing to stirre vp the Iewes to offer sacrifice y<sup>e</sup> more largely, after as God shall haue increased them, knowing that hee bindeth them thereby vnto him.

And whereas he saith, That they shall reioyce with their children, their menseruauntes, & their womenseruauntes, the fatherlesse, the widowes, and the strangers: thereby hee sheweth that his lawe was not ceremonially onely, but that it tended also to the doing of almee dedes: as in dedee our Lord hath at all times shewed, that those are the very sacrifices which he requireth. True it is that part of the things which were to be offered, were to be brought to the Altar, & there to be burned in sacrifice: but yet for all that, it was alwayes provided that of the rest, the poore should be fedde and maintayned as well as the priestes & Leuites: and nowe doeth Moses speake thereof againe. Wherefore let vs marke, that euen in the time of the Ceremonies and shadowes of the lawe, God neuer required sacrifice, but that he willed men therewithall to haue pitie vpon the needie to succour them, according to this saying of his by his Prophet Osee, I require mercy & not sacrifice. True it is y<sup>e</sup> he had commanded both of them: but he sheweth y<sup>e</sup> such as think to discharge themselues by coming to y<sup>e</sup> church, and by offering their giftes there, doe beguile themselues, and that all their doings are but hypocrisie, if they bee not kindehearted in succouring the needie, & in doing of Almee dedes. For I pray you, can wee aduance GOD anie why by offering of our goods vnto him? Can we intich him? Wanteth he any thing? True it is that hee requireth oblations: howbeit, that was to the end that men shoulde acknowledge euen by eyesight, that they were bounde vnto him. It was a kinde of putting of them in minde of it. Yet notwithstanding it stood them alwayes in hand to consider, that they could not otherwise discharge themselues, than by giuing part of their goods to such of their neighbours as had want. Thus ye see howe the meaning of Moses was, that when the fewes offered their sacrifices after haruelt, it was not enough for them to acknowledge with mouth and outward gestures, that they were bound vnto God for his sending of them wherewith to liue, but that it behooued them also to shewe towards men that they intended to be faithfull stewards of the thinges which he had put into their hands, and desired nothing but to be well discharged of them.

And to moue the more thereunto, he telleth them That they themselues had bene bondslaves in the Land of Egypt, which warning peale hath bin set downe in other places heretofore. For wee know that when men liue at their owne ease and in pleasure, they bee not greatly touched with compassion though other men die for hunger: & euen so was it with the Iewes when they were come into the land of Chanaan after they began once to waxe full. For the land it selfe was fat and specially because God had blessed it. Therefore doth he bring thee backe to the minding of their former state, and of the cruel bondage wherein they had bene. Consider (saith he) how ye haue bene bondslaves in the land of Egypt, and that as then ye would faine haue been gently intreated. When ye were too greuously vexed, ye cried out vnto mee. Now therefore know ye that y<sup>e</sup> poore & needy which are among you, do craue likewise to be regarded at your handes, and that I for my part do make account of them. This is the effect of the matter contained in that place.

Now to the end we may make our profit by it, let vs cal to mind the saying of the prophet Ossee accordingly also as it is alledged by our Lord Iesus Christ, that is to wit, that God requireth the sacrifice of Almsdeeds. As if he should say, that he is not contented that men shoulde vse some Ceremonies towards him, but will haue vs to be kindharted in relieuing such as haue need of our helpe, if we haue abilitie wherewith to do it. And if men ply the thankelesse churles with vs in forgetting the good which we haue done them: it is enough for vs that God alloweth our dealing, and putteth it into his booke of accountes. Also let vs be linke our selues howe glad we woulde haue bene of reliefe, if euer we were in necessitie, that the same may moue vs to pitie, and that we be not blinded with our wealth. I say to such as haue abundance, let them not lie weltring in their pleasures, and withdrawe their hand from succoring the poore: but let them consider that if euer they themselues felt the want of these worldly goods, they woulde bee glad that erie man shoulde reach out his hande to relieue them: and therefore let they themselues doe the like. Yea and although wee had neuer felt any want, yet let vs consider that want may fall vpon vs hereafter. For what are we? Noman can exempt himself from the stroke of God that he should not be driuen to begge his breade, yea though he had all the goods of the world. Hereof we see great store of examples. Seeing it is so, let no man be proude of his goods, but let vs al consider that we be men, and let vs not despise our owne fleshe, as is saide in the Prophete Esay. And let vs not say, what be the widows? what be the fatherles children? what be y<sup>e</sup> strangers to vs? But seeing that God offereth & commendeth them to vs, let vs assure ourselues that wee cannot haue any folkes more nigh vnto vs to whome to doe good. For when wee weene to bind men vnto vs, to haue recompence at their hande; wee shall be disappointed at all assayes, and good right it is that it shoulde be so. But as for the thing that is put into Gods hand, that cannot perishe nor be lost. Let vs marke then that Gods offering of the Strangers, the widows, and the fatherles vnto vs, is as if hee shoulde say, he made them his baylifes to take vp his Rentes and Reuenues. And when wee bee to doe him homage for the benefites which wee haue receiued at his hande; let vs assure ourselues, that hee accepteth and auoweth al that euer is done to thole whome hee speaketh off here by Moses.

Nowe we knowe what was done in the feast of Pentecost, namely that the holy Ghost was sent down vpon Christs disciples, and that there was a kinde of renewing of the worlde, to exalte the kingdome of our Lord Iesus Christ: for there he vttered his power, yea more than hee did in his resurrection. For what had we bin the better for Christs rising againe in his own person, if he had not powred out the grace of his holy spirite vpon his Church, to shewe that hee was set at the right hande of God his father, to fill all thinges and to dwell in vs, and that he had such soueraigne dominion ouer all thinges, that wee be in safetie when we be in his protection? And if wee looke well vpon the niatter, we shall find that the lawe was giuen the same time as after the Passouer. For it is saide that the people came to Sinay the thirde moneth after their departure out of Egypte, the same day that they departed from Raphidin. Nowe that was the first day of the moneth, and the fourteenth day was the day of the Passouer. And according as the moonethes were as then, which went by the course of the Moones, there was one whole mooneth added. And so in effect there were fiftie dayes from the Passouer to Gods setting forth of his lawe vpon Mount Sinay, so as the feast of Pentecoste or Widsontide was referred to that time. Now we know that the lawe coule do men no good, if it were but onely giuen them: for it is a deade letter. And againe, it killeth vs, because it sheweth vs our ductie, and wee be all transgressors of it, so as it condemneth and accurseth vs. What are men the better then for the publishing of the Lawe? Nothing at all, but that it sheweth them howe they bee bereft of all hope of saluation, and

and that they be all damned before God. And that is the cause why Saint Paul saith, that the Jewes at that time receiued the spirite of bondage, in terror and feare saith he. It is sufficiently shewed in the nineteenth of Exodus how the Lawe afrightheth those that receiued it. For they went backwarde and entreated that God would speake to them by the mouth of Moses, because they could not heare his voyce but they must needs die for it. Ye see then that the Lawe taught men the will of G O D. But what? Forasmuch as wee be cleanc contrarie to his goodnesse and righteousnesse: the lawe of it selfe can yeeld nothing but death, accordingly also as Saint Paul speaking thereof in the seconde to the Corinthians, saith, that it is a letter which killeth. Therefore it behoued the lawe to be renewed, and that God shoulde publishe it after an other fashion, not writing it in tables of stone, but in our heartes by chaunging them. For by nature our hartes are as hard as stone, as it is said by the Prophet Ezechiel. Therefore must God be faine to soften them, & to make the plyable, y they may be obedient to his lawe. Ye see then howe the lawe was published after an other fashion vpon Whitsonday, than it was in olde time by Moses. For it was not deliuered vs in tables of stone, but God wrought so in vs by his holy spirite, that wee were then renewed, and the same continueth still at this day.

And therefore let vs marke, that besides the admonishment which the Iewes had to doe homage to God for their haruest and for their bodily sustenance which he gaue them: they had also a resembliance of the things which were fulfilled at the coming of our Lord Iesus Christ, at which time G O D made another manner of Whitsonday than had beene in the time of the figures. For at that time he vttered the grace of the holy Ghost. Yet for all this, it is not meant y we should keepe a feast of Pentecost: it is cleane contrarie. Seeing that the things which were figured vnder the law, were fulfilled in our Lord Iesus Christ, and that the figures themselves are ceased: if we bring them backe againe, wee doe wrong to him which hath brought the full accomplishment of all things. If the shadowes which were vnder the lawe, do come vp againe; Iesus Christ is to no purpose. So then let vs marke that the holy Ghost was not sent vnto vs, to the ende that these figures should continue still: but to shewe that we differ from the people of olde time. True it is (as I saide afore) that there is no ill in it for the Christians to haue a certaine daie wherein this historie should bee declared vnto them: For we must not tie our selues to do strect a precisenesse, that it should not be lawfull for vs to vse that helpe for our infirmitie. But to make a seruice of God thereof, and to take example at the Iewes, as though it behoued vs to fashion our selues like vnto them, or as though the feast of Whitsonday ought to be obserued at this day, by reason of the sending of the holy Ghost: that were too grosse a fondnesse. Let vs vnderstand then, first that the Iewes had but a figure & shadowe of the truth: and on our owne part wee may knowe in Iesus Christ, that God hath not figured anie thing in vaine, but that all the ceremonies of the Lawe tended to verie good purpose because the effect of them is shewed vs in him. Therefore let vs holde vs contented therewith, and now let vs leatne to reioyce in the presence of our God, and to make other folks partakers of our mirth.

The Iewes were commanded to resort to Ierusalem as soone as haruest was done, & not only to reioyce there, but also to impart of their goods to their neighbors, so as there might be a common gladnes among them, and God might be glorified with one accord. And now that these things are at this day accomplished: what haue we to doe? We must not run trotting to Ierusalem to worship God there and to doe him homage there. For we must lift vp our hands euerywhere, howbeit so as they be cleane. And moreover forasmuch as G O D hath not only sent vs a haruest of corruptible fruits to nourish our bodies withal but also powred out y infinite riches of his holy spirit and sent vs the liuing waters as is saide in Ezechiel: let vs vnderstand that it is to y end we should haue the mirth wherof S. Paul speaketh in the fourteenth to the Romanes. Let vs now reioyce then seeing our Lord hath shewed himselfe so bountifull towards vs, that hee hath not withholden any of the cheefe good things which he had, but hath powred vpon vs all the benefites that concerne the endles life and heavenly glorie. Seeing then that we haue receiued the holy Ghost, let vs also be ioyful in our hartes. As how? By withdrawing ourselues from y vanities of this world, & by holding our selues contented with the fauor of our God, praising him euen in the middes of our afflictions. Albeit that wee haue not all things at wil in this world: yet let vs not cease to hold on still, assuring our selues that it ought to suffice vs that our God is fauourable to vs, & that he sheweth vs his loue. When we be at that point once, then shall wee haue such peace and contentment in vs, as passeth all the ioyes of this world, yea and putteth away all the sorrowes that may trouble vs. And when wee haue such gladnesse our selues, wee must to the vttermost of our power make them partakers of it, which haue need. For if the Iewes were commanded to cal the widowes, the fatherles, and the strangers to make merie with them, in spending of the goods which God had giuen them: much more reason is it, that seeing the spirituall giftes which God hath bestowed vpon vs, belong to the common building vp of the Church as saith Saint Paul in the twelfth to the Romanes, and also in the twelfth of the first to y Corinthians, we should take heed y we defraude not our neighbours of the thing which G O D hath appointed for them.

Let vs marke also that as nowe there is no more any stranger as in respect of vs, For wheras God had separated the Iewes from the gentiles: nowe it is his will to bee known through the whole worlde; there is no more diuision of bodies; the wall is broken downe as saith Saint Paul, in an other place. Seeing then that God hath knit vs together after this fashion, and that Ierusalem extendeth through the whole world as the Prophet Zacharie speaketh thereof: wee ought to bee the more mouued and prouoked to make al our brothers partakers of the ioy which wee haue receyued by the spirit of God. Thus ye see in effect what wee haue to marke vpon that text.

But herewithall wee must marke that Moses in this place leaueth out two feastes which are spoken of in the three & twentieth of Leuiticus, the cause whereof is for that the people were not strictly bounde to repair at that time to Ierusalem to worshippe there. There was the feastes of Trumpets and the feast of Affliction; and although Moses spake here of no more than of three solemne feastes: yet doeth it behoue vs to interlace these other two with them. And as touching the feast of Affliction, let vs marke that our Lorde ordeyned it not without cause; but it wil serue vs verie wel to the expounding of the text which is delt with already. For wee be taught that the Iewes had certayne dayes in the yeare, to the ende that the truth shoulde abide vnto vs, and that it shoulde beare his full force among vs all the dayes of our life. It behooued the Iewes to humble themselues both by fasting and otherwise in acknowledging their sinnes; and thereupon to make a solemne confession of their misdeedes, in humbling themselves to God, and in crauing forgiuencesse for the same. I haide afore that this was not ordeined without cause. For wee see howe men do couer their faults as much as they can, and that they bethinke not themselues of them but by constraint. They alwayes drawe backe if they bee not thrust forward: for to their seeming it is a matter of melancholie. True it is that we cannot thinke vpon our sinnes without greefe of minde: but yet is y for our welfare. And therefore in the second to the Corinthians Saint Paul saith, that this kinde of sorrowing is not to bee shunned, neither ought men to be forie for their sorrowing when they be put in minde of their sinnes. For why? It is a sorrowing as pleaserh God greatly, and gladdeth the Angels of Paradise, and bringeth vs infinite ioye in the ende. And forasmuch as men make merrie & reioyce when they haue offended God: their condemnation must needs be dubble, and needs must this sentence be accomplished vpon them which saith; Woe bee to you which laugh, for yee shall weepe and bee forie. And so let vs marke that becaufe men will not willingly know and perceiue their faultes, it was Gods will that there shoulde bee a yermind of them, that the Iewes might bethinke them of the great number of the sinnes which they hadde committed and humble themselues. Not that their so doing acquitted them: but to the intent it shoulde bee a warning to them all the yeare after.

2. Cor. 7. 8.

Luke 15. 17.

Luke 6. 25.

Nowe then, their fasting and their protesting of themselues to be guiltie before God: was to the ende that when they were gone home into their owne houses, they shoulde consider thus with themselues: Alas it is not for one day onely that it behooueth vs to craue forgiuencesse: for wee cease not to offend our God, euerie minute of an hour we be entring into a newe bonde with death. For although God haue pardoned vs; yet returne we to our sinne againe, and there is no ende of sinning; insomuch that as long as wee bee in this worlde, there are euer some vices lurking in vs, and our corruption is so great, that it is impossible for vs altogether to absteyne from doing of euill. Then behooued it the Iewes to thinke vpon their sinnes, and meete was it that the sayde feaste shoulde be an instruction to them for all the yeare after. Thus howe euer it was, they hadde the figure. But we in these dayes must haue the truth without any such Ceremonie. And thereby wee see what superstition was among the Papistes: for they turned this feast of Affliction or humbling into their Lenton fast, saying that in that time they punished themselves with fasting, that they might acknowledge their sinnes; and they alledged the example of the Iewes. Yea, but we must alwayes come backe to the diuinitie which S. Paul in the Galathians putteth betwene vs and the fathers of olde time, for else what are wee the better for the coming of our Lord Iesus Christ? If wee at this day must still haue the shadowes that were vnder the lawe: where is the freedome that he speaketh of? I meane not such a freedome as shall lay the reynes loose in our neck, to liue as we list: No, but y wee should not be trayned vp any more like little children: for that was continued vntill the coming of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and vntill hee had shewed himselfe to the worlde. But as nowe we must let the figures goe, and all that belonged to that rawnesse; and wee must goe to the verie pithe and substance of them. And therefore whereas the papistes haue ordeyned their Lentonfast in steade of the feast of Affliction, which God had ordeined among the Iewes: It is but an Apes toye. I forbear to speake as nowe of the other abuses and illusions conteyned therein: for they vpholde that their fasting of forie dayes is after the example of our Lorde Iesus Christ. Yea but let them then absteyne from all meate and drinke, and be as Angels of Paradise. Nay, they cramme themselues so full at their dinners, that at night they bee still cumbered with that which they had receyued before: and yet notwithstanding they will needs beare Iesus Christ in hande, that they fashion themselues like to him. Hee was exalred farre beyonde all state and nature of man when hee fasted forie dayes and forie nighres: and hee did it to shewe his diuine power, and to magnifie the Maicstie of his Gospell: and these skorners take vpon them to counterfaite his doings. And after what sort? In crammung themselves, as I haide afore. Surely it was euen a deuice of Satan, to deface the heate by power which was vttered in our Lorde Iesus Christ. A gayne if they will needs relembe the sonne of God in fasting forie dayes, they should do it but once in all their life. For Iesus Christ fasted but

60

once

once in all his life. And why then will they goe beyonde him? Beholde the sonne of God discharged himselfe with once fasting; and these skorners will needes beare the worlde in hande that they followe the example of Iesus Christ. Besides this, they will needes frame themselues to the fashion of the Iewes also; & because there was a feast among the Iewes, wherein it behooued them to afflict themselues: these men will also needes doe the like. Yea, but that was not Gods intent. For it was a commendement peculiar to the Iewes, that they shoulde obserue the saide feast, as whereof the ceremonie was giuen vnto them. Neuerthelesse the truth thercof remaineth vs, to shewe vs that as the Iewes punished themselues once a yeare, to take instruction thereby according to their small skill: so nowadayes wee must beforie for our faultes as long as we liue.

And herein we see further, that the Papistes haue not onely played the hypocrites, but also most shamefully and duclitly exalted themselues against God. For first of all their fasting of the Lent, and their going to shrift, is but to haue the fier scope to dispise God, and to let him alone, and to turne their backs vpon him all the yeare after. They make a forie countenance and writing their mouths, and play the Popeholly hypocrites when they come to the passion weeke as they tearme it, and yet afterwarde they ende the matter with belking out this diuclitly byworde, that they sende it away into Galilee, and so like villains they skoffe at God and all religion. The tongues ought to bee plucked out of their heades which dare blaspheme after y fashion. And it is not the bafier sort of the common people, but the wiser sort and as will needes be counted I wote not what, which vse that kande of speech. And so ye may see what confusion is among them, sith they despise God after that fashion, and fall to kicking against him, like wilde oxen, and yet in the meane while wil needes shroude themselues vnder the example of our Lord Iesus Christ. But a man may see not onely that the things wherewith they woulde please God are baggagely trifles, but also y they be so shamefull abhominations as doe well bewray that they rebell against the holy Ghost, and against y Maicstie of God. And yet are they not contented with that, but they proceede also to the murdering and martyring of Gods children, shedding their gildes blood euen without any remorse or scruple of conscience. For when they come to shrift, they neuer bethinke them of that, but they confesse how they haue not obserued such an Apestoye, and howe they were not at masse such a day, and how they haue omitted y doing of such a simlasm. To be short, they mocke God openly. And if a man shewe them their wicked life by Gods worde: they be so vterly past hope of amendment, that they spite at all warninges and harden their hearts more and more, because they be forepossest with such intollerable pride, that they fall to set vp their hornes euen agaynst G O D. Thus yee see what wee haue in effect to remember concerning the feast of Affliction.

Also there was the feast of Trumpets, which serued to put the Iewes in mind, that they ought to stirre vp themselues to be vnited in God. For as for them y haue glosed that it was in respect of the offering vp of Isaac in Sacrifices, (as the Iewith Rabbins haue fustaciously surmised) they say nothing to the purpose. But it is not to be doubted that God ordeined the feast of Trumpets or Cornets, of purpose to stirre vp his people to retorne vnto him. And why? For they ought to consider thus: Although wee haue not y Trumpets sounded dayly to cal vs to the Temple: yet ought we to remember that God calleth vs dayly, to the intent we shoulde yeeld our selues wholly vnto him, to worship him, & serue him, as he requireth: and moreouer be knit & vnited together, that we may drawe still neerer and neerer vnto him. Thus yee see what manner of instruction the Iewes had by the feast of Trumpets. But what a thing is it that Christians wil needes haue the like guise, and resemblance of it once a yeare by ringing of Bells? In deede y Papists do their indouer to follow this commendement. For at euerie of their solemne feastes, they thinke that God is well paide, when they haue roong their belles lustily, and wakened the Ghostes of such of their friends as are deade. Lo what witcheries they haue among them, yet stilat this day. But is it not apparant that the making of such a feast is against the intent of God, because it serued but for the people of olde time that were vnder the lawe? When the saide feast was obserued yearly, such as heard the Trumpets were warned by it all the yeare after to thinke thus: wel, although we be farre from Ierusalem, and cannot repaire thither dayly to doe sacrifice in the Temple: yet are sacrifices offered there in our behalfe, and God is worshipped there in the name of vs all. Neuerthe later, wee must not forget the good that G O D hath doone vnto vs: but euerie of vs must serue for a Trumpet to stirre vp himselfe, that our lues may be aunswerable and conformable to the things that are done dayly in the Temple. Lo what the Iewes had. And what haue we nowe?

The figure (as I haue saide afore) is passed away and abolished by the coming of our lord Iesus Christ. Then remaineth it that wee our selues shoulde be Trumpets, that is to say, that wee shoulde waken vp our selues, because we be befotted, yea and euen so wedded to the worlde and to the vanities that are here beneath, that it neuer commeth in our mindes to thinke vpon God. Therefore must wee not onely feele the founde of a Trumpet or of a bell, but rather an inward remorse of good conscience, so as wee repent and bethinke vs thus: How now wretched wight? Beholde, the living G O D stoopeth so lowe, as to speake vnto thee dayly, calling and alluring thee by meanes of his Gospel, and crying vpon thee without ceasing, to come vnto him: and yet for all this wilt thou continue deafe still? Then must thou retorne vnto him, when hee draweth thee so carefully: and thou must not tarie till there bee a solemne holy day to call thee to the Church, there to keepe the feast of Trumpets; but it must serue thee al thy life long for a spurre to make thee to return vnto God. That is the thing (say I) which we haue to beare in mind. And as much also is to be noted concerning forowing: For it is not for one day onely that wee must be sorie in our heartes and bethinke vs of our sinnes. But forasmuch as we fal to them incessantly, & there passeth not any day wherein we offend not GOD: let vs match it with forinesse, and let vs mourne for it, and not play the vnthriftes which make a shorne of all that euer a man can alleadge to them out of the worde of God: but let vs bee affraide of his iudgements and threats, and yet therewithall let vs not doubt but he will giue vs whercof to reioyce, and that although wee bee faine to passe through many sorrowes and hartbitings in this worlde, yet in the ende he will deliuer vs from them, to make vs partakers of the heauenly rest. After this maner (say I) must wee put this doctrine in vre, concerning the feastes which the Iewes had of old time in figure and whercof wee haue nowe the truth & substantiuaunce, as it is brought vnto vs by the sonne of God.

Now let vs kneele downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him to make vs feele them better than we haue done, so as wee may returne vnto him, with true and vnfaigned repentaunce, and bee stirred more and more to amende our faultes, knowing that our good God is ready to receiue them all to mercie which come to him with lowlinesse. And that for asmuch as he hath graunted vs the grace to haue nowe so full light of his Gospell, as may wel enlighten vs throughly: it may please him not to suffer our eyes to be blindfolded, that wee should walke any more in darkenesse, but to graunt that wee keepe y right way, and indeuer to bring others into the same, so as God may be glorified with one common accorde of all men. And that for the performance hereof it may please him to raise vp true and faithfull ministers of his word, &c.

13 Thou shalt keepe the feast of Tabernacles seuen dayes, after thou hast gathered in thy corne feeldes and thy vineyardes.

14 And thou shalt reioyce in the feast, thou, thy sonne, thy daughter, thy manferuant, and thy womanferuant, the Leuite, the straunger, the fatherles, & the widow which are within thy gates.

15 Seuen dayes shalt thou keepe the feast to the Lorde thy God, in the place which the Lord shall haue chofen: for the Lord thy God, will blesse thee in all thy fruites, and in all the workes of thy handes: and therefore shalt thou reioyce.

16 Three times a yeare shall all thy males appeare before the Lord thy God in the place which the Lord wil choofe: that is to wit, in the feast of vnleauened bread, in the feast of Weekes, and in the feast of Tabernacles: and none shall appeare empty before the face of the Lord.

17 But euerie man shal giue according to his abilitie, euen according to the blessing of the Lord thy God, which he shall haue giuen thee.

WE haue here to treat of the feast of Tabernacles, which was a memoriall of Gods preserving of the Iewes in the wilderness, where was no house,

For he had kept them by the space of forie yeares vnder Tentes, and small booches, the cause wherof was that he had so removed them from place to place, that they had no leasure to bulde, nor stuffe wherewith to bulde. Therefore it was meete that they should be put in remembrance of it, that being come into the lande of Chanaan, they should not giue themselues to iollitie, and forget it when God had set them at rest. For we see howe men are giuen to fall asleepe and to nestle themselues when our Lorde remoueth them not. To auoide this danger, it was Gods wil that y Iewes shoulde yeare by yeare depart out of their houses and dwell in Tentes, that is to say vnder the open skie in arbres made of boughes, and for seauen dayes together minde that benefite. For it was an incredible thing that God shoulde haue preferred so great a multitude of people with their yong children, in booches & tentes wout houses. We knowe y houses serue to keepe off both cold & heat and al other discōmodities. Needs therefore must it be y god wrought after a wonderfull fashion, and it was meete that his goodnes should be acknowledged in that behalf. We see then now wherefore this feast was ordeyned vnder the lawe. For the seruing of God consisted not in y<sup>e</sup> peoples shifting of their places, for it had beene but a stage play, to haue come to Ierusalem, and there to pinch themselves, & to dwell a while in Cabanes, vnlesse it had bene to some ende, and that they had bene taught some thing whereby to magnifie Gods name, & to put their trust in him: accordingly as I haue declared heretofore that all ceremonies must imple some learning and instruction, or else they be but pelting baggage: yea it is but a mocking of God, if the faithfull be not edified, that they may alwayes lue in the feare of God to rest vpon him and to call vpon him with the better courage. If it bee not so, it is but superstition: and the things are not onely vnprofitable, but also abhominable before God. Nowe then the feast of Tabernacles was a traynement to the people of Israell, to shew them that if they were at rest and at their ease in the land of Chanaan, they had not alwayes bene so, but that God had led them after a straunge fashion through the wilderness: and that if they were contented with Cabanes and arbors; it behoued them also to applye themselves to the praising of God for his deliuering of them out of the Land of Egypt by so manie miracles. The Iewes as foolish that woulde faine discharge themselves to Godwarde by hypocrisie, did indeede keepe the feast it selfe, but they leste the meaning of him that had commaunded it. For euen at this day still they keepe the feast according to the letter, and they haue a number of prettie apes to which they obserue diligently. As, that their Cabanes be not too close, but made full of holes, nor that the boughes bee not too thicke platted, but so as a man may see the stars through them, and that there be Loopholes to looke vpon the skie, so as the skie may glimse vpon their eyes. All of them ( I say ) doe vse such trifling toys, but in the meane while they consider not whereunto God meant to direct them. By which example: of theirs wee see the better warned not to regarde the letter of the lawe: but to seeke the ende which God pointeth vs too. And seeing that the Iewes had such instruction: let vs consider what fruit we ought to reape no vadayes of the feast of Tabernacles. It is not nowe any more in vs that wee shoulde be bounde to the keeping thereof: but yet the doctrine thereof continueth still, and concerneth vs as much or more than the Iewes. And our keeping of the feast of Tabernacles must not be for a weeke or twa; ne, but for all our life long. And why? For it wee be not strangers in this worlde, we shall haue no part in the kingdome of heauen. Will we haue God to auowe vs for his children? Let vs keepe on our way here beneath, assuring our selues that this life of ours is but as a iourney, or rather but as a race. And it is not enough for vs to goe, but wee must alforunne a pace, holding on our way still to that ende, and alwayes straining our selues to atteyne vnto it. For except we streine and enforce our selues we shall neuer get one steppe forward, but wee shall retyre fower backe for it. Agayne we see howe slow we be, and how manie meanes Satan hath to hinder vs: and therefore we must euen fight against such impedimentes. And so let vs make, that the things which wee read here in Moses, declare vnto vs that for asmuch as it was Gods will that the Iewes in the time of the lawe shoulde haue a weeke to put them in minde howe they had bene as pilgrims in the wilderness, and that he had maintayned them there after a straunge fashion: we in these daies (because the figure is abolished) must re- paire to the truth, that is to say, wee must remember that God harboreth vs in such sort in this world, as that he wil not haue vs to nestle here, nor to be so intangled in it as to make it our euerlasting resting place, but to stie vward still, and to bee here as birdes sitting vpon a bough. True it is that God is so favourable to a great number, that they neuer remoue from home of all the time of their life, and yet they be neuer the lesse Christians for all that; but yet must not any man make him a nest vpon earth vpon imagination that he will rest here. Where as Saint Paul saith that he had no rest; he meant it specially of himselfe and of certain others of the faithfull, whome God tossed from post to pillar. But as for the meaning of the mind, that must needes bee common to all the faithfull, namely that they haue no resting place in this worlde. Although then that G O D do beare with some mens weakenesse, so as they neuer renoue out of the place where they were borne, but continue at home still in their owne houses: yet must they consider that they ought to be alwayes readie and to haue one foote set forward, against the time that it shall please God to remoue them into some strange countrie fo as they make not their reckening to be so settled in any place, that they shoulde not departe from it, but rather bee readie to goe, whensoever G O D calleth to fleete anie whither else.

Againe, let those whome God remoueth vnderstande, that he giueth them the prerogative aforehande, to put the thing in vte which the holy scripture sheweth vs: namely, that wee made pilgrims here beneath, to the intent wee shoulde haue our resting place in heauen: and let it confirme them so much the more in y<sup>e</sup> hope of y<sup>e</sup> life to come, so as they may pluck vp a good heart when they bee so driuen from place to place, and not be too much grieved at it, because it is a warrant to them that God hath reserved a better resting place for them. After that manner ought all of vs together to obserue the feast of Tabernacles. Let such as remouue not, thinke neuertheless, that they haue not any perpetuall state of abiding in anie place certaine, but must offer themselves to G O D to goe whither soeuer it please him. And as for them y<sup>e</sup> are faine to remoue out of their countrie, and are drawn a farre off; let them vnderstande that Gods walking of them after that fasshion in this worlde, is to the ende to draw them out of it, and that they should not set their mundes vpon it. Yee see then howe with one common accorde, we shall make a good obseruation of this fast, I meane as spirituallly. For nowadayes we haue not anie more the figures of the lawe: but yet muſt the truth of the Gofpell needes bee conformable to the figures that were among the fathers of olde time. And herewithall wee muſt also be readie to remooue a good pace, ſo as wee muſt not be tyed nor helde backe to this corruptible life, but goe to G O D with a free heart when focuer it pleaseth him to take vs hence. And indeede, what house focuer we dwell in this world, our bodie is alwayes going away. If a man be asked which is his cheef house, he will not goe seeke his chaniber, nor his kitchen, nor any other of his houses of ease: but hee will say it is his bodie. Nowe let vs consider what our bodies are. Wee may well build vs houses of square stone. Riche men make them pallaces, and laye all their lande about them thereto. Their building is substantiall, it is able to indure much, it is not to be feared that it will rotte ouer hastily, nor that it will be marde with winde or wether; neither is there anie thing in it to be altered: And though some hangings of it bee to be remooued, that is all one; the walles are so good, that at a hundred yeares ende they bee as sounde as they were at the first day. Well may a man make such a building: but can wee build our bodies so, as they may be of any long continuance? No. Our Lord therefore doeth laughe those foolke to skorne, which are so blinde that they imagine they shall liue cuer the longer for their building of their goodly houses, bearing themselves in hand that it is a meane to make them tariē longer time in this world. But (as I saide afore) all houses are nothing in compar. son of our cheefe house, which is our bodie. If a man passe not for hys chamber, nor for his kitchen, nor for his parlour, but woulde goe seeke some corner in his stable, and betake himselfe to that, saying, this is the surest and substantiallest place, I had luer tarie here than in anie other part of al my house: folke woulde laughe him to skorne as a foolke. Likewise if a man be proude of his house, and haue no regarde of his owne person whereof he ought to make much greater account: it is euident, that he is out of his wits, and vtterly voide of reason. What is to be doone then? Wee muſt come backe to this lesſon of Saint Pauls, that if our outward man decay, wee haue a building prepared for vs in heauen. For this lodging of ours muſt decay, and fall quite downe, but yet shall wee be fully restored againe, and then shall wee dwell in an vncorruptible house. There Saint Paule sheweth vs the thing that I spake of before, namely that our bodies (when we haue neuer so great account of them) are but as arbours made of Leaues, which are of no continuance: one blast of winde will blowe them quite and cleane downe. Seeing it is so, let vs walke in lowliness, and lift our mindes aloft: for we haue promise that there we shall be immortall &

2. Cor. 5. 1.

vncorruptible. And we muſt not thinke it strange that our bodies should be compared to Arbours of leaues which are of no continuance: for take mee the strongest bodie in the worlde, and yet cannot the force thereof continue long time in one state; but that if the saying of the Prophet Esay be founde true as in respect of our soules, it muſt needes be verified much more of our bodies: namely that a man is but a flower, and that allbeit he flourish for a time, yet is one blast of winde enough to make him to wither, and to bring him to nought. Such is our strength euen when it is at the best. But besides this, there is none of vs which feeleth not a great sort of inconueniences in himself, to the intent we should forsake this present life, and not bee too much addicted to it. Take me the strongest man that is, and hath hee not some disease or other that will not suffer him to indure long? Againe if a man be once past a certaine age, he falleth by & by to declining; inſomuch that a man may see and perceyue with his eyes, that euen without sicknesse he flyeth away like water. Indeeede most men doe neuer thinke of it: but what booreth it the to blinde themselves? Nay it is a monstrous thing that euery bodie should see how a man goeth to naught, and yet bee so blinde as not to perceiue it in himselfe. On the contrarie part, if our Lorde be so gracious to the faithfull as to remooue them to and fro, and to put them vnder many diseases: it is to quicken them vp to goe forward with earnest willes to their heavenly inheritance, because they doe but hang their wings in this worlde, continually drooping nowe after one sort and nowe after another, and liuing as it were halfe dead. Sith it is so, let them vnderstande that God worketh for their benefite and saluation. And it is a very profitable lesſon, when we haue learned to keepe the feast of Tabernacles spirituallly: that it is to say, when we haue learned to passe in such wise through this worlde, as wee goe on turther.

Esa. 40. 6.

And if we be demanded howe such persons can be Christians, as are seled in wealth and at their ease: the aunswere thereunto is that euery man muſt beware first of all that hee seeke not his owne ease too much. For we heare howe S. Paul saith, that wee muſt not cocker our flesh in lusts thereof. And why? Because there is no ho when we once beginne to followe our owne likings: they be so far out of order, that there is alwayes somewhat amisse in them. They therefore which will be lodged after their heares desire, so as there may be nothing amisse in their state: doe put themselves in great hazarde of falling into a sounde sleepe, and of intangling themselves in such wise in the worlde, as they may neuer thinke more vpon the heavenly rest. And therefore a man cannot keepe too good a measure nor too stayed a hand in that behalfe. Not that wee can be tyed to any certayne rule, for we muſt vse Gods creatures freely. If wee should be scrupulous at euery thing, what woulde come of it? Either wee should be thankfull to God for the benefites that he bestoweth vpon vs, because we bee not sure that he hath giuen vs leaue to vse them freely: or else we shall become hardhearted and stubborn to vse them as it were in despite of GOD, by meanes whereof all things shoulde bee corrupted. So then, we must vie our houses as we doe all other commodities of this present life, without making any scruple of conscience in the But yet therewithall, we must beware (as I said afore) that we giue not the bridle to our flesh, by satisfying the desires thereof: for it is a bottomlesse pit, and we can neuer come to the bottom of it.

Againe besides this, let such as are planted commodiously, beware that they fall not asleepe. But rather whereas the children of this worlde doe welter in their delights, and so feede themselves with them, that they vtterly forgette the kingdome of heauen: Let the other sorte learne to consider thus: Goe to, albeir I bee planted here to my commoditie, yet must I not be tyed too much to this world. Whereas my lusts would holde me backe, I must fo fight against them, as all the impediments in the worlde may not restraine me fro looking continually towards heauen. After that manner must the faithfull deale. And such as are not planted at their heartes desire, must consider how our Lorde putteth them in mind, to goe continually forward to the rest of hesuen, warning the of it both early & late, as a thing which is for their benefite, & behoofe to be put in mind of. In somuch that if the I wes had such instruction as was meet for them: y exercise that God giueth to his faithful ones now adies in planting them not ouer much to their liking, is a far better learning than was the auncient ceremonie of the law. Whosoeuer then do find any discomoditie, and are not at their ease; let them vnderstande that God by that meanes pricketh & spurreth the to seeke the rest of heauen; & strengthneth them therewithal in y hope which they haue of their saluation.

And this concerneth not onely a mans housing, but also all other things as I said afore: so as y body with all thing belonging therunto, is the cheefe house which we haue. Therefore if we be now & then diseased, so as we can not take so quiet rest as we faine would, nor haue things ready alwaies at hand: let vs consider y our lord handleth vs like wayfarers. When a man shalbe in his own house which is well ruled, they saile not to serue him at his own house, & to haue such meat prepared for him as he best liketh: but if he be abroad in the country, he shall not haue all y he would: for folk are not acquainted with his complexio: & whereas he is wont to dine at such an house, he must be faine to tary an house or twaine longer. And again, when he hath supped peraduenture he shall not be so well lodged as in his owne house. Now must we apply all this to our selues: namely y in this world we be as wayfarers. Therefore if our Lord do now & then disappoint vs of things y we desire, it is to the end we should run a pace through this world & alwaies keepe on forth still, til we come to y kingdome of heauen, & not be tyed & fastened to y earth. Thus ye see how this lesion extendeth generally to althings that concerne this transitory life.

And yet neuertheless it is said expressly, That the Iewes in keeping this feast should be merry, & also make other men merry with them. Whereby we see y we ought not to be sad, though our Lord make vs to wate away by litle & litle. Or rather hee sheweth vs y he will not haue vs to make anie ouerfuptuous building here below, but y we shold be contented with our lodgings of boughs which will soon rot. Sith it is so, we must not be sorry, but rather reioyce in our God. And it is a very profitable point and well worthy to be noted. For it may be y some man will be sufficiently warned to depart out of this world, in y he sees himself sick, or in y som strange mishaps befall him: by reason whereof he thinks vpon death ouerotten, and doth nothing but mourne, desiring to be dispatched at the first push. Such are to be seene: but yet for al that, their departing is not without sorrowing. For what ioy can they haue, except they know that God draggeth them through y world of purpose to lift them vp to heauen to the companie of the Angels? If they know not that, surely they shall haue their hearts alwaies distressed with anguish and griefe, accordingly as we see how the vnbeleeuers repine, and neuer commie themselves to GOD, but in iur and grudge against God. And although their mouth speake not, yet haue they no gladnes nor rest in their hearts. Then let vs learne to keepe y feast of Tabernacles after such a sort, as we may be merrie in the Lord: that is to wit, as it may not greene vs that our bodies should consume away by litle and litle, vntil they be turned again into rottenesse; or that our Lord should cut vs quite off fro our bodies, & vtterly dispossele & becaue vs of all y euer we haue in this world. For w y? Hee doth it to draw vs vp to heauen. Therefore let vs goe ioyfully, and let our hart be enlarged to giue our selues wholly to our God. That (say I) is the thing which we haue to doe.

And it is the same thing y S. Paul speaketh of, howbeit hee sheweth vs y meane also how to put this lesion in vre. True it is y by nature we seeke to be dissolved or cast downe. If yee say to a man, my friende, are you willing to die? If we were against nature for him to say yea, vnles it were to some better end: for his desire is to haue being still. Indede the vnbeleeuers do before themselves in their desiring to be: for this being of theirs is but to cram themselves, to eat & drinke, to fill their bellies like swine, to sleepe like beasts, and to looke vpon pleasaunt thinges, as folkes that are caried altogether with sensuallite. Those are the things wherein the vnbeleeuers replece themselves. And in the meane while they be so dull, that they consider not that that being of theirs is no being at all, and that the state of this present life is but a shadow which is euer fleeting & neuer at any stay. But contrarywise when the godly say, it is good to liue, thereupon they conclude, that it is not for them to couet death vnlesse it be to exchange for the better. Neuertheless, when they take hold by faith vpon the heritage which God hath promised them:

then are they desirous (and not without iust cause) to depart out of this mortal body, y it may be renewed againe. We see then as nowe, howe we may dwell with ioy in rentes: that is to say, by being assured that after wee be passed out of this world, we shalbe taken vp into the resting place which God hath prepared for vs, & which was purchased for vs so dearely. Therefore let vs go on with a free courage, & let vs not cease to keepe on our pace, vntill wee be come to our end. And let vs always conclude with our selues, y it is enough for vs to hope continually that the heauenly rest shall not faile vs, after that God hath exercised vs in this world, and tossed vs to and fro. Thus ye see in effect how we ought to keepe this feast with gladnesse.

Now for a conclusion Moses addeeth, that they must resort thirfe ayere to Ierusalem, and there shew themselves before God, as many as were males, & none to come empty, but every man to make some offering to God, according to the blessing that God had giuen him. This manner of speaking that the Iewes shoulde come before the face of God, serueth for the better expressing that the sanctuary was not a vaine and vnprofitable figure, but that God vttered his power there, to shew in very deed y he dwelled among his people. If Moses had saide singly, yee shall resort to the Sanctuary: euery of you shall make his offering before the Arke of couenant: the Iewes had not bin so wel certified, that their coming to call vpon God in the sanctuary, was not in vaine. For they might haue saide, very wel, indeed wee haue the figures & ceremonies, but yet are we not sure y God will heare vs. But when it was saide, yee shall come shew your selues to god, it was a greater edifying of them, because they were wel assured that the ceremonies of y lawe were not deceiuable. Yet notwithstanding, it was not to make the to set their minds vpon the visible signes, & so to hold themselves still downe: but they were to consider, y although God stoop to apply himselfe to our infirmite, yet is it not his meaning therefore to hold vs downe to these earthly things: but contrarywise his coming downe to vs, is to make vs to stie vp & to seeke him aboue; to y when we haue visible signes, we should consider y his glorie surmounteth y heauens, & is infinite, & therefore that we must worship him with our minds lifted vp aboue y world, and aboue all things that are corruptible. And so yee see that this manner of speech where it is saide, yee shall be in the presence of your God when yee be come into his sanctuary: was profitable, and imported a very good lesson to the Iewes. For why? God shewed in very deed, that he had not instituted those signes without cause, but that thereby he made his grace and power to be felt of the faithfull, when they came thither to call vpon him. But yet for all that, it behooued the faithfull therewithal to worship God spiritually.

Esa. 66.1.2.

For we see howe the Iewes are reprov'd for this: in y they corrupted his seruice, by reason y they supposed to shut him vp within their Temple. Shall I dwell in a houle made with mans hande faith the Lord? If the Iewes had replied & said, Why not? for it is saide, when ye come to the sanctuarie, ye shall bee there before the face of your God. Yea, but that is no excuse. For Gods ordaining of his sanctuarie to dwell there, was not in such wise that hee woulde forsake his heauenly glorie: but to come seeke men here beneath, and to lift them vp aboue. We nowadayes must remember the like.

For when God sendeth vs his word, and addeeth sacraments for a confirmatiō of the lame: it is as much as if he shewed vs his face, at leastwise so farre as we are able to abide it. For wee be rude and earthly, and cannot beholde God as he is, and therefore he is faine to applie him-
Cor. 13 12
selfe vnto vs. Yet notwithstanding wee must so seeke him after the manner that he vttereth and declareth himselfe vnto vs; as we be not tyed to the visible signes, nor intangled with them as we see the wretched Idolaters are, which alwayes take occasion to turne away from GOD, by means of the helpes which hee giueth them to bring them to him. Therefore let men beware of such abuse. Indeede when we speake of the Lords supper, we can well enough say that Iesus Christ is there present, and that wee possesse him. When we come to the receyuing of the bread and y wine, we can say they be no emptie signes, but that we haue there the very substance, inso much that Iesus Christ imparteth himselfe to vs, so as wee bee fedde and nourished with his body and bloude. So then Iesus Christ offereth himselfe to vs in his supper. But is it to be saide therefore, that he commeth downe from heauen, and that he is to be sought after a superstitious manner, as the Papisites and such other like doe in these dayes? No: but it serueth to lift vs vp to heauen, and to make vs vnderstand that although Christ dwelleth there, yet wee ought not to doubt, but that his power reacheth vnto vs, and that we be made partakers thereof, and that when we receiue the breade & the wine, they be true warranters of that which I haue saide. Yee see then that we be in the presence of our God, by beeing partakers of Christs last supper. As much is to be saide of Baptisme; namely that in the water of baptisme we behold the bloude of our Lord Iesus Christ, and the redemption which he hath purchased for vs: So as it is vs as a luely picture; & not only that, but also wee haue the truth so ioyned with the image and portrayure, as the effect must needs be felt and perceued. Neuertheless it standeth vs alwayes in hande, to beware that wee abuse not the Sacraments: namely that wee be not so fleshly, as to stick to the world: but that seeing God is come downe vnto vs, we also on our side doe mount vp vnto him; and therewithall assure our selues, that our Lorde in giuing vs his sacraments, giueth vs not ruterates and childlike trifles to buie our heades withall: but that hee becometh vs the verie truth, to the end we should be knit vnto him, and that we might feele that his power is euer at hande with vs. Thus much concerning the saying where Moles speaketh a gaine of Gods presence, & commaundeth y Iewes to resort to Ierusalem, whē God should haue chose y place: & in the meane while to resort to y place where

where ſ arke of ſ conent & ſ ſanctuary were ſet vp. And finally he ſayth , That they ſhould not come empty before the lord, but that every man ſhould bring ſomewhat according as God had bleſſed him . Some haue taken this text to be a kinde of promiſe, as though God had ſayd that ſuch as reſorted vnto him, ſhould not go their way againe empty. True it is that if wee ſecke God, wee ſhall finde plenty of all good things in him, according as it is ſayd, Pſal. 34. 6.

Come vnto him and ye ſhall be enlightened, and your faces ſhall not be aſhamed. Therefore let vs not thinke that wee ſhall want any thing if wee ſecke God, for he will fill vs; as hee is riche, ſo is he liberal, we ſhall be ſatisfied, and haue our fil of all things y wee haue neede of for our ſaluation. Then is it very true in it ſelſe, that all ſuch as offer themſelues before God, ſhall not returne empty according as it is writen; Open thy mouth and I will fill it. But as in reſpect of this preſent place, it is certaine that Moſes ſpeaketh of Offerings: and wee muſt not bring in any other gloſes. For hee declareth that euery man ought to offer according to the giſte of his hande, that is to ſay, according to his abilitye. For that kind of ſpeeche were ſtraunge to vs, if wee were not made to vnderſtand it; namely, that euery man ought to conſider what GOD hath giuen him, that hee may doe him homage for it. Therefore looke what wee haue in our hande, that let vs take to offer vnto God, and to make ſacrifice to him wichall. In the tyme of the Lawe, the offerings were applyed to ſuch uſe as wee haue ſene heeretofore, and wee neede not to rehearſe the Ceremonie any more. As nowe it remaineth that wee doe homage to GOD at all tymes, with the goods that hee hath beſtowed vpon vs. And howe may that bee doone? By

Pſal. 81. 11.

Almesdeedes . For wee cannot increaſe him by beſtowing any thing vpon him; but yet hee accepteth whatſoeuer wee giue to the poore. Thoſe are the ſacrifices which hee requieth and alloweth nowadayes . Therefore muſt we beſtowe them there. And ſeeing that our Lord offereth himſelſe vnto vs, not thrife a yeere onely, but manifeſtly in the perſon of his lonne Ieſus Chriſt, ſo as hee dwelleth with vs continually: let it bee a meane to drawe vs to him euen with an earneſt minde, that wee may haue our hande alwayes open to offer vnto him. If wee had the Sanctuarie, and that it behoued vs to preſent our ſelues thrife a yeere at Ieruſalem: wee ſhould doe the thing that is commaunded vs heere, and yet ſhould not that ſerue to exempt vs from doing of Almesdeeds all the yeere after. For if there were no more than the Ceremonie, it were a ſmal matter as I haue ſaid afore. But where is Gods Temple now? Beholde Ieſus Chriſt, who filleth y whole world; he is with vs, & dwelleth euen in our ſoules. Sith it is ſo then, let vs ſee y we employ our ſelues to make our offerings: & ſeeing that our God doeth vs y honour to appoint vs to be his Sanctuaries & Temples; in ſomuch y euery Chriſtian man is y Temple of the holy Ghoſt, & euery Chriſtian hath y honorable title of Prielt: and y otherwiſe we ſhoulde neuer be counted y temple & houſe of God: it is good reaſon y euery man ſhould occupy himſelf inceſſantly wout end, in offering him y ſacrifice of praife, ſo as he may be acknowledged in all his benefiſts & bleſſings which he beſtoweth vpo vs. And it is not only the doing of Almesdeedes, y hee accepteth for ſacrifices: but wee muſt alſo ſerue him & worſhip him, w al our thoughts, with all our deſires, with all our affections, and with all our members. So then, that wee may not appear empty in the preſence of our God, let vs looke y we bring him good fruites & ſuch as hee requieth: & let vs beware y wee be not vpryided, as Ieremie vpbraideth y Iewes when he ſaid, What haue I done for thee my vine? I haue planted thee, I haue dreſſed thee: & thou bringeſt me forth bitter fruit. Therefore let vs bring good fruit to our God, ſeeing it hath pleaſed him to till vs, to the end we ſhould doe good, and not be vnprofitable. And how may that be? True it is that we canot bring any thing to him, neither can he be enriched: but when we indeuer to glorifie him in our whole life; that is the fruit which hee requieth and maketh account of. Seeing then that hee graunteth vs the grace: let vs profit continually vnder him, & let not vs on our ſide be empty. Notwithſtanding, it is certaine that we haue not one drop of goodneſſe, unleſſe he giue it vs: for we be barren. In deede we be too fruitfull in bringing forth euill: there are too many bryers & brambles to be found in vs; but as for good corne, there is not one graine to be found in vs, vntill God haue put it in vs. What is to be doone then? We muſt pray our God to bleſſe vs, that is to ſay, to powre out his holy ſpirit vpo vs, as wee may haue good fruit to bring vnto him: that whereas we be nothing, he may giue vs a being; and whereas we be nought worth, he may make vs ſome what worth by his manuring of vs, ſo as hee may be glorified in vs. For it is not ynough for vs to haue Gods gracious giſtes in vs; but he muſt alſo make vs to put them to the vſe whereto he hath ordeined them. And heere let vs call to mind what hath bene declared heeretofore: namely that God will not haue vs all to reioyce our ſelues, but alſo to make our neighbours partakers of our gladneſſe: and alſo to call vnto vs, not onely the husband and his wife, and the father and his children; but alſo euen thoſe that are furtheſt off from vs, and to indeouer to bring them after ſuch a ſorte before the face of our GOD, as the veryeſt ſtraungers and thoſe that are furtheſt off from vs, may be partakers of our mirth and feele the benefite of it, becauſe it is made common, according to the ſame ſaying of Moſes in this preſent Text, that the ſtraungers, the widowes, and the fatherleſs muſt be merrie with thoſe that preſent themſelues after that maner to God, to offer ſacrifice vnto him.

Now let vs fall downe before the Maieſtie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them better, that being vtterly in miſliking with them, we may ſeeke to be reformed by his worde, and profite therein more and more: And that for as much as he doth chiefly commaund vs to paſſe through the world, and to aſpire to y kingdom of heauen; we by this making of vs to feele our owne wretchednesse, may be stirred vp by the same meane to seeke the saluation which he hath promised vs, and whereinto our Lord Iesus Christ is entered to guide vs thither by his example: And that in the meane while we may be confirmed by the power of his holy spirite in the doctrine y<sup>e</sup> he giueth vs, so as we may neuer be turned from it for any impedimentes that can befall vs, but that we may alwaies keepe on our course, till he haue rid vs of this mortall body, and clothed vs againe with his owne immortall glory. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

The Cj. Sermon, which is the fifth vpon the sixeteenth Chapter.

18 Iudges and Officers shalt thou make thee in all thy Cities which the Lorde thy God giueth thee throughout all thy Tribes, to iudge the people with iust Iudgement.

19 Thou shalt not wrest the Lawe, nor haue regarde of persons, Thou shalt not take any reward. For gifts blinde the eyes of the wise, and peruert the woordes of the righteous.

Ad we continued in the same soundnesse of nature wherein God created vs: y<sup>e</sup> order of Law (as men terme it) should not be so needefull, because every man should cary the law in his heart, so as no man needed to be compelled to obedience, but every man should know his rule, & we should all with one accord followe that which is good & rightfull. And therefore law is as a remedie against the corruption y<sup>e</sup> is in men. As oft as there is any talk concerning earthly gouernment, we must vnderstand y<sup>e</sup> therein we haue a mirror of our frowardnes, in y<sup>e</sup> we are faine to be compelled to y<sup>e</sup> following of vprightnes & reason. For they that are in authoritie, haue the sword in their hand: and to what end? To repress such as be set out into excess and outrage. And wherof commeth that, but that whereas me ought of themselves to seeke the thing that is good and iust, they turne it vpside downe, and goe about to bring all to confusion, if they bee not letted? Surely it is a great shame, (considering that God hath created vs after his own image, & giuen vs dominion & feueraigntie ouer all his creatures,) y<sup>e</sup> we should be faine to be enforced to it by reaso of our naughtines. Pickte me out the most despised of all men, & yet doeth he carie in himselfe the image of God, and the saide token of feueraigntie. Yet for al that, wee bee faine to become vnderlings, and that is because of our sinne, as I said afore. Let vs know therefore that God hath not established the order of earthly gouernment without cause: but that he had an eye to y<sup>e</sup> corruption y<sup>e</sup> is in vs. Hereby we be well warned (as I saide afore,) to humble our selues, seeing our sinnes require such remedie. But yet ought wee to magnifie Gods goodnes, for y<sup>e</sup> he hath provided al to stand. y<sup>e</sup> all should not go to vnrrecoverable confusion among vs, which thing woulde come to passe if we might do what we listed. For if the strongest might goe away with the goale, what would come of it? It were much better for vs to be in y<sup>e</sup> forestes among wolues and wilde beasts, than to be among me, if all things were at libertie. For no beastes are so woode, as are our own lustes. Therefore let vs acknowledge y<sup>e</sup> wonderful goodnes of our God, in y<sup>e</sup> he hath had such care to preserve vs, y<sup>e</sup> forasmuch as he lawe we coulde not maintaine our selues vnlesse there were lawes to hold vs in, & Iudges to execute y<sup>e</sup> things y<sup>e</sup> are set down in writing: he hath provided for al. Also hereby we are put in mind to loue the state of Iustice, forasmuch as we know it is a singular gift of God, & a meane to preserve mankind. If we loue the light of the Sunne because we cannot liue without it, and if we loue bread and whatsoever else belongeth to our sustenance: let vs also loue y<sup>e</sup> order of Iustice. For it is to no purpose to haue meate & drink & all other commodities, seeing y<sup>e</sup> without lawes & Magistrates wee should be deprived of all Gods blessings; and it were better for vs to be dispatched out of hand, than to eate vp one another as it would come to passe. And thertofore we must esteeme y<sup>e</sup> order of Iustice, to be a president of Gods grace, and we must make account of it as it is worthy, every of vs inendeouering al y<sup>e</sup> he can to maintaine it: For wee shewe our selues to be deadly enemies to peace & to the comon weale, if we loue not the state of Iustice. And all such as trouble it, & go about to peruert it, are as theeues, and are to be esteemed as enemies of mans welfare. In so much that all men ought to fight against them, when wee see them goe about to bring in such horrible confusion among vs.

Now it is not for nought said here againe, that when the people were come into the lande which had bin promised vnto them, they should make them Iudges and Magistrates euerywhere. This matter hath bene expounded alreadye in the first Chapter: but yet is it not without cause that God

repeateth it heere againe . For he intendeth to shewe that it is to no purpose to haue good and iust Lawes , vnlesse there be men to set them in force and to put them in execution . This hath bene told you afore ; neuertheless it is requisite that you be put in mind thereof againe . For we see how God speakech of one thing oftentimes , to the intent we should set y<sup>e</sup> more store by it , and thinke vpon it , and not forget it . Euen so doth he now confirme the former speeche which he had concerning Magistrates . And indecde , it is not without cause y<sup>e</sup> the common prouerb termeth them the soule or life of the Lawe . For what are all the lawes and statutes of the world? They be but dead things . They be lapt vp in paper , and are nothing worth , vnlesse there be men chosen to giue them their force & to make them to be obeyed . And so ye see what God meant here in saying that the people should choose . Surely such freedom was a singular gift : & we see it is not graunted to al men . Where Princes haue souerainty , they appoint Iudges at their owne pleasure and liking , and ambition beares all the sway there . In so much that a Courtier which is in credite , shall not onely obtaine offices for himselfe , but also cause them to be giuen to others at his appointment . Nay there is yet greater and more shameful corruption . For offices are set to sale nowadays as well as al other kind of marchādzize . Seeing then that we behold such examples , wee must needs thinke it an incestimable gift , when God graunteth a people or Nation libertie to choose their owne Iudges and Magistrates . And verily when God gaue that priuiledge to the Iewes , it was a ratifying of his adoption , and of his choosing of them to bee his heritage , and that he meant to haue them to bee in better and more excellent state , than any of their neighbours , who had kings and Princes , and no such freedom at all .

Now as this thing deserueth to be had in great estimation : so ought they that haue obtained such benefite , to vse it , with a good and pure conscience . For what is the cause that our Lord bereauech vs of his benefites , but that we marre them by our abusing of them? We know well that whatsoever God bestoweth vpon vs is desirable , for we see y<sup>e</sup> commoditie thereof : but yet in stead of vsing of it holily with thankgiuing , wee will needs make it to serue our lustes . Nowe when God seeth his benefite sturned so to our bane , & that we draw them cleane contrarie to his meaning : he bereauech vs of them . Are we distitute of them? Wee see whereof it cometh : And we thinke it strange : but wee consider not howe God hath borne with vs a long time , and that in the end he wil not haue his gifts to be scorned & reproched . Therefore whēsoeuer God hath done vs any good , let vs learne to maintaine y<sup>e</sup> same by our good & pure vsing thereof . For y<sup>e</sup> next way to make the possession thereof to abide with vs , is to beware that we defile not the things which God hath sanctified to our profite . And therefore if we haue libertie to choose Iudges & Magistrates : forasmuch as it is an excellent prerogative (as I said afore) let it be maintayned and vsed with good conscience . When a people hath this prerogative , let them looke well to the setting vp of their Iudges , that they may bee as the Lieutenantes of God . Wherefore let no such men be put in place , as will either be bribed , or haue bin laudly giuen afortimes , or as are vn-able to beare such a charge : But let such be sought and founde out as are meete for it , as though they were marked out by God . And because we haue not sufficient discretiō to choose aright : let God bee called vpon . For it is not ynough to seeke out such as are meete and sufficient to execute an Office ; but for as much as wee may be beguiled in that case , by reason of our owne weaknesse , and by reason of the deepe dissimulation that is in men , in so much that when neuer so narrow search hath bene made , yet the euill will cuer let it selfe foreward : let men desire G O D to ouerlooke them , and to giue them wisdom and discretion . Thus ye see what we haue to marke vpon this saying , where commandement is giue to choose and ordaine Iudges and Magistrates .

And it is sayde expressly , In euery Citie . For what a thing were it , if men should bee driuen to goe farre to seeke Iustice , when disorders are committed euerywhere ? Seeing that misdemeanors are rife and touch vs neere : if the redresse should be delayed too long , it would not boote at all : a hundred faultes would be committed , before one could bee prouided for . Therefore doth our Lord say , y<sup>e</sup> they should be appointed in euery Citie : as if he should say , that men haue alwayes neede of some bridle . And that is the thing which I touched afore , when I saide that we which are created after the image of God , and ought to raigne ouer al creatures , haue neede to bee held in subiection . For as wee haue peruerted the order of Nature , so is it meete that God should cut vs short , & shew vs that wee bee so farre vnable to rule , that wee bee not meete to haue freedom , but had neede to bee helde in awe . So then let vs learne , that wheresoeuer vice and corruption is , there ought the remedie to bee applyed out of hand . True it is that there was in decde a foueraigne Court of Iustice in Iewrie ; yea and wee haue scene in the first Chapter , that the hardest matters and the cases of greatest importance , were referred to Moses . Yet notwithstanding , it was Gods will that there should be some order euerywhere , that if any disorder were committed , it might bee prouided for out of hand , & men should not neede to run farre to require Iustice . For in very deepe it behoueth Iudges & Magistrates to watch , & not to tarry till they be called vpon & importunately required , but punish y<sup>e</sup> euill as soone as they see it . I say as soone as they see it : for they ought to spee & keepe good watch . It is not ynough for a Magistrate to punish y<sup>e</sup> he knoweth to be wicked : but he must also make diligent inquisition , as wee haue seen in other places . And if men went y<sup>e</sup> way to loose , matters should be in better order . That is y<sup>e</sup> thing which we haue to marke , in y<sup>e</sup> our Lord will haue Iudges and Magistrates in euery Citie . For otherwise

many euils might be committed, before any redresse could bee had, so as the remedie woulde come too late as I haue touched before.

Furthermore, whereas Moses addeth that they must giue iust iudgement, and gouerne the people after that maner: it serueth to confirme that which wee heard euen nowe, namely (first of all) that men can not gouerne themselves, except they haue superiours to guide them, which thing is plainly expressed concerning the Iewes, whom God had preferred before all other nations. Let vs vnderstand then that of good right wee be dispossessed of the freedome which God had set in mankind. For why? We turne the good into euill: and therefore is it meete that we should be bereft of it. A man in health shall haue libertie to eate what he listeth, and he shall not bee dealt with so precitely: he needeth no Pkation to forbid him such a meate, or to restraine him from drinking, otherwise than in such measure or at such an houre. But if a man bee sicke, he must bee at obedience, he must keepe a dyet, he must bee helde short like a childe, and he is restrayned of all things that he lyketh, in so much that if he commaund his owne seruant to bring him this or that, his seruant must not be so bold: as to doe it. Yea and when maisters bee diseased, they are subiect to their seruantes, so as they cannot inioy their owne goods. And why? Because they be not meete to haue them; by reason of their disease which ouermaisteth them: and therefore are they sayne to bee as vnderlings. Euen after the same manner standeth the case with vs: insomuch that if wee were in deece whole and sounde, God woulde giue vs after another fashion. But forasmuch as he knoweth vs to be so corrupted, he is sayne to compell vs, yea and to restraine vs in such sort, as wee haue heard of. Thus much concerning the first point.

Againe for the second, Moses declareth and setteth forth that which I said concerning choise making: namely that in the seate which GOD hath dedicated to himselfe, no such persons must be put, as turne all things vpside downe. For if such be chosen for publike Magistrates, as leade a wicked trade, as in whom there is no feare of God, no honestie, no vprighnes, but wildnesse, wantonnesse, and disorder; or in whom there is no more wisdom than in Asses, but to be short are madbrayned or frantike: if such (I say) be set in place of publike office; it is not a dishonouring of men, but a working of high treason against God, because it is a desling of his seate. So then it becometh vs to wey well how Moses saith heere, that when it cometh to the choosing of Officers, men must not ser vp Idols, nor iudge of them without tryall. And why? Because it is a dishonouring of God, to set such persons in his room, as are not worthy to haue the ruling of a house. Yee shall see a man that is notable to gouerne his owne household, such a one as is not to bee trusted to for any thing, folke shall say of him, von Jer f!ollowe is a foole, hee is a dizard, hee hath no reason, hee hath no stay of himselfe, hee hath neither wit nor discretion to guide himselfe or his household: and yet for all this, shall men goe and set him in the seate of Iustice? He is a man that cannot liue quietly with his wife: & shal he be able to keepe a whole Citie in quiet? Men preferre him to bee a counseler. And to what end? To see the peace maintained. And how can that be? Hee hath no moe but his wife and household to gouerne, and yet he is not able to weelde them. When he is at home, he is not able to guide his wife and his children. Now when things go arlsruerise after that sorte, God is openly despised. So much the more therefore doth it stand vs in hand to marke well what Moses saith heere: namely that the choosing of Iudges & Officers is not a matter of formalitie, or a Cerenonic; but a holy thing wherein men ought to proceed with all reuerence; and that God laieth not y bridle vpon any peoples neck, as if he should say, Take whome yee list at aduventure without consideration; but he portrayeth out the persons, and pointeth them out with his finger. Looke to it (saith he) that ye vse discretion in choosing the persons that shall haue y ruling of the people. For the word: To Iudge, importeth to gouerne. And secondly, let them iudge vprightly sayth he. Whereas he speaketh of gouerning, it is not without cause. For it is to no purpose to choose such as haue neede of Tutors. To prefer those to the guiding of others, which ought to be put vnder the direction of others, is too great a skorning of God. Againe, the case here concerneth lustice and vprightnesse. Therefore y choosing of officers before they be wel knowne and thoroughly tryed, is surely a maring of all good order. And therof come so many changes & turmoyles. We wonder to see our Lord ouerthrow Common weales, and to behold how the Nations that were free, are greatly distressed & ouerwhelmed with tyranny: but wee looke not from whence all these things proceede. The ground thereof was the abules which were committed, by cause there was no regarde had of the mainteining of the state which God had stablyshed, nor care to follow faithfully the order that God had inioyned. So much the more therefore doth it stand vs in hand to beare well away the things that are tould vs heere.

Moses hauing sayde so, addeth nowe, That men must not wrest the lawe, nor haue respect of persons, nor take rewardes or giftes. And he addeth the reason. For giftes (saith hee) doe blind the eyes of the wise, and peruert the wordes of the righteous. First he setteth downe heere a generall rule, that men should not wrest the Lawe. For in deece wee may liuen equitie to a right lyne: and if it wrythe to the one side or to the other, by and by it is iniquitie. And therefore Moses saith, thou shalt not wrest the Lawe, that is to say, thou shalt haue thine eye vpon the lyne of Iustice, and followe it without iurawring one way or other. And heerewithall hee sheweth howe the same may bee performed, namely by respecting no mans person, and by eschewing to take rewardes. For when we consider a deece simply in it selfe; euen nature teacheth vs what to doc. True it is that wee had neede neede to call vpon GOD continually : for we see howe weak e vnderstanding and courage wee bee euen in the things that are most euident : oftentimes wee bee starke blinde in them . Then must not men presume vpon their owne wit , and thinke themselves wise ynough to iudge of all things that are set before vs : but wee must vnderstand that it is a heavenly gifte , as Salomon declareth . And if wee bee combered in the smallest matters ;

 Ecd. 2. 26. howe shall wee doe when we come to giue sentence of matters of great weight ? Iudges therefore must first humble themselves , and consider that if they bee not gouerned by Gods holy spirite , they shall not bee able to holde them to true Iustice ; and therefore they must referre themselves to GOD and aske counsell at his mouth , that they may bee taught by his word ; and they must giue themselves ouer to his spirit , and submit themselves thereunto .

But besides this , Moses ment to shewe heere the cheefe causes of all the impeachments of Iustice . For (as I sayd afore) if wee haue an eye alonely to the deede , without respecting the person , so as wee bee not possessed aforehande eyther with fauour or with hatred : it is certaine that wee can skill to giue sentence aright . And if it coulde bee brought to passe that the parties should not come in sight , that it might not be knowne who were the playntife and who the defendant ; so as the Iudges might not bee allured and carryed away either with bryberie , or with flatterie , or with lyes and gloses , or with such other things ; but that the case might bee layde before them simply and nakedly as it is : wee should not see the thing which all the world now reweeth , that is to wit , that men commonly can obtaine no right and Iustice . For by nature (as I sayd) we can wellynough skill to say , this is good , this is iust , this is vpright . But as soone as the parties come in our sight , that we see they be our neighbors or friends ; or the one a great man or a rich man , and the other a poore man ; and there is bringing of allegations on both sides , so as one seekes to win the goale by threatninges and bragges , another by sweete wordes and presentes , and bryberie trotteeth a pace to make way : all then will be turned vpside-downe , and they which sawe cleerly before , become nowe starke blinde . And therefore let vs marke , that it had bene ynough to haue sayd in one word , that men must not peruert the law ; but that men are vnable to keepe themselves from euill , if they be not told how and after what maner they may maintaine themselves in foundnesse and vprightnesse : namely by hauing no regard of the persons , and by shunning all couetousnes , for taking of rewardes .

As for the word Person , I haue expounded it elsewhere : namely that wee must not respect whether a man bee riche or poore , great or small , a stranger or a neighbour , and such other like things . For the word person signifieth another thing heere , than is ment by it in our common speech , when we say , There is a person , that is to say , there is a man or one of mankind .

For in this place the worde which Moses vseltz in Hebrew , signifieth a face , visage , or countenance . Wee must not then regarde the countenance . And what is ment by that ? The things that are seene , the states of men , and their outward shewe . And the worde Showe expresseth the meaning of Moses well ynough . Then must thou not rest vpon the outward shewe . For if I see a man poore , I despise him ; if I see him riche , I honour him ; if I see a man of authoritie , I stand in feare of him ; if I see a wretched abiect , I make no account of him , but rather holde skorne of him . See howe the outward shewe here marreth all . I see a man that is able to pleasure mee ; O , I will incline to him , that he may pleasure mee againe . I see another that can doe mee neither good nor harme ; O , it skils not howe he speeche . Againe , I see one by whose hurt I may aduantage my selfe : I will doe it . And why ? Bicause my minde lookes no further but to the outward shewe . Nowe wee see the meaning of Moses , and I haue spoken of it alreadie in the first Chapter of this booke : howbeit it is not for nought that the holy Ghost maketh rehearsal of it againe here .

Wherefore let vs learne in fewe wordes , that such as haue an eye to mens persons , that is to say , regarde the outward shewe , cannot holde their owne to deale vprightly and indifferently ; but that they must needes bee moued either with feare or with fauour , to giue the vpper hand alwaies to the wicked person that standeth in the wrong . And why ? For feare least he should be reuenged : and else for hope to be benefited againe at his hand for the fauour that he shall haue receiued . And therefore let vs remember , first that God requireth a stoutnesse in them that are Iudges . If they see a riche man or a man of honour : well , let them take him as he is , and yet neuertheless iudge the case as it requireth . But this stoutnesse of minde is seldome to be found any where . For although the Iudges doe purpose with themselves to follow y law , yet are they commonly seased with a kind of fearefulness , by meanes wherof they be daunted whē it cometh to y point y they should stand to their tackling . And therefore is there good cause why such as sit in the seate of Iustice , should resort to God , & carefully pray him to strengthen them in such wise , as they may not be like to reedes y are shaken w every winde , but freely follow y course that God hath appointed them , without swauing or bowing any maner of way . Let vs marke then first of all , that we must haue this stoutnes of not being afraide at the sight of any mans greatnesse or countenance , that his authoritie or riches doe not any thing amaze him , but that the case may stand in firme state , without hauing our eyes dazeled to say , This is a great man , and therefore I must fauour him .

Againe on the other side , I sayd also that wee must not despise such as are had in contempt to the worldward . Bicause I see a man is poore , I beare my selfe in hande that it makes no matter though I doe him wrong . For wee be oftentimes at that poynt . If there bee a man of no reputation, we thinke our selues discharged if we can say; well, I haue doone wrong to a poore creature, which is not taken to bee of the common sorte: but that is nothing, for no man complains of it. But God will haue right and equitie to be ministred to all persons. Therefore let such as are aduanced to degree of honour thinke, that if they despise the meaner sorte and such as seeme to be the outcasts of all the world: they shall giue account for it. For if God vouchsafe to regard those kind of folke, and to haue a care of them; yea and (which more is) do name himselfe their defender: wil he suffer them to be so troden vnder foote, and to be borne downe with oppression and tyranny, without reuenging them? So then, Iudges must match their stoutnesse with gentlenesse, and incline themselues euen to the meanest, receiuing them into their protection, and looking to the maintenance of their cases when they be good and rightful. Thus ye see what we haue to remember in this text.

Where this rule well held, we should nor heare so many complaints, neither should things be so farre out of order. But what? ye see shall see a good iudgement giuen, and a fault or offence punished as it ought to be: and by and by in y turning of an hand, ye shall see the like case goe vn-punished. And why is that? Because the persons of men doe beare all the sway: There is a case wherein a man is conuicted by the things which he himselfe vs to speake: it falleth out apparant, and thereupon he is to haue some punishment, and he hath it in deede. And why then is not the like done in al other like cases? O because the partie is fauored. In deede men seeke many colours and disguisings: & it is so much the woofe: but yet canot God be deceived, whatsoeuer shifts be made to shroude our matters with all. Neuerthelesse the worlde sees howe this respecting of persons peruerteth all right, and that it is almost an ordinarie thing. In somuch that for some one nice point, a mā is oftentimes graueled in a case, which of it selfe were plaine & manifest yough, if the parties themselues came not into the play, that y Iudge might giue sentence vprightly, without respecting the outward shoues which I spake of afore. But the Iudges being preuented with the regard of the persons, doe cast great doubtles where none at all is, to say this & that. And what is the cause thereof? Alwayes the respecting of persons. And in deede, in some cases a Iudge will goe through with them, and dispatch them quickly: and in some other in all points like, he will haue so many deuises, that he can neuer determine it. Wee see then howe great the leawdenesse of men is in this behalfe. Yet for all that, our Lord wil not haue the instruction which he deliuereth here to his people, to be lost or vnprofitable. Therefore let vs looke that we make our profit of it.

And let vs marke that as Iudges and Magistrates are forbidden to haue any respect of persons: so is the same warning made to vs all. For what is the cause that wee sayle so ofte in dooing our duties, but that wee bee so preuented with this respecting of parties? Therefore let vs haue such stoutnes of corage, as no greatnes, no pompe, no authoritie, no honour of this world may get the vpper hand of vs to peruert vs. And on the other side, let vs haue such myldnesse as wee despise not the meaner sorte, but rather bee gentle to receiue them. Thus much in effect concerning the woorde Person.

Now there is a second point concerning berberie and rewardes. Thou shalt not take them, sayth the Lord. He saith nor, thou shalt not sell Iustice: but he saith, thou shalt not take. And why so? he addeth the reason: For giftes (saith he) doe blinde the eyes of the wise, and peruers the wordes of the righteous. Heere is a reason well worthy to be weied. For it seemeth at the first sight, that to take some presentes is not euil nor to be condemned, I meane in a Iudge. For he speaketh here of the presentes and gifts that are giuen in respect of some case that is to be heard. As for example, a malefactor laboureth to scape vn-punished, and hee goeth about to win the Iudge by sending him some present. Likewise another man puts himselfe forward, and to haue fauour against his aduersarie pratie, hee goes and giues the Iudge somewhat likewise. Now our Lord saith nor, Beware of it: If thou receiue a present to fauour the partie that giueth it thee, it is ill done, and it is a setting of Iustice to sale. God speaketh not those precise wordes: but he saith, Beware of taking: for it is vnpossible that he which hath taken, should behaue himselfe vprightly and not swaue aside. Neuerthelesse there are a great sorte to be found which will say, As for mee, although I take, yet dorch it not therefore follow, that I will swaue from myne office: For when I haue taken on both handes, I will giue him the alike which thought he had won me by his giuing. And is that so euill a thing? Why then was he so foolish to bring it me? If he bring, I take: but yet for all that, I step not aside from my dutie. Such kinde of folkes would make GOD a lyer. For we heare how it is sayd heere, that gifts doe blinde the eyes of the wise. If they thinke themselues so sharpe sighted, that the receiuing of rewardes cannot dim their eyes: God saith the contrary. And if they thinke themselues so constant, that they cannot bee bowed; God telleth them that as soone as they haue taken any gift, they bee vterly mard, and there is no more foundnesse in them. Now then it is too grosse a fondnesse to say, I will take rewardes, & yet for all that, I will keepe my selfe wellyough from turning away, or from swauring on the right. But that is vnpossible; for then should God haue lyed in this text. Thus ye see what we haue to remember in the first place, concerning the second point.

Now then fore, they that sit in y seat of Iustice ought to thinke thus: doth he that brings mee presentes, bring them of good will as one neighbour to another, or as one friend to another? or bringeth hee them rather for some matters sake which he hath before me? Then if a man haue a cause before a Iudge, & the Iudge take a present of him; hee offendeth god, Who so: Because God hath forbidden him, and he knoweth wherefore. It is not for man to say, It makes no matter, I will take heede well enough: for being bridled by it. But it is a tempting of God when we deale so, and God will hold skorne of our ouerweening, and will shewe vs that we bee not of such abilitie as wee rooke our selues to be, and that he did not without cause tell vs, that when wee be lymefingred to drawe presents vnto vs, and to hold them fast when we haue them: then are our eyes blinded, and then are our hartes wrested, so as wee haue no more wisdom nor vprightnesse in vs. Seeing that God sayth so, it is not for vs to reply againt it. And in deede, whoeuer they be that boast themselves to be vnable to be corrupted, or to be made to steppe aside by taking of presents: they neede not to bee brought before God to be conuicted, but euen young children may iudge of them. It is too common a thing, and I could allgedge examples thereof that are knowne welnough. For there are some which are growe to so great vnshamefastnesse; that they sticke not to say, As for me, I will take on all handes. This hath bin heard, and there are witnessess enow that can beare me record of the matter. And in the meane season what protested they? Tush, I wil not be corrupted for all that. No; but when little children haue seene that lustice hath bin set to sale, and that a leawd man hath gotten the vpper hand in all cases, what is to be sayd of it? As for him, so he might play his prances, and obtaine his futes: he had cast his cardes aforehand. And on the other side, those to whom the presentes were brought, went lyke swine casting vp their groynes, so as there was lesse honestie and shame among them, than is euen among the heathen men and infidels. This hath bin seene; and yet notwithstanding they pretended in their talke to be holy men. O there were as godly and sweete wordes as could be: yea, but when the matter commeth to be spoken of, little boyes and idiots will giue their verdit of it: for the thing is too much knowne. Seeing then that our Lord telleth vs here, that if me receiue bribes, their eyes must needes be daz:led, and their heartes corrupted: let vs beare wel in mind, that except we will payson our selues wilfully, we must first of all keepe this rule, namely that luges must not take any thing, at leastwise of any body that hath aught to doe in Lawe before the, but vterly absteyne from so dooing, vnlesse they intend to turne away from all good order, right, and equitie.

And herein we see how our Lord who knoweth our diseases, or deinethe immediately meete & conuenient remedies for the same. What remaineth then but that we on our side enter into examination of our selues, and cury of vs searche his selfe narrowly? For the thing that maketh vs so bolde to tempt God, is that none of vs entereth into himselfe, to looke neerely to his own vices and infirmities. But if we had the discretion to bethinke our selues, wee would consider thus, Alas, I neede not anything to peruert me, I am as frayle alreadie as may bee: though there were no occasion at all to surpris me, I would seeke occasion of my selfe. And what will I doe then when I meete with any euil occasion, or any cause of misdealing? I shall stumble and fall flat downe. So then, if wee aduse our selues well of our vices: it is certeine that we would seeke al the helpes that could be to preferre our selues. But seeing that God preuenteth vs, and on the one side sheweth vs how feeble and weake we be; and that on the other side, whereas we might fall into such mischiefe and inconuenience, he prouideth for it and saith, My friends, true it is that ye be subiect to euill, but the way for you to be prefered from it, is to absteyne from such a thing, and to take such a remedy: seeing (I say) that God speaketh so familiarly vnto vs, if wee refuse him, I pray you dooth not our vnthankfulness deserue, that wee should be caryed away vnto all euill, and that Satan shoulde driue vs and beare vs quite away, and that God should forsake vs and suffer vs to fall into grosse offences as all the world might abhorre vs?

Now then, it standeth vs so much the more in hand to marke well this sentence, where it is sayd that if men withstand not the temptations that may beguile them; of wise and discrete, they shall become blinde; and of iust they shall become vniust. God speaketh not here of such as haue alwayes bin naughtipackes, in whome neither reason nor vprightnes hath borne sway at any time: but of the wise and righteous. And that is such a monstrous thing as ought to make our hayre to stand vp vpon our heades. As how? That giftes and presentes shoulde haue such force to corrupt, as that they shoulde blinde the eyes of those which were of good discretio. Now it is certeine that discretion is a singular gift of God. When wee speake of wisdom, we must not thinke that it groweth out of mens braynes, but that it is the gift of God. Ye shall see that God hath induced some ma with a good wit, by meanes whereof he behauieth himselfe in such wise, that he dooth good and commendable things. And yet if God let him alone, so as he giue himselfe to this corruption of taking rewardes: by and by the light which God had giuen him, not onely becommeth dim, but also goeth quite out. Therefore let vs learne to looke to our selues, and (as saith S. Paul) let such as suppose they stand beware least they fall. For our Lord vseth here a horrible threate, wher he saith that they which saw cleerly enough, shall bee blinded if they giue theselues to taking of giftes: and that they which were well and holly disposed, shall be peruerted and turned away vnto euill. When we heare this, ought we not to stand vpon our gard and to keepe good watch; least we be surprisid by Satans wilnes? So then, let vs preuent such temptations a good way aforehand. And sith wee see that our Lorde forwarneeth vs: let vs stand in feare, and not run rushing againt him wilfully, nor fall to stubbornnesse: but rather consider with our selues how that euen they which haue bin as halfe Angels, may be ouerthrowen and thrust out of the way, when they haue giuen themselves to it, & would needes vse too large dispensation. Wherefore let vs al learn to reine our selues short, and to submit our selues to the gouernment of our Lorde; and then we need not doubt but that if he haue giuen vs wisdom and discretion, he will strengthen vs more and more therein, and make vs to continue in them vnto the end; so wee goe to worke with praying vnto him continually to preferre vs, as I haue sayd afore.

Now let vs kneele downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faulces, praying him to voutsafe to touch vs in such sorte, that we retourne vnto him with true repentance; & that such as haue publike charge, may behaue the selues to dutifully, as they may be able to yeeld a faithful reckoning of y charge that is committed to them; and that all priuate persons may in such wise suffer themselves to be gouerned by them, as God may reigne among vs, and haue all soueraigntie, so as both great & small may be obedient vnto him. And for the bringing hereof to passe, it may please him to stir vp true & faithful Ministers of his word, &c.

On Wednesday the xiii. of Nouember. 1555.

The Cii, Sermon, which is the sixt vpon the sixteenth Chapter, and the first vpon the seuententh.

20 In all cases thou shalt follow the thing that is right, that thou maist liue and inioy the land which the Lord thy God giueth thee.

21 Thou shalt plant no groue of any maner of trees neere vnto the Altar of the Lord thy God, which thou shalt make thee.

22 Also thou shalt not set vp any Image: for that doth the Lord thy God hate.

The Seuententh Chapter.

THou shalt not offer to the Lorde thy God, either Ox or Sheepe that hath any blemish therein: I say thou shalt not offer any euilfaoured thing: for that is abomination to the Lorde thy God.

Hitherto Moses hath commended equitie & vprightnesse vnto vs, saying that those which are appointed to bee Iudges, ought to mainteine euery mans right without swearing. And thereupon he sayd, that as many as intend to continue in such soundnesse, must beware in any wife of taking rewardes: for if they take any, by and by they be corrupted, by & by they be blinded. And it is not to be replied here, that a man may well receive a present, & yet haue no meaning to fauor any wicked case. For y holy ghost hath giuen sentence, that the man which is so giuen to taking of presentes, shall bee blinded though he were the sharpest sighted man in the world. Nay, he hath a towell before his eyes already, and besides that, whereas he was well & holily disposed before, now hee is quite peruerced. We see then how it is a deadly poyson, for a Iudge to receive any presentes in any wife.

And now to hold men the better in awe, Moses addeth Gods promise, as if he should say, that we must not be wedded to our owne profit, whē God on the other side offereth vs his blessing, & telleth vs that he will prosper vs, so we stick vnto him. And whether were it better for vs, to inrich our selues by vnlawfull means which God condemneth, and which shall come to an euill end: or to haue Gods fauor present with vs, and that the same should neuer faile vs? Thus we see now to what purpose Moses addeth this sentence, That men should followe vprightnesse. Verily euen to the intent they may inioy Gods fauor, & that show maist possesse the land (sayth he) which the Lorde thy God giueth thee, and that thou maist liue long therein. This is a continuing of the same matter still, which I haue declared before: namely that whereas God might commaund vs in one word; yet notwithstanding to win vs to him, hee is so gentle that hee bindeth himselfe to vs, and maketh a couenant with vs as it were betweene two parties. He hath authoritie enough to commaund vs, and it is not for vs to aske wherefore. Againe, he is not bound to promise vs any thing: for we owe him all that we haue, and he is indebted to none of vs. Neuerthel: se he voutsafeeth to yeelde to our infirmities, accordingly as we haue seene heretofore, that after his requesting of y which is our duetic, he addeth that we shall not be disappointed in seruing of him. Yet must we not conclude therupon, that we can deserue aught at his hand; but rather we see his infinite goodnesse, in that hee promiseth vs his fauor freely after that faithio. And therefore we ought to be the forewarder in doing whatsoeuer hee commaundeth, notwithstanding any impedimēt that might hinder vs to plucke vs back. Vnexcusable are we in these dayes, if we seele not some force of his promises, in quickening & stirring of vs vp to obey him. Hath God commanded it? That ought to suffice vs. Notwithstanding, because we be slowe and negligent, he addeth this help, that he commeth to win vs by gentleness, as if a father should flatter his child. See we this? Must it not neede be y our hearts are too too much hardened, if they relent not at such goodnesse? Therefore when we seele that Gods commaundementes touche vs not sufficiently to the quicke: let vs take these promises here, to stirre vp our selues the more, and to spurre vs the more forewarde.

Againe, let vs marke well the speach howe he saith, Thou shalt followe vprightnesse in all cases. The wordes are, Vprightnes, vprightnes shalt thou follow. So doth Moises speake, howbeit that some men translate it, Thou shalt follow iustice vprightly. But when all is thoroughly lookt vnto, he meaneth nothing else but that men should beare an euen hand in executing of iustice, following the right by streight line, and perseuering stedfastly in it without swarung. I say it behoueth vs to marke well this saying, by cause men will needs alwayes discharge themselues to Godwarde by peeces: but as for to go through stedfastly with all things that he commaundeth; that is a very rare matter, (as the world seeth) specially in those which haue the handling of the lawe. True it is y though they be wicked, yet wil they be ashamed not to haue some goodly shew: & so now and then a man shal find some vprightnesse and reason in them. But haue they done right to one man? To morowe they will deale contrarie-wise with another. Haue they punished one misdeede? Three shall go unpunished for it, after as the persons are fauored and borne out. This partialitie is to be seene in maner continually: and it is a token that there is no vprightnesse. And this is not to serue God: in somuch that when indifferencie is not vsed in the ministrat[i]on of iustice, those that are punished cry out vnto God for vengeance, as though they were wronged. And therefore Moises thinks it not enough that men should sumply doe iustice; but hee will also haue them to proceede with it, and to continue it, so as there may be iustice vpon iustice: that is to say, a continuall holding on, so as no vndifferencie may be perceiued, nor any diuersitie of weightes and ballances, nor any respect of persons: accordingly as hath bin sayd heretofore, that men must not leane to the one side for any fauor, nor forsake a good cause for any hatred, but be of such stout courage that they bow not one way or other for any thing. That is the way to mainteine iustice.

This lesion is apparant enough of it self: there remaineth no more for vs but to fall to the practicing thereof. But as I sayd, it is a very hard thing for men to frame themselues to keepe an euen hand. So farre off is it, that this was written in vaine: that it is sayd y if we will prosper through Gods fauor, wee must keepe order continually among vs, so as euery man may haue his right: and that on the contrary part, without we doe so, God threatneth to becaue vs of his blessing though he had giuen vs it before. And thereof it is that we see so many changes and alterat[i]ons to happen in the worlde: namely for that when God hath blessed a people, & set them in as good state as were to be wisde, by & by they fall to ryoting, so as the gouerners abuse their authoritie, & the people take libertie to doe euill, when they see y their Iudges are corrupted, by reason wherof God is faine to lift vp his hand, & to take away quire and cleane all that euer he had bestowed vpon that nation. Wee see examples thercof too commonly. Wherefore let vs stand in awe, and let vs learne to liue the warrelyer in the obedience of God, when he hath set vs in any prosperitie. Let euery man according to his abilitie, further the maintenace of iustice: and let such as haue the sword in hand, vse it in such sorte as God may be honored, & not be driuen to bring vs to our arraignment for breaking of the order which he had set among vs: That is the effect of the things which we haue to remember in this text.

Now Moises addieth, That men should not plant any tree neere vnto the Altar of the Lord, nor set vp any manner of image. Wherby he prouideth y there should be no resemblance betwene the & the Idolaters & Gentiles: and also that there should not be any memoriall of long continuance, for feare least they should learne or accustome theselues to doe sacrifice in diuers places. So are there two reasons which Moises hath an eye vnto in this text. The one is, y he would haue y seruice of God separated from all y superstitions of the heathen. The other is, y he would haue folke to accustome theselues to the worshipping of God, and to offer their solemn sacrifices in the place where y Arke of y covenant was, and that there might not be any peculiar religion throughout all y countrie. As touching y first, it is a point well worth the weying, y God will haue his seruice to be such as he himself requireth & appointeth, & that he will not in any wise haue vs to meddle with those y inuents & deuise superstitions on their owne head. In y first place; Let vs marke the how it is not wout cause, y God is so charie of y seruice y we be to doe vnto him. For in deed, it is reason that men should stand in defence & maintenance of their own right, and that God should be disappointed of his? And is there any thing more precious & holy, than y honor which we yeelde vnto him, in protesting him to be our God & father, of whome we hold all y euer we haue, & at whose hand we looke for saluation? Is there any thing more holy than y? The let vs learne to be attentiu when y holy scripture speaketh to vs of the seruice of God. For it is a thing y passeth all other in dignitie. Marke that for one point.

And it standeth vs so much the more in hand to giue our indeuour thereunto, because wee see y world holdeth skorne to yeelde God his due obedience. If a man speake to a blasphemer, or to a despiser of y orders of y church, or (to be short) to one that is no better than a dog: if a man tell such a one of his leawdnesse: To whom do I any wrong, saith he? If he had giuen a man a fillip, or had chanced to haue spoken a crosse worde, as small as y wrong is, he would haue confessed his fault and saye, I haue done amisse: and yet is this but against a mortall man. But when hee shal haue spirt God in the face, tush, it is nothing, it is no wrong to an m̄. Dayly shall a man heare such speeches. In somuch y if God bee blasphemed, and his maiestie so shamefully dishonored as would make a mans hart ake to see it: it is all one, there is no account made of it. But let vs mark (as I sayd afore) that our Lorde will haue his seruice to be placed foremost & in highest degree: and when the case concerneth the ruling of our life, we must begin at that end; To wit; To honor him as he deserueth.

Moreover, let vs marke wel that it is not without cause, that he will haue his seruice so farre vnlyke all  $\hat{y}$  superstitions of  $\hat{y}$  heathen. For euen of our owne nature we be too much giuen to the corrupting & disguising of things, by meanes whereof the purenesse of the true religion is peruerted. Every man hath in himselfe a storehouse of idolatrie, though hee be not prouoked thereto by others: & in what case then are we, when we light vpon stumblingblockes and occasions, yea & euen go to seeke them? I see idolaters  $\hat{y}$  haue disguised & falsified  $\hat{y}$  whole seruice of God, & I shall goe borrow of them I wote not what; because this thing or that thing lyketh me, I shall goe put it to that which our Lorde hath commaunded me. Am not I by and by snarled in the same folly that they were, which played  $\hat{y}$  naughtipackes before me? Yes surely. For although I regard neither  $\hat{y}$  one nor the other, yet haue I many vain fancies in my hart. And if I fall to seeking of such things of set purpose: it is all one as if I did cast my selfe into Satans snares. And therefore let vs mark, that our Lord meant to preferue his seruantes from a deadly plague, when he sayd that they should holde them to  $\hat{y}$  pure simplicitie of his word, and not resemble  $\hat{y}$  payntins and infidels in any case. In those dayes the heathen for deuotion sake, made shadowes about their Altars, lyke as at this day in  $\hat{y}$  Popedome, if a place be darke some, it seemeth to the to cary some maiestie in it, and the simple sorte are as it were amazed when they come into a Caue, and where the windowes be dimmed with red or blew glasse, mens eyes dazle at it, and fillie simple soules feele a kind of motion in themselves which maketh them afraid & astonished; and to their seeming, it is good to stirre them vp to deuotion, bearing folke in hand that it is a reuerencing of God, whereas in deede it is stark foolishnesse. After the same maner did the heathen in plashing of trees to make places darke, that when men entered into them, they seemed to be agast, as though a woofe had bin at their tayle as they say, by reason whereof they were moued to some fearefulnessse. Now forasmuch as this custome was among the heathen, our Lord will not haue the faithfull to resemble the. Thus in fewe wordes, we see heere how all maner of resembling the vnbeleeuers is forbidden vs, if we intend to serue God in such wise as hee may lyke of it and take it in good woorth.

And this warning is as needfull for vs nowadaies, as it was for  $\hat{y}$  Iewes in the time of Moses. For what a nuber of deuices are there in  $\hat{y}$  Popedome, which haue bin taken from the superstitions of the heathen? All that euer is termed Gods seruice in the Popedome, is but a confused heape, gathered out of the things that are commaunded in the Lawe of Moses, & the things that are

seene to haue bin obserued of the Heathen. And to colour the matter wel, they alledge that their for dooing, is least the Iewes should vpbraide the Christians  $\hat{y}$  they haue not so goodly ceremonies in their Churches, as they haue. And therefore they must needs haue this and that, after their example. True it is  $\hat{y}$  they haue not bin so bold as to kil brute beastes in sacrifice; for  $\hat{y}$  had bin too detestable. But yet they tooke vp their Lampes, their perfumes, their attyrementes, their altars, and a certaine maner of sacrificyng, though it be not of Calues, Oxen, & Sheepe. Besides this, the Iewes had their washings; & therefore the Papistes would needs haue holy water, To be short, the Iewes were so thoroughly counterfeited; that to all seeming, they could not both that they had mo goodly ceremonies in their temples, than  $\hat{y}$  Christians had in theirs. But  $\hat{y}$  was high treason against God. And if there had bin no more but meere folly in it, it might haue bin  $\hat{y}$  better born w. But it tended to the darkening of the grace of our Lord Iesus Christ, by drawing a new veile ouer him. The veile  $\hat{y}$  God had commaunded to be in  $\hat{y}$  temple, is rent asunder: and they fall to hanging vp of another  $\hat{y}$  is wrought by  $\hat{y}$  hand of man; by means whereof Iesus Christ is as good as hidden, so as men can not behold  $\hat{y}$  maiestie  $\hat{y}$  should thine forth in him. For he is  $\hat{y}$  liuely image of God his father; & in him and in his person or face we see whatsoeuer belongeth to our saluation. Now they fall to making of impedimēts by such ceremonies,  $\hat{y}$  the world might not looke full vpō Iesus Christ. And they bee not contented w the intermingling of the things  $\hat{y}$  God had ordeined for a time amōg  $\hat{y}$  Iewes: but they haue also borrowed of  $\hat{y}$  obseruances of the heathen. True it is  $\hat{y}$  euen in this case also they pretended some color, as who should say that the world could not be drawn frō those foolish ceremonies, & therefore it was better to vse them stil vnder the title of God & his saints, than vnder  $\hat{y}$  title of idols as they haue done before: but by that meanes the seruice of God was falsified.

Let vs mark then  $\hat{y}$  all that euer is termed by the name of Gods seruice at this day in  $\hat{y}$  Popedome, is but a confused hotchpotch of all maner of superstitions; for they cannot shewe that the holy scripture hath appointed men to do so. And whence haue they fetched their ground, but frō a desire to counterfeit the things  $\hat{y}$  were used among the Iewes & Infidels? Sith it is so, what a thing is it if we sh ill now fashion our selues lyke vnto them, and suffer a sort of pelting bables or ceremonies to bee layd vpon vs, and binde our selues to  $\hat{y}$  keeping of the, to  $\hat{y}$  intent we would not be too far vnlyke those  $\hat{y}$  name themselves Christians: It is  $\hat{y}$  same corruptiō which God cōdemneth in this sentence. For it is not Gods will  $\hat{y}$  we should haue any resemblance to those which haue withdrawn themselves frō the pure obeying of his word. Therefore let vs be contented to haue Gods seruice reformed & stablished according to his cōmaundement. That is the thing which we haue to obserue in the first place.

As touching the second poynt, it is sayd that God would haue but onely one Altar whercon

2. Cor. 3. 18

3. Cor. 4. 4

to offer their sacrifices . At this day , this is no more in vse ; we haue no more any materiall altar . For whereas the Papistes vse altar<sup>s</sup> , in dooing they deface the death and passion of our Lord Iesus Christ as much as they can . Neuerthelesse , Gods intent at that time , was to keepe his people in the vnion of faith , by allowing them but one Altar .

And now it is sayd , that they should not set up any memoriall of long continuance , in any certeine place . For by that meanes they might haue accustomed themselves to worship God there , or they might haue made some chappell for deuotion , and so had all bin mard . And therefore not without cause were they forbidden to plant any trees in the places where they sacrificed : for Gods Sanctuarie was to be plated at length vpon mount Zion . And as many as intended to serue God purely , it behooued them to resort thither , to shewe one common accord , and one true vnitie of beleefe . Lykewise nowadayes our Lorde Iesus Christ hath left vs his holy supper , for a warrant that he dwelleth among vs , and is alwayes present with vs by his power : in somuch that although he be exalted aboue the glory of heauen ; yet doe not we faile to be knit vnto him to bee members of his body , to haue one common lyfe with him , and (at one word ) to be fed and nourished by his substance . And because it is a secret that passeth all vnderstanding of man ; he hath warranted it vnto vs , by  $\bar{y}$  visible signe of his supper . Come we then to the table of our Lorde Iesus Christ ? The bit of bread and the draught of wine which we receiue there , doe represent vnto vs ,  $\bar{y}$  Iesus Christ is truly our food , & that we be so incorporated into him ,  $\bar{y}$  we be partakers of his owne proper life . By meanes whereof Iesus Christ is so present with vs  $\bar{y}$  we must all needes be gathered together vnto him .

But we see at this day what hath bin done in the Popedome . Was there a table for the receiuing of the Communion : No ; it was turned into an Altar . And that was one corruptio<sup>n</sup> aforehand . For as I haue sayd already , it is not for any man to sacrifice Iesus Christ any more . That office belonged peculiarly to himselfe , and he discharged it thoroughly , & now must we receiue  $\bar{y}$  sacrifice that was offered vp vnto God , & let  $\bar{y}$  worde altar alone . Neuerthelesse it is not enough with the<sup>e</sup> that there be but one table ; they will needes haue three or foure : euery man buildes me his chappell , & there sets me vp an altar . Although it were a good thing of it selfe to haue one altar among  $\bar{y}$  Christians ; yet doe they breake  $\bar{y}$  vnitie of faith , wh $\bar{e}$  they build severall chappells after  $\bar{y}$  fashio<sup>n</sup> . For why ? It is  $\bar{y}$  will of Iesus Christ that there should be one common supper , &  $\bar{y}$  all his Church should meet together , & that the receiuing thereof should be as a true band to hold the faithful in one with him . But they go to say their deuotions in such a place , & to sing Masse in another place : And  $\bar{y}$  is an open defying of God , & a setting vp of idols in his stead . It is a turning of Gods temple , not onely into a Swines sty<sup>e</sup> , but also into a stinking dungeon of all abomination & idolatric . And therefore let vs marke , how it is not without cause  $\bar{y}$  God teacheth vs in this text

Now also Moses sayth ; That they must not offer vnto God any beast that hath any main or blemish in it . He hath told vs hitherto that men must not neddle w<sup>i</sup> idolaters , nor haue any resemblance to their superstitions . For the true religion must be held in his pure singleness . But that is not all . For they that offer vnto God , & turne not away after the fond deuotions of men , must moreouer serue God soundly , that is to say , their discharging of themselves towardes him , must not be lightly , as men doe commonly nowadayes . For we see howe men defraude God of his right .

In deede when we be indetted vnto men , we discharge our selves one way or other . but whereas we be indetted vnto God , all our seeking is how to scape from him . True it is  $\bar{y}$  we wil indeuer to defraud men al<sup>l</sup> : but yet wil we be athamed to vse libertie towardes them as wee doe towardes God euen in dalying with him . If we owe a man either custome or rent , we will not stick to conceal it if wee can , if wee be of cuill conscience : But yet for all that , wee will not be plucked too much by the care : for wee thinke wee shall gaine nothing by so dooing . So then , as touching  $\bar{y}$  dettes  $\bar{y}$  men doe owe one to another , they discharge the<sup>e</sup> : but it skils not for God . Although he call vpon vs & threat<sup>e</sup> vs ; yet euen after he hath shewed vs our duetic , we cease not to defraud him (ill yea & we be quite past shame in it . Verily we will not sticke to say , it is good reason  $\bar{y}$  he should be honored & serued : but yet we will haue this seruing to be after our owne fashio<sup>n</sup> . But he requir<sup>e</sup>th a right obedience . And what doe wee to him ? Very well say we , we must discharge our selves to Godwarde . And after what maner ? In mocking of him . In somuch  $\bar{y}$  although  $\bar{y}$  doing of some ceremonies be nothing worth ; yet notwithstanding men beare the<sup>e</sup> selves in hand  $\bar{y}$  God ought to hold himselfe contented therew<sup>i</sup> , and that he dealeth too rigorously w<sup>i</sup> vs if he require any more of vs . For this cause it is sayd  $\bar{y}$  men shall not offer any thing in sacrifice which hath either blemish or spot . For vnder one kinde Moses cōprehendeth  $\bar{y}$  whole ; as if he had sayd , let vs not thinke our selves escaped when wee haue serued God by halues and peeces , but wee must go to it soundly & roundly , so as we doe our duetic towardes him thoroughly in all pointes . True it is that there was a special reason for the Iewes : for  $\bar{y}$  Iewes were admonished  $\bar{y}$  their sins coulde not be wiped out before God , but by meanes of  $\bar{y}$  sacrifice  $\bar{y}$  was to be offered . For it behoued them to lift vp their mindes aboue the world , vnto  $\bar{y}$  trueth , to say , there will be a payment to discharge all our detts : wh $\bar{e}$  Iesus Christ commeth , he wil reconcile vs to God his father , and discharge vs of  $\bar{y}$  bond of death , wherein we be bound . Therefore it behoued  $\bar{y}$  Iewes to haue their sacrifices pure & cleane ,  $\bar{y}$  they might be led by them to our Lord Iesus Christ , and their faith be lifted vp above the world, to know that there is not any satisfaction nor offering that we can bring on our side to please God withall, but that he must be faime to giue vs the thing that we want to offer vnto him.

Notwithstanding, we must generally beare in minde y which I haue declared already; namely how Moses sheweth vs which we must so roundly yeeld vnto god that that he requireth, as he be not disappointed, as we heare him cōplain thereof by his prophet, that although the Iewes did not vtterly refuse to pay y tenthes & firstfruits: yet they did it but by halues. But God cannot away with such partinges, nor to be played with lyke a little childe. And hereby wee may learne y our seruing of God must not be by pangs and fittes onely, & afterward fall to lazinesse: but y it must be done soundly & substantially through-out, with obedience to his word. And again, y in our doinges there must be no hypocrisie nor cō-20 strent: but y we must goe to work w a free will, & not set a faire countenance on it to y worldward, & in the meane while haue a back thop that displeaseth God: may we must go to work freely, as I sayd afore. That is the thing in effect, which we haue to remember vpon this text. Wee nowadays doe not offer any moe Oxen or Sheepe: but y offerings which we make vnto God, are of our owne felues & of all y euer he hath giue vnto vs, so as all be dedicated vnto him, & applyed to such vse as he alloweth; or else it is but vncleanesse. For if God haue giue me a thing, & I abuse it: I am a traitor to God, because I vnhallowe y thing which he had dedicated to the cleane cō-
 30 trarie vse. And therefore let vs mark, y to please God in offering our felues vnto him, we must do it soundly, wout blemish or spot. True it is y there can be no such perfection in vs, but y very great fault may be found in our seruice of him: but yet must we alwayes holde vs to this principle, y we come to God vnfeinedly, and whereas there are infirmities in vs, we must resort to our Lord Iesus Christ. For all our spots & blemishes are done quite & clean away by his blood. And y is y cause why it is said, y wee offer our prayes vnto God by him. If there were any sacrifice clean on mes behalfe, it were y sacrifice of praye: for when we fall to y magnifying of Gods name, & confesse y we be beholden to him for all good things; our dooing seemeth to bee cleane. Howbeit forasmuch as we haue our lips fo vncleane, y we cannot yet discharge our felues in y behalfe: therefore it standeth vs in hand to resort continually to our Lord Iesus Christ. Our sacrifices then are steyned with some spot & vice or other; y is true: but yet must wee haue this roundnesse & soundnesse, of tending vnto God wout inforcement, necessitie, or hypocrisie. When we be at y point, our Lorde will accept our sacrifices, as though they were offered vp vnto him thoroughly pure & 40 perfect, & vtterly tauldes. In deed it is by means of our Lord Iesus Christ; for there must wee be grounded as I said afore. But if we haue y vertue, then doth God accept y sacrifices which we offer vnto him, so we be not snarled w hypocrisie, & come not to him as inforced or constrained, but with a free will. Therefore if men will serue God, they must beware y they seek not to please men by it, as it often falleth out y they thinke it enough to make some faire shew, & therewal do content & sooth thē felues. We beare our felues in hand y we haue done al y can be done; yea but we neuer entred into our felues, to giue ouer our felues wholly vnto God. Wee neuer founded our felues to finde whether there were any euill intermingled, that we might be purged of it. And yet is that the ende which wee should haue begunne at, that our coming vnto God might not be as by constraint. For if it were possible, we would exempt our felues from all obedience, and neuer come to reckoning with him for it. But contrariwise wee ought to serue him with a freedisposed minde. Then let vs consider, that if wee intend to make our lyfe allowable before God, then in all our thoughtes and all our affections we must haue this substantiall soundnesse of dedicating our whole lyfe vnto him, so as our senses and desires be made captiues vnto him, and hee so reigne ouer vs, as our cheefe desire may be to bee ruled by him and by his holy spirit, and to frame our felues in such wise to his will, that we take nothing in hand but that which lyketh him. When we goe that way to worke: then shall our sacrifices bee pure and cleane.

Besides this, let vs marke also y we must lykewise offer vnto God all y euer he hath bestowed vpon vs. As for exāple, when we do almesdeeds, let every man apply y giftes which he hath received, to y common benefite of y Church. Those are y sacrifices of good sent, at leastwise if they be without blemish or spot. For a man shall well edify y Church when he himself is led with ambition & vainglory. And as for such a one, let him not thinke y he hath offered any thing vnto God. For it is but vtter abominatio, wē things haue not their right end, by giuing the ouer again into Gods hande which had committed them to vs, & by putting the to such vse as he hath cō-50 manded. Again wē a man y doth almesdeeds is led thereto by vaine ambition, to boast himself before men, & to be esteemed & honored for it; his dealing after y fashion is but vncleane before God. Now then, let vs learn to haue an eye vnto God, that our sacrifices may be without blemish or spot.

Moreouer, as concerning y order of y Church, & of all other gouernment, we must vnderstand lykewise y all our sacrifices must be so purified as God may accept them. As for example, y orderyn of Ministers to preach Gods word, and the doctrine of saluatio, the creating of Magistrates & the choosing of Officers, are sacrifices which we offer vnto God. Now we must offer them wout spot. For if a man bring in any corruption in those cases, it is high treason to God, as I haue sayd afore. Therefore let vs bethinke our felues thoroughly, & consider y although these things according to y letter, were inioyned to the Iewes in y time of ceremonies; yet must we apply them to y sacrifices y are in vse and force at this day. And for performance thereof, let vs come back to that which S. Iames sayth, namely y he which commanded the one, hath also commanded the other, & that he which forbade the one, hath also forbidden the other. Will wee then please God in all the seruices which we doe vnto him? Let there be no parting of fautes, as if we would say, I will do this for the honor of God, & for the rest he shal beare with me & giue me leaue to do as I list. For in so doing we would be halfe fellow wth God. And therefore let vs vnderstand y<sup>e</sup> the righteousness of the law is a thing that cannot be decided, neither is it for vs to reude it in peeces. Wherefore let vs submit our selues to the rule y<sup>e</sup> is giuen vs, after such sort as is contained in y<sup>e</sup> Law of God. And therewithal let vs mark further, that we must not haue dubble or dissembling hearts, but that wee must submit our selues wholly vnto God. And if we cannot attaine therto at y<sup>e</sup> first as were to be wished; yet notwithstanding that must be the mark that we thoothe at. Now we see what our Lord meant to require in this text.

But to the end we may be the more prouoked, to deale soundly and substantially: let vs also marke this speech that Moses addeth here for a conclusion, namely that it is abomination before God. For men do alwayes make themselves beleeue, that they cease not to serue God though there bee nothing but dissimulation and hypocrisie in all their doings. And we knowe howe hypocrites are pushed vp continually with this sonde presumption, that although there bee nothing but counterfeiting in all that they do, yet (so their seeming) God is neuertheless beholden to them; and all is wellly enough so there bee some gaie painting and some faire shewe. In deed: they dare not vtterly deny that there is any fault at all in them: but yet would they still be ire men in hande, that there is much good in them which God accepteth. As for example, when y<sup>e</sup> Popish Priests say their prime & hours, besides that they doe but bibleable, their minds are elsewhere; one thinks vpon his kitchen, and another vpon his harlot. Well, they will graunt that this is ill done, and that they ought to bee more heedfull in their praying. But yet will they vpholde, that so they haue a finall intent to pray vnto God, it is a good and commendable deede; and their coming to Church deserueth verie much, so they haue this finall intent to serue god there, though their mindes be distracted about other things. When they haue once worshipped a puppet, and taken a little holy water, though they looke vpon a woman after an vnchast sort, although they be caried away with couetousnes, or although their mindes bee occupied about some other wicked, shameful, and hellish lust: yet it skilles not, so they haue the saide finall intent of seruing God; all is wellly enough, so they make a shewe of seruing God, notwithstanding that they spite him by all the meanes they can. Likewise in their fasting, though a man cast him selfe into all manner of lewdnes and ruffianry, yet if he fast vpon a deuotion, O that a holy man, there is no more fault to be founde in him. Thus is it not possible to ridde the hypocrites of the false and duellish opinion wherwith they be befotted, of paying God with this pelting trash, which is nothing else than abomination before him; and in the meane while, to spite him in all the residue of their life: so as a man can neuer winne thens to beleeue, that God vtterly misliketh all that euer proceedeth not from a sounde heart. So much y<sup>e</sup> more therefore doth it stand vs in hande, to marke well this saying which Moses setteth downe for a finall conclusion: namely that such dealings are abominable before god. Indeede the blinde & ignorant wretches deeme it not so to be; nay, their doings are commended of men; behold (say they), here is a goodly vertue, here is a good desert. But we must come before the great Iudge, who hath giuen sentence already, that such things are but trash, filthines, and vanitie. And he is not contented with saying so; but he saith also that they be vtter abomination or losethomes. For in deede, besides their dalyng wth him to make him as an ydoll, they fall to op<sup>r</sup> delyng of him. In s<sup>o</sup> though he not god to be stark blind, dur<sup>t</sup> they come before him with a dubble heart, & fraughted ful of hypocrisie: No surely: it would make them euen agist at it. For wh<sup>e</sup> they play y<sup>e</sup> hypocrites after y<sup>e</sup> fashion, it is al one as if they came to stop gods eyes: y<sup>e</sup> he might not discern their dissimulation and cursed hypocrisie. So then let vs marke well, that we must not stay our selues vpon mens bearing of themselves in hande, that to their seeming they faile not to do well, and to deserue wel at Gods hand, though they go not to worke with a free corage, nor with hartie and substantiall soundnesse: Let not such follies runne in our heads. For God not onely reiecteth such things as pelting baggage of no value: but also auoeth them to be all abominable before him, and that he will not suffer his seruice to be so shamefully disguised, with our taking horrible vengeance for it. And therefore let vs know that he will haue euery of vs to examine our selues; & sith we see al our thoughts and affections to be corrupted, so as there is nothing in them but dung and vncleannesse: let vs pray him to reforme vs in such fort by his holie spirit, as he may be serued and honored by vs, and we apply to good and holy vse the things that he giuech vs: and that therewithal he make vs to profite more and more in his obedience, vntill we bee come with a free will, to serue him with so good a corage, as we may be wholly dedicated to his honour. And that we may so doe, let vs repaire vnto our Lorde Iesus Christ, that our spots and steins may be scoured away by his purenesse and perfection, as he hath promised vs. If wee shall doe so, then will our God approve of our life.

Now let vs kneele downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgment of our faulces, praying him to make vs so to feele them, that wee may from henceforth fall to amendment and resort to his mercie, and that in the meane season he reforme vs in such sort to the obedience of his Law, as it may shine forth in all our whole life, and hee also beare with vs in our frailties, vntill he haue ridde vs quite and cleane of them. And so let vs all say, Almighty God heavenly father, &c.

2 If within any of the Gates which the Lorde thy God giueth thee, there be found either man or woman that hath wrought wickednes in the sight of the Lord thy God, by transgressing his Couenant,

3 And hath gone and serued straunge gods, and bowed himselfe before them, whether it bee the sunne, or the moone, or any of all the host of heauen, which I haue not commaunded,

4. And it is told thee, and thou hast heard of it: then shalt thou inquire diligently. And if it be true and certaine that such abomination hath bene committed in Israel:

5 Thou shalt cause, that man or that woman which hath committed that wicked deede, to bee brought out of the gates, and thou shalt stone them with stones, till they die.

6 At the mouth of two or three witnesses, let him that is worthie of death, dye: but at the mouth of one witness, let no man dye.

7 The hands of the witnesses shalbe the first vpon him to kill him, and afterward the hands of all the people. And so thou shalt ridde away that euil from thee.

Deut. 13. 1. 6

WE haue seene heretofore, that if there were either man or woman which went about to counsell others to peruert the seruice of God: they shoulde die for it. Nowe here is a Lawe, yet more sharpe: that is to wit, that if there be any ydolaser founde among the people, whether the same bee man or woman, it must cost the party his head and his life, yea though hee haue not gone about to corrupt others or to intice them to leawdnesse. Truly this seemeth rough dealing at the first bluth, as we see howe they blame God for vsing such ferueticie against such a vpon deuotion did any act contrary to his truth. Because wee wey not Gods honour as it is worthy, wee make greater account of a mortall creature than of the liuing God. For if a man haue practised against his Prince, or gene about to alter the publike state: hee shall be condemned to death without any sticking. Again, if a man bee vnderstoode to haue had secrete conference with his Princes enemy, to haue shewed him fauour, or to haue conspired with him; no bodie will excuse such disloyaltie: and yet for all that, all this dealing is but against men. But if a man turne away from the seruing of God to gad after ydols: men thinke hee ought to bee borne withall, as though it were a thing of nothing. Whereby wee bewray, that wee patle not for the diminishing of Gods honour, or for the defacing of his maiestie. But wee bee no competent Iudges in that case. Therefore let vs remember what is saide heere, and not thinke that God passed measure, when hee did set such price vpon his honour.

Nowe it is saide, If there be founde either man or woman, to the intent that no fraitle should bee a shrowding sheete to any euill doing. For esse it woulde bee saide, it is a womans deede. If a man of wit, courage, and vnderstanding had done it; it had bene to haue bene regarded: but seeing it is done by sillie soules that are easie to be deceiued, is it meete that they shoulde bee haled to death for it at the first dash? See I pray you howe wee be wont to qualifie things. But God on the contrary parte intended to preuent such shiftes, by telling vs that wee must not passe whether it bee man or woman, but that the deede of it selfe is so detestable; as that it ought not abide vnpunished. Yet notwithstanding, before wee proceede to punishing, he will haue vs to vnderstande perfectly howe the matter goeth, and hee will haue the truth of the thing tryed out. And therefore hee saith, When it is reported vnto thee, inquire diligently thereof; and if thou find it true, then shalt thou take the partie which hath committed such crime, and stone him to death. Hereby our Lorde sheweth vs (as he hath done afore) that wee must not bee hastie to proceede rashly vnder pretence of any good will or zeale: but vse aduisednesse that things may bee well knownen. And that is well worth the noting. For wee see howe vnaduised zeale doth often carie men away, and make them to offend G O D. And when it is done, then they say, I did it of a good intent. Yea, but G O D telleth vs heere, that in this behalfe wee must behaue our selues discretely. And in deede, God meaneth not that men shoulde so fallacly abuse his name: For what a vile thing is this; that I shall suppose that I serue G O D and yet in the

Deut. 13. 14

the meane season haue no equitie nor vpright-nesse in me? Is it not a foule iniurie, so to intermingle Gods holy name with mine owne follie and lewde imagination? Wherefore let vs well weigh y<sup>e</sup> God, by this place hath condēned that same too too violent heate which men haue, when they suffer themselves to bee so caried away by their zeale (as they say) without any moderation or stay at all. Let that serue for one point.

And it is some what more when he saith, If the thing be reported vnto thee. For therein wee haue to note, that faultes cannot bee punished among men, vnlesse they come to knowledge.
Insomuch that a number of offenders escape the handes of worldly Iudges, though they haue offended more fouly than others, and be worthy of great blame: and that is because God hy-deth their vnhoonest dealings. For there are finnes which make hast to come to their condemnation, which God thrueth forward: and there are other some which linger, and God keepeth them as close as if they were buried. And hereby earthly Iudges are warned to be watch-full in serching out of thinges. For inasmuch as they perceiue, that after neuer so much paine taken in bouking out of matters, which belong to their office to haue knowledge of, yet a great sort of thinges doe scape vnseene: they ought to bee so much the more diligent. They cannot knowe all thinges: and why? for they be burmen. Yet notwithstanding, for asmuch as God hath commaunded men to punish euill deedes as soone as they come to knowledge: we must consider howe his meaning is, that because nothing can be hidden from him; therefore although men require nothing of vs, nor make any inquisition or suite in Lawe against vs heere beneath: yet must wee euer bee faine to come to account before him. It is saide that an ydolater shall bee punished, for God hath commaunded him to bee stoned to death, vpon knowledge that hee is such a one. Nowe put the case that a man turne away from the pure-nesse of Religion, and worshipping ydolles in secret. In deede hee cannot be touched by order of Lawe, neither shall hee abide iudgement for it. But yet must hee thinke in the meane while, that God will not suffer his eyes to be da-zeled. And therefore wee may gather vpon this text, that our Lord referueth al those faultes, to his owne iudgement, which are not punished by ordinarie iustice in this worlde. Not that hee pardoneth not those which returne vnto him by true repentance: but my meaning is of such as harden themselves in their hypocrisie, and take occasion to growe worse and worse, because they bee not reprobued of their wicked deedes. But yet let them not thinke they haue made the better market for all that. For whereas God telleth the iudges of the earth that they ought to make diligent inquire: because hee himselfe hath no need to do so: he telleth vs that all faultes shall come before his iudgement seate, and that the hypocrites may well shrowde themselves for a time, but in the end they shall be rooted out: and not without cause. For (as I haue touched afore) thinke wee that God wil leaue his honour in the suddes: Seeing it is his wil that euen men should be maintained in good reputation, and that all outrages should be punished: what will hee doe when the case concerneth his owne maiestie, & that his glorie is diminished by the malice of men? Ought such dealing to scape vnpunished?

Wil God suffer himselfe to be mocked after that fashion? It will bee alledged that all of vs haue beeene ydolaters, & so we are al worthis of death.
And their saying so, is as it were to stirre vp all men against God. For the folke that make such replies, seeke but to poyson mens heartes, that Gods honour might bee lightly esteemed, and that we might quarrell with him when wee feele our selues touched.

But first of al (as I said afore) we must marke y<sup>e</sup> our Lord speaketh here of y<sup>e</sup> punishing of ydolaters, where order is stablished according to his word.
If God had not begunne at that ende, his order had bene amisse. But seeing hee hath shewed howe men ought to serue him, and giue a sure rule thereof, telling vs that we must simple doe whatsoeuer hee commaundeth; and seeing that both great and small are taught what God they ought to worshipping, and which is the true Religion: if a man or a woman doe afterward turne away, and become forsworn and disloyal to God by stepping aside into the superstitious of y<sup>e</sup> heathen: is there any excuse to be admitted in that case? Then let vs marke wel, that this Lawe was made at such time, as God had alreadye stablished a Lawfull gouernement, directed according to his owne word. But wee haue all beeene ydolaters. As howe? Euen by meanes of the horrible desolation, y<sup>e</sup> happened through y<sup>e</sup> whole world, as is to be seene yet still in the Popedome. Had this lawe bin well obserued at the first; Christen-dome had not bin so sore decayed. For had they beeene punished which were the first ydolaters & had falsified the Gospel, and corrupted the pure-nesse which was at that time: surely Gods order had bin maintained and preserued much better.
But what? When hypocrites were once crept in, which would needes seeme holier than all other men; then inuented they many corruptions: and the more they were born with, the more did the mischiefe spread it selfe abroad, so y<sup>e</sup> it became a poyson that vndoeth al. The cause then why the Church of God came to such desolation: is that men haue not bin held in awe, that the pure simplicity of the Gospel might be maintained, and God worshipped according to his word, so as mē might not assay to deuse any thing of their own braine, but that al men both great & small, might be made to obey the doctrine which they knew already to be of God. Had this bin done: there had bin no such desolatio<sup>n</sup> as we seee still at this day And therefore let vs beare in mind, y<sup>e</sup> Gods speaking here, is but of such countries or Cities, as haue had y<sup>e</sup> grace to haue y<sup>e</sup> true religion stablished among the, so as he is worshipped there, & they haue al consented to admit y<sup>e</sup> order which is set by God; & therefore if any of the do afterward turne away, he deserueth to lose his life. As for exaple.

wee haue now the light of the Gospel, whereby our Lord holdeth vs bound vnto him, to serue him & to be his peculiar people. Seeing the y his Religion is knowne vnto vs, and that discipline is set vp among vs: if any of vs hereafter turne away from it, and giue himselfe to ydolatrie, spiring God wilfully: doeth hee nor deserue punishment? Yes. For had a man committed any thing against the state, and after his giuing of his othe to the Magistrate, had broken it againe by doing some deede to the contrary: surely he should be punished for his vnfaithfulness. And what shall be doone then, if men daly with God, falsifying the faith which they haue giuen vnto him, so as they confederate themselues with his deadly enemy Satan, and with ydols which serue but to deface his glorie, his maiestie, and all his seruice? So then, if the skorners of our dayes replye, that if ydolaters should be punished, all of vs should die: the aunswere is easie, namely that if the Lawe of God had bin executed, as had bin for our benefite and behoofe, Christianitie had not bene so corrupted as it is, neither had Religion bene so imbeced as wee see it is. For the remedie thereof was good and behouefull: but men haue not vsed it. And that hath caused all things to come to vtter confusion. Therefore it standeth vs the more in hand to take warning, that if this Lawe helde vs not in awe, wee should alwayes bee in daunger of withdrawing our selues from the seruing of God; and he should no sooner haue giuen vs his word, but it should be by and by vanish away againe, through the malice and vnthankfulness of a great number, which would soone ouerthrowe the state that is stablished at this day among vs. Marke that for one speciall point.

Secondly let vs marke, howe it is not said that all ydolaters in generall should be punished: but onely such ydolaters as liue in some Church of God where order is set alee, and where Religion is certainly stablished, and things are sufficiently knowne. For then, if any man do wilfully playe the naughtipacke, and forsake the pure seruing of God, and defile himselfe with ydolatrie and superstition: that person deserueth death. Besides this, let vs marke well, that (as I saide heretofore) if wee bee not punished before men, we must early or late come to account before God: and there we shall finde that we haue deserued, not onely to be stoned, but also to be vtterly banished from the euerlasting saluation. And why? Because we were baptised in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ, euen before we knew any thing at all. True it is that wee haue bene mistaught: but that excuseth not our disobedience, but that wee our selues to the vttermost of our power, haue falsified our baptism: for wee haue bene corrupted with ydolatrie. So then, our Lorde might with good right thrust vs quite out of his kingdom, and hee could doe it well ynough: neuertheless wee see howe he hath gathered vs home to him. Nowe therefore let vs bethinke vs of the state wherein we haue bene: & being ashamed of our selues, let vs craue pardon at Gods hand. And as I haue saide afore, let vs not be ashamed to confesse our selues to bee wretched offenders, that God may vse no violence against vs, nor enter into the rigour of his iudgement towards vs. And that is the cause why it is layde in Ezechiel, Thou shalt remember thine owne wayes, and be ashamed of them. For there God speaketh of the repentance of such as had bene deceived for a time by ydolatrie: declaring that when they were brought againe into the right way of saluation, they ought to be verie mindfull of the euill which they had committed, yea they ought to thinke vpon it with shame and confusion. That is the thing which wee haue to beare in minde. So that although God drawe not his sword, to punish our bodies: yet faile we not to be guiltie and damnable before God. Neuertheless, we must vnderstand that hee will alwayes haue pitie vpon vs, if wee prevent his iudgement, & condemne our selues aforehand, acknowledging our selues to be worthy to sinke for the ydolatrie and superstition which we haue followed, but that God haue pitie vpon vs. But (as I saide) we haue wherewith to comfort vs, because we knowe y he is readie to receiue vs to mercie, when we acknowledge our sinnes, and repaire to him after the foresaid manner. That is a thing which we haue to mark further, where it is said that if y thing be reported, men must inquire of it.

Now he addeth, that the partie which hath done the misdeede, shall be commed out as the gasses: and why so? For (saith Moses) hee hath committed abhominacion before the Lorde, whether it be man or woman as hee had saide afore. For it is such a sinne as is wicked and grievous in the eyes of the Lord. Wherin he doth vs to vnderstand, that we must not iudge after our own imagination, whether that deede be worthy of death or no. For it is a thing which beguileth many men, & maketh them to strue against God and to blaspHEME his Law: that they will needs giue sentence of them selues according to their owne opinion. But contrariwise our Lord bringeth vs backe here to his will. It is euill in my sight (saith he) it displeaseth me; I abhorre it. And hee telleth vs moreover, that we must rest vpon his word, saying: I haue commanded it. Hereby therefore let vs take warning that wee iudge not at all aduenture & with diuinish boldnesse as these galants do nowadays, which would not haue religiō to come in iudgement for the punishing of blasphemie and such other like things which are committed against y honor of God. To be short, they would not haue the Magistrates to sit in iudgement vpon any fault committed against y first table. If any fault be committed against men, as robbery, ryot, murder, or aduowtry; they be contented that y shall be punished, but if Gods name be blasphemed; if any abhominacion be committed to the putting away of al feare of god; if heresies spring vp to y trouble of the Church, and to the peruertering of all order: they would haue that to be suffered & excused. And what leadeth them thereto, but the saide hellish pride, that when a thing misliketh not them, they thinke y God should yeeld to their lyking? But therein appeareth their ouerweening matched wth vngodlines of making none account of God, forasmuch as they can finde in their hearts that his maiestie should be so highly esteemed at all allayes, Howbeit, let vs for our part marke what is set down here, namely that if any cull displeas the eyes of the Lord, it is not to be borne withall: neither must wee in that case leane to our owne wisdome, as if wee woulde say; O, I will thewe my verdit of it. No, no, we must thinke it ynough that God holdeth it for abomination, and that hee cannot away with any such thing.

Furthermore he expressely fendeth vs backe to his word, to the intent wee should fee it proued to our faces, that they which are such ydolaters ought not to bee excused: for they make warre against God. And is the crime of rebellion a veniall sinne? Is it a fault that may be pardoned, without making any countenance of doing anything to it? Is a man doe of wilfull malice rebell against his father or his mother, his master or his superior: it shalbe throughly weyed, and continually aggravated to double & treble the fault. And shall a man be so rebellious against God as to defie him, and to doe quite contrarie to his will and intent: and shoulde we still cocker and flatter them that haue so grievously offended? We see that our Lord speaketh but onely to such as haue bin duely taught his wil aforehand. For he sayde not to the heathen, or the vnbelleeuers, I haue commanded you this, or I haue forbidden you that. No. And therefore this lawe must concerne a people that hath receiued Religion afore, and among whome some certaine rule is set downe and established. Nowe then, when God hath once commaunded one thing and forbidden another, and hath tolde vs that his will is so: wh<sup>at</sup> it remaineth more for vs, but to frame our selues thereafter? And as for those that refuse his yoke, can they say it is through ignorance, and through some fonde deuotion? Indeede it may well bee so: but yet there lyeth another crime throwed vnderneath, namely the contempt of Gods worde; yea there lurketh secrete malice, hypocrisie, and pride: and all these (saye I) are mingled together. Therefore must all excuses cease, and we must acknowledge that all such as haue bene duely trained in the worde of God, are lesse excusable than the ignorant.

And this is not to be applyed alonely to temporall Iustice: but forasmuch as it is God that speaketh, let vs marke that accordingly as wee haue proceeded in his doctrine, and ha shewed his will vnto vs; our sinne is the greater if we followe not whatsoeuer he commaundeth vs. To this point must we come: it is God that hath spoken vnto mee, he hath granted mee the grace to knowe howe hee will haue me to walke, and therefore seeing that hee inlighteneth mee, I must not stumble, I must not play the blinkarde nor the blinde busiarde: but I must take heede to the obeying of his doctrine. If we doe not so; we see that this foresaide punishment belongeth vnto vs: and if wee be not chastised by the hand of man; it is readie for vs from aboue. For God can well skill to vpbraide vs with the fauour that he hath shewed vs, in that hee hath vouchsafed to teach vs his will. Insumch that although the poore ignorant soules were halfe to be excused; yet so it is that on our behalfe the crime is out of all square, when wee set our selues after that fashion against Gods will which is knowen vnto vs. Thus yee see what we haue to remember vpon this place, where it is expressly faide; that God hath not commaunded those things. Also let vs learne generally to iudge of Gods will according to his teaching of vs. For oftentimes we will needs lessen mens faults, or aggravate them; and yet in the meane while we looke not at the thing that is tolde vs. Therefore let vs beare in minde, that Gods will is contained in y<sup>e</sup> holy scripture, and y<sup>e</sup> that is the place where we must seeke it. & when we see that God speaketh for so, let vs hold vs to it without any gainfaying.

Nowe Moses addeth, that the hande of the first witness shall be first against the partie that is to be s<sup>h</sup>oned, and then the hands of al the people. Wherein he ment to shewe, that witness must not be borne, but with feare. But nowadayes, many men make no great conscience to giue euidence at all auenture against their neighbours, because they be not put to the executing of the sentence. Here vpon one goes and with his false tongue doeth wounde some man that is but halfe guiltie, or peradventure guiltlesse altogether. And he bears himselfe in hand, that a iob with his beake is not so great a matter; by reason whereof he passeth not at all to speake against all truth. Yee see then the verie cause why there is so much libertie of forswearing nowadayes; is, that such as giue euidence against their neighbours, are not put to the executing of the Iudges sentence. But it was Gods will that their shoulde bee another order among the people of Israel; namely that hee which gaue the euidence, shoulde cast the first stone at the partie, as who shoulde say; it is thou that puttest this man to death. By means whereof folke were restrained from bearing witness against any man, vnlesse the matter were true and certaine. For he that had giuen the euidence, saue himselfe dubble guiltie both of tongue and hand, in murdering an innocent if hee had not deposed the truth. Wee see then howe it was not without caute, that God commaunded this Ceremonie; namely that the witnesses should bee the first in stoning the parties that were condemned to death by y<sup>e</sup> Iudges. And hereby they were all done to vnderstande, that no offender was put to death, but by the witness of such as had proued his offence by their owne knowledge.

Neuertheless God willed also that the hands of al the people should ioyne with them, to shew that all of vs must bee furtherers of the maintenance of his seruice, and of the pure Religion. If any trespass haue bene committed between man and man, it shalbe pursued by such as haue taken the hurt or losse, or by such as haue to do therewith, or else some common solicitor shal haue the prosecuting of it for them all. But when Gods honour is defaced, then ought euery man to bestirre himselfe : and it is a singular fauour that God sheweth vnto vs , when hee imploerth vs in so honorable a thing, as the maintenance of his maiestie, to be as his Attourneys in that behalfe . For what are we ? Now if God doe vs the honour to declare vnto vs, that he wil haue his honour maintained by vs and by our hands : should we be negligent in that case ? So then wee see nowe what was Gods meaning, in commanding all the people to helpe to stone the ydolaters . For thereby it is done vs to vnderstande , that wee ought to haue a care to maintaine Gods seruice purely among vs ; and that euery man must be earnest and zealous in this behalfe, that ( as much as in vs lyeth ) wee suffer not religion to bee had in skorne or to bee peruerted : But that if wee beare good will to the common weale, when all things are well ordered , and that wee loue to haue equite and vprightnesse among vs : there is much more reason that we should bee verie chare of the worshipping of God purely , that men turne not away from his worde , ne wander away wilfully from the Religion that hee hath stablished. For although that wee nowadayes , bee not bounde of any necessitie to the keeping of this Lawe, as in respect of the Ceremonie : yet doeth the substance thereof abide with vs . Euerie of vs is not to stone ydolaters : but yet our Lorde doeth vs to vnderstande, that we must at leastwise haue so great regarde of his honor, that ( so farre as lyeth in vs ) wee suffer not his name to bee scorned, and his religion troden downe : but that euerie of vs doe set our selues there against, and make himselfe an aduersarie partie in that behalfe . That is the thing which wee haue to note . And so , although the Ceremonie of the Lawe be not such amongst vs : yet doeth the substance thereof stande in force still, and wee ought to obserue it .

And for the same cause also it is added expressly, that they must roote out the euill from among them. Whereby he doth vs to wit, that the suffering of ydolatrie and superstition, is a canker-worme and corruption that infecteth all things. And as I saide afore, if men had bene well bridled at the beginning, surely they had neuer come to such Apostasie ; that is to say, they had neuer withdrawn themselves after that fashion from the obedience of God . For what else is Poperie , but a corruption which hath drawn all men from the obeying of God, so as all became backsliders, all haue gone astray, and all haue broken the promise of their baptism ? And whereof came this , but of mens nourishing of the euill by their winking at it and their concealing of it, vntil the infection was so spread abroad, that both great and small were poysoned therewith ? Nowe then , if wee wil holde ourselues in the pure obedience of God, let vs doe our indouour that the mischief may be rooted out from among vs, specially being a mischief that bringeth so great an infection with it : For it is not possible for vs to scape infection, if it abide among vs . And for the same cause the Apostle plucke vp the wicked weeds, before they bee full growen : for it wil amafe vs when they shal pick out our eyes ; and yet there is no remedie but it must be so , if we suffer them to growe any long time . Therefore as soone as we see any euill sprout out, we must take it away as much as we can, that we may bee quite and cleane rid of it . Yea and although one man could not be intyced to wickednesse by the example of another ; yet is Gods wrath kindled and increased still among vs, whē the euill abideth so vnpunished. And therefore S. Paul speaking of the incest that was suffered among the Corinthians, saith vnto them ; Put away the euill from among you . As if he had said, yee wretched men, the crime that is among you prouoketh Gods vengeance against your whole Nation, if it bee so suffered : and therefore if yee intende to be exempted from Gods wrath, let not that euill bee suffered or nourished any longer . And this is a sufficient prooffe of that which I haue toucht ; namely that God in commanding al y people to put to their hande to the stoning of ydolaters, sheweth vs that the thing concerneth vs all ; and that for as much as he maketh vs his attourneys, it is good reason that euery of vs should indouour to discharge himselfe of his duety . And thereunto doth God himselfe exhort vs , in that hee sheweth vs that the suffering of such euill, is an infection & deadly plague, and that our bearing with the things that are cleane contrarie to his maiestie, is a prouoking of his wrath against vs .

Now remaineth, that wee come to this Lawe that a man shall die at the mouth of two or three witnesses, but not vpon the euidence of any one witness alone. This Law serueth for order of government. And indeede the very Heathen were taught by nature to follow this order, so as they could well say it was requisite that a matter should be proued by a cuple of witnesses . And this was printed in their mindes, because our Lordes will was to holde mankind continually in some kinde of vprightnesse, and that discretion should be vsed. But we haue this doctrine the better confirmed, in that God speaketh it with his owne mouth & saith , that a man shall die at the mouth of two or three witnesses, and not vpon the report of any one . Then let vs beare in minde, that things ought not to be iudged at al aduerture without lawfull prooffe. Neuerthelesse, it may bee that euen the Iudge himselfe may sometimes be a witness in a matter : and yet notwithstanding hee must iudge contrarie to that he knoweth. If a mā say, he doth amisse : Nay, he could doe no otherwise, and hee doeth well . For if I be a Iudge, and no bodie but my selfe doth knowe a man to be faulty, so as I cā haue no witness of his doings : I must let him alone, because I cā not remedie it, & he must be quit by my sentence. And this dealing of mine is no prejudice to my conscience : for I cōdemn him before god as he deserueth ; but yet I let his crime alone thl concealed, vntil God discover it and bring it to light . Nowe then let vs marke that for ciuill orders sake, wee must alwayes obserue this rule, that we iudge not but vpon good prooffe, so as the matter be known

Hereupon it is saide that there must bee two or three witnesses. But sometimes men to couer their faultes and misdeedes, will needes require an infinite number of proofes, which thing was to be seene in those lustie blouds, which woulde needes be wiser than God, and had inuented a very strange lawe here in this cite of Geneva, which was that they would not be contented w two witnesses, vnlesse there were a Proctor besides. Thus went they about to controll Gods law, and all vprightnes of nature, and the thing which hath hitherto bin maintained of y whole world. And what was the cause thereof, but that they would fame haue committed al manner of lewdnes, & blear'd out their rögues against god, and yet there might neuer haue been any sufficient witness to haue conuicted them thereof? For had there come two witnesses, yea, three or foure, yet had mens eyes beene blear'd, and all that had beene nothing. Therefore let vs note, y this law was let downe, to make vs hold y meane betweene the two extremities.

The first extremity is, to iudge of a mater before it be thronghly proued, for so to do is euil, & in so doing men are too hastie. Therefore is it requisite, that there should be a two or three witness of it. And whē there be a two or three witnesses, it is not for men to reply, as who should say it were meeke that fouer or fūe witnesses should be sought for, & that the matter were neuer wel proued, except there bee a spoketman with the witnesses. And that is a flat mocking of God. Let vs then beare in minde, that seeing our Lord hath told vs, that the offender shall dye at the mouth of two or three witnesses; it is to bee supposed that y knowledge of the matter ought to suffice vs, so as there ought to be no wrangling against it, but that iustice ought to proceede to execution. And we see how needefull this admonition is for vs. For men would euer shrinke back if it were possible: & if there bee any apparant colour to hyde their misdeedes; they beare themselves in hand that their hands are cleane wath of them. But here our Lorde summoneth vs, saying that if there bee two witnesses, y iudge must not shrinke backe. for if he do, he is confederate & companion with the wicked, vnlesse he put to his hand to the redresse of their wickednesse. Thus we see nowe, that in saying that two or three witnesses are sufficient, for the conuicting of a man to haue deserued death: our Lord ment to cut off occasion of all shifts that men deuise to cloake their misdeedes withall.

Now furthermore, let vs apply this doctrine to our selues also: & let vs vnderstand that seeing God hath set such order in temporal iustice; hee will keepe it towards vs. But are we not sufficiently conuicted, that we haue beene estranged from the worde of God? First euery of vs hath his own conscience to reprove him: and what a number of witnesses doeth that counteuaile? The Heathen haue saide, that it is as good as a thousand. Then if a man be condemned in himselfe, what shall it boote him to iustifie himselfe, seeing that his sinne gnaweth him and preferreth indreiments continually against him? For there is no man (howe blockish so euer he bee) whose owne conscience doeth not continually sting him. Therefore let vs learne to plead guiltie before God, seeing he stirreth vs therto inwardly & sheweth vs our faultes. Besides this, the prophets and Apostles & the verie sonne of God himselfe, are faithfull witnesses of it, as the prophet Esay nameth him. Seeing we haue them to conuict vs; what should we henceforth seeke for startingholes? What wil that boote vs? And we haue not the holy scripture onely; but we haue also the thicke clowde (as the Apostle teareth them in the Epistle to the Hebrewes) of all the faithful & of all the holy martyrs which euer suffered for the name of God: & shall not al those be sufficient witnesses to condemne vs before y iudgement seat of our Lord Iesus Christ? Nowe if we make no account to benefite our selues, by the example which they haue giuen vs: but do wilfully forsake the doctrine after we haue knowne it; what condemnation will we deserue? And that is the verie cause why S. Paul alleageth this text to the Corinthians, that iudgement standeth vpon the mouth of two or three witnesses. And whereof speaketh he there? Of his own Epistle & of his owne coming; for hee sayth y he will come to the Corinthians. Not that I haue not written vnto you sufficiently already, sayeth he; or that I haue not warned you often ynough heretofore, and yet you continue stubborn and hardhearted still. But thinke you that ye shall winne any thing thereby at Gods hand? Know ye (saith he) that iudgement shall be taken at the mouth of two or three witnesses. Sith it is so, let vs bethinke our selues; and forasmuch as we see that God hath beene so gracious to vs, to giue vs so many prophets after him, & that Iesus Christ himselfe & his Apostles haue witness'd vnto vs the truth of the Gospel: let them not be witnesses against vs to our condemnation, but rather let them be witnesses of our faith; and let vs be so confirmed in the grace of y holy ghost by our Lord Iesus Christ, as we may continually keepe on our course, and followe the vocation wherewith our Lord hath put vs & called vs.

And now let vs fall downe before the maiestic of our good God with acknowledgement of our finnes, praying him to make vs seele them better; that thereby wee may bee the more inflamed to serue him and wooe slippie him; not onely as in respect of the ceremonie, but also by applying all our whole life to his obedience; and by giuing of our selues wholly to the soundnes which he sheweth vs by his holy word: And that we may endeavour to bring other men to the same, & not suffer those to stray which are already in the right way, but with one common accord hold them together in the sheepefold which are come into it already, and drawe others thither by our good life & conuersation, preventing all causes of offence & disorder, whereby the true religion might bee peruerted. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people, and Nations of the earth, &c.

On Tewſday the xix. of Nouember. 1555.

The Ciiij Sermon, which is the third vpon the ſeuenteenth Chapter.

8 If a thing be too hard for thee to iudge betweene 'bloud and bloud, betweene cauſe & cauſe, betweene wound & wound, & there be wordes of ſtrife within thy gates: then ſhalt thou riſe and get thee vp to the place which the Lorde thy God ſhall haue choſen:

9 And go to the Priests & Leuites, & to the Iudge which ſhalbe in thoſe days, & aſke; and they ſhall ſhewe thee the ſentence of iudgement.

10 And according to the content of the ſentence which ſhalbe declared vnto thee by thoſe of the place which the Lord ſhal haue choſen, ſo ſhalt thou doe: and thou ſhalt take heede to do according to all that they informe thee.

11 According to the ſentence of the law which they teach thee, & according to the right which they tell thee, ſhalt thou do. Thou ſhalt not turne aſide from the thing which they ſhewe thee, neither to the right hand nor to the left.

12 As for the man which through preſumptuouſnes will not obey the high prieſt which is there to miniſter before the Lorde thy God, or the Iudge: that man ſhall dye, and thou ſhalt put away euil from Iſrael, 13 That all the people may heare and be afraid, & do no more preſumptuouſly.

HEre is the order ſhewed vs how to end matters in lawe. Forasmuch as when men are at controuerſie, we ſee they be ſo wiſul & hardharted, y<sup>e</sup> by their good willes they woulde neuer come to any end: God declareth y<sup>e</sup> it was his wil there ſhould be ſome ſoueraigne court of iuſtice among his people, againſt the ſentence wherof there ſhould lye no appeale. True it is y<sup>e</sup> all people are taught of n<sup>e</sup> ture to do ſo. For if it were lawfull to make continuall appeales: mens frowardnes is ſuch (as I haue ſaid afore,) y<sup>e</sup> their controuerſies woulde neuer come to any end. Therefore is it requiſite y<sup>e</sup> there ſhould be ſome certaine ſtay: & that is it which our Lord hath declared in this text. Againe, as touching worldly gouernement, this order is greatly auailable, forasmuch as the thing which nature followeth through y<sup>e</sup> whole world, is ratified by the mouth of God: & that is a thing which ought to be well marked. For ſith we ſee y<sup>e</sup> God hath humbled himſelfe ſo much as to ſhewe vs the order of ſeuil gouernment; we muſt conclud: y<sup>e</sup> he alloweth of it. For otherwiſe he woulde nor meddle with it: & it were a diſhonoring of his maiſtie. Do we then ſee y<sup>e</sup> our Lorde in his lawe hath treated of y<sup>e</sup> order which wee ought to obſerue among our ſelues? Let vs aſſure our ſelues hereby, that it is a thing which hee well liketh. Marke that for one point.

Againe, ſith we ſee after what faſhion he will haue vs to behaue our ſelues, & hath ſet y<sup>e</sup> ſame down particularly: it is yet a greater confirmation. And as for Iudges which are ſet in authority & preheminence: let them vnderſtand that their doings are an acceptable ſacrifice to God, becauſe he beareth record thereof in his law, and y<sup>e</sup> the people alſo do conform theſelues ſo much the more willingly thereunto. Wherefore wee muſt vnderſtand y<sup>e</sup> the peruerting thereof were a rebelling againſt God, & a deſpiſing of him. Thus we ſee now how needfull a doctrine it is for vs, & how greatly to our edifying, y<sup>e</sup> our lord hath declared, y<sup>e</sup> there ſhould be one chiefe court of Iuſtice for men to reſt vpon, that they might not be in continual doubt.

Neuertheleſſe we muſt note y<sup>e</sup> our Lord woulde not admit appeales in all caſes indifferently among his people. For he ſaith, If there happen any hard caſe, wherof the iudgement is doubtful, & not eaſie to be determined, becauſe the Iudges (namely y<sup>e</sup> inferior Iudges of euery citie) be graueled in it. Wherefore ſets he down this? Becauſe it had bin too great a toyle for the people to haue bin driuen to repaire to Ieruſalem for euery matter of ſixpence, or I wote not what ſuch like. Wee ſee (as I haue ſayde afore) howe there are ſome vnſatiable men, and ſuch as could alwayes be contented to ſiudge themſelues ſo they may ſcauld others. Nay ye ſhal ſee ſome ſo ſpitefull, y<sup>e</sup> though they ſhould eate their owne fingers, yet they would go forewarde with their ſutes in Law, and whē they had waſted away their own ſubſtance, they woulde euen hazard their liues alſo, to procure trouble to their aductaries. Seeing then that it is manifeſt that ſuch folk are caried away with rage, or at leaſtwiſe with deſire of reuenge: it is good to bridle them. And that is the cauſe why God woulde not haue all caſes to come to Ieruſalem. For he had ſet a good order, namely that there ſhoulde be iuſtice in euery Citie, yea and men of vnderſtanding, to giue iudgement of ſuch matters as were to come to triall before them. Provided alwayes that the cauſe were not harde and doubtful.

So then let vs marke, how it was Gods wil that the controuersies should be ended with speede, without troubling of the parties too much. And seeing that his intent was such, wee ought to frame our selues thereto as much as is possible for vs. And therefore if men intend to stablish a good order of gouernement, and such as God alloweth: let them followe this rule, that quarels be not mainteyned betweene man and man; but that if there be any controuersie they may soone be set at one againe, so as the sure in Law be not prolonged, nor men posted ouer from one to another; but that things may be so ordered, as the parties may not be suffered to followe still their owne inordinate wils. True it is that this vice cannot be so corrected, but that some remnant of it will abide still. Yet notwithstanding wee must goe as neere the marke as we possibly can, seeing that our Lord directeth vs therunto.

Againe, if a man intend to provide for the pacifying of quarels among men, so as might may not overcome right: yee see that ordinary Iustice cannot be forborne. For inasmuch as God had chosen the people of Israel: it is certain that he provided the best meane that could be deuised for the mainteyning of them in peace and concord. And in verie deede they were all of one lineage, descended of the race of Abraham: and therefore inasmuch as there was such a brotherhoode among them; it ought to haue bene the easier to haue continued them in quietnes. On the other side they seeing themselves separated from the rest of the world, and being there gathered together into one bodie in the name of God: ought to haue borne one y<sup>e</sup> another in reuerence of that holy bond. Yet notwithstanding for their further preservation, God ordeyned this meane that there should be Iudges in euery Citie. Then let vs conclude, that as long as men liue here beneath, they cannot forbear Magistrates, by reason of their infirmities. Truth it is that euery man ought to carie the Lawe in his heart, and euery man ought to doe all men right of their owne accord; but we be blind and our affections cary vs away; and besides that, wee subdue not our vnderstanding, neither do we holde our lusts captiues as we ought to doe. Therefore we haue neede of a bridle for them. And that is my meaning, in laying y<sup>e</sup> wee ought to loue the state of ciuil gouernement, and to reuerence it; namely because it is a necessarie mean to maintain mankind in this world, and wout it all things would go to horrible confusion; inso much y<sup>e</sup> wee should not only become as Dogs & Cats; but also be worse than wilde beasts. Greatly therefore ought we to bewaile our state, seeing y<sup>e</sup> (as I haue shewed afore) wee which beare the Image of God cannot vse our freedom to behaue our selues according to reason and equite. Yet notwithstanding, seeing we be so sore corrupted, we must vnderstand y<sup>e</sup> Gods remedying of our diseases after that fashion, is a point of his singular goodnes towards vs. But howsoever y<sup>e</sup> case stand, if we wil eschewe y<sup>e</sup> men scratch not out one another: eies, ne ear nor vp one another: let vs follow y<sup>e</sup> rule which our lord sheweth vs here, name ly y<sup>e</sup> there be Iustice in euery Citie & in euery other place, and y<sup>e</sup> such as beare y<sup>e</sup> sword do watch so as no man oppresse another, no man work any outrage or iniurie, nor no man presume further than is lawfull. Marke that for one point.

Now let vs come to that which is set downe here concerning Appeals. If there rise any difficulte & doubtful case, betweene cause and cause, wound and wound, or blood and blood. As if he should say, if there be any cause either criminal or ciuile whereof there is such doubt, and men cannot decide it by giuing definitiue sentence on it: let the resort to the high court. We see then that Appeals are ordered as well for matters of life & death, as for matters of trespassse. And now let vs see whether God would haue men to appeale. To Ierusalem. True it is that he doth not as yet name the place, because it was not appointed at y<sup>e</sup> time. But he sayth, Thou shalt go vp. And Moses speaking after that manner, was after a sort in way of prophesie, because the exaltation of Ierusalem was higher than all the rest of Iurie. But vntill the Ark was set there, it behoued them to resort to the place where that was. Againe, here is no speaking of the king. For the time was not yet come that God would set vp a kingdome among that people: y<sup>e</sup> was to be stablished in the person of Dauid. Yet notwithstanding there were alwaies Iudges, accordingly as wee see how Iosua succeeded Moses, and consequently the rest of the Iudges vnto Samuel, at which time y<sup>e</sup> people would needes change their state. Therefore vnto Samuels time, there was this order among them, that God raised vp certaine Iudges in Israel, which represented y<sup>e</sup> state of a king vntill the kingdom was stablished. That is y<sup>e</sup> thing which Moses meant in this sentence, when he saide, y<sup>e</sup> men should resort to the Iudge which should be at that time in Israel.

Also it was his will that the high Priest with his fellow Priests the Leuites, should haue authoritie to giue sentence of Iudgement. And why? He addeth; Because they could giue sentence according to the Lawe of God. And finally, vpon that sentence of theirs hee will haue men to rest: and that if any man disobeyed it, he should be punished with death, that by that meane pride might be corrected in Israel. Now wee see what God intended to command concerning Appeals. There were Iudges in euery Citie: but yet there was one above them all as in the degree of a Prince. Not that it went by inheritance: but looke whomsoever God raised vp by his holy spirit, him it behoued to gouerne the people. And wee see it came so to passe afterwarde. As oft as the people fell away from God, it was to their owne confusion; and as soone as he had pitie vpon them againe, hee raised them vp Iudges newe againe, as the holy histories doe shewe vs. There were in deede some interruptions at such time as the people were worthy to be punished, inso much y<sup>e</sup> all went to haucke, they were giuen ouer vnto bondage and to the tyranny of the Infidels which were their enemies: but as soone as God vouchsafed to gather them home againe, there was a newe Iudge set vp againe.

And herein we see yet better, that it is a token of Gods presence, when we haue order of iustice among vs, so as there are men to gouerne vs which walke in the feare of God, and execute their charge faithfully: it is as much as if God came downe to vs & shewed vs his face. Contrariwise, when the order of gouernment is peruerted, it is as though God turned his backe to vs. If the magistrates be corrupted, & peruert al right & equite, or if tyrants get dominion ouer vs: let vs vnderstand that God forsaketh vs, and withdraweth himselfe from vs, & is mynded to make vs feeble his absence by such signe of his wrath: and that then wee haue good cause to moune. But if wee see the lawes flourish, & there be men that feare God, to make them to be executed, it is all one as if God made his face to shine vpon vs, and declared his loue towards vs, and that hee is minded to continue vs vnder his protection. And it serueth to make vs to loue the state of worldly gouernment the better, seeing it is such a token of the goodnesse of our God, and of his fatherly loue towards vs.

But as I layde afore, the high priest and the trybe of Lewy were appointed to be Iudges in all harde cases. It may seeme strange at the first sight, howe it cometh to passe that G O D worlde haue the priest-hood to entermeddle in ciuil gouernment. for they be two things faire differing. Wee knowe that when Aaron was ordeyned to be the high priest, Moses had the gouernment of the people. Nowe the Priest-hood went by inheritance, and so did not y<sup>e</sup> temporall gouernment. In so much that Moses left his own children as priuate persons in their owne houes without any publike authoritie, & Ioshua who was not of any kinne or alliance vnto him, was his successour. The same order continued afterwarde, in so much that God raised vp whome hee thought good, nowe one of one trybe, and nowe another of another. Notwithstanding, it behooued the Priestes to hold them selues contented with the spirituall gouernment of the Church, and they ought not to take vpon them the ciuil gouernment. Why then doth God here set them in highest degree to iudge? Vndoubtedly, it was to ordeyne a Councell for him: that was to be the chiefe Iudge, and to holde the people in the better awe, as if it had bene sayde that all Appelles should come before God. For (as I haue declared afore) men can very hardly be brought to giue their consentes, to obey a sentence that is against them. Therefore, to the ende that no man should take leaue to stande in contention, God sayeth there shall be a soueraigne Iudge, at leastwise to beare sway in Councell of hard cases, and such as are giuen in soume of iudgement. And to the intent that thinges may be iudged according to my lawe, the high priest and the order of the Lewites shall be present there. Nowe wee knowe that they were expounders of Gods lawe. For with that condition was the priest-hood giuen vnto them, namely that they should be Gods Angels and messengers as the Prophet Malachie speaketh of them. And therefore when men asked counsell at their mouthe, it was not to haue som doting dreame of mans deuce, but to haue the certeine vnderstanding of Gods lawe. That then was the cause why the chiefe authoritie of iudgement was committed to the order of the priestes with the Iudge whome God had set vp.

But before wee goe any further, let vs note that vnder pretence of this text, the Pope lifted vp his hornes, and vsurped such tyranny as wee haue seene him vse in the Church of God. For thus doeth hee reason. Seeing that the chiefe authoritie of iudgement was giuen to the Priestes, it is to be concluded that there ought to be one head ouer all the Church. Againe, for as much as the sentence of the high priest was to be helde without any gainsaying, the thinges that are determined by the Apostolike sea (as they terme it) ought likewise to be held without gainsaying, and it is a deadly and vnpardonable sinne, to incounter any thing that the Pope shall haue pronounced. But here wee haue two thinges to consider, which are offusciencie to reloue all such and so childish arguments. For first, the gouerning of the whole worlde by one man, and the gouerning of some one country or prouince by one man, are not both one. God hath made here a ciuil lawe for the country of Iewrie. And wee knowe that at that time there was but one Temple, & that it was not lawfull for them to worship God or to offer sacrifice vnto him, in euery citie. If a man had builded any altar, it had bene abominable, and that citie must haue bene razed. And Gods doing hereof, was but to hold y<sup>e</sup> people in one right vnitie of faith. The like as there was but one temple in the land of Iewry: so was there but one high priest. But must this be extended to the whole world? No, not so. There needeth many mo: for what one mortal man nowadayes is able to weld so great a charge? Againe, it were meete that there should one ten ple be builded in the mids of the worlde, y<sup>e</sup> men might come rüning to it a foure or siue thousand leagues off to worship God. And do ye not see what an absurditie that were: Therefore it were too grosse a fondnesse to conclude thus; There was but one temple & one high priest in al Iewrie, ergo there ought to be y<sup>e</sup> like throughout the whole worlde. For then ought there also some litle nooke to be made, where men might so assemble together, as they should not neede to goe past foure or siue dayes iourneyes from home: but wee see that that were vnpössible, and: moreover it were contrarie to nature. Marke that for one poynt.

And secondly let vs marke, that the Leuitical Priesthood is come to an end & quite put downe by the coming of our Lord Iesus Christ into y<sup>e</sup> world. Moreover the high priest was a figure & shadow of our Lord Iesus Christ, and therefore it were an abolishing or putting away of the truth, if men should haue a high priest to be the vniuersall head of the Church, as the Pope would make men beleue. It is saide that there was one high priest, one chiefe Iudge, yea, & one king in Israel. Now if a man wil conclude hereupon, that there ought to be one highpriest through the whole world; there must also be but one chief king: & so should all common weales be cast downe, & the order which as now is distinctly set among kingdoms, dukedomes, & free cities, should be but a confusion accursed of God. And in what taking were wee then? Nay, wee must go to the chief point of all, which is that thereby our Lorde Iesus Christ should be robbed of his right. For now that he is come, the kingdome is stablished euertlastingly in his person, & he is set ouer all the Empires and kingdomes of the worlde. Also he hath taken vpon him the euertlasting priesthood, ouer all order & gouernement of the Church. Not that there should not as now be any mo Bishops & shepherds, as the scripture speakeeth of them: but y<sup>e</sup> Iesus Christ be the only head, & the residue but as inferior members, and that the body be gouerned in such wise, as all things may be subiect to him of whome it is saide; This is my welbeloued sonne, Heare ye him. And so wee see that y<sup>e</sup> Pope is a traytour that robbeth Iesus Christ of his souerainie, by making of himself highpriest ouer the Church of God.

And by the way, if it be alledged that it is requisite there should be some meane to end quarrels and controversies that might rise for religion: the answer is, that so there be an order set, there needeth not any one man to be set ouer all the rest; but they may assemble together wth one cōmon accord, as we see hath bin done in times past. True it is that the men of olde time had a certaine order in the Church for the great Provinces, namely that there were certaine Patriarkes: but as for to haue any one head ouer the whole Church, that was neuer agreed vpon, so long as there was any purenes of the Gospel or any tolerable gouernement. But as soone as all things were confounded after a barbarous or rather brutish maner; then did the Pope lift vp his hornes. In deed he stroue long time against the bishop of Constantinople. But howsoeuer y<sup>e</sup> case stood, it fell out anon after that all things were corrupted & contounded, & men wist not any more what the gouernment of the church ment. So then let vs marke, y<sup>e</sup> if it be said, that like as it is requisite there should be some stay for the pacifying of ciuil quarrels, and for the determining of criminal cases; so it is good reason that there should be some chiefe court of prerogatiue, for the appeasing of strife & contention in doctrine: yet it followeth not that one man only ought to haue supremacie ouer the whole world: for (as I haue shewed afore) that is quite contrarie to nature. What remaineth then? That men assemble together, & that Iesus Christ beare the chiefe sway among them.

But we must wey well the things that are contained heere. It is said that y<sup>e</sup> Priest must iudge according to the law of God. Wherein it is shewed that our Lorde layeth not the bydle loose on the necke, eyther of all the priestles together, or of the Iudge which was in those dayes in state of a king; but that al of them ought to be subiect to the law; and that (as I said afore) God meant to referre the soueraigne authoritie to himselfe, so as men should receiue definitive sentence as at his mouth, & that the persons which were to giue the sentence, should be but as instruments of his holy spirite, & expounders of his lawe. Therefore let vs marke wel, that God ment not here that men should do any thing on their own heads, but that his law should beare the sway, specially in Ierusalem rather than in any other place. But now let vs see what the Pope doeth, & what all the bastardy Councels haue done whereunto he would tye vs. There is nothing amongst them but to say: that the holy Ghost gouerned them; for as for the holy scripture they did let that alone. In deed they gaue it the honorable title of Gods word; but when they ment to determine what they thought good, was it according to that which God hath declared? No; but they tooke another rule; which is, that the Church cannot erre because it is gouerned by y<sup>e</sup> holy Ghost: & that as touching the holy scripture, it leadeth vs into perfection, but we must mount vp yet higher: for if we haue not the reuelations of the holy Ghost, it is nothing: If a man holde himselfe to that which is contained in the holy scripture, it is but an vnperfect thing with them; but as for that which is determined by y<sup>e</sup> Church, that must be held inuolable, and no man must in any wise gainsay it. Again, the holy scripture, say they) is a nose of wax, which a man may wryth cuery way, & there is no certieintie in it; but whē the church hath once pronounced a thing, there is no more dout in it. After y<sup>e</sup> maner went all the rable of them to worke, so as they haue troden y<sup>e</sup> holy scripture vnder foote. Although they grant in words that it proceeded from God: yet haue they taken it to be but as an aspie, and as a cōmō doctrine: affirming that the Reuelations which haue bene giuen vnto them, are much higher doctrine. These blasphemies they haue not been ashamed to vtter, & their bookes are full of them. In somuch that they say that the holy scripture is a pliable thing (as I haue declared afore); so as if wee should sticke to that which is contained there, our sayth should neuer be certain. And therupon cuery man follows his owne fancye. Seeing they were come to such extremitie, a mā may wel perceiue y<sup>e</sup> the holy scripture bare no sway amōg the. But on y<sup>e</sup> cōtrarie part it is said, y<sup>e</sup> the highpriest must be a Iudge, not only in matters concerning the spiritual gouernment of the church, but also in ciuil cases; & that he must follow y<sup>e</sup> law though the case concern but the temporal iurisdiction. If it be so, what is to be done whē they haue to deale with y<sup>e</sup> law of God? Whē the case concerneth the saluation of mens souls, religion, & faith, which are things y<sup>e</sup> passe all the whole world: Shal men therein forsake the holy Scriptures? Shall men in those cases ouerrule matters at their own pleasure, as if they would say, This seemes good to mee, this hath y<sup>e</sup> holy Ghost reuealed vnto mee; See yee not how God is shamefully mocked in this behalfe? So then, let vs mark wel, first that our Lord ment not to giue inhiit power either to the Priests or to y<sup>e</sup> Iudges,

but  $\bar{y}$  he hath sent & referred them backe to his law,  $\bar{y}$  they might iudge according to  $\bar{y}$  same. In deede here a man might reply; that euery man might say; It is not according to Gods lawe, vnlesse the exposition  $\bar{y}$  is giuen thereof be to their own liking. And truly the heretikes are so wilful,  $\bar{y}$  they wil neuer be conuicted. Although the holy scripture be alledged vnto them, & that the texts be set downe neuer so cleare & infallible; yet wil they not cease to contend stil, euen whe their own consciences condemn them, as saith S. Paul. Al this is true; yet null not they which are in autoritie abuse it, as though it were lawfull for them to say; This is  $\bar{y}$  law, let it be followed. Neuer thelesse, the Pope & al his clergie haue left  $\bar{y}$  holy scripture; & what should we do then but repare to this rule;  $\bar{y}$  seeing God woulde haue the temporal iurisdiction to be governed by his word, there is much more reason  $\bar{y}$  the Church should not be otherwise governed than by  $\bar{y}$  holy scripture. Wherefoer temporal Iudges are, they be lawmakers, neither haue they libertie to make new lawes for the spirituall gouernement of the Church. To be short, men must hold their peace, all mouthes must be stopped, men must content themselues with that which is set down by Moses, by the Prophets, & by the Apostles, & thereupon must men rest altogether. Seeing it is so  $\bar{y}$  God hath not authorized men to bee lawmakers as in respect of the spirituall gouernement of the church; let vs conclude  $\bar{y}$  it is not lawfull for vs to turne away from the law & from  $\bar{y}$  holy scripture; but  $\bar{y}$  we must hold vs to it. And so yee see what we haue to marke vpon this text, where it is said,  $\bar{y}$  the Priests & the Iudge for  $\bar{y}$  time being shall iudge according to the law of God.

And in very deede I haue declared a little already, that we ought to receiue Iesus Christ, as well for our Iudge as for our highpriest. For Iesus Christ hath a double office; in somuch  $\bar{y}$  besides that he is our chiefe prophet of whom we ought to hold al our doctrine & to fetch all truth; he is also our soueraigne king, & highpriest. Howbeit forasmuch as they represented his person, being as it were his shadowes & figures; it behoued the to follow this law. As now there are no mo such shadowes & figures (as I haide heretofore) because the sonne of God is come into the worlde,  $\bar{y}$  old priesthood is passed away, & the old kingdom is abolished. Therefore let vs be contented to haue an interior order,  $\bar{y}$  is to wit, that ciuil gouernement be so maintained as Gods law do alwayes beare chiefe stroke, & as all men in the mean while haue a regard what is lawfull for the. When kings, & princes, & magistrates are to make lawes, let them vnderstand that if they make them of their own head, it is a marring & confounding of all things. For God saith, it is by me that magistrates discern what is good and expedient. Therefore let them call vpon the spirit of God, that he may giue them wisdom & discretion to make good & conuenient lawes. And let them that sit in the seat of Iustice, referre the felus to God, and seeke to be ruled by his holy sprite. Let them that haue the spirituall iurisdiction knowe, that it is not lawfull for them to meddle any further than with the preaching of Gods worde, and to speake as out of his mouth, and to deliuer the doctrine faithfully which is contained in the law and  $\bar{y}$  Gospele, let them holde themselues within those boundes, and take no further vpon them. This yee see in effect howe wee ought to put this doctrine in vte.

And it is said expressly, That men shall stand to the sentence which is giuen by the Iudges and Priests; and that the party which disobeyeth it, shall dy the death because of his pryde. Hereupon the Pope would needs grounde, that it is not lawfull in any wise to stand against the things that haue bin determined by the Councils. What? Beholde, the Pope hath sit as cheefe of the Council, and the Bishops and prelates haue consented thereunto, and shall a man come and set himselfe against it, and say  $\bar{y}$  it was il decreed. O that were an intolerable crime in deed, God wilnot haue such pride to be borne withall in his people. This (as I haue sayd afore) may easily be ouerthrowen, as thus: that forasmuch as this text treateth of matters of lawe, it treateth not of doctrine. For God hath deliuered his lawe, and hath said that men must not turne aside neither to the right hand nor to  $\bar{y}$  left. In so much that whe Moses gaue instructions vnto Iosua, he said to him, thou shalt follow whatsoeuer is contained in  $\bar{y}$  law, & not swarue aside one way nor other. Behold, Iosua is ordeined to be the cheefe Iudge, to hold the people in good order, he is their head, and representeth our Lord Iesus Christ: yet for al  $\bar{y}$  he saith not to him, Thou shalt doe whatsoeuer thy mind giueth thee to do, & whatsoeuer is good & right to thine own seeming; but thou shalt do as  $\bar{y}$  meane of all the people, submitting thy selfe to the doctrine which is giuen thee for the guiding of the Church. So then, as touching Gods seruice, and religion, wee see howe the lawe hath euer borne the swaye, and it behoued all men to haue their ears open and redie to receiue whatsoeuer is set forth there, and that no man might presume to stand against it, or to ouerrule it, for making of the people to murmure. Now therefore forasmuch as here is no speech concerning any other things than of matter in lawe, how they ought to be ended, and of the pacifying of quarrels which else would be endlesse betwene man and man; the solution is very easie: namely that if a man stande against a definitive sentence, his meaning is to peruert all order, and he is an enemy to mankind, and woofe than a theefe. He that robbeth or murdereth, shall be punished, and yet his breaking of the lawe, is but in some one point: but as for him that breaketh  $\bar{y}$  ciuil order, he openeth the gap to theft, to murder, and to all confusion: his meaning is that there should be no more modestie nor humanity among men. Therefore ought he to be taken as an enemy to all goodnes; and (according to Saint Pauls saying) they that would set such disorder among men, let not themselues against creatures, but do make warre against the liuing GOD, because all soueraigntie is of him. Nowe then, it is not to be marueiled that that it should be sayde, that the partie which disobeyed the sentence of the prerogatiue court, should be cutt off from among the Israelites.

And by this sentence wee be put in minde of that which hath bene spoken before : namely  $\dot{y}$  our Lord maketh so great account of the earthly policie, that he will haue it mainteined yea euen with mens liues . Precious is mans bloude vnto him; for men are shaped after his image : but yet doeth he not so much beare with a man, but that he will haue him stoned, & put to death, if he be disobedient to ciuill order . Therefore we can not by any comparison iudge how precious and holy a thing in Gods sight the authority is which he hath giuen to Iudges & Magistrates . For if any man step vp against it, he shall die for it . And why? Is a mans life no more worth than so? (for so will some men alleadge .) Yes : and make ye nothing of the image of God which shineth forth much more in Magistrates, because God hath printed his marke in them? Againe, what is the life of one man in comparison of the liues of a hundred thousand? For the whole nation perisheth without remedy, where this order is not helde, that there be Magistrates, and that men yeelde obedience vnto them . For the men that can not finde in their heartes to be gouerned, would become deuals, if there were no order of gouernement, that they might be helde in awe by their superiours: all would go to hauocke . So then it is not without cause  $\dot{y}$  God hath ordeined  $\dot{y}$  the party should  $\dot{y}$  which is disobedient to the order of Law . And therefore so much  $\dot{y}$  more ought we to yeelde to  $\dot{y}$  which is tolde vs here, & to humble ourselues in that behalfe, and to bow downe our neckes willingly & obediently to such as hold the sword of Iustice . For in so doing, we offer vnto God such sacrifice as is acceptable to him, & he receiuech it as we see in this text . And if we disobey the men who he hath set in  $\dot{y}$  degree; we be his enemies and make warre against him, (as I sayd afore) and wee shall haue too mightie an aduersarie for vs to overcome .

And he speaketh purposely of pride . For it is vnpossible that a man should be so stubborn as to withstande the publicke magistrate, & to overthrowe the order of the common weale, if he be not caried away with pride & diuclish ouerweening . So then, will we amend this rebelliousnes against the Iudges and Magistrates? Let every of vs frame him selfe to a good lowliness . For if we be not puffd vp with pride, it is certain that all men will keepe on his course, and things will be quiet among vs . What is the cause then that order is so peruerted? It is for that men can not finde in their hearts to yeelde so farre vnto reason as to say, let  $\dot{y}$  Lawes occurre vs . And consequently let such as are appointed for Magistrates looke that they mainteine their state, & do their indour to beate downe such pride; and let all men submit themselues meekely to the order which God hath appointed . And Moses hath noted this thing, of purpose to shew that Gods vsing of such feueritie & rigor against  $\dot{y}$  disobedient, is not without cause . For in  $\dot{y}$  case, we must not simply looke vpon their disobedience; but proceed yet higher, namely  $\dot{y}$  they be led with an ouerweening of themselves,  $\dot{y}$  they be ful of pride & spitefulness, and  $\dot{y}$  if there were any meekenes in the, it would be discerned by their submitting of themselves to  $\dot{y}$  hand of God . But forasmuch as they be ful of pride & intollerable stoutelincesse, so as they will not stoop either to God or man, but reiect al  $\dot{y}$  cuer is: it is not to be wondred at, though God command such persons to be put to death .

And he sayth expressly; thou shalt rid away euill frō Israel . For (as was touched yesterday) when wickednes is suffred, it is a marring of al things & a generall infection followeth vpon it . At the first, the greatesse of the mischiefe is not perceiued that cometh of the pardoning of a sinne . Well, it passeth for once . Yea, it seemeth but for once . But it turneth to the infecting of all afterwarde, because that  $\dot{y}$  means the euill was fostered still, and men step not to the redressing of it in time: & so God is faine to punish our negligence . Now then let vs marke well,  $\dot{y}$  for this cause Moses warneth vs heere,  $\dot{y}$  if we suffer naughtnes to settle, it will marre & infect all  $\dot{y}$  is, before it can be redressed: and that it is too late to go about it, when men haue carried till the infectiō hath gotten the vpper hande .

Also he speaketh of the example saying; that others bearing: therof shall be afraid: and by that means, pride shall be corrected . First of all we see hereby,  $\dot{y}$  pride is an odious vice before God, seeing he vseth so violent remedy  $\dot{y}$  he will haue the party to answer it with his life . And secondly let vs mark also,  $\dot{y}$  the punishments which we ought to execute belong to example . And  $\dot{y}$  is the cause why it is sayd,  $\dot{y}$  they which spare an offender in leauing his fault vnpunished, shall be guilty of  $\dot{y}$  vndoing of the whole nation: for by  $\dot{y}$  means, the residue do fall to leauidnes as well as he . And when folke see a wicked deede committed, & the party is not punished for it; euery man taketh libertie to do  $\dot{y}$  like . Therefore let vs take warning by these examples,  $\dot{y}$  we may be able to apply the to our instruction: & when we see the punished which aduance themselves; let vs learne thereby to walke in meekenes . And although it were better for euery man to learn by himself, than by beholding  $\dot{y}$  punishments of other folks: Yet notwithstanding it is a great grace of God, who he teacheth vs by other mens harmes . Let vs mark moreouer,  $\dot{y}$  if we continue without amendment when we see  $\dot{y}$  punishments  $\dot{y}$  are executed by the authority of God; I say if we continue without amendment: our sinne increaseth so much the more . Gods wrath vs by a great many of instructions, yea & of chastisements also which he executeth; and we make none account of them: nowe is it any wonder if in the ende we see our Lorde sende so great and excessive disorders, that we were not where to become? Then let vs learne to profite in this schoole, as oft of GOD lieth vp his hande to punish the wicked: and let vs vnderstande that he teacheth vs by their example; wherefore let vs stoop, & let euery of vs yeelde to obey him with true meekentle .

Now let vs fall downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faulces, faultes, praying him to make vs feele them more and more, so as we may all of vs seeke to frame our life accordng to the rightnesse which hee sheweth vs, and not looke to be drawn thereto by compulsion of the earthly sworde, but rather that the sworde of Gods worde may haue such power in our heartes, as it may make vs to sacrifice ourselues vnto GOD, killing all our fleshy lustes, and renewing vs to such a kinde of life, as our whole desire may bee to haue God reigne ouer vs, and that we may be wholly reformed, according to his holy will: and that therewithall we may followe the orderly policie and spirituall gouernment of his Church; and that all the things which he hath ordeined for our benefite, may be so maintained & obserued, as both great and small may submit theselues therunto. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to al people & nations of the earth: Reducing all poore ignorant people out of the bondage of errors and darkensse wher ein they are holden: That so he he may bring the to the knowledge of his truth: And that for this purpose it would please him to raise vp true & faithfull ministers of his worde, &c.

14 When thou art come into the Lande which the Lord thy God giueth thee, and enioyest it and dwellest therein, and sayest I will set a king ouer mee like as all the nations that are round about mee:

15 Then shalt thou make him king ouer thee whome the Lorde shall choose from among thy brethren: him shalt thou set ouer thee to be king, and thou maiest not set a stranger ouer thee which is not thy brother.

16 But he shall not multiply horses to himselfe, nor sende the people againe into Egypt to increase the number of horses, forasmuch as the Lorde hath sayd vnto you, ye shall neuer hence forth goe any more againe that way.

17 Neither shall he take him many wiues, least his heart turne away. Neither shall he gather him much golde and siluer.

18 And when he is set vpon the Throne of his kingdom, he shall copy out this Lawe for himselfe in a booke, before the Priestes the Leuites.

Deut. 16. 18.

Heretofore Moses hath spoken of the Iudges that were ordeined in euery cite to gouern the people, and specially of the cheefe Iudge to whom all things were referred. Nowe he addeth that if people be disposed to choose a king, he sheweth what manner a one he ought to be. And first he ordeineth that he must be taken of the lineage of Abraham: and secondly he declareth his dutie to him, to the intent he should not go beyond it, nor play the Tyrant in steede of playing the king. That is the meaning of Moses generally. But here we must consider what is the cause, why God setteth not vp a king by his owne authoritie, but rather leaueeth it to the liking of the people. For if he allowed the state of a king, or if it were a thing that he liked well of, ought he not to haue shewed the way, that the people might haue obeyed whatsoeuer he had commaunded them: But he sayeth, When thou art come into the Lande which thy God giueth thee, and enioyest it, if thou wilt choose a king as other Nations haue. Herby it should seeme that God was not willing there shoulde bee any kingdom in lewite: but that if the people were so desirous of a king that they could not be helde from it, then he granted it them by way of suffe-taken from the tribe of Iuda, nor the gouernour from betwene his legges, vntill the person that was to be sent were come & had appeared. This prophesie was not a curse that should come vpon the people, nor a vengeance of God: but rather a singular and special fauour about all other. For in saying so, Iacob declareth that God would set vp an euerlasting king, by whom saluation shoulde be sent throughout all the world. And vntill the time of the manifesting of our Lorde Iesus Christ it behoued the people to be maintained still in hope of him and God gaue vnto him the kingdom of Iuda and that whole tribe. We see then in fewe wordes, that this kingdom was a figure of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and as a warrant which God gaue to that people, that he himselfe reigned ouer them, and the kinges of Iuda serued alwaies to holde the people vnder Gods protection, as it were in the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ. For albeit that all the Princes of the worlde be called Gods children and his lesitenantes: yet notwithstanding, the kingdom of Iuda had that title after a more speciall and holy manner. And therefore we see it was Gods will there shoulde be a king among his people, euen because it was the full perfection of all felicity, that Iesus Christ should be the head of them.

Psal. 82. 6.

True it is yf disputatiō shold arise cōcerning yf governmēt of mē; it might be said yf a free state is much better thā to be vnder a Prince; but here is no cōtrouersie of any fuch mater. And in deed such disputatiōs are not very profitable. For they yf are vnder yf government of a Prince, must not be fickle minded to make any alteration. And those to whō God hath giuen liberty & freedom, ought to vse it wth thanksgiving, as a singular benefit & treasure yf cannot be priced sufficiently. And as for yf kingdom of Iuda, there was a speciall respect in yf, as I haue said aforenamingly yf it was the image of the truth which was in our Lorde Iesus Christ, in gathering vs to himselfe to make vs Gods Church & his owne flocke. For yf is better than al yf government in the whole world. If a mā shoulde cōpare a principality, or a free state of a Senate, or whatsoeuer els can be imagined for a cōmonweale, with yf grace which God giueth vs in shewing himselfe to vs in his own person, of purpose to reigne ouer vs himselfe, & to take yf charge of our welfare, & in establishing his only son in yf office & dignity: I pray you is it not much better to be vnder yf obedieñce of our Lorde Iesus Christ, & to haue him to reigne ouer vs as our soueraine Lord & King; than to be Kings & Emperors euery one of vs? Yes verily. So then wee must conclude, yf seeing God ordeined Iudges frōy beginning, hee sheweth thereby yf it is a desirable thing for folk to be governed in cōmon & to haue laws to reigne among thē, yf there be no succession by inheritance, but yf euen those which are choise [to beare office] be bound to yeelde account of their doings, & haue not absolute libertie to doe what they list or to say: I will haue this thing: It shalbe thus done. This did God shew, whē he governed his owne people by yf hand of Iudges. And for the same cause did he vprayd & blame yf Iewes for requiring a king to be their head & to reign ouer them. It is not thou [sayth he to Samuell] to whō they haue done this wrong. True it is yf thou hast executed my authority in yf thou art of my setting vp; but their vnthankfulness & disobedieñce roueth me, in yf they can not abide yf I shoulde haue the governing of thē. And afterward he addeth, wel then let them haue a king. But it shalbe to their trouble: for he shall spoyle their houses, take away their sons & daughters, consume their substance, lay taxes & tributes vpon them, & (to be short) vse them like wretched bondslaves. See what they haue wonne by requiring a king.

And in this text our Lorde sheweth, yf as in respect of worldly governmēt, he had chosen yf best state yf could be; namely yf the Law should reigne ouer the people, & there vntill yf there should be Iudges in euery citie, & a chiefe gouernour ouer all, to the intent yf matters might be determined and concluded, as was declared yesterday: howbeit with this most noble condition, which God referred to himselfe, namely that our Lorde Ie-sus Christ should reigne ouer them. For it beho-ued thē to be vnder one head, howbeit not simply of a mortall man, but of yf sonne of God. But forasmuch as yf time was not yet come that such grace shold be shewed: it behoued the hope ther-of to be fedde with some figure. And yf was the cause why it was promised by the mouth of Iac-ob, that the scepter should not depart from the tribe of Iuda. God did purposely choose out one tribe, & when he ment to set vp the king, he said that the reigne of him shoulde be durable vntill the coming of his owne sonne, who was the true heire, and the very partie to whome the crowne belonged, namely our Lorde Iesus Christ.

 Thus haue wee now a briefe declaration after what sorte God ment to stablish a kingdome among his people, howbeit, that was in respect of our Lorde Iesus Christ. But as in respect of worldly governmēt, the best and most desirable state, was to haue Iudges, that is to say, to be in libertie, and yet notwithstanding to be ouerruled by Lawes. Nowe thereby wee doone to vnderstande, that although all worldly government deserue to be esteemed as a holy thing, & behoofefull for the maintenance of mans state, yet notwithstanding, when it pleaseth GOD to giue vs a meane kinde of governmēt, ouer tyranny, wherein the Magistrates doe rule after such a sort, that the Lawes haue their due course: the same is a speciall priuiledge, and wee ought then to perceiue thereby that God is nere at hand to vs, & that he pieth vs as his household-folke, and as those that are of his flocke, & his owne heritage. Marke that then for one point.
 But therewithall wee must marke also, that when we shall haue knownen Gods grace in his governing of vs in this earthly and transitorie life; it is nothing in comparison of the spirituall kingdom of our Lorde Iesus Christ, & therefore yf wee must highly exalt or praise this benefite yf God vouch-safteth to gouerne vs by the hande of his onely son, yea and wee must esteeme it, not onely more than all the libertie of the worlde, but also more than al the kingdomes and Empires of yf world.
 But anon this point shalbe touched new againe.

Furthermore let vs marke, that God intending to set vp a king, did tarry neuerth els till the people required one. And yf was to put them in a desire, that they might not afterward rebell against the king that was to be set vp. For the vnthankfulness and malice of the people betrayed it selfe, in that they could not finde in their hearts to holde them to the state which God had stablished al ready. And what a thing had it been, if he had set vp a Monarchie among them at the first day? For it is a farre more tollerable thing for vs to haue gouernours that goe by choise and election, who in executing their office shall knowe themselves to be subiect to the Lawe: than to haue a Prince whose worde must stande for reason, and whose childre must inherite, though he be neuer so very a babe, and consequently obeyed; though hee be the wilfullest foole or the cruellest person in the worlde.
 Therefore it is a faire more tollerable state to haue Iudges and Gouernours. Nowe if the people of Israel could not away with this state, yf but wold needs through a wicked desire seek to haue a king: what would they haue done if God had at yf first day saide vnto thē, I let this or yf hoyle to reigne ouer you, & it behoueth you to obey the king? What murmuring wold there haue bene?

What protesting would there haue bin? Therefore it was Gods wil to make y<sup>e</sup> people willing, to y<sup>e</sup> end there might be no occasion of rebelling, wherby Dauid was to be made king. Verily we see what fell out. For foorthly, their requiring of King Saul, was through a foolish ambitio<sup>n</sup> & spyte, which they bare to their neighbours. When they saw how there were kings in Egypt, in Ed<sup>o</sup>, in Ammon, in Syria, & in the other Countreys: they thought there was no such dignitie & itatelines among thes<sup>e</sup> felues because there was no royall seate among the<sup>m</sup>. And therefore they would haue one, But see their folly. When they had chosen Saul, although he vexed the<sup>m</sup> & put them to as much hardnes as could be: yet notwithstanding they were so wedded to him, y<sup>e</sup> they would needs keepe y<sup>e</sup> crowne to his childre, & not suffer Dauid to reigne. Albeit y<sup>e</sup> God had declared y<sup>e</sup> Dauid was the ma<sup>n</sup> wh<sup>o</sup> he had chose, and y<sup>e</sup> they had not the authoritie to choose any other to be their king: yet y<sup>e</sup> people chose Saules son, as who would say, we will haue this house to continue for euer, yea eue<sup>n</sup> as it were in despite of God. And (as we see) was Dauid mainteyned in his kingdom, any otherwise than by Gods stretching out of his hand to preferre him? The people sel within a while aiter to rebelling against Dauid, & the example of Absolon sheweth y<sup>e</sup> the insurrection was so great, y<sup>e</sup> Dauid was forsaken of the most part of his subiectes. So then it appeareth y<sup>e</sup> if y<sup>e</sup> people had not bin as good as daunted aforehand, y<sup>e</sup> kingdom which God had determined on in his own purpose, had neuer take<sup>n</sup> place, neither would they haue submitted thes<sup>e</sup> felues vnto it but by cōpulsion. But yet behoued it the<sup>m</sup> to obey it. And so by y<sup>e</sup> meane y<sup>e</sup> people were prepared thereto by requiring a king of thes<sup>e</sup> felues; & yet they found thes<sup>e</sup> felues disappointed of their expectation. For it was not Gods wil to stablish the blessed kingdom at y<sup>e</sup> first, wherby y<sup>e</sup> whole world was to haue saluation: but hee chose a king of the tribe of Benjamin, & yet it was said y<sup>e</sup> scepter should not depart fro<sup>m</sup> the tribe of Iuda. Wherfore doth God turne away fro<sup>m</sup> y<sup>e</sup> which he had spoken by y<sup>e</sup> mouth of Iacob? This was done not y<sup>e</sup> he is variable, not y<sup>e</sup> he repenteth him; not y<sup>e</sup> he intended not to fulfill y<sup>e</sup> prophesie: but for y<sup>e</sup> he was not minded to let his blessing appeare so soone, because of y<sup>e</sup> peoples sediuouesse, in respect wherof, he hid it, or at leastwise delayed it, till they had acknowledged their fault, & repented the<sup>m</sup> thereof. And this doth shew vs sufficiently wherfore god in this place referneth not to himself y<sup>e</sup> choosing of y<sup>e</sup> king which should gouerne his people: but sayth thou shalt require one. It was to the end that his reigning should be of the more authoritie, & he bee y<sup>e</sup> better beloved of his people; so as euery ma<sup>n</sup> should submit himself to him, & therby know in very deed, y<sup>e</sup> there was no greater happines, than to be vnder y<sup>e</sup> house of Dauid, forasmuch as the same was a shadow & figure of the sonne of god, who was to bring saluation & full perfection of al good things. In effect we see here two things. The one is that our lord blameth the people for their impotunitie, in y<sup>e</sup> they would needs be aforehand w<sup>it</sup> him in desiring a king: as if he should say, You wil not, suffer me to make him: (true it is

y<sup>e</sup> I wil neuer forget you, but I wil set such order among you, y<sup>e</sup> ye shal haue cause to thanke me & to reioyce of my goodnes.) But yet will you be so malicious & frowarde, y<sup>e</sup> when I shal haue giuen you a Iudge, you shal desire a king. And this frowardnes of yours shal cause me not to set vp the kingdom which I haue ordained, & which I haue referred to my selfe, that is to wit, of the tribe of Iuda. Yet notwithstanding our lord sheweth y<sup>e</sup> he wil set vp y<sup>e</sup> kingdom, but that shal be after the people are made fit to obey, & haue acknowledged their sin, because they had coueted a change against Gods wil, & before y<sup>e</sup> fit time was come. Thus are all these places easly made to agree. And hercupon we may gather a good lesson, which is that when God hath promised vs any benefite or token of his mercy: we must hold our luste in awe, and not runne a heade to challenge him to do that which he hath sayd, when we list, but vse patience, and be quiet vntill God shewe vs by effect that he ment not to disappoint vs, in promising any thing y<sup>e</sup> belongeth to our saluation. Here then is a general rule; which is, y<sup>e</sup> in all Gods promises we must be patient, & not be so haaste as to say, how goes this geere? why doeth God make delay? why performeth he not y<sup>e</sup> thing which we hoped for at his hand? Let vs beware of such impatience, seeing the example of y<sup>e</sup> people is such as we see it is in this place. But let vs be stil when God hath promised vs any thing, vntill y<sup>e</sup> cōuenient time therof be come of it self. And yet shal not this hinder vs but y<sup>e</sup> we may pray vnto him for it. For wherfore doth he cal vs to him & cōmand vs to pray, but to y<sup>e</sup> intent we shold discharge all our care & sorow vpon him, & receiue cōfort of it: Therefore we may wel pray vnto god wh<sup>o</sup> we are stirred vp to impatience: but yet must we euer refer all things vnto him: & good reason it is y<sup>e</sup> he shold dispoise of things according as he himselfe hath determined in his owne purpose, & not after our fancie. Allet vs beare in minde what I haue touched afore; to wit, y<sup>e</sup> seeing God hath giuen vs a cōuenient itate, & y<sup>e</sup> we be gouerned by Iudges & magistrates, as y<sup>e</sup> the Lawes do reigne ouer vs: we ought to giue God thanks for y<sup>e</sup> benefite, & to take good heed y<sup>e</sup> we prouoke not his wrath by our sonde sicknes, in desiring this or y<sup>e</sup>, and in saying why is it not thus? For wh<sup>o</sup> we will needs alter things after y<sup>e</sup> fashion of our own pleasure, we make not war against me, but we desie God, & thrust him far fro<sup>m</sup> vs to y<sup>e</sup> entent he should not reigne ouer vs. Therefore to be short, seeing there is some forme of government among vs, let vs learn to thank God, & to hold vs vnder y<sup>e</sup> shadow of his wings, & not to craue this or y<sup>e</sup> through foolish ambition. For we see what happened to y<sup>e</sup> people of Israell. True it is y<sup>e</sup> God chose them a king: howbeit, y<sup>e</sup> was but to punish their wicked desire: & euen so will it fall out w<sup>it</sup> others. And in deede, we see how he giueth large scope to y<sup>e</sup> king which was set vp, namely to Saul, saying, Thou shalt not reigne as a Prince, but he shal execute al maner of tyranny ouer you, and yee must be faire to abide it, spyte of your teeth.

But howsoeuer wee fare, let vs learne to referre all the benefites that GOD giueth vs in this this world, to the spiritual kingdome of our Lord Iesus Christ: assuring ourselues that though we had all things else at will, and liued here in neuer to great pleasure and welth, and had such gouerners as demeaned themselves as gently towards vs as were possible: all this were nothing vnlesse our Lorde Iesus Christ reigned ouer vs, and bare all the swaye. On the contrary parte, though we be tormented according to the flesh, (as we see a number of people extremely vexed with tyranny) and that we haue not so much as bread to eate: Yet notwithstanding the blessednesse which God sendeth vs in that our Lord Iesus Christ reigneth ouer vs, ought to be preferred before all other things, and wee ought to take all afflictions patiently, so we may haue the comfort of his reigne ouer vs. Nowe the scepter of our Lorde Iesus Christ is not a materiall scepter, after the manner of the royall scepters and crownes which Kinges and Princes haue had at all times: but it is the Gospell, which is the true roken of his presence. And wee see howe he taketh vs for his people, wherof we haue a sure warrant, in y<sup>e</sup> he will haue vs to be gathered together into the vnitie of faith by the doctrine of his gospell, and by that meane be made the heritage of God.

Let vs come now to that which Moses addeth concerning the office of the King. Hee sayeth first, That the king must be chosen from among the people. Thou shalt take one of thine owne brethren (saith he.) and then shalt not goe seek a stranger. And surely by the prophesie of Iacob, the king was to be chosen of the tribe of Iuda. Why then doeth God speake generally of the whole linage of Abraham, and not marke out the kingly house by name? For it should seeme that hee ment not to darken that prophesie. Let vs make what hath bene sayd already: to wit; that the time was not yet come, and that the fauour which God had beight by the mouth of the Patriarke Iacob, was to be kept close as yet for a time, by reason of the peoples vnthankfulness. Behold, whereas God had spoken it so long time before: nowe at the ende of three hundred yeeres or thereaboures, he sayth there shalbe a king among you. As how? Shall the prophesie vanish away and be of none effect, which had bin vttered three hundred yeeres before, and spoken by the mouth of Iacob? Ought it not to haue benefite forth much more cleerly at the publishing of the Law? Yes, for our Lorde doeth vs to vnderstande, that the people had drawn as it were a veyle before it, by reason wherof, in steede of comming to light, it behoued his fauour to be as it were hidden away in the darke. That is the thing which God ment to shewe in this text in saying, Thou shalt choose a king from among thy brethren, without appointing out the house, as had bene doone afore. But howe soeuer the case stande, Gods holding backe of his fauour for a time, was no viter abolishing thereof. Then did hee delay his promise of setting vpp a king of the tribe of Iuda: but yet hee did not viterly because his people of that hope. And so yee see, howe the people of themselves made an interruption: and yet that God for all his chastising of them, vseth gracious goodnesse and moderateth his rigor: insomuch that the thing which he had ordeined abideth still, sauing that the time thereof is prolonged.

Let vs marke therefore, that God to correct the faultes of his people, doeth hide away his fauour for a time, so as it is not manifestly seene: but yet in the ende he wil cause it to come again. Thus ouercommeth hee our naughtinesse with his infinite goodnes, and we see it by experience. But yet sometimes wee feele it not though our Lorde shewe vs it. Howe soeuer the case stande, let vs learne by the example of the Iewes, that if our Lorde at any time withdrawe himselfe from vs, and seeme not to performe his promise to vs; our owne faultes are the cause thereof, for that we be srowarde and haue pulled backe Gods hande when hee would haue reached it out to haue discharged his promise towards vs. For how many times aday prouoke we his wrath? And is not that a kinde of shutting of the doore against him, that hee might not come at vs to make vs partakers of his goodnesse? Therefore when we haue thrust backe his grace after that fashion, if it appeare not againe vnto vs out of hande, we haue to humble ourselues, acknowledging that we our selues are to blame. But yet for all that, we must not be discouraged, but we must pray God that although he haue deferred the performance of his promises for a time, yet wee may not be viterly bereft of them, howe soeuer the world go, but that after we haue languished for a time and bin chastised for our offences, we returne again without faile, and inioy y<sup>e</sup> thing which he hath promised. Thus yee see in effect what wee haue to gather vpon that text.

And whereas God forbiddeth his people to haue any stranger to be their king: there are two reasons which we ought to marke well. The one is y<sup>e</sup> that kingdome was a Sacrament of our Lord Iesus Christ, and therefore it was not meete that it should haue come to the hande of an vnbeleener or ydolater: for that had bin a defiling of holy things. If heathen kings reigned ouer their like, it was not to be wondered at. For although some vnbeleeuing kinges reigned ouer the people of Israell by Tyranny, as was done by the Babylonians and afterward by the kinges of Assyria: yet doth it not followe but that there was alwayes this exemption, that God had still a peculiar kinde of reigning, whereby he shewed as in a lookinglasse, that y<sup>e</sup> people was gathered together as into his owne house. Therefore if a stranger had bin set vp in the seate of Dauid, it had bene trecherie against God, & the reproch had bin offered to God and to his onely sonne. For when the kingdome was established in the line of Dauid, this promise was added; I will be his father, and hee shall be my sonne. And the Apostle declareth that it was so honorable a title that it belonged not euen to the Angelles. True it is that the Angelles are sometimes called the sonnes of God: howbeit, that is not without an addition; whereas Christ hath it, because he is preferred before all creatures. Now then, hadde they choosen an ydoler, and set him vp in the seate which God had reserved for his ownely sonne, who was established in his infinite grace, who was the marke of his diuine maiestie, and who was aboue all the principalities of the world, yea and aboue heauen it selfe as in respect of the creatures; as y<sup>e</sup> Apostle speaketh of him, in the first chapter of his Epistle to the Colossians: what a thing had that bene? Had it not bene an vnaturall confusion, and too shamefull a defiling of the grace of G O D? Then lette vs marke that for the first reason why G O D would not haue a stranger to sit in the seate of Dauid.

And in so doinge, God went also to shewe a dreadfull displeasure, and to make the people to knowe howe they were vtterly accused, in that they were disappointed of that kingdom, & that Gods Lampe was after a sort put out. For, that similitude is often set downe vnto vs in the holy scripture, to shewe that God maketh his light to shine vpon his people, and that although there be not at all times great light, yet there shal euer be a Lampe howe soeuer the world goeth. And the seconde reason was, that if a stranger should haue reigned, he would loone haue changed the religion, as wee knowe that the heathen will alwayes needes sette vp their owne superstitions. And why? For commonly they haue not the feare of God to keepe them in awe: but rather they thinke God to be bounde vnto them if they gye men leaue to worshipping him and serue him after some sort, & yet for all that they wil needes turne all the seruice of God to their owne lustes and liking. If the Turke get the soueraigne in any countrey, although he be contented to abide the Christians (as they call themselves): Yet doeth he worke them all the spite and reproch that can be to discourage them. Where the Pappes beare swaye, they defile all the puritie of Christian doctrine, and they can not abide that the Gospell should be preached, or that the Sacramentes should be purely vsed: but they wil needes put all to hauocke, and in any wise set vp their owne ydolatries. Thus yee see what would haue come of it, inso much y<sup>e</sup> if a stranger should haue reigned ouer the people of Israel, it hadde bin the next way to haue ouerthrowen the whole Lawe. Not without cause therefore did God expressly prouide that they shoulde not choose any other king than of the lynage of Abraham, such a one as were comprised in the covenauant, and bare the marke of the Church, that is to wit Circumcision, which was the like Sacrament to the Iewes, that we haue nowadayes of Baptisme.

But nowe must we apply this to our owne vse, and vnderstande first of all that the kingdom of our Lorde Iesus Christ, must bee maintained in such soundenesse, as that wee must beware of bringing any defilement into it. And what is y<sup>e</sup> kingdom of Christ? I haue told you already y<sup>e</sup> it consisteth not in any visible things, or in any things belonging to this present life: but it is the gathering of vs together by his holy spirite, into the hope of the heauenly life: and the preaching of the Gospell vnto vs, that it may bee as a rule to holde vs vnder the obedience of God. And although the Sacramentes bee visible of themselves: yet are they neuertheless spiritual, as in respect of their ende, as all other Ceremonies are. We come hither together; well, it is a visible thing: we kneele downe to pray vnto God; & that is visible also: but yet it aimeth at a higher ende, and hath a respect which is altogether spiritual. So then, let vs learne that the kingdom of our Lorde Iesus Christ ought to be maintained in his full soundenesse; that is to wit; wee must beware that wee mingle not any corruption with the things that he hath commaunded in his Church, ne thrust in such persons as may serue to ouerthrowe the common weale: For if we should choose false Shepherds and men of wicked doctrine, or of leaue conuersion: were it not a dishonoring of Iesus Christes kingdome and a putting of all things to hauocke as much as in vs lieth? Seeing then that the children of Israel were forbidden to set vp a strange King in the seate that was a figure of our Lorde Iesus Christ: nowe that we haue the sonne of God to gouerne vs, not in shadowe as in the time of the Lawe, but in full truth; nowe that wee haue our Lorde Iesus Christ who is called the day sunne of righteousnesse as the prophete Malachie termeth him, who telleth vs that he is neere at hand to vs, and ruleth in the middes of vs: what a trecherie were it if we should deface his roial throne and not maintaine it in such purenesse, as that he might alwayes reigne by his worde, and euerie man doe him homage, and both greate and small knowe him, and he haue alwayes his preheminnce among vs? Thus yee see howe the first point is that God commaundeth vs heere to haue a speciall care of his Church, so as there may be no deflement to hinder Christes reigning ouer vs as he ought to doe.

Nowe as touching the second reason, let vs marke also that if God haue giuen a people the grace to choose Kinges, Princes, Magistrates or Judges, they ought to haue great regarde that the seate which God hath ordeined for the wellfare of mankind, be not giuen to a man that is an vnbeleuer. For the people that chooseth either king or Iudge, without discerning whether he be a man that feareth God or no: doe put the haulter about their owne neckes wilfully. And when they shall choose, and take Magistrates that are either deadly enemies of the Gospell, or Hypocrites, that seeke nothing else but to turne all things ypidedowne, or worldelings that coulde finde in their heartes to treade all religion vnder foote: is not the admitting of such men as an opening of the gate vnto Satan, that hee might haue place among vs? Is it not a reiecting of Gods grace, to the ende that all abhominations might haue their full scope? So then, when soeuer wee choose Iudges, Magistrates, Gouernours and Officers of iustice, let vs take warning by this text, to looke for this marke in them, that they bee men which feare God, and are at leastwise desirous that Religion should be maintained in his purenesse: For otherwise it is all one as if wee would driue God from vs, and seeke to banish him from among vs; which is too cursed a trayterousnesse. And thus much concerning earthly gouernement. After wee haue in deuoured that the spirituall religion of y<sup>e</sup> church may bee maintayned: let vs likewise be so minded towardes the state of the temporall sworde and ordinarie iustice, that such as sit in iudgement may bee all one with vs in brotherly religion, and that the holy bande of faith may knit vs together in obedience to one selfesame God. And hereof there is a faire confirmation in the thinges that Moses addeth: for it deserueth to be treated of immediately, and we shall see it in place conuenient.

But he sayeth expressly, That the king which shall haue bene chosen, must cause the booke of the lawe to be copied out in the presence of the high priestt and of the Leuites. Nowe let vs see why God hath made this so strait ordinance, that there should bee a booke of authoritie for the kings vs. Is it meant that a man should bee ignorant and vterly vnacquainted with the doctrine of God, vntill hee came to the crowne? No. For Gods will is that his lawe should bee known both of greate and small, as wee shall see by his protestation hereafter. The secreete thinges belong to your God himselfe: but yet it hath pleased him to let his worde here before you; & ye must not say any more that it is a hidden doctrine, either for your selues or for your children. Wee see then howe it was Gods will that his lawe should bee common both to great and small. And should hee then that was brought vp in the house of the crowne, bee a beast? No. Ought hee not to bee instructed in the Lawe? And if hee ought, was it not requisite that hee should haue a booke of it? Yes for sooth. And what is y<sup>e</sup> cause why God would hee should haue a copie of the booke, at such time as hee were put in possession of the kingdome? It was to the ende hee should perceiue himselfe to bee double bounde, & vnderstande that if priuate persones bee bounde to profite in Gods schoole, & to giue good heede to the doctrine that is preached or written; it is much more reason that the person which hath the charge of the whole bodie, which is set vp in the name of God, and hath God come neere vnto him, should bee diligent to profite in the same schoole. Therefore let vs marke howe it behoued a booke to bee appointed out specially for the king, and the same to bee written after a solemne fashion, and the Priestes and Leuites to bee witnesses thereof, and the same to bee deliuered vnto him as by the hande of God. For it was all one as if God had sayd vnto him; Go to, I haue giuen my lawe to all my people, & I will haue the remembrance thereof to bee renewed ycerly. For the booke was brought forth, & the bloud of the sacrifice was sprinkled first vpon the booke and then vpon all the people, to the ende they should consider thus; wee be linked in vnseparable bonde with the lawe of God. But when this was done, there was a seconde booke brought and deliuered into the kings own hands, as if it had bene saide vnto him; God byndeth thee much more than any priuate persons, to knowe thy duetic: namely that thou shouldst be better learned than all the rest, and shewe them examples, and behaue thy selfe in such wise as all the people may take thee for their guyde. That was the thing which our Lorde meant in this text.

And in deed, let vs consider a little how hard the charge of princes is. Although a Iudge had not past one citie or one towne to gouerne; yet should hee finde himselfe much cumbered; and what shal hee do then, hauing a whole realme? It standeth al Magistrates and Officers of iustice in hid, to apply this to theselues, & to knowe y<sup>e</sup> their charge passeth all their abilitie, so as they shall neuer be able to go through with it, except God giue them his holy spirite. But yet for all that, he will not haue them to bee negligent in y<sup>e</sup> mean while. What is to be done then? All Magistrates and al such as haue publike charge, must vnderstande that if it behoued other men to bee diligent to read the holy scripture, to haunt Sermons, to bee conformed more and more in the doctrine, and to bee well edified thereby: they themselues haue twyce as much neede to be so. And forasmuch as God hath aduanced them to preheminance; it behoueth them to haue recourse to him dayly, and to call vpon him, and not to be so vainglorious as to thinke; O, I am able ynough to guyde my selfe, and to gouerne others. No no: Let them rather consider them selues to bee vnable, vnlesse God giue them power and strength, with wise dome and discretion to guyde themselues: Therefore let them desire to be taught, that others may frame them selues after their example, and let all resort vnto God, in deuoting to profit in such sort in his schoole, as the great men may haue wherewith to gouerne well, and the meaner sort may by that meanes be allured to obey quietly; so as al me may bee guyded vnto God with one common accorde.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with aeknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them in such sort, as wee may seeke his mercie with true repentance, and hee graunt vnto vs, not onely to burie our faultes past, but also to reforme vs, that our whole seeking may be to please him, & to frame our selues in all points to his will: and also that in the meane while hee haue bid vs quite in all our infirmities, vntill hee haue rid vs and cleane of them. And so let vs all say; Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

16. 17. 18 But hee shall not &c.

19 The which hee shall haue with him, and reade it all the dayes of his life, that hee may learne to feare the Lorde his God, and keepe all the wordes of the Lawe, and the O: dinaunces to doe them:

20 That he list not vp his heart about his brethren, nor turne not from the cō-maundement to the right hand or to the left, that he may indure long in his kingdome, both he and his sonnes in the middes of Israel.

VE sawe yesterday why GOD commanded kings to haue a booke of the law. For although they had bene taught afore, yet when they were come to that state, it stood them in hand to thinke that they had more neede than euer they had to rule themselves by Gods word, considering how hard a thing it is to gouerne a people, and that God must be faime to worke in that behalfe, and men must acknowledge themselves far too weak, that they may seeke y help that is needeful for them; namely to be guyd by God, and for attainment thereof apply their studie to his worde. For it is in vaine for vs to hope that God will giue vs counsel, vnlesse wee seeke it in his lawe. If a man say that God will welyough giue him his spirite, & yet in y mean while despise all the helpes, as the reading of y holy scripture, & the hearing of Sermons: is it not a mocking of him? And so ye see wherefore it behoneth the kings to haue a booke of y lawe.
There is a saying of a heathen man which is taken for a common prouer, namely that y common weale is happie where wise men holde the helme, or where such as hold the helme do giue themselves to wisdom. And that is a very rare thing. But yet men see that al this is very true: For when men are chosen to gouerne a people, it is meete y they should haue wit and reason in them. And it is not ynough for a man to bee of some courage & discretion aforehande ere hee take the gouernment vpon him; but he must also in deuer to profite continually when he is come to it, and thereunto doth euen experience it self prouoke him: for our true wisdom is to harken to God when he speaketh to vs, and to obey his doctrine. So then wee see how needful it was for kings to bee exhorted to read Gods worde most specially, and to giue themselves thereto, as wel for shewing example vnto others, as also for necessities sake, euen because their charge is ourhard & high, surmounting all capacite of man.

Now it is said expressly, that they may learne to feare the Lord, without turning either to the right hand or to the left. For it is not ynough for a king to haue a booke in his palace for fallions sake. It were to no purpose to make a faire shewe, as who should say, Looke yonder, there is the lawe of God, Gods booke is in the kings palace, as we see how the worlde contenteth it selfe continually with ceremonies. And in dedde, the Iewes being peruerter of all things, and to farre possessed with the diuel that they haue gone about to deface the substance & whole power of Gods worde, whensoever this booke can e in question among them, O say they, it must be written in such manner of parchement, & it must haue this & that done vnto it. But these things are more than childish, and yet in the meane while they haue let the chiefe thing alone. Let vs marke then that Gods intent was not to make a booke that should be as a relike, to be shewed for a brauerie that the king might haue a marke of his dignitie about all others: but the reason that is set downe here, is that he should learne to feare God. Now although this bee spoken expressly concerning the kings of Israel, (as was declared yesterday:) yet is it verie good reason, that they which are magistrats at this day, (considering that their gouerning is in the name of our Lord Iesus,) should set their mindes vpon the doctrine of saluation, & in deuer to profite therein, aiming alwayes at the marke which God hath set before the, namely to learn to feare him, knowing wel that vnlesse they haue the feare of God it is vnpossible for them to glorifie him, and al things within a while must needs goe to ha-uoeke.

And by the way, let vs marke also, that here the holy Ghost meant to shewe vs the vse of the holy scripture. For (as saith Saint Paul) it is behoofefull to make the man of God perfect in all good workes. Therefore whensoever we read the holy Scripture or heare it preached; let vs haue this regard of profiting in the feare of God; and let vs not think our selues to be so far forwarde, that wee should not neede to go on still all our life long. A man might thinke it strange that it should be sayde, that he should learne to feare God. For why? Should a king bee a nouice when hee is once chosen? Ought hee not to bee well known aforehande to bee a man of excellent vertue? Yes verily. But yet doeth it stande vs in hande to bee learners still:
the

the feare of God is a thing that is not learned perfectly at the first day. And therefore let vs continue in it all the time of our life, and yet wee shall finde that when wee haue liued neuer so long, wee be but in the middes of our iourney. The thing then which wee haue to marke in Moses words, is that when kings haue y<sup>e</sup> booke of the lawe, they must not keepe it shut, or set it out to shewe like a relike; but the king must exercise himselfe in it, & his reading of it must not bee as it were but for a pastime, as who should say, I haue read it, and that is a sufficient discharge for mee: but it must bee to the ende that hee which was in good forwardnesse already, and had serued God in his youth, should bee the more quickened vp to doo so still: knowing well that in as much as God commeth so neere vnto him, hee is the more straitly bounde to liue virtuously. That is the very thing in effect which wee haue to beere away, and moreover wee must euery one of vs apply the same to his owne vse, as I haue saide afore.

Nowe it is sayde likewise, that they bowe not to the right hande nor to the left. Wherein it is shewed vs that the feare of God is the true rule, which beeing thoroughly rooted in vs becometh a good and sure loadstarre to vs throughout all our life. For what is the cause that wee gadde after our owne likinges, and wander here and there; but that wee haue nor our eye vpon God? Therefore wee may conclude that all they which turne aside either one way or other, doe thewe insufficiently by their life, that they bee despisers of GOD. But will we haue a good remedie to instruct vs, and to direct our liue in such wise as it shall abyde continually in the right way? Let vs feare God: and this feare of God presupposeth a willingness and desire that wee haue to obey him. If a man alleage that hee feareth GOD; and yet in the meane while regardeth not to bee taught by him: I pray you dooth hee not shewe that all is but hypocrisie, yea, and vter shamelesse in him? As for example yee shall see many in these dayes which pretend to bee verie deuout: but they cannot abyde to heare one worde of admonishment for their better instruction: it is ynough with them to make some faire countenance. But when Moses speaketh heere of not swearing to the right hand or to the left, he presupposeth that which is true, namely, that if we feare God, we woulde be desirous to bee taught his will, and to know what thing hee liketh of, that wee might frame our liues thereafter. That is one thing more which wee haue to remember vpon this text.

Now let vs come to that which is spoken here specially concerning the kings of Israel. They be forbidden to gather great numbers of horses to returne againe into Egypt. In dedee it wil bee (silde likewise hereafter, that they must not multiply the number of their horses for couetousnesse sake. But here is set downe a speciall reason, which is, that this couetousnes of theirs might prouoke them to goe downe into Egypt, either vnder pretence to reuenge the wrongs and iniuries that had beene done vnto them, or vnder any other colour. But our Lotdes will was, that although the children of Israel had beene mistreated, & tyrannously dealt with; yet notwithstanding they should acknowledge that they had beene harbored in Egypt for a time. True it is that they were forbidden to haue any familiaritie with the Egyptians: his will was to haue them vterly diuided from them, because hee knewe well that it woulde be their decay: and yet for all that hee woulde not haue them to make warre vpon them, but to abyde still at home. And now hee sayeth that the king must not multiply y<sup>e</sup> number of his horses: For when a prince hath the helme in his hande, hee will take greater enterprises vpon him, than a commonaltie will doe.

In dedee some times there may hap to be some braynlesse persons, which woulde let all things in a broyle: but yet a Prince is alwayes boldest: and that boldnesse is a cause of much confusion in the worlde. That then is the cause why it is saide, that the king shall not gather him ouer many horses to goe into Egypt when hee had made himselfe strong. And why so? For God forbiddeth his people to go that way any more for cuer.

Nowe wee haue to note here, that when wee haue receiued any displeasure, if the workers thereof haue done vs any good in times past, wee must lay them both into the balance, and the good must counteruaile the euill. Truly although this commandement were not, yet were it not lawfull for vs to desire reuenge: in so much that euen this one reason ought to staye vs and withhold vs, namely, that if wee bee bolden to a man, and hee chance afterwarde to doe vs some wrong, wee shoulde call to mynde the good that wee haue receiued at his hande, and the same must bee as a bridle to vs. And it is the very same thing which God considered when hee woulde not haue his people to practise any thing against the Egyptians. But what soeuer came of it, he would not that there should bee any familiaritie betwixt them, & not without cause. For it was so forward a nation, that his people could haue learned nothing but euill among them. Againe, their idolatrie was as excessive and out of all measure as could be. Therefore was it good that the children of Israel should bee vterly separated from Egypt, least they might be wrapped in their superstitions. And we seee howe greatly the Prophets stood vpon that poynt: and yet it booteth not at all. For it was the place which the children of Israel fled vnto for refuge, as oft as they were troubled by other nations. In so much that when the two kingdomes of Israel and Iuda were at diuision, if the one had the helpe of the Assyrians, the other resorted into Egypt, and so were the cause of their owne destruction. And all this mischief fell out, because they did it against this forewarning, for God had forbidden them sufficiently afore hande. Therefore let vs beare in minde, that when wee seee corruptions before vs, wee must not enter into them wilfully, except we intende to tempt God: but when wee seee occasi-Esai. 30.2, & 31.3.
2. Kin. 19.7. & 17.46.

ons of euill, wee shunne them not, but rather runne into them, and wee wil needes bee ouerhardie. And therefore let vs learne to abstaine from all things that may seduce vs or make vs ouerthoote our selues.

1. Tim. 6. 10. Nowe it is saide afterwarde, That the kings shal not hoord vp much gold and siluer. True it is that couetousnesse is forbidden to all men as the roote of all mischiefe, where with when a mans heart is once possessed, he must needes be snarled in all the snares of Satan: In so much that if a man be giuen to couetousnesse, hee becometh cruel, vsing all manner of outrage, violence, & crueltie. Agayne he falleth to pilling and polling, & maketh no conscience to deuour other mens substances. Afterwarde he falleth to periurye, coisnage, vncouthnesse, trecherie, poysoning, and what ouer euill he can befit. And when malice is once set on fire, he proceedeth euent to open murder. To be short, if a man suffer himself to be wanne to couetousnesse, he must needes become a verie bondslau to Satan. Why then doeth hee forbidde here onely kings to gather much gold or siluer? Surely our Lord giueth not priuate persons leaue to inrich themselves, when he forbiddeth kings to do it: But rather meane then wee ought to be clenfed from that vice what ought we to be? For if any men should haue libertie to gather golde and siluer, kings ought to haue it most. But God hath forbidden it them: and therefore let all other men looke to themselves. But Moses speaketh expressly here of kings, as of those that haue most neede of remedy, because they haue greater occasions of gathering than any other men. For when a king reyneth in a Countrey that is riche and plentifull, it is a temptation vnto him: in so much that when he sees his subiects liue at their ease, he thinketh thus with himselfe, it will neuer erie me to giue mee such an impost, & when he hath rayled ouer us, or tallage, there is neuer any ende or measure of his gathering afterwarde. And so ye see how kinges haue neede of the sayd restraint, by reason of the said temptation which is of more force towards them than towards other men.

Psal. 119. 36.

True it is that all men are tempted to gather goods & to inrich themselves: but forasmuch as they haue not the like opportunities to bring it to passe, it is as it were an abatement & a cooling of their courages. A king hath means to drawe to himselfe continually, and to inrich himselfe more and more: for he hath authoritie to leuie taxes & tributes, and by that meane to lay vp much for himselfe. Therefore it is requisite that this euill shold be corrected in him. And in that respect did Dauid say, Lord reforme my heart, that it bee not giuen to couetousnesse: and turne away myne eyes, that they be not intangled, beguyled, and carryed away at the sight of golde & siluer. Why doeth Dauid speake after this manner? For he had much more neede, than if he had liued still in the house of his father Iesse: hee had bene there but as a poore countrey cloyne or shepelicard: and thereupon he had followed his common trade of liuing. But being once become king, and hauing the riches of the whole lande before his eyes, so as no man could let him to gather as much as he would: such opportunity was a prouocation to his flesh, & hee might soone haue ouerthor himselfe as men commonly doe. And therefore hee brydleth himselfe, saying, Lorde, keepe mee. And in deede, if he had not bene preferred miraculously by goodnes of God; hee had soone bene corrupted at the sight of such opportunities. Thus haue wee now the reason why Moses forbade the kinges of Israel expressly to gather much gold and siluer.

For (as I haue said afore) accordingly as occasions are offered vnto vs; so must wee also be bryled and held in, when our flesh tempteth vs to any thing: and there is none other remedie than that which I haue tolde you of. Although then that this be spoken to kings: yet may wee gather a lesfon thereof that shal be common to all men. And therefore whensoever wee meete with any opportunity that may drawe vs vnto euill, let vs see that wee learne to repress our lustes, & make a shielde and bulwarke of this admonition, lest wee step aside to some vanitie, because we be ouerfrayle. That is the thing whereof all vs in generall ought to take warning, when wee see that the king was forbidden to gather much gold & siluer, because he reigned in a plentifull countrey.

Also here is mention made consequently of wiues: namely, that the king must not take many wiues. It is certaine that this rule is common to all men. For although some of the Patriarkes had many wiues: yet was it not therefore lawful, for we must haue recourse to Gods institution.

True it is that mans custome may well peruert the doctrine: but yet can it not change euill into good for all that. It is God that ordeyned marriage: and as he is the author thereof, so will hee haue men to holde them to his pure institution. Nowe did hee create two wiues for Adam: Nor and yet (as sayeth the Prophet Malachie) hee had abundance of spirit in him. It had beene no harder a matter to him to haue created two or three women than to haue created one. Was God letted by any inability? Nay, and yet he created two in one flesh. Sith the case standeth so then, it is a changing of the order of nature & a despising of God, which a man taketh two wiues. O (say they) the Patriarkes did so. Yea, but thereby it appeareth that the custome of men cannot aler Gods ordinance, how great vertue or holnes so ever be in them. And it serueth also to the wey such as shielde themselves vnder the example of other men, offnd double. For is it meete y Gods authoritie should be diminished vnder pretence y men haue done this or y. And therfore let vs vnderstand y it was neuer lawfull for any man liuing to take two wiues in marriage at once: for it is a breaking of Gods order. Why then is it forbidden here but onely to kinges? Because there was more libertie. And the thing that I haue touched already is the better confirmed vnto vs in this text.

Mal. 2. 15.

If a priuate person had taken two wiues, hee should haue bene neerely looked vnto. What? Shall I go giue my daughter to him that is married alreadie? Shee shalbe sure to haue sorrowe to her soppes: shee shall lue in continuall stryfe and vnquietnesse. Yet were shee better to bee dead out of hande. But men were so desirous of honour, that if a king required a daughter of theirs to his wife, they easily condescended vnto it. What? I shall haue my daughter married to a king. And it was a blynding of a womā when shee was sued vnto by such a one. Nowe then, for as much as kinges had larger scope in this case, and consequently might more offend God: our Lorde hath specially forbidden them to haue many wiues, and moreover because the example of such as are in authoritie, is woofe than the example of priuate persons. If a common person doe any euill, it goeth no further than his owne house and his next neighbours: but hee that is in authoritie standeth vpon a skaffolde, and is seene a farre off; and if hee overshoot himselfe; the corruption of him spreadeth throughout the realme. Therefore it was requisite that God should forbid kinges to haue many wiues, euen because the corruption thereof would haue spreade ouer the whole lande. And although it could not be letted altogether: yet came it first from the heathen. And if it be asked from whence the hauing of many wyues came, it wilbee founde in the house of Cain, & not among the people of God. This leawdnesse then of hauing many wyues, was brought vp by Satan. And the Patriarkes were intangled in it, as in deede it is harde for a man to keepe himselfe from a thing, when it is once growen into a custome, for then it seemeth to be permitted. Yet notwithstanding to the intent it should no more be so, because there was occasion therof, our Lorde forbid kinges to haue many wiues.

But heere it might be demanded, what is to be sayd of Dauid, and much more of Salomō, in respect of wiues as well as of riches. It cannot be denyed but that Dauid had many wyues, and as for Salomon, he had many moe, and he seemeth not to haue bin blamed in that behalf, for the scripture speaketh but of the turning away of his hart after strange women which infected him with their superstitious and ydelarries. And as touching gould and siluer, wee knowe how it is sayd that Dauid gathered to great a masse of them that Salomons Temple and his palae were builded therewith. Therefore there was a ianuelous riches. Yea and it is said expressly, y in the raigne of Salomon, men made no more account of gold and siluer, than of grauel, y quantity therof was so exceeding great. And there seemeth to be some contrarietie in the scripture, in as much as among other things our Lo. d sayeth that hee will caule the gould of Arabye and all the riches of the worlde to bee brought to Ierusalem. And why should he promise that, if he ment not that kinges should be riche and wealthie? Nay, it is a figure of the kingdome of our Lord Iesus Christ. It this blessing of God bee set downe as so worthwhile a thing; howe are kinges forbidden to gather gould and siluer? As touching wiues, no dout but both Dauid and Salomon offended in that behalfe, and Salomon most. As for Dauid, hee had many wiues: and all the excuses that can be alledged, wil not be able to iustifie him before God. But howeouer the case stande, he did it not through inordinate lust. For he had married Michol Saules daughter, and hee coulde haue contented himselfe with that one wife, if shee had not bene taken away from him by force. And when she was giuen to another man, it was lawfull for him to take Berabece.

Againe, these happened other things afterwarde, so that if a man consider wherefore Dauid tooke many wiues: surely there wil euer be some occasion to excuse him to the worldward; but yet for all that, he was blameworthy still before God. And as touching Salomon, he rebelled openly, as a man too much giuen to y flesh, in that he proceeded euen against the prohibition that was giuen both to himselfe and to all other kinges. And it appeareth what insued to him for it. For, that hee was so abused and deceiued by strange women, it was a iust punishment; and because he had taken such libertie to himselfe, God shewed him that he had cast him selfe into Satans inares. When a fish thinkes to swallowe vp other fishes, he himselfe is caught or choked by that meane. Euen so was Salomō faine to receiue his payment, because hee gaue himselfe too much to his delights and pleasures. And it is a dreadfull thing, & a thing that ought to make the hayre to stande vp vpon our heades, that so excellent a man, indued with so great giftes of Gods spirit, should become an ydolater, and fall away from the pure seruing of God, specially being himselfe a prophes to teach the whole worlde, and a lampe to direct not onely the children of Israell, but also the verie Infidels, and to draw them to the knowledge of the trueth. O that such a man should overshoot himselfe after that fashion! And whereof came this? Euen of giuing heade to his owne lustes: & therefore God payed him his iust hyre. Seeing wee know this, ought we not to quake at such vengeance set before our eyes? Yes, and therefore let vs marke wel, that whereas Dauid and Salomon had many wiues, it was not without fault and transgression; and thereby wee see so much the more howe needefull this lawe is. For if God had neuer forbidden kinges to haue many wiues, had not their libertie bene yet the more excessive? Yes verily. For they cannot bee withheld from rebelling against God. Their flesh carryeth them so away, that they forget the thing which ought to bee best known vnto them. This text ought to bee noted aboute all others, specially for kinges: and yet they thinke not of it at all. And therefore wee see it was not for nought, that GOD prevented that mischief.

But we must vnderstand by the way, how it is not ynough that the law be set downe, vnlesse God write it in our hearts by his holy spirit: For esse it is but a dead letter, and so will kill vs, because wee shal bee iustly condemned by the doctrine thereof, which serueth to bereaue vs of all excuse. Therefore whensoever our Lorde commandeth vs any thing, let vs learne that we must runne vnto him, that he may write the things in our heartes, which we read written in paper or parchment. As touching riches, we must not conclude that there was the like fault.

1. Kin. 12. 4.

For why? When Dauid gathered such a masse of golde and siluer, it was to build the temple of God, and not to make any other enterprises, as wee knowe. Againe, wee see not that he grieued his people, though there were great complaints after the death of Salomon: but of that wee will treat hereafter both for Dauid and for Salomon. The intent of Dauid then was good and holy, forasmuch as in gathering all things together which were requisite for the building of the Temple, hee attempted not any thing which was not commaunded him of God. Altho the meanes were lawfull. For hee layde no ty-rannicall charge vpon his people. As for Salomon, hee had the greater riches gathered a-forchande by his father. And againe wee must marke, that a greate parte of those things were such as hee had conquered of the Infidels, and their spoyle was as yee woulde say, presentes, which God had giuen him, as is spoken thereof in the Psalme. And therefore Salomon for his parte might lawfully vse all those goods, specially forasmuch as it was sayde, that the kinges of Turcis and of all the yles and farr countries shoulde come and bring golde and siluer, and all manner of precious things; and againe, that there shoulde bee giuen vnto him of y gold of Arabia, because it was Gods will that the kingdome of Israell shoulde flourish after that manner. It was lawfull for Dauid and Salomon to gather treasure, so it were not vpon ambition and pryde, nor to vndertake foolish enterprises and to ouerthoote themselves into loosenesse of life, and also, so the people were not grieued by it with any impositions, but that Dauid did but onely receiue the golde and siluer that was brought vnto them. But whether Salomon exceeded measure or no, I am not able to affirme. Wee see what his disobedient sonne Roboam sayde, namely that whereas his father had beaten the people with roddes, hee woulde beate them with whippes, and he would lay vpon them as much as they could beare, vntill hee made all the backes of them to bowe.

1. Kin. 11. 24

In which saying, Roboam vaunteth of his fathers tyrannic. And wee may well gather thereby, that there was some excessse in Salomon. So much the more therefore ought wee to marke, that God hath not for nought forbidden kinges to gather great masses of golde and siluer. And for the same cause also did Dauid vse the prayer which I haue rehearsed before: for there was good cause for him to doe it. He sawe the temptations that might assayle him on all sides, and hee coulde neuer haue withstoode them, if God had not strengthened him with his power. And in the same respect hee protesteth that Gods lawe is deerer to him than golde and siluer, and that all the riches of the worlde were nothing to him in comparison of Gods lawe, because hee sawe there his true felicitie and glorie.

So then let vs remember in fewe wordes, that whereas our Lorde forbad kinges to hoorde vp great treasures, it was not for that it is not lawfull for them to be riche, so their heartes inclyne nor to pride, vayne glorie, and countoufnes, and that they vse not any tyrannic ouer their subiectes, but onely take that which is offered them as it were by the hande of God, & content themselves therewith, applying the same vnto good. For wee see in what taking king Ezechias was. Albeit that hee had not the thirde parte of Dauids reueneue, by reason of the cutting away of the kingdome of Israell: yet had hee his chambers so well furnished and stored, that hee made a shewe and a boasting of it when Ambassadors were sent vnto him from Babylon, commending and setting out himselfe, to the ende that the king of the Chaldyes shoulde bee desirous of his friendship. But wee see what befell vnto him. The Prophet Elay brought him this message: Go too (sayeth hee) thou hast made a shewe this day of thy gold and siluer, and of the precious things which thou hast; but assure thy selfe thou hast kindled a fire which shall neuer bee quenched, vntill the Babylonians haue fetched away all that thou hast, so as there shall not remaine one peece of money in Ierusalem, but all shall be sacked and pilled away: and wee see howe the same punishment was executed afterwarde. And this example sheweth vs sufficiently wherefore God forbad kinges to gather much golde and siluer. For when Princes haue such treasures, they can hardly keepe themselves from being prouoked to vaunt and exalt themselves continually after some manner or other. For asmuch as it is so, let vs learne that in this place God meant to holde the kinges of Israell within some measure and meane degre, that they might not looke too high.

Esa. 39. 2. &amp;c.

1. Kin. 14. 13

And afterwarde hee sayeth, That his heart turne not away: that is to say, least his greatnesse make him to forget himselfe, and hee addeth yet further, That hee exalts not himselfe above his brethren. Wheteas it is sayde that the king must not turne away; that is because that when men bee aduanced to honour; they commonly forgette themselves, and thinke not themselves to bee the same they were before. About all things the dignitie of a king is a state that will blear a mannes eyes, yea, and put them quyte and cleane out: in so much that Princes thinke not themselves to bee as mortall creatures, but rather as halfe Gods by reason of their high aduancement, and wee see they looke as high as though nothing were vnpossible to them, so as they will not bee subiect any more to right or reason. And if men doe not flatter them and honour them as Gods, they thinke they haue the greatest wrong that can bee. And whereof commeth that? Euen of this, that when a man is great, hee can haue neither mildnesse nor lowlinesse in him, except Gods spirite reigne in him. For this cause are kinges warned heere , to beware that they forget not themselues: yea and that is yet better expressed in that Moses addeth , that they must not exalt themselves above their brethren. Whereof commeth it that kinges & Princes will needes set their feete vpon al mens throtes after that fashion? Euen of this pride which poysoneth their heartes, that they consider not themselues to be men, ne knowe any more what their state is. And when they be folinse to Godward, it is no maruell though the subiecte of their pride & presumption, make them to tread men vnder foote, and to looke that all men should stande in feare of them and stoope to their yoke . That is the cause why Moses matcheth those two things together .

Nowe then, if we intend to reframe from doing wrong or outrage to any man; lette vs looke that we knowe our selues. For ( as is sayde in the common proverbe ) he that knowes himselfe best, setteth least by himselfe. And it is the way also for vs to behaue ourselues lowly and meeckly towardes our neighbours . But if a man forget himselfe, he must needes by and by mount vp into a pride and outrage, without making spare of any thing . And seeing this was forbidden to kinges, what is done to such as are fatte their inferiours? Therefore let every man in his degree apply this matter to his owne instruction . Let such as are in authoritie be well ware that they exalt not themselves through pride, if they wil not be cast down to their shame . For the higher that the state is whereon a man sitteth, the lower is his fall, euen to the breaking of his necke perchance . Therefore let those who God hath exalted, haue a care to holde themselves continually in rest, and not starte aside, but serue God and his people continually .

And it is sayde heere expressly Against thy brethren, or about thy brethren. For Kinges and Princes thinke themselves to be as it were cut off fro the company of men, and that they ought not any more to be counted of the comon aray of the . But our Lorde skorning such disdainfulness, sayeth: Yet are they your brethren . In dedde this is spoken of the children of Abraham which were defended all of one race . But choose mee out a king where yee will, is he not a man? And are not they his brethren, ouer whom hee reigneth? And if the case stande so with the greatest kinges of the earth: what is to be thought of those that are farre their inferiours? Now therefore, when a man is in authoritie or hath wherewith to maintaine himselfe in credit, if he be tempted to forget himselfe, let him consider thus: yet am I not separated from the rest of the body, I am a member thereof still, and they that are my inferiours cease not to be my brethren . What a thing were it then, if I should vaunt my selfe? Were it not a despying of God? Let such as are aduanced to any state of great preheminance remember this warning as oft as they be tempted to despise other men and to shake them off . Lette them thinke thus: what, shoulde wee be as Lyons towardes Lambes where there is brotherhoode? There is no brotherhoode betweene a Lyon and a Lambe . If I haue a Lyons hearte, full of pride, Lordlinesse, and ouerweening: what a thing is it? Can I lue with them that are committed vnto me? Yea: for wee see what is sayde of king Ezechias, when y Prophet Esay telleth him of the restoring of the people to their former state. And no doubt but he had an eye to this text, to shewe howe it was the ductie of Ezechias and of all kinges, to be a shadowe for the refreshing and easing of their people, & a foster father to the poore and fatherlesse, and a comforte of them that are in distresse and sorrowe . And for a conclusion he sayeth, that the feare of God shall bee a treasure in his time, according to that which I haue shewed already . So that if kinges will behaue themselves as they ought, they must sette their mindes vpon this lesson, as it is shewed them by the Lawe of God . It was applyed to the person of Ezechias: but yet must all other men looke to themselves . And if our Lorde tell this lesson to y great ones, without sparing them, what temptations souer they haue: what will come of it, when the meaner sort wil needes play the loose coltes, and not be bridled but kicke and spurne against God? Doe they not shewe themselves to be very much blinded with pride? And therefore let vs learne to profite so by the things that our Lorde teacheth vs, as all men both great & small may submit themselves euery one according to his degree, state & calling; that God may be honored of all men, and y there may be one general obedience from the forinost to the hindermost .

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs teele them better than we haue done, y by meanes thereof wee may be drawn to true repentance to mislike of all our vices & transgressions, & to rid ourselues of the, till God haue lo wrought in vs, that we be thoroughly clothed with his righteousness: & that in the meane while hee so beare with vs in our weakenesse, as wee may not faile to obtaine fauour at his hande, although wee lue not in such perfection as were to be wished . That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth, bringing backe all poore ignorant people, out of the captiuitie of errorrs and darkenesse wherein they are helde; that so he may leade them to the knowledge of his trueth: And that for this purpose it would please him to raise vp true & faithfull ministers of his worde. &c.

On Fryday the xxij. of Nouember. 1555.

The Cviij. Sermon which is the first vpon the eighteenth Chapter.

THe Priestes Leuites, and all the tribe of Leuy shall haue no part nor inheritance with Israell: but shall eate the sacrifices of the Lorde made by fire, and his inheritance.

2 Therefore they haue no inheritance among their brethren, for the Lorde is their inheritance as he hath sayde vnto them.

3 And this shall be the Priestes duecie at the peoples handes, euen at the handes of as many as offer any sacrifice, whether it bee Ox or Sheepe. They shall giue the Priest the shoulder, the Cheekes, and the inwardes, 4 The firstfruits of thy Corne, of thy Wine, and of thine Oyle, & also the first fleeces of thy sheepe shalt thou giue him.

5 For the Lord thy God hath choosen him from among all thy Tribes, to stand and minister to the Lorde thy God, euen him and his sonnes for euer.

6 If a Leuite come out of any of the Cities of all Israell where he is a sojourner, and come with all the desire of his soule to the place which the Lorde thy GOD shall haue chosen:

7 Let him minister in the name of the Lorde his God, as all the rest of thy brethren the Leuites do, which stand there before the face of the Lorde.

8 They shall haue like portions to eate, besides that which they haue of the sale of their fathers goods.

Deut 12.19.
& 14.22.

Ention hath beene made heere to fore of the right that God referred to the Priestes, and to al y<sup>e</sup> tribe of Leuy: and it is not for nought that mention is made thereof a gaine heere. For on the one side, it was more than needfull that the Priestes should be put in minde of their duties, y<sup>e</sup> knowing the honour which God had done them, they should giue the selaes the more faithfully and cheerefully to the seruing of him: and also y<sup>e</sup> the rest of the tribes might knowe, y<sup>e</sup> sith it had pleased God to choose the sons of Leuite, it behoued y<sup>e</sup> dignity to remain vnto the, & no man was to beare them any spite for it. For in verie deede we see howe there were that did rise vp against them, and God was faine by miracle to warrant that priesthoode which he had established, and namely; in making Aarons rod to bud and blossom, the which he willed to be kept for an euerslasting memoriall. It seemed to others y<sup>e</sup> Moses would haue advanced them in respect that they were of his owne kinned, for he humilte was of the tribe of Leuy. And because he ordeined y<sup>e</sup> priesthoode in the same tribe, they murmured at it, thinking y<sup>e</sup> Moses had delt altogether vpon fleshy affection: but God shewed himselfe to be the Author thereof. And surely there was no cause of suspicion, if they that made the insurrection had not bin carried away with great malice. For although Moses had children of his owne, yet did he not set any of the in the honorable degree of the priestes: but he bestowed it away from them, and set them in the last place, as though they had bin of no estimation in y<sup>e</sup> tribe. If Moses had regarded himselfe & his owne aduantage, surely he would haue preferred his owne house. But he did not so, but contrariwise did let his children alone as they were, and held them backe. Wherein he shewed y<sup>e</sup> he obeyed God, and did nothing vpon his owne head. On the other side we see how in giuing y<sup>e</sup> priesthoode to the tribe of Leuy, he depriveth them of the inheritance y<sup>e</sup> was assigned to the among the rest of their brethren: For the land was not promised alonely to those twelue tribes among who was afterward deuided. For at the time y<sup>e</sup> God made Abraham Lord and Maister of the Lande of Chanaan, Leuy was comprised among them that should be the inheriters thereof. Why then is he put beside it? So we see y<sup>e</sup> Moses followed Gods ordinance, & inuenced not any thing of his owne head. We must go yet further: for he telleth the Leuites y<sup>e</sup> this scattering of them among the rest of the tribes was a punishment of God, though it was afterwarde turned into grace, and y<sup>e</sup> God of his goodnes did wipe away the curse y<sup>e</sup> he had layde vpon Leuite. But if we haue an eye to the originall grounde, it is sayde thereof that Iacob denounceth Leuite and Simeon to haue bin wicked, inso much as he sayth y<sup>e</sup> he will in no wise be matched matched with them, neither in thought nor in worde, because it was not long of them y<sup>e</sup> Israell had not in put to hauocke. Whereupon he addeth, Thou shalt be scattered abroade. Whereas all the rest haue their inheritances assigned vnto them: thou must be as a vagabonde among thy brethren. Seeing y<sup>e</sup> Moses vitcereth so harde and reprochfull a sentence against all his owne tribe, who can say y<sup>e</sup> he ment to be partiall towardes it? Nay the cleane contrary appeareth. As a man led by Gods spirit, he respecteth not himselfe or his, but putteth them to shame for cuer, and will that if they haue any honour or dignitie, y<sup>e</sup> same should be acknowledged to come of Gods meere fauour, and y<sup>e</sup> the sayde note of reproch should make it the more euident that Leuy had deserued to be viterly bereft of his inheritance, if God had not remedied it of his owne goodnes. Therefore there was no cause of bearing any enmie to Moses or any of his. But such is the maliciousnes of the world, that men take occasion to grudge & repine at euery thing: and it is the thing y<sup>e</sup> Satan doth chiefly practise. When God is to be serued no man is willing to goe vnto God in truth, but all inferior degrees are wayward, and woulde fame haue superiouritie without the charge. How many shall ye finde that are willing to giue them selues to the seruice of God by the preaching of his word, or which seeke it with a right meaning affection, as who would say, I offer vp my selfe in sacrifice vnto God? Yet notwithstanding all are led with a kinde of selfeliking, vnlesse God holde them in awe by his holy spirit: in which respect this lesson is giuen vnto them, to the intent that euery man should be contented to be onely in the forecourt of the Lord his Temple. We see then that men indetour not to come neere God, and yet could euery man finde in his heart to be aduanced, so it were without charge. Euen so was it among the Iewes. For the rest of the tribes hauing their portions, & being in quiet at home in their homes, ceased not to grudge against the Priestes and Leuites. And therefore God was faine to authorise their priesthood after such a sort, as it might be excepted fro all slander, & no man might take vpō him to alter any thing therein. And so we see the cause why God repeated this doctrine againe.

Numb. 16.1.

Gen. 49.6,7.

Now it might seeme to be a disordered kinde of dealing, to make an inheritance of the priesthood: for the fittest ought to haue bene choosen out: and why then should God goe chose one inured after that fashion, & make the children what fouer they were to succede their fathers? This seemeth to be no good order for the edifying of the Church. God therefore was faine to let his owne authoritie as a shielde against all these objections. If a man be iniquitie, what reason or what respect moued God, to choose the tribe of Leuie for his seruice: it ought to content vs that God hath done it, and we ought to thinke well thereof though the reason thereof appeare not vnto vs. He knoweth wherfore, and y<sup>e</sup> ought to suffice vs. And yet let vs not doubt but y<sup>e</sup> when God ordeined y<sup>e</sup> tribe [to serue: him in his Sanctuary] he was able to indewe them with such giftes of grace, as were requisite for the executing of their office. Seeing that God hath ynough wherewith to enable men; should we fal to scanning why or wherefore he chooseth one man rather than another? It pleaseth him. For by the same reason a man might demand why God giueth his spirit to one man more than to another. Ye shall see one man dulwtired, without learning or any other excellent giftes in him; and yet shall see another indewed with great excellencie: and what is the cause herof? The goodwil of God, & thereupon must we rest; & whose ouer grudgeth therefore, he shall finde in the end that he hath to deale with too great a maister. So then, it ought to be ynough for vs that G O D chose out that tribe. How fouer the case stande, he ment here to stoppe the mouthes of all the Iewes, and to shewe that it behoued them to keepe the order which he had set downe, as holy and inuolable. Marke that for one point.

Heerewithall (as I haue touched afore) hee ment to put the priestes in minde of their duty, that they might be the diligenter in doing their seruice in the Temple. For had they heud as ydlebellies, it had bene contrarie to Gods meaning, and it had bin a defiling of the order which God had set downe and established among them. So then, God had an eye to both these reasons, and it behooueth vs also to marke them on our part. And therefore let vs learne, that such as are called to any charge or office, ought to beare continually in minde and to bethinke them early and late, who it is that hath set them in that place, and for what purpose; that it may be as a whetting or sharpening of them, to induour that they become not vnprofitable in their charge, but rather apply themselues faithfully vnto it, that they may be able to make their reckening thereof vnto G O D. Let that serue for one point.

Againe, let vs learpe to be contented with the degree wherein God hath set vs, and let none of vs be greued when we see another goe before vs. For all the members of a body can not be eyes and eares; all can not be aboue; there must be legges and feete as well as eyes and hands. Therefore let vs vnderstande that, and let euery of vs submit himselfe, and let it suffice vs that it pleaseth God to accept vs into the companie of his people, to giue vs some hidde corner in his temple, so as we may be incorporated into his Church. That is too great an honour for vs, and seeing it pleased God to place vs there, we ought to couet no further. Those are the things which we haue to remember vpon this text, in applying the doctrine to ourselues.

It is sayde further, The Priestes and Leuites and all they of the tribe of Leuie, shall haue no portion in the inheritance of Israell, but shall eate the Sacrifices for their inheritance. And the Lord will be their inheritance as he hath promised them. Heere Moses on the one side depriveth his brethren and kinfolk of all inheritance. Wherem we see the execution of Gods sentence, which was y<sup>e</sup> Leuie should be dispersed, & y<sup>e</sup> he should not haue any habit or abode in any certaine place. The children of Leuie

Psal. 65. 4.

Psal. 114.

1. Cor. 12. 19.

Leuie then are as a body torne in peeces . And yet doeth God turne their punishment into an honour . And therein appeareth his goodnesse, forasmuch as he maketh the thinges to redound to our benefite and saluation, which should haue bene to our condemnation . Loe howe God worketh towards those that are his . In somuch that although hee punish them for their finnes, yet doth he make them feele his goodnesse therewith, by turning the thinges to a contrary ende, which should haue bene to their shame . After the same manner befell it to all the posteritie of Leuy . For it is no small thing, that God should be their inheritance: it was a title of honour a bove all others . Whereas all the rest of the children of Isracell, had their portions in the Land of Chanaan : God reserved himselfe for Leuy, saying, Holde yourselues to me , I am your inheritance . Ye see then how their portion was better than all the rest, saying the tribe of Iuda , which was priuiledged, as whereunto God had already assigned the kingdome And whereof came that? If yee haue an eye to the originall, yee shall see that the sinne of Leuie made him worthe of banishment, that he might haue bene as a vagabonde without any certaine dwellingplace: but yet for all that, God provided fo for the matter, that hee turned the euill into good , and the reproch into honour . Therefore let vs learne not to be discouraged when G O D punisheth vs for our sins , & yet to be so ashamed of our misdeeds and offences, as we may not dout but that our Lorde prying vs, wil make his chastisements beneficiall to vs, so as we shall be the more honorable before him and his Angelles . If we be faine to abide some shame and reproch for a time before the world: the thing that ought to be a good cofort to the faithfull, when they be smitten by y hand of God, is not to greue the selues with the only beholding of their present affliction: but to thinke vpon the end and issue of it, which is, that God turneth bitterness into sweete life .

Furthermore, whereas it is said to y Leuites that God is their heritage; it is to the end they should be the willing to giue themselves wholly to his seruice . For had they bin busied in husbandry, traffike of marchandize, & such other like things: they had bin turned away fro their office , & not had leasure to doe the thing y God had commanded them: y is to wit, that those which were in Ierusalem should serue in y Temple; & those which were dispersed abroad in y country, should maintaine the religion pure , & not suffer the people to growe out of order, but teach the euery man in his place, y they might be preferred in all purenes . For vpon y conditio were they chosen . Not without cause therefore doth God say y hee was the heritage & portion of the Leuites , to the end that such as are called to his seruice, should not be pulled away, nor haue excuse to withdrawe them fro the full executing of their dutie . Now in deed S. Paul applyeth this to y ministers of gods word, saying y if by the law of Moses they which serued at y Altar were found of the Altar, they which at this day haue y charge of preaching Gods word, and of the offering vp of spiritual sacrifices, ought of reason to be found and maintained , & to haue that which is necessarie for them . Yet notwithstanding wee must learne generally , y God hath done vs the honor to make vs all Leuites, according to this saying, y when God sh all haue restored his people, those which were Leuites before shall then become Priestes, & all the comon people shall become Leuites . And this belongeth to the kingdome of our Lord Iesus Christ . Seeing then y Iesus Christ hath shewed himselfe to the world: we which before were strangers & had no acquaintance atal with God , are now come into the Church to be of the body of Abrahams children , and are in as good case as they y were heires of the promise . But we are become Leuites for we preace vnto our God, & haue familiar access to him in the name of his only sonne , so as we may boldly call vpon him as our father . And euen in the same respect doeth S . Peter call vs a kingly priesthod, because y whereas we were gone backe before, and wist not how to come at God, we had any meane to bring vs to him: now he calleth vs to him , yea euen as though we were priestes, not to enter into a materiall Sanctuarie with y blood of Goats, sheepe, or Calues: but with the blood that was shedde to dedicate vs to God & to wash vs from all vnclenes . And so now we go into the sanctuary of heauen to present ourselues before the face of God .

Nowe then let vs apply this doctrine to ourselues where it is sayde that God is our heritage . True it is that such as haue goods & possessions in this worlde may vse them , howbeit with the condition which S . Paul setteth downe in the seventh Chapter of the first Epistle to the Corinthians: namely that he which hath possessions be as he that hath none, that he haue the one foote euer lifted vp , and that he sticke not fast in the mire as tyed to the things that are here beneath; but that we remember ourselues to be but strangers in this world , and therefore looke euer vwarde to the restingplace of heauen . After that maner we may well possesse whatsoeuer things are in this worlde : but yet must we euen goe further, and not be stayed or tyed here . For why? Seeing our Lorde hath aduanced vs to such dignitie, as to haue vs to be priestes : let vs goe to his Altar . For wee be linked to our Lorde Iesus Christ, that hee might dedicate vs to G O D his father . Sith it is so, let vs doe as is sayde in the firsteenth Psalme . For although it was sayd a loney of the Leuites , that G O D was their portion: yet doth Dauid boast that hee hadde a faire portion, because God was his . Behold (sayeth he) I haue a fayre lotte , and hencefoorth I haue no cause to complaine, as though I wanted any thing: for my God hath giue himself to me, he is my portion, & I possesse him . Dauid came not of the tribe of Leuie; and howe fallst it out then, that he boasteth himselfe to haue as much as the priestes ? He knewe well that Gods reseruing of y tribe for a time was after such a sort, y yet neuertheless he would haue y whole people partakers of y same blessing, accordingly also as it is saide in Exodus, you be a priestly kingdome . And S. Peter hath turned this into another maner offspeech, saying, Ye be a kingly priesthood, that is to say, ye be all as it were a sort of little kinges, because God gouerneth you, and that is for your benefite: for he hath promised to giue you a redeemer, which shall leade you into all perfection. Neuerthelesse yee must vnderstande, that this kingdome is not like other kingdoms of y world, but is matched with a priesthood, that is to say, it is consecrated and dedicated to God. Dauid therefore acknowledging this, sayeth that God is his portion. Nowe if this was sayd in the time of the figures: much more ought wee to doe the same now, forasmuch as the forecalleddged prophesie is nowe come to passe in our Lorde Iesus Christ and in all his members, so as wee bee not kept back any longer as we were before, but may preace vnto God with assured hope that hee will receiue vs, and that we shall be neere vnto him. Thus yee see howe wee ought to benefite our selues by this speeche where it is sayde that the Lorde was their portion, yea euen according as he had promised them.

And it was not for Leuy to boast of his owne worthinesse or desertes. All that cuer he could alleadge was no more but this: I ought to haue bene disherited, and yet notwithstanding God hath turned it to mine honour. And therefore if we wilbe sure that God is our heritage, we must not look: what we can attaine by our owne trauell, for there is nothing but vtter confusion in vs: but we must resort to y promise which God hath made vnto vs, in that hee hath vouchsafed to make so great account of vs, as to take vs for his children, euen vs which deserued to be damned. And that is the thing wherupon it becometh vs to be groudled, to inioy the priuiledge and inestimable benefite wherof Moses speaketh here. Let vs marke well then that he sendeth vs backe to the promise without any respect had to vs, to the intent to doe vs to wit that wee haue not any thing on our owne parte, but that we be beholden to the only freegoodnesse of our God for that benefite.

Nowe it is sayde consequently, that the people also must discharge their duecie towards the Priestes. Ye must haue a speciall care (sayeth he) that the Priestes may haue their right which God alloweth vnto them: that is to wit, The right shoulder of euery sacrifice, the two cheeks, and the Panche; these things must be reserved for them, together with the first frutes of Corne, Wine, and Oyle, and also of the fleeces of your sheepe. Heie God commaundeth the children of Israel expressly to maintaine the Priestes, for they were bounde thereto, and therein they shewed themselves to make great account of the seruice of God. It behoued them to haue men to minister in the Temple: and if these were not maintained, Religion should be, as it were abolished; and therefore it was not without cause that God commaunded the people to employ themselves about that matter. True it is that they ought to haue doone well euen without exhortation: but we see the vnthankfulness of the worlde, when any duecie is to be done towards God, they must be spurred forward, and they neuer goe willingly to it; vnlesse they be urged. And if it were so among y Iewes, much more is it so among vs. For we be so slothfull that we neuer seeke to discharge ourselues to Godwarde, and therefore we are faine to be called vpon and to be prepared. Sith we know this vice to be in vs, let euery of vs quicken vp & spur forward ourselues; & sith we see y our Lord calleth vpon vs, let vs follow him, & make the things effectuall which he telleth vs in his word. That is the thing which we be to marke in this text.
